THIS BOOK
MUST NOT BE REMOVED FROM THE LIBRARY

REFERENCE ONLY

346 Mx. North

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON LIBRARY

3 MAY 1991

THE ALL ENGLAND LAW REPORTS

Incorporating the

LAW TIMES REPORTS

LAW JOURNAL REPORTS

1961

VOLUME 3

Consulting Editor for Taxation Cases

CYRIL KING, Q.C.

Bencher of the Middle Temple

Editor

J. T. EDGERLEY

of the Inner Temple and Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law

LONDON

BUTTERWORTHS

ENGLAND: BUTTERWORTH & CO. (PUBLISHERS) LTD.
LONDON: 88 Kingsway, W.C.2

AFRICA: BUTTERWORTH & CO. (AFRICA) LTD.
DURBAN: 33/35 Beach Grove

AUSTRALIA: BUTTERWORTH & CO. (AUSTRALIA) LTD.
SYDNEY: 6-8 O'Connell Street
MELBOURNE: 473 Bourke Street
BRISBANE: 240 Queen Street

CANADA: BUTTERWORTH & CO. (CANADA) LTD.
TORONTO: 1367 Danforth Avenue, 6

NEW ZEALAND: BUTTERWORTH & CO. (NEW ZEALAND) LTD.
WELLINGTON: 49/51 Ballance Street
AUCKLAND: 35 High Street

U.S.A.: BUTTERWORTH INC.
WASHINGTON, D.C.: 7235 Wisconsin Avenue, 14

BIBL.
LONDIN.
UNIV.

©
Butterworth & Co. (Publishers) Ltd.
1961

Printed in Great Britain by R. J. ACFORD LTD., Industrial Estate, Chichester, Sussex.

HOUSE OF LORDS

The Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain: The Rt. Hon. Viscount Kilmuir

Lords of Appeal in Ordinary

The Rt. Hon. Viscount Simonds
The Rt. Hon. Lord Reid
The Rt. Hon. Lord Radcliffe
The Rt. Hon. Lord Tucker
(resigned Oct. 5, 1961)
The Rt. Hon. Lord Denning
The Rt. Hon. Lord Jenkins
The Rt. Hon. Lord Morris of Borth-y-Gest
The Rt. Hon. Lord Hodson
The Rt. Hon. Lord Guest
The Rt. Hon. Lord Devlin
(appointed Oct. 11, 1961)

COURT OF APPEAL

The Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain

Lord Chief Justice of England: The Rt. Hon. Lord Parker

Master of the Rolls: The Rt. Hon. Lord Evershed

President of the Probate, Divorce and Admiralty Division: The Rt. Hon. Lord Merriman

The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Sellers
The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Ormerod
The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Holroyd Pearce
The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Willmer
The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Harman
The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Devlin
(appointed Lord of Appeal in Ordinary Oct. 11, 1961)
The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Upjohn
The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Donovan
The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Danckwerts
The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Pearson
The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Davies
The Rt. Hon. Lord Justice Diplock
(appointed Oct. 12, 1961)

CHANCERY DIVISION

The Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain

The Hon. Mr. Justice Lloyd-Jacob
The Hon. Mr. Justice Russell
The Hon. Mr. Justice Cross
The Hon. Mr. Justice Buckley
The Hon. Mr. Justice Pennycuick
The Hon. Mr. Justice Wilberforce
The Hon. Mr. Justice Plowman

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION

Lord Chief Justice of England: The Rt. Hon. Lord Parker

The Hon. Mr. Justice Hilbery
The Hon. Mr. Justice Stable
The Hon. Mr. Justice Pilcher
(retired Sept. 30, 1961)
The Hon. Mr. Justice Jones
(retired Sept. 30, 1961)
The Hon. Mr. Justice Finnemore
The Hon. Mr. Justice Streatfeild
The Hon. Mr. Justice Slade
The Hon. Mr. Justice Gorman
The Hon. Mr. Justice Barry
The Hon. Mr. Justice McNair
The Hon. Mr. Justice Havers
The Hon. Mr. Justice Glyn-Jones
The Hon. Mr. Justice Sachs
The Hon. Mr. Justice Ashworth
The Hon. Mr. Justice Diplock
(appointed Lord Justice of Appeal, Oct. 12, 1961)
The Hon. Mr. Justice Hinchcliffe
The Hon. Mr. Justice Paull
The Hon. Mr. Justice Salmon
The Hon. Mr. Justice Stevenson
The Hon. Mr. Justice Edmund Davies
The Hon. Mr. Justice Elwes
The Hon. Mr. Justice Thesiger
The Hon. Mr. Justice Winn
The Hon. Mr. Justice Marshall
(transferred from P.D.A., Nov. 8, 1961)
The Hon. Mr. Justice Fenton Atkinson
The Hon. Mr. Justice Nield
The Hon. Mr. Justice Howard
The Hon. Mr. Justice Veale
The Hon. Mr. Justice Megaw
The Hon. Mr. Justice Lawton
The Hon. Mr. Justice Widgery
The Hon. Mr. Justice MacKenna
(appointed Oct. 2, 1961)
The Hon. Mr. Justice Mocatta
(appointed Oct. 2, 1961)
The Hon. Mr. Justice Thompson
(appointed Oct. 2, 1961)

PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION

President: The Rt. Hon. Lord Merriman

The Hon. Mr. Justice Collingwood
The Hon. Mr. Justice Karminski
The Hon. Mr. Justice Wrangham
The Hon. Mr. Justice Hewson
The Hon. Mr. Justice Marshall
(transferred to Q.B.D. Nov. 8, 1961)
The Hon. Mr. Justice Phillimore
The Hon. Mr. Justice Lloyd-Jones
The Hon. Mr. Justice Cairns
The Hon. Mr. Justice Baker
The Hon. Mr. Justice Scarman
The Hon. Mr. Justice Ormrod
(appointed Nov. 8, 1961)

REPORTERS

HOUSE OF LORDS	WENDY SHOCKETT	Barrister-at-Law
PRIVY COUNCIL	WENDY SHOCKETT	Barrister-at-Law
COURT OF APPEAL, No. 1	F. GUTTMAN, ESQ.	Barrister-at-Law
COURT OF APPEAL, No. 2	HENRY SUMMERFIELD, ESQ.	Barrister-at-Law
COURT OF APPEAL, No. 3	F. A. AMIES, ESQ.	Barrister-at-Law
COURT OF APPEAL, No. 4	F. GUTTMAN, ESQ.	Barrister-at-Law
COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL	N. P. METCALFE, ESQ.	Barrister-at-Law
COURTS-MARTIAL APPEALS	N. P. METCALFE, ESQ.	Barrister-at-Law
CHANCERY DIVISION	R. D. H. OSBORNE, ESQ. JENIFER SANDELL	Barristers-at-Law
QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION and COURTS OF ASSIZE	M. DENISE CHORLTON MARY COLTON K. B. EDWARDS, ESQ. F. GUTTMAN, ESQ. D. M. HUGHES, ESQ. C. G. LEONARD, ESQ. GWYNEDD LEWIS DEIRDRE MCKINNEY KATHLEEN O'BRIEN KATHERINE PHILLIPS JENIFER SANDELL G. M. SMAILES, ESQ. HENRY SUMMERFIELD, ESQ.	Barristers-at-Law
RATING CASES	F. A. AMIES, ESQ.	Barrister-at-Law
REVENUE CASES	F. A. AMIES, ESQ.	Barrister-at-Law
PROBATE AND DIVORCE	A. T. HOOLAHAN, ESQ.	Barrister-at-Law
ADMIRALTY	N. P. METCALFE, ESQ.	Barrister-at-Law
RESTRICTIVE PRACTICES COURT	MARY COLTON	Barrister-at-Law
ECCLESIASTICAL CASES	A. T. HOOLAHAN, ESQ.	Barrister-at-Law

CITATION

These reports are cited thus:

[1961] 3 All E.R.

REFERENCES

These reports contain references, which follow after the headnotes, to the following major works of legal reference described in the manner indicated below—

Halsbury's Laws of England, Simonds Edition

The reference 2 Halsbury's Laws (3rd Edn.) 20, para. 48, refers to paragraph 48 on page 20 of Volume 2 of the third edition of Halsbury's Laws of England, of which Viscount Simonds is Editor-in-Chief.

Halsbury's Laws of England, Hailsham Edition

The reference 34 Halsbury's Laws (2nd Edn.) 30, para. 26, refers to paragraph 26 on page 30 of Volume 34 of the second edition of Halsbury's Laws of England, of which Viscount Hailsham was Editor-in-Chief.

Halsbury's Statutes of England, Second Edition

The reference 26 Halsbury's Statutes (2nd Edn.) 138, refers to page 138 of Volume 26 of the second edition of Halsbury's Statutes.

English and Empire Digest

The reference 24 Digest 602, 6028, refers to case No. 6028 on page 602 of Volume 24 of the Digest.

There are three cumulative supplements to the Digest, described as Digest Supp., 2nd Digest Supp. and 3rd Digest Supp.; of these the first two include cases up to December 31, 1939, and December 31, 1951, respectively.

The reference 31 Digest (Repl.) 244, 3794, refers to case No. 3794 on page 244 of Digest Replacement Volume 31.

Halsbury's Statutory Instruments

The reference 12 Halsbury's Statutory Instruments 124, refers to page 124 of Volume 12 of Halsbury's Statutory Instruments, first edition.

A reference to a volume as " 1st Re-issue " refers to the first re-issue of the appropriate volume of Halsbury's Statutory Instruments.

Encyclopaedia of Forms and Precedents, Third Edition

The reference 15 Ency. Forms & Precedents (3rd Edn.) 938, Form 231, refers to Form 231 on page 938 of Volume 15 of the third edition of the Encyclopaedia of Forms and Precedents.

Encyclopaedia of Court Forms and Precedents

The reference 5 Court Forms 268, Form 164, refers to Form 164 on page 268 of Volume 5 of the Encyclopaedia of Court Forms and Precedents in Civil Proceedings, first edition.

CASES REPORTED IN VOLUME 3

	PAGE
ABBOTT v. REFUGE ASSURANCE CO., LTD. [C.A.]	1074
ABRAHAM, PERFORMANCE CARS, LTD. v. [C.A.]	413
ALLEN v. ALLEN [C.A.]	385
ANNAMUNTHODO v. OILFIELDS WORKERS' TRADE UNION [P.C.]	621
ANNISON v. DISTRICT AUDITOR FOR THE METROPOLITAN BOROUGH OF ST. PANCRAS [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	914
ANSBACHER (HENRY) & CO. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [C.A.]	211
ARNOLD TRANSPORT (ROCHESTER), LTD. v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION [C.A.]	495
ASHMAN, OLIVER v. [C.A.]	323
ASSOCIATED PORTLAND CEMENT MANUFACTURERS, LTD., HILDER v. [Q.B.D.]	709
ATTFIELD, R. v. [C.C.A.]	243
ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. CRAYFORD URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL [CH.D]	1002
ATTORNEY-GENERAL FOR CEYLON v. SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION CO., LTD. [P.C.]	684
ATTORNEY-GENERAL FOR NORTHERN IRELAND, BRATTY v. [H.L.]	523
ATTORNEY-GENERAL FOR NORTHERN IRELAND v. GALLAGHER [H.L.]	299
AUSTRALIAN MUTUAL PROVIDENT SOCIETY v. INLAND REVENUE COMR. [P.C.]	1051
BAGLEY & CO., LTD., BASTOW v. [C.A.]	1101
BAKER (INFANTS), Re [C.A.]	276
BAKER, R. v. [C.C.A.]	703
BALTIC SAWMILLS CO., LTD., BUNCOMBE (VALUATION OFFICER) v. [C.A.]	272
BASTOW v. BAGLEY & CO., LTD. [C.A.]	1101
BENNETT, BUTTER (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. [CH.D.]	1041
BERKSHIRE (FOREST) JUSTICES, R. v. Ex parte DALLAIRE [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1138
BERRY v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION [C.A.]	65
BLACK BOLT AND NUT ASSOCIATION OF GREAT BRITAIN'S AGREEMENT (NO. 2), Re [R.P.C.]	316
BLAKE (VALUATION OFFICER) v. HENDON CORPN. [C.A.]	601
BLAKE, R. v. [C.C.A.]	125
BLOHN v. DESSER [Q.B.D.]	1
BLOOM, R. v. [C.C.A.]	88
BOARD OF TRADE, QUALTER, HALL & CO., LTD. v. [C.A.]	389
BOWES-LYON v. GREEN [H.L.]	843
BRASSINGTON v. BRASSINGTON [C.A.]	988
BRATTY v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL FOR NORTHERN IRELAND [H.L.]	523
BREEN (OTHERWISE SMITH) v. BREEN [DIV.]	225
BREWER v. BREWER [C.A.]	957
BRISTOL SOUTH EAST PARLIAMENTARY ELECTION, Re [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	354
BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION, ARNOLD TRANSPORT (ROCHESTER), LTD. v. [C.A.]	495
BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION, BERRY v. [C.A.]	65
BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION, EAST BARNET URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	878
BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION, MERCHANDISE TRANSPORT, LTD. v. [C.A.]	495
BRITISH VINEGARS, LTD., WIGLEY v. [C.A.]	418
BRONESTER, LTD. v. PRIDDLE [C.A.]	471
BROWN v. BULLOCK (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) [C.A.]	129
BULLARD v. R. (1957) [P.C.]	470
BULLOCK (INSPECTOR OF TAXES), BROWN v. [C.A.]	129
BUNCOMBE (VALUATION OFFICER v. BALTIC SAWMILLS, CO., LTD. [C.A.]	272
BUTTER (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. BENNETT [CH.D.]	1041
C. H. W. (HUDDERSFIELD), LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [CH.D.]	551
CAPLAN (I. & H.), LTD. v. CAPLAN [H.L.]	1174
CARTLEDGE v. JOPLING (E.) & SONS, LTD. [C.A.]	482
CHAPMAN v. CHAPMAN [DIV.]	1105
CHAPPLE v. ELECTRICAL TRADES UNION [CH.D.]	612
CHOONG FAH RUBBER MANUFACTORY, CHOW YOONG HONG v. [P.C.]	1163
CHOW YOONG HONG v. CHOONG FAH RUBBER MANUFACTORY [P.C.]	1163
CLARKE'S WILL TRUSTS, Re [CH.D.]	1133
CLAYTON (VALUATION OFFICER), EAST YORKSHIRE MOTOR SERVICES, LTD. v. [C.A.]	758
CLAYTON (VALUATION OFFICER), KINGSTON-UPON-HULL CORPN. v. [H.L.]	118
CLAYTON v. WOODMAN & SON (BUILDERS), LTD. [Q.B.D.]	249
CLIFFORD v. CLIFFORD [DIV.]	231
CLIFFORD, CRITCHLEY v. [C.A.]	288
CLIFFORD-TURNER v. WATERMAN [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	974
COOK v. NATIONAL COAL BOARD [C.A.]	220
COOPER v. COOPER [C.A.]	539
COOPER'S SETTLEMENT, Re [CH.D.]	636
COUTTS & CO. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [CH.D.]	158
COX, R. v. [C.-M.A.C.]	1194
CRAYFORD URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL, ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. [CH.D.]	1002
CRITCHLEY v. CLIFFORD [C.A.]	288
CROOK v. DERBYSHIRE [C.A.]	786
CULLIMORE v. LYME REGIS CORPN. [Q.B.D.]	1008
CURE & DEELEY, LTD., CUSTOMS AND EXCISE COMRS. v. [Q.B.D.]	641
CURRAN v. NEILL (WILLIAM) & SON (ST. HELENS), LTD. [C.A.]	108
CUSTOMS AND EXCISE COMRS. v. CURE & DEELEY, LTD. [Q.B.D.]	641
DALLAIRE, Ex parte, R. v. BERKSHIRE (FOREST) JUSTICES [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	1138
DANIEL (W.J.) & CO., LTD., WHITTAM v. [C.A.]	796
DANIELS v. JONES [C.A.]	24
DANIELS, LINCOLN v. [C.A.]	740
DANQUAH, WUTA-OFEI v. [P.C.]	596
DAVIS INVESTMENTS (EAST HAM), LTD., Re [C.A.]	926
DERBYSHIRE, CROOK v. [C.A.]	786
DESSER, BLOHN v. [Q.B.D.]	1
DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS, SYKES v. [H.L.]	33
DISTRICT AUDITOR FOR THE METROPOLITAN BOROUGH OF ST. PANCRAS, ANNISON v. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	914
DISTRICT AUDITOR FOR THE METROPOLITAN BOROUGH OF ST. PANCRAS, TAYLOR v. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.]	914
DIXON, R. v. [GLAMORGANSHIRE ASSIZES]	460
DREW, TAYLOR-GOOBY (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. [H.L.]	49
DSANE v. HAGAN [CH.D.]	380
DU CROS' SETTLEMENT, Re [CH.D.]	193
DUKE, R. v. [C.C.A.]	737
E.Y.L. TRADING CO., LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [CH.D.]	1121
EAST BARNET URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION [Q.B D. DIVL. CT.]	878
EAST YORKSHIRE MOTOR SERVICES, LTD. v. CLAYTON (VALUATION OFFICER) [C.A.]	758
EAVES v. MORRIS MOTORS, LTD. [C.A.]	233
EDGWARE TRUST, LTD. v. LAWRENCE [Q.B.D.]	141
EDWARD'S QUESTIONS, Re [CH.D.]	580
EDWICK v. SUNBURY-ON-THAMES URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL [Q.B.D.]	10

PAGE

ELECTRICAL TRADES UNION, CHAPPLE v. [CH.D.] 612
ESSEX QUARTER SESSIONS, R. v. Ex parte LARKIN [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.] 930
FAIREY AVIATION CO., LTD., SPARROW v. [C.A.] 452
FAIRWEATHER, ST. MARYLEBONE PROPERTY CO., LTD. v. [C.A.] 560
FIELDRANK, LTD. v. STEIN [C.A.] 681
FINKLE v. STRZELCZYK [C.A.] 409
FLACK v. WITHERS [H.L.] 388
FLEMING, MEEK v. [C.A.] 148
FLYNN, R. v. [C.C.A.] .. .. 58 ~~49~~
G. v. G. (OTHERWISE H.) [DIV.] 247
GALLAGHER, ATTORNEY-GENERAL FOR NORTHERN IRELAND v. [H.L.] 299
GARDANO & GIAMPARI v. GREEK PETROLEUM GEORGE MAMIDAKIS & CO. [Q.B.D.] 919
GARDINER v. MOTHERWELL MACHINERY AND SCRAP CO., LTD. [H.L.] 831
GARLAND & FLEXMAN (A FIRM) v. WISBECH CORPN. [Q.B.D.] 342
GARSIDE v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [CH.D.] .. 551
GOOCH, NATIONAL BENZOLE CO., LTD. v. [C.A.] .. 1097
GOULD, SUNROSE, LTD. v. [C.A.] 1142
GREEK PETROLEUM GEORGE MAMIDAKIS & CO., GARDANO & GIAMPARI v. [Q.B.D.] 919
GREEN, BOWES-LYON v. [H.L.] 843
GUEST, R. v. Ex parte METROPOLITAN POLICE COMMISSIONER [VACATION CT.] 1118
GUILDFORD GODALMING AND DISTRICT WATER BOARD, LONGHURST v. [H.L.] 545
HAGAN, DSANE v. [CH.D.] 380
HAINES, Ex parte, R. v. PADDINGTON AND ST. MARYLEBONE RENT TRIBUNAL [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.] 1047
HALES, WEG MOTORS, LTD. v. [C.A.] 181
HARPUR'S WILL TRUSTS, Re [C.A.] 588
HEDLEY BYRNE & CO., LTD. v. HELLER & PARTNERS, LTD. [C.A.] 891
HELLER & PARTNERS, LTD., HEDLEY BYRNE & CO., LTD. v. [C.A.] 891
HENDON CORPN., BLAKE (VALUATION OFFICER) v. [C.A.] 601
HENTY & CONSTABLE (BREWERS), LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [C.A.] 1146
HIGGINBOTHAM, R. v. [C.C.A.] 616
HILDER v. ASSOCIATED PORTLAND CEMENT MANUFACTURERS, LTD. [Q.B.D.] 709
HIRTENSTEIN, MITCHELL (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. [H.L.] 49
HODGE (J.B.) & CO. (GLASGOW), LTD. (IN VOLUNTARY LIQUIDATION), I.R. COMRS. v. [H.L.] 172
HUNT (INSPECTOR OF TAXES), LUCY & SUNDERLAND, LTD. v. [CH.D.] 1062
HYMAN, ZAMET v. [C.A.] 933
INLAND REVENUE COMRS., ANSBACHER (HENRY) & CO. v. [C.A.] 211
INLAND REVENUE COMR., AUSTRALIAN MUTUAL PROVIDENT SOCIETY v. [P.C.] 1051
INLAND REVENUE COMRS., C. H. W. (HUDDERSFIELD), LTD. v. [CH.D.] 551
INLAND REVENUE COMRS., COUTTS & CO. v. [CH.D.] 158
INLAND REVENUE COMRS., E.Y.L. TRADING CO., LTD. v. [CH.D.] 1121
INLAND REVENUE COMRS., GARSIDE v. [CH.D.] .. 551
INLAND REVENUE COMRS., HENTY & CONSTABLE (BREWERS) LTD. v. [C.A.] 1146
INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. HODGE (J.B.) & CO. (GLASGOW), LTD. (IN VOLUNTARY LIQUIDATION) [H.L.] 172
INLAND REVENUE COMRS., LITTLEWOODS MAIL ORDER STORES, LTD. v. [C.A.] 258
INLAND REVENUE COMRS., RENNELL (LORD) v. [C.A.] 1028
INLAND REVENUE COMRS., RIDGE NOMINEES, LTD. v. [C.A.] 1108
INLAND REVENUE COMRS., SPENCER v. [CH.D.] .. 551
INLAND REVENUE COMRS., VESTEY v. [CH.D.] .. 978
INLAND REVENUE COMRS., WINTER (EXECUTORS OF SIR ARTHUR MUNRO SUTHERLAND (decd.) v. [H.L.] 855
IVEAGH (EARL) v. MINISTER OF HOUSING AND LOCAL GOVERNMENT [Q.B.D.] 98
JEWISON'S WILL TRUSTS, Re [CH.D.] 1022
JOHNSON, R. v. [C.C.A.] 969
JOHNSON v. REA, LTD. [C.A.] 816
JONES, DANIELS v. [C.A.] 24
JONES, R. v. [C.C.A.] 668
JOPLING (E.) & SONS, LTD., CARTLEDGE v. [C.A.] 482
KINGSTON-UPON-HULL CORPN. v. CLAYTON (VALUATION OFFICER) [H.L.] 118
KIRKE v. KIRKE [DIV.] 1059
KOLB'S WILL TRUSTS, Re [CH.D.] 811

PAGE

L. v. L. [DIV.] 20
——, [C.A.] 834
LANGLEY'S SETTLEMENT TRUSTS, Re [C.A.] .. 803
LARKIN. Ex parte, R. v. ESSEX QUARTER SESSIONS [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.] 930
LATHAM (decd.), Re [CH.D.] 903
LAWRENCE, EDGWARE TRUST, LTD. v. [Q.B.D.] 141
LEECH BRAIN & CO., LTD., SMITH v. [Q.B.D.] .. 1159
LIMBRICK, PIDDUCK AND, PIDDUCK v. [DIV.] .. 481
LINCOLN v. DANIELS [C.A.] 740
LITTLEWOODS MAIL ORDER STORES, LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [C.A.] 258
LLEWELLYN, MAXFIELD v. [C.A.] 95
LONGHURST v. GUILDFORD GODALMING AND DISTRICT WATER BOARD [H.L.] 545
LUCY & SUNDERLAND, LTD. v. HUNT (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) [CH.D.] 1062
LYME REGIS CORPN., CULLIMORE v. [Q.B.D.] .. 1008
MCBRIDE, R. v. [C.C.A.] 6
MACFOY v. UNITRD AFRICA CO., LTD. [P.C.] .. 1169
MCGREGOR, WHITE & CARTER (COUNCILS), LTD. v. [H.L.] 1178
MCKIE (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. WARNER [CH.D.] 348
MCMATH v. RIMMER BROS. (LIVERPOOL), LTD. [C.A.] 1154
MADDEN, NEVILLE ESTATES, LTD. v. [CH.D.] .. 769
MALES, R. v. [C.C.A.] 705
MARSHALL, MITCHELL (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. [H.L.] 49
MASON, SCARSBROOK v. [Q.B.D.] 767
MATTHEWS'S WILL TRUSTS, Re [CH.D.] 869
MAXFIELD v. LLEWELLYN [C.A.] 95
MEEK v. FLEMING [C.A.] 148
MERCHANDISE TRANSPORT, LTD. v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION [C.A.] 495
METHARAM, R. v. [C.C.A.] 200
METROPOLITAN POLICE COMMISSIONER, Ex parte, R. v. GUEST [VACATION CT.] 1118
MILLER-MEAD, WARWICK RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL v. [VACATION CT.] 542
MINISTER OF HOUSING AND LOCAL GOVERNMENT, IVEAGH (EARL) v. [Q.B.D.] 98
MITCHELL (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. HIRTENSTEIN [H.L.] 49
MITCHELL (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. MARSHALL [H.L.] 49
MITCHELL (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. ROSS [H.L.] 49
MORRIS MOTORS, LTD., EAVES v. [C.A.] 233
MOTHERWELL MACHINERY & SCRAP CO., LTD., GARDINER v. [H.L.] 831
MUSLU, PHONOGRAPHIC EQUIPMENT (1958), LTD. v. [C.A.] 626
NASH, SUNSHINE PORCELAIN POTTERIES PROPRIETARY, LTD. v. [P.C.] 203
NATIONAL BENZOLE CO., LTD. v. GOOCH [C.A.] .. 1097
NATIONAL COAL BOARD, COOK v. [C.A.] 220
NATIONAL FEDERATION OF RETAIL NEWSAGENTS, BOOKSELLERS & STATIONERS, AND NEWSPAPER PROPRIETORS' ASSOCIATION, LTD., Re AGREEMENT BETWEEN [R.P.C.] 428
NEILL (WILLIAM) & SON (ST. HELENS), LTD., CURREN v. [C.A.] 108
NEVILLE ESTATES, LTD. v. MADDEN [CH.D.] .. 769
NEWSPAPER PROPRIETOR'S ASSOCIATION, LTD. & NATIONAL FEDERATION OF RETAIL NEWSAGENTS, BOOKSELLERS & STATIONERS, Re AGREEMENT BETWEEN, [R.P.C.] 428
OILFIELDS WORKERS' TRADE UNION, ANNAMUNTHODO v. [P.C.] 621
OLIVER v. ASHMAN [C.A.] 323
PADDINGTON AND ST. MARYLEBONE RENT TRIBUNAL, R. v. Ex parte HAINES [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.] 1047
PARKS, R. v. [C.C.A.] 633
PAULING'S SETTLEMENT TRUSTS, Re [CH.D.] .. 713
PERFORMANCE CARS, LTD. v. ABRAHAM [C.A.] .. 413
PERRY CHAIN CO., LTD., WITHERS v. [C.A.] .. 676
PETRIE (decd.) Re [C.A.] 1067
PHONOGRAPHIC EQUIPMENT (1958), LTD. v. MUSLU [C.A.] 626
PIDDUCK v. PIDDUCK AND LIMBRICK [DIV] .. 481
PONTIN v. WOOD [Q.B.D.] 992
PORRITT, R. v. [C.C.A.] 463
PRACTICE DIRECTION (DIVORCE SUMMONS: TRANSFER FROM SOLICITORS' TO COUNSEL'S LIST) [DIV.] 171
PRACTICE DIRECTION (SOLICITOR: WITHDRAWAL: APPLICATION FOR ORDER WHERE NO NOTICE OF CHANGE GIVEN) [CH.D.] 64
PRACTICE NOTE (APPEAL: FORM OF ORDER) [C.C.A.] 552
PRIDDLE, BRONESTER, LTD. v. [C.A.] 471

PAGE

QUALTER, HALL & CO., LTD. v. BOARD OF TRADE [C.A.] 389
QUINN, R. v. [C.C.A.] 88
R. v. ATTFIELD [C.C.A.] 243
R. v. BAKER [C.C.A.] 703
R. v. BERKSHIRE (FOREST) JUSTICES, Ex parte DALLAIRE [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.] 1138
R. v. BLAKE [C.C.A.] 125
R. v. BLOOM [C.C.A.] 88
R., BULLARD v. (1957) [P.C.] 470
R. v. COX [C.-M.A.C.] 1194
R. v. DIXON [GLAMORGANSHIRE ASSIZES] .. 460
R. v. DUKE [C.C.A.] 737
R. v. ESSEX QUARTER SESSIONS, Ex parte LARKIN [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.] 930
R. v. FLYNN [C.C.A.] 58
R. v. GUEST, Ex parte METROPOLITAN POLICE COMMISSIONER [VACATION CT.] 1118
R. v. HIGGINBOTHAM [C.C.A.] 616
R. v. JOHNSON [C.C.A.] 969
R. v. JONES [C.C.A.] 668
R. v. MCBRIDE [C.C.A.] 6
R. v. MALES [C.C.A.] 705
R. v. METHARAM [C.C.A.] 200
R. v. PADDINGTON AND ST. MARYLEBONE RENT TRIBUNAL, Ex parte HAINES [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.] 1047
R. v. PARKS [C.C.A.] 633
R. v. PORRITT [C.C.A.] 463
R. v. QUINN [C.C.A.] 88
R. v. R. AND I. [DIV.] 461
R. SHOUKATALLIE v. [P.C.] 996
R. v. SMITH [C.C.A.] 972
R. v. TILLEY [C.C.A.] 406
REA, LTD., JOHNSON v. [C.A.] 816
REFUGE ASSURANCE CO., LTD., ABBOTT v. [C.A.] 1074
RENNELL (LORD) v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [C.A.] 1028
RIDGE NOMINEES, LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [C.A.] 1108
RIMMER BROS. (LIVERPOOL), LTD., MCMATH v. [C.A.] 1154
ROSS, MITCHELL (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. [H.L.] 49
ROYAL VICTORIA PAVILION, RAMSGATE, Re [CH.D.] 83
RYCROFT'S SETTLEMENTS, Re [CH.D.] 581
S. v. S. (O. OTHERWISE P. (BY HER GUARDIAN) INTERVENING) B. CITED [DIV.] 133
ST. JOHN-IN-BEDWARDINE, WORCESTER, Re [CT. OF ARCHES] 216
ST. MARYLEBONE PROPERTY CO., LTD. v. FAIRWEATHER [C.A.] 560
ST. PANCRAS METROPOLITAN BOROUGH (DISTRICT AUDITOR), ANNISON v. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.] .. 914
ST. PANCRAS METROPOLITAN BOROUGH (DISTRICT AUDITOR), TAYLOR v. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.] .. 914
SCARSBROOK v. MASON [Q.B.D.] 767
SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION CO., LTD., ATTORNEY-GENERAL OF CEYLON v. [P.C.] .. 684
SEALE'S MARRIAGE SETTLEMENT, Re [CH.D.] .. 136
SHAWINIGAN, LTD. v. VOKINS & CO., LTD. [Q.B.D.] 396
SHOUKATALLIE v. R. [P.C.] 996
SILVER, WYLD v. [CH.D.] 1014

PAGE

SMITH v. LEECH BRAIN & CO., LTD. [Q.B.D.] .. 1159
SMITH, R. v. [C.C.A.] 972
SMITH'S WILL TRUSTS, Re [CH.D.] 824
SPARROW v. FAIREY AVIATION CO., LTD. [C.A.] .. 452
SPENCER v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [CH.D.] .. 551
STEIN, FIELDRANK, LTD. v. [C.A.] 681
STERN'S WILL TRUSTS, Re [CH.D.] 1129
STRZELCZYK, FINKLE v [C.A.] 409
SUNBURY-ON-THAMES URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL, EDWICK v. [Q.B.D.] 10
SUNROSE, LTD. v. GOULD [C.A.] 1142
SUNSHINE PORCELAIN POTTERIES PROPRIETARY, LTD. v. NASH [P.C.] 203
SYKES v. DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS [H.L.] 33
TARNESBY, TAYLOR-GOOBY (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. [H.L.] 49
TAYLOR v. DISTRICT AUDITOR FOR THE METROPOLITAN BOROUGH OF ST. PANCRAS [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.] 914
TAYLOR-GOOBY (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. DREW [H.L.] 49
TAYLOR-GOOBY (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. TARNESBY [H.L.] 49
TILLEY, R. v. [C.C.A.] 406
TRADESMAN, THE [ADM.] 661
TURNER v. TURNER [C.A.] 944
UNITED AFRICA CO., LTD., MACFOY v. [P.C.] .. 1169
VESTEY v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [CH.D.] .. 978
VOKINS & CO., LTD., SHAWINIGAN, LTD. v. [Q.B.D.] 396
WALKER v. WALKER [DIV.] 14
WARAGOWSKI, YEOMAN CREDIT, LTD. v. [C.A.] .. 145
WARNER, MCKIE (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. [CH.D.] 348
WARWICK RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL v. MILLER-MEAD [VACATION CT.] 542
WATERMAN, CLIFFORD-TURNER v. [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.] 974
WEG MOTORS, LTD. v. HALES [C.A.] 181
WHITE & CARTER (COUNCILS), LTD. v. MCGREGOR [H.L.] 1178
WHITTAM v. DANIEL (W.J.) & CO., LTD. [C.A.] .. 796
WIGLEY v. BRITISH VINEGARS, LTD. [C.A.] .. 418
WINTER (EXECUTORS OF SIR ARTHUR MUNRO SUTHERLAND (decd.)) v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS. [H.L.] 855
WISBECH CORPN., GARLAND & FLEXMAN (A FIRM) v. [Q.B.D.] 342
WITHERS, FLACK v. [H.L.] 388
WITHERS v. PERRY CHAIN CO., LTD. [C.A.] .. 676
WOLVERHAMPTON BOROUGH COUNCIL'S ALDERMANIC ELECTION, Re [Q.B.D. DIVL. CT.] .. 446
WOOD, PONTIN v. [Q.B.D.] 992
WOODMAN & SON (BUILDERS), LTD., CLAYTON v. [Q.B.D.] 249
WUTA-OFEI v. DANQUAH [P.C.] 596
WYLD v. SILVER [CH.D.] 1014
YEOMAN CREDIT, LTD. v. WARAGOWSKI [C.A.] .. 145
YOUNG v. YOUNG [C.A.] 695
YOUNG v. YOUNG (NO. 2) [DIV.] 793
ZAMET v. HYMAN [C.A.] 933

INDEX

PAGE

ABANDONMENT
Criminal appeal, of. See QUARTER SESSIONS (Appeal to).

ABSOLUTE PRIVILEGE
See LIBEL (Privilege).

ACCOMMODATION
Provision—Income tax. See INCOME TAX (Income).

ACTION
Competence to bring. See PRACTICE (Parties—Capacity—Local authority).
Felony—Duty to prosecute before bringing civil action. See MALICIOUS PROSECUTION (Malice—Motive).

ADMINISTRATION OF ESTATES
Death duties—Incidence. See DEATH DUTY (Incidence).
Marshalling—Devise of property in Australia—Sale and application of proceeds partly in paying Australian death duty not ultimately payable out of proceeds of sale—Remittance of moneys forming part of estate to England—Balance of proceeds of sale not set aside and separately invested nor appropriated—Devisee's right to compensation in a fixed sum (being amount of balance) notwithstanding depreciation of remitted assets—No notional appropriation for want of consents required by Land Transfer Act, 1897 (c. 65), s. 4 (1) [Re MATTHEWS'S WILL TRUSTS] 869

ADMIRALTY
Stay of proceedings—Arbitration. See ARBITRATION (Stay of proceedings).

ADMISSION
Crime, of. See CRIMINAL LAW (Evidence—Admissibility).

ADULTERY
See DIVORCE.

ADVANCEMENT
See TRUST AND TRUSTEE (Powers of trustee).

ADVERTISEMENT
Contract for—Repudiation. See CONTRACT (Repudiation—Election not to accept repudiation).

AFFIDAVIT
Company—Winding-up. See COMPANY (Winding-up—Compulsory winding-up—Contributory's application—Just and equitable—Deadlock).

AGENT
Driver of motor vehicle as agent of passengers—Liability of passengers. See ROAD TRAFFIC (Negligence—Liability of passenger).

ALDERMAN
Election. See ELECTIONS (Local government).

ALIBI
Defence to crime, as—Burden of proof. See CRIMINAL LAW (Burden of proof).

AMENDMENT
See PRACTICE (Parties).

ANNUITY
Income tax—Capital element. See SURTAX (Annual payment—Capital or income—Purchase price payable by instalments).

APPEAL
Court of Appeal, to. See COURT OF APPEAL.
Criminal appeal. See CRIMINAL LAW.
Divorce proceedings, in. See DIVORCE.
Evidence—Further evidence. See COURT OF APPEAL (Evidence).
House of Lords, to. See CRIMINAL LAW; HOUSE OF LORDS.
Quarter sessions, to. See QUARTER SESSIONS (Appeal to).
Reinstatement of dismissed appeal. See COURT OF APPEAL (Reinstatement of dismissed appeal).

ARBITRATION
Agreement—Arbitration clause in contract—Validity of contract in question—Enforceability of arbitration clause. See Stay of proceedings—Protocol agreement, post.
Stay of proceedings—Protocol agreement—Contract for towage containing arbitration clause alleged to be a nullity—Action brought for negligence—Whether stay of action should be granted—Exercise of discretion if arbitration had not been pursuant to protocol agreement—Arbitration Act, 1950 (c. 27), s. 4 [THE TRADESMAN] 661

ARCHITECT
Negligence—Independent contractor—Building owner not liable [CLAYTON v. WOODMAN & SON (BUILDERS), LTD.] 249 Instructions to builders' workmen. See NEGLIGENCE (Duty to take care—Proximity of relation—Statements).

ARMY
Offences. See COURT-MARTIAL.

ART GALLERY
Rateability. See RATES (Rateable occupation).

ASSESSMENT
Damages—Court of Appeal. See COURT OF APPEAL (Damages).

ATTEMPT Crime. See CRIMINAL LAW.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL
Charity proceedings. See PRACTICE (Parties—Charity).

AUDIT
Local government. See LOCAL GOVERNMENT.

AUSTRALIA
Estate duty. See DEATH DUTY (Incidence).
See also PRIVY COUNCIL.

AUTOMATISM
Defence to criminal charge. See CRIMINAL LAW.

BAIL
See MAGISTRATES (Examining magistrates—Remand).

BANK
Manager—Club subscriptions—Income tax. See INCOME TAX (Deduction in computing profits—" Expenses incurred wholly, exclusively and necessarily in the performance of . . . duties ").
Statement in answer to inquiry—Financial references given honestly but without due care—Bank giving reference to other bank—Use by second bank's customer expected—First bank financing customer whose reference given—Whether first bank liable to second bank's customer [HEDLEY BYRNE & CO., LTD. v. HELLER & PARTNERS, LTD.] 891

BAR COUNCIL
Complaint to—Whether privileged. See LIBEL (Privilege—Absolute privilege—Qualified privilege—Communications to Bar Council).

BARRISTER
See COUNSEL.

BILL OF LADING
See SHIPPING.

BREACH OF DUTY
Statutory—Limitation of action. See LIMITATION OF ACTION (Breach of statutory duty).
See also STATUTORY DUTY.

BREACH OF TRUST
See TRUST AND TRUSTEE.

BUILDING
Building regulations—Breach—Employers and employee both in breach—Apportionment of responsibility where faults not co-extensive—Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948 No. 1145), reg. 4, reg. 29 (4) [MCMATH v. RIMMER BROS. (LIVERPOOL), LTD.] 1154
Collapse—Avoidance of danger—Failure to take precautions—Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948 No. 1145), reg. 94 (2) [CLAYTON v. WOODMAN & SON (BUILDERS), LTD.] 249
Scaffolding—Gutter under construction—Part of permanent building—Hook holding support of gutter defective—Latent defect—Accident not foreseeable—Working place—No guard-rail—Absence of guard-rail not cause of accident—Whether gutter a " gangway "—Whether work could " safely be done " (reg. 5)—Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948 No. 1145), regs. 3 (2), 5, 7 (1), (4), 8 (1), 12 (2), 24 (1) [CURRAN v. WILLIAM NEILL & SON (ST. HELENS), LTD.] 108
Burial ground, on. See BURIAL (Burial ground).
Negligence—Orders and instructions issued by architect—Personal injuries sustained by workman. See NEGLIGENCE (Duty to take care—Proximity of relation—Statements).

BUILDING PRESERVATION ORDER
See TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING.

BUILDING REGULATIONS
See BUILDING.

BURDEN OF PROOF
See CRIMINAL LAW; LIMITATION OF ACTION.

BURIAL
Burial ground—Disused—Whole of ground set apart for interments but not all used for that purpose—Legacy to erect lodge for sexton on unconsecrated part not so used—Whether building on part not yet used for burial forbidden as building on disused burial ground—Disused Burial Grounds Act, 1884 (c. 72), s. 2, s. 3—Open Spaces Act, 1887 (c. 32), s. 4—Open Spaces Act, 1906 (c. 25), s. 20 [Re JEWISON'S WILL TRUSTS] 1022

BURIAL GROUND
See BURIAL.

BUSINESS PREMISES
Lease. See LANDLORD AND TENANT (Lease).
New tenancy. See LANDLORD AND TENANT (New tenancy).
Notice to quit. See LANDLORD AND TENANT (Notice to quit).

CAPITAL
Income tax—Capital or income. See SURTAX (Annual payment—Capital or income).

CARRIAGE OF GOODS
See SHIPPING (Carriage by sea).

CAUSATION
See MASTER AND SERVANT (Liability of master); STATUTORY DUTY (Breach).

CEYLON
See PRIVY COUNCIL.

CHAMBERS
Divorce—Custody—Agreement for reference to. See DIVORCE (Practice—Custody).

CHARITY
Action—Parties. See PRACTICE (Parties).
Hospital—Uncertainty. See Uncertainty—Hospital, post.

CHARITY—continued. PAGE

Religion—Public benefit—Synagogue—Ancillary social activities [NEVILLE ESTATES, LTD. v. MADDEN] 769

Sale of charity estate—Consent of Charity Commissioners—"Wholly maintained by voluntary contributions"—Charity partially maintained by voluntary contributions and partially by endowment—Transfer at time when not a "mixed charity"—Charitable Trusts Act, 1853 (c. 137), s. 62 [NEVILLE ESTATES, LTD. v. MADDEN] 769

Uncertainty—Gift to institution whose main object charitable but whose other objects might or might not be charitable—Charitable Trusts (Validation) Act, 1954 (c. 58), s. 1 (1) [Re HARPUR'S WILL TRUSTS] 588

Hospital—Gift to "hospital" and/or hospitals and/or charitable institutions—Whether gift void [Re SMITH'S WILL TRUSTS] 824

Unincorporated association—Trust for members of synagogue—No limit as to time [NEVILLE ESTATES, LTD. v. MADDEN] 769

Validation by Charitable Trusts (Validation) Act, 1954—Imperfect trust provision—Gift to institution whose main object charitable but whose other objects might or might not be charitable—Whether trust validated—Charitable Trusts (Validation) Act. 1954 (c. 58), s. 1 (1) [Re HARPUR'S WILL TRUSTS] 588

Preservation of rights of adverse claimants—Unascertained class of next of kin—Date when rights accrue—Charitable Trusts (Validation) Act, 1954 (c. 58), s. 3 (1), (2), (3) [Re HARPUR'S WILL TRUSTS] 588

CHILD

Education. See EDUCATION.

En ventre sa mère. See WILL (Gift—"Born in the lifetime of" the testator).

Negligence—Occupier's liability for acts of children on his land. See OCCUPIER (Negligence).

CHOSE IN ACTION

Assignment—Bill of lading. See SHIPPING (Bill of lading—Transfer of rights).

COAL MINING

Statutory duty—Breach—Road—Obstruction—Duty to keep free from obstructions—Rope forming part of haulage system left in situ when haulage system not in use—Whether rope an "obstruction"—Mines and Quarries Act, 1954 (c. 70), s. 34 (1) (b) [COOK v. NATIONAL COAL BOARD] 220

COAST PROTECTION

See WATER AND WATERCOURSES.

COMMISSION

Remuneration of employee. See MASTER AND SERVANT (Remuneration).

COMPANY

Contributory. See Winding-up—Compulsory winding-up, post.

Conveyance by—Stamp duty. See STAMP DUTY (Conveyance on sale).

Estate duty—Valuation of shares. See ESTATE DUTY.

Practice—Winding-up—Affidavit in support of petition. See Winding-up—Compulsory winding-up—Contributory's application—Just and equitable—Deadlock, post.

Private company—Deadlock. See Winding-up—Compulsory winding-up—Contributory's application—Just and equitable, post.

Exempt private company—Loss of exemption—Body corporate holder of shares—Exception for banking or finance company providing capital—Capital reorganisation—Arrangement with finance company to purchase new issue of shares from members entitled thereto—Companies Act, 1948 (c. 38), s. 129 (4), Sch. 7, para. 7 (1), para. 9 [QUALTER, HALL & CO., LTD. v. BOARD OF TRADE] 389 Shares—Transfer—Compulsory transfer—Companies Act, 1948 (c. 38), s. 209—Whether sale. See STAMP DUTY (Conveyance on sale—Transfer of stock—Compulsory transfer under statutory provision).

Surtax. See SURTAX.

Winding-up—Compulsory winding-up—Contributory's application—Just and equitable—Deadlock—Evidence—Statutory affidavit only evidence—Articles of association not in evidence—Possible courses open to shareholders and directors not shown—Private company having two shareholders—Dismissal of petition—Companies Act, 1948 (c. 38), s. 222 (f) [Re DAVIS INVESTMENTS (EAST HAM), LTD.] 926

COMPROMISE

Appeal—Consent to dismissal. See COURT OF APPEAL (Appeal).

See also HOUSE OF LORDS.

CONFLICT OF LAWS

Foreign judgment—Enforcement—Action in England—Whether foreign judgment against partnership a final and conclusive judgment on which to found action against individual partner [BLOHN v. DESSER] 1

Jurisdiction of foreign court—Partnership abroad—Sleeping partner in United Kingdom—Action in personam against debtor not resident in foreign country but carrying on business there through partnership [BLOHN v. DESSER] 1

Recognition—Status—Guardianship order conferring status of incompetence on settlor of English settlement and appointing guardian of his estate and person—Settlor not under incapacity by English law—Withdrawal of funds under power reserved to settlor by settlement—Notice of withdrawal executed by settlor and guardian—Whether notice effective—Extent to which English court will recognise effects of foreign order imposing status [Re LANGLEY'S SETTLEMENT TRUSTS] 803

Nullity. See NULLITY (Foreign marriage).

Settlement—Beneficial trusts—Charge by statute—Canadian settlement—Charge by way of indemnity to limited owner paying principal amount of United Kingdom estate duty—Whether Canadian courts would interfere with beneficial interests to give effect to charge. See ESTATE DUTY (Deduction of debt—Reimbursement—Duty leviable on death of life tenant of trust funds settled by Canadian settlement).

CONSISTORY COURT

See ECCLESIASTICAL LAW.

CONSULTANT

Hospital—Income tax. See INCOME TAX (Deduction in computing profits—Expenses).

CONTRACT
Breach—Anticipatory breach—Repudiation—Refusal to accept repudiation. See Repudiation—Election not to accept repudiation, post.
Damages—Hire-purchase agreement. See HIRE-PURCHASE (Damages for breach of contract).
Loan. See MONEY (Loan).
Penalty—Hire-purchase agreement. See HIRE-PURCHASE (Penalty).
Repudiation—Election not to accept repudiation—Effect—Contract remains fully effective—Innocent party entitled to perform contract and enforce contractual rights—Contract for advertisements to be exhibited over three years commencing at a future date—Advertiser expressly repudiated contract on the day on which it was made—Contractor published advertisements in accordance with contract and claimed payment in full—No step taken to minimise loss to advertiser—Whether contractor entitled to recover payment [WHITE & CARTER (COUNCILS), LTD. v. MCGREGOR] 1178

CONTRIBUTION
Joint tortfeasors. See TORT.

CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE
See NEGLIGENCE.

CONVEYANCE
Stamp duty. See STAMP DUTY (Conveyance on sale).

COSTS
Criminal cases—Difference between costs in civil and criminal cases—Whether defendant's costs in criminal cases awarded to indemnify defendants—Whether difference between costs incurred and costs awarded constitute special damage for action for malicious prosecution [BERRY v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION] 65

COUNSEL
Criminal trial—Withdrawal of prosecution if no evidence to go to jury [ABBOTT v. REFUGE ASSURANCE CO., LTD.] 1074
Duty—Conduct of litigation—Duty to court—Concealment of matter relevant to credit of party on vital point. See COURT OF APPEAL (New trial—Misleading the court at trial).
Professional misconduct—Jurisdiction—Benchers of Inn of Court—Complaint to Bar Council—Whether privileged [LINCOLN v. DANIELS] 740
Summons—Counsel's list—Transfer to. See DIVORCE (Practice—Summons).

COURT
Misleading the court. See COURT OF APPEAL (New trial).

COURT-MARTIAL
Jurisdiction—Civil offence—Act or omission abroad not punishable by law of England—Driving without due care and attention on road in Germany—Whether civil offence within Army Act, 1955 (c. 18), s. 70 (2)—Road Traffic Act, 1960 (c. 16), s. 3 (1) [R. v. COX] 1194

COURT OF APPEAL
Appeal—Consent to dismissal without costs—Consent initialled by president of court—No order drawn up or entered—Compromise for good consideration—No ground for setting it aside—Appeal not allowed to proceed [NATIONAL BENZOLE CO., LTD. v. GOOCH] 1097
Damages—Assessment by judge alone—Test for intervention by appellate court—Disparity with assessment in similar case by another Division of Court of Appeal [BASTOW v. BAGLEY & CO., LTD.] 1101
Evidence—Further evidence—Evidence obtainable with reasonable diligence for the trial—Relevance emerging towards end of opponent's case [CROOK v. DERBYSHIRE] 786
Judge's note—Liverpool Court of Passage—No shorthand note—Judge's note of evidence and note of reasons should be available for Court of Appeal [JOHNSON v. REA, LTD.] 816
Leave to appeal to House of Lords. See HOUSE OF LORDS (Appeal to—Leave to appeal).
New trial—Apprehension of prejudgment of issues—Respondent in divorce suit alleging that judge had made up his mind after hearing petitioner's evidence—Withdrawal of respondent from trial before giving evidence—Burden of justifying withdrawal when applying to Court of Appeal for new trial [BRASSINGTON v. BRASSINGTON] 988
Misleading the court at trial—Concealment of material matter relevant to credit of party—Duty of advocate to court—Action for false imprisonment—Defendant police officer reduced in rank while action pending—Disciplinary charge leading to reduction showing deception of court in relation to another arrest—Concealment of reduction in rank during trial of action—Miscarriage of justice [MEEK v. FLEMING] 148
Reinstatement of dismissed appeal—Final judgment not entered—Appeal as to damages—Disparity with subsequent assessment in similar case by Court of Appeal [BASTOW v. BAGLEY & CO., LTD.] 1101
Solicitor—Withdrawal pending appeal. See SOLICITOR (Withdrawal).

COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL
Practice. See CRIMINAL LAW (Appeal).

COVENANT
Running with land—Sale of theatre and cinema properties—Covenant to "procure" that theatre retained by vendors should not be open save for certain performances—Vendors' interest in retained theatre a leasehold interest—Successors in title not mentioned in covenant—Whether covenant personal or binding land—Whether contrary intention excluding Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 79 [Re ROYAL VICTORIA PAVILION, RAMSGATE] 83
Successors in title. See Running with land—Sale of theatre and cinema properties, ante.

CRANE
Harbour—Obligation to allow public to use. See HARBOUR (Quay).

CRIMINAL LAW
Alibi. See Burden of proof, post.
Appeal—Abandonment of appeal. See QUARTER SESSIONS (Appeal to).
Evidence—Fresh evidence—Principles on which the Court of Criminal Appeal will act in exercising its discretion whether to allow fresh evidence to be called—Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (c. 23), s. 9 [R. v. PARKS] 633
House of Lords—Jurisdiction—Whether appeal limited to point of law certified by court below—Administration of Justice Act, 1960 (c. 65), s. 1 (2) [ATTORNEY-GENERAL FOR NORTHERN IRELAND v. GALLAGHER] 299

CRIMINAL LAW—Appeal—continued. PAGE

Insanity—Special verdict of guilty of act but insane at time of its commission—Whether right of appeal against finding of guilty of act—Trial of Lunatics Act, 1883 (c. 38), s. 2 (1)—Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (c. 23), s. 3 [R. v. DUKE] 737

Leave to appeal—Order—Form of order—Reasons not to be given [PRACTICE NOTE] 522

Misdirection—Re-trial—Disagreement of jury at first trial—Whether there should be, in relation to second trial, an application of the proviso to Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (c. 23), s. 4 (1) [R. v. JOHNSON] 969

Practice—Application for leave to appeal not to be treated as the appeal unless counsel for the applicant consents [PRACTICE NOTE] 522

Sentence—Power to increase sentence [PRACTICE NOTE] 522

Attempt—Merger—Indictment charging attempt—Conviction of attempt when evidence showed full offence (felony of housebreaking) committed—Whether conviction of the misdemeanour, the attempt, permissible—Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (c. 100), s. 12 [R. v. MALES] .. 705

Automatism—Alternative defences of automatism and insanity—Evidence—No defence of automatism when only cause alleged for unconscious state is disease of the mind within the M'Naghten rules—Evidence forming a proper foundation for automatism necessary before issue can be left to jury—Burden of proof—No other pathological cause than psychomotor epilepsy put forward—Psychomotor epilepsy a disease of the mind—Issue of automatism not left to jury [BRATTY v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL FOR NORTHERN IRELAND] 523

Bail—Examining magistrates. See MAGISTRATES (Examining magistrates—Remand).

Burden of proof—Alibi [R. v. JOHNSON] 969

Standard of proof required—Summing-up—Direction that jury should be satisfied and sure of prisoner's guilt [R. v. ATTFIELD] 243

Defence—Alibi—Burden of proof. See Burden of proof, ante.

Disorderly house—Definition—Indecent performances and exhibitions—Offence of keeping a disorderly house by giving such performances—Whether essential that persons viewing such performances should participate in acts of indecency—Whether common nuisance an essential element of offence [R. v. QUINN. R. v. BLOOM] 88

Evidence—Admissibility—Admission to police officer while in custody, obtained in conversation without caution—Discretion of court to admit such evidence—Judges' Rules, r. 3 [R. v. SMITH] 972

Burden of proof. See Burden of proof, ante.

Character of accused—Imputation from nature of defence and accused's evidence as to character of prosecution witness—Discretion—Whether cross-examination of accused as to previous convictions should be allowed—Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (c. 36), s. 1, proviso (f) (ii) [R. v. FLYNN] 58

Cross-examination—Previous charge—Similar circumstances—Whether cross-examination of accused as to circumstances of previous charge admissible—Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (c. 36), s. 1, proviso (f) and exception (i) [R. v. JONES] 668

Previous conviction—Cross-examination of accused as to similar acts—Existence of previous conviction of some offence shown by accused's evidence in chief—Admissibility of questions in cross-examination—"Tending to show"—Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (c. 36), s. 1, proviso (f) and exception (i) [R. v. JONES] 668

Film—Reconstruction of crime [R. v. QUINN. R. v. BLOOM] 88

Handwriting—Necessity for expert evidence to assist jury—Criminal Procedure Act, 1865 (c. 18), s. 8 [R. v. TILLEY. R. v. TILLEY] 406

Insanity. See Insanity, post.

Previous convictions—Relevancy of previous convictions of dishonesty to complainant's credibility as to identification of accused charged with having indecently assaulted her [R. v. PARKS] 633

Firearms. See FIREARMS.

Grievous bodily harm—Direction to jury—Intent only to interfere seriously with health or comfort not sufficient—Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (c. 100), s. 18 [R. v. METHARAM] .. 200

Housebreaking—Attempt—Conviction of full offence. See Attempt—Merger, ante.

Indictment—Joinder of counts—Dangerous driving—Causing death by dangerous driving—Drunk in charge—Road Traffic Act, 1960 (c. 16), s. 1, s. 2, s. 6 [R. v. MCBRIDE] 6

Insanity—Evidence of insanity tendered by prosecution—No defence of diminished responsibility—Defence should be raised by accused and witnesses called on his behalf [R. v. DIXON] .. 460

Time to which test by M'Naghten rules should be related—Disease of the mind not impairing knowledge when quiescent—Psychopathic condition—Explosive outburst induced by drink [ATTORNEY-GENERAL FOR NORTHERN IRELAND v. GALLAGHER] 299

Misdemeanour—Merger. See Attempt, ante.

Misdirection. See Appeal, ante.

Misprision of felony—Whether offence exists—Whether active concealment essential ingredient of offence [SYKES v. DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS] 33

Murder—Insanity. See Insanity, ante.

Provocation—Summing-up—Issue to be left to jury although defence of provocation not raised and although accused did not testify that he was provoked—Homicide as culmination of evening of gang warfare—Homicide Act, 1957 (c. 11), s. 3 [R. v. PORRITT] 463

[BULLARD v. R.] 470

Official secrets—Sentence. See Sentence—Consecutive sentences, post.

Practice—Appeal. See Appeal, ante.

Handwriting—Need for expert evidence. See Evidence—Handwriting, ante.

Insanity. See Insanity, ante.

Sentence—Hospital order—Restriction on discharge—Inquiry as to facilities for legal custody—Mental Health Act, 1959 (c. 72), s. 60, s. 65 [R. v. HIGGINBOTHAM] 616

Withdrawal of prosecution—Counsel's duty to apply for leave to withdraw prosecution if no evidence to go to jury [ABBOTT v. REFUGE ASSURANCE CO., LTD.] 1074

Provocation. See Murder, ante.

Remand. See MAGISTRATES (Examining magistrates).

Road traffic offences. See ROAD TRAFFIC.

Sentence—Appeal. See Appeal—Sentence, ante.

CRIMINAL LAW—Sentence—continued.
Consecutive sentences—Discretion to impose—Whether maximum sentences imposed on several convictions each for a separate like offence can be directed to run consecutively—Official Secrets Act, 1911 (c. 28), s. 1 (1) (c)—Official Secrets Act, 1920 (c. 75), s. 8 (1) [R. v. BLAKE] 125
Whether sentence of life imprisonment to run consecutively with sentence of imprisonment then being served permissible and desirable [R. v. JONES] 668
Misprision of felony—Term of sentence [SYKES v. DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS] 33
Preventive detention—Road traffic offences. See ROAD TRAFFIC (Dangerous driving—Sentence).
Remission—Regard not had to the earning of remission when awarding sentence [R. v. BLAKE] 125
Trial—Jury—Intimidation or threat—Jury in West Indies told by judge to remember their oath—Direction to put aside extraneous matters, to make up their minds one way or the other and to accept reason one from the other—Not told that they were at liberty to disagree—Whether such coercion as to invalidate jury's verdict [SHOUKATALLIE v. R.] 996
Summing-up—Burden of proof. See Burden of proof, ante.
Evidence—Whether fatal defect if evidence not reviewed by judge in summing-up [R. v. ATTFIELD] 243
Handwriting—Need for expert evidence. See Evidence—Handwriting, ante.
Murder—Provocation. See Murder—Provocation, ante.
Wounding—Intent to do grievous bodily harm. See Grievous bodily harm, ante.

CROSS-EXAMINATION
Criminal proceedings, in. See CRIMINAL LAW (Evidence).
Divorce. See DIVORCE (Evidence).

CRUELTY
Persistent cruelty. See MAGISTRATES (Husband and wife).

CUSTODY Child. See DIVORCE (Practice)

CUSTOMS
Commissioners of Customs and Excise—Acts and exercise of powers—Demand authorised by proper officer but made by officer not authorised—Customs and Excise Act, 1952 (c. 44), s. 4 (1) [COMRS. OF CUSTOMS AND EXCISE v. CURE & DEELEY, LTD.] 641

DAMAGES
Assessment—Appeal or new trial. See COURT OF APPEAL.
Breach of statutory duty—Apportionment. See STATUTORY DUTY (Breach—Causation—Breach by both employer and employee—Faults not co-extensive).
Divorce suit. See DIVORCE.
Fatal Accidents Acts, under. See FATAL ACCIDENT.
Hire-purchase—Breach of contract by hirer's not paying instalments. See HIRE-PURCHASE (Damages for breach of contract).
Instalments—Divorce. See DIVORCE (Damages—Co-respondent).
Malicious prosecution. See MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.
Measure of damages—Personal injury. See NEGLIGENCE.
Separate tortfeasors—Successive torts—Each tort, if occurring alone, would render necessary the same work of repair—Judgment for damages, including cost of repair, recorded against first tortfeasor but unsatisfied—Whether second tortfeasor's liability in damages included the cost of that work [PERFORMANCE CARS, LTD. v. ABRAHAM] 413
Mitigation—Collateral matters—Exclusion. See Measure of damages—Separate tortfeasors—Successive torts, ante.
Remoteness of damage—Negligence—Foreseeability—Type, but not extent, of injury foreseeable—Burn on person in pre-malignant condition—Development of cancer resulting in death—Whether defendants liable in damages for loss of expectation of life and under Fatal Accidents Acts [SMITH v. LEECH BRAIN & CO., LTD.] 1159 Tort—Separate tortfeasors—Successive torts. See Measure of damages—Separate tortfeasors, ante.

DANGEROUS CONDITIONS
Creation of dangerous conditions—Duty to take precautions for the safety of others—Extent of duty, whether merely to warn or to take steps to protect others from injury—Stevedores loading cargo on to ship—Shed floor rendered slippery by soda ash in cargo—No steps taken to remedy this—Lorry man bringing cargo injured through slipping on floor [JOHNSON v. REA, LTD.] .. 816

DANGEROUS DRIVING See ROAD TRAFFIC.

DANGEROUS MACHINERY
See FACTORY.

DEATH DUTY
Incidence—Real property—Contrary intention—Australian federal estate duty—New South Wales probate duty—"Expenses incident to the execution of the preceding trusts"—"Debts"—"Testamentary expenses"—Whether testamentary direction to pay these showed intention to exonerate realty from death duty [Re MATTHEWS'S WILL TRUSTS] 869
See also ESTATE DUTY.

DEBT
Damages. See HIRE-PURCHASE (Damages for breach of contract).

DEMAND
Making a demand—Officer authorised under statute to make demand approved it—Letter of demand signed and sent by another officer not so authorised. See CUSTOMS (Commissioners of Customs and Excise—Acts and exercise of powers).

DEPRECIATION
Clause. See HIRE-PURCHASE (Penalty).

DE-RATING
See RATES.

DESERTION
See DIVORCE.

PAGE

DEVELOPMENT
See TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING (Permission for development).

DISMISSAL
Appeal—Consent to dismissal of appeal to Court of Appeal. See COURT OF APPEAL (Appeal—Consent to dismissal without costs).

DISORDERLY HOUSE
See CRIMINAL LAW.

DISTRIBUTION CHARGE
See PROFITS TAX (Distribution).

DISTURBANCE
Market, of. See MARKETS AND FAIRS.

DIVORCE
Adultery—Cross-examination. See Evidence, post.
Insanity—Whether ignorance that act was wrong was a defence [S. v. S. (O. OTHERWISE P. (BY HER GUARDIAN) INTERVENING) B. CITED] 133
Appeal—Divisional Court—Jurisdiction—Application for re-hearing—Appeal by unsuccessful party to Court of Appeal on ground of misdirection—Whether " error of the court at the hearing " alleged—Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1957 (S.I. 1957 No. 619), r. 36 (1) [TURNER v. TURNER] 944
Judge indicating view after evidence of one party. See COURT OF APPEAL (New trial—Apprehension of prejudgment of issues).
Cruelty—Adultery—Reasonable belief in husband's adultery deliberately induced in wife's mind by husband. See MAGISTRATES (Husband and wife—Cruelty—Persistent cruelty).
Cross-examination as to adultery. See Evidence, post.
Evidence—Magistrates' court order. See Evidence—Magistrates' court order on similar issue, post.
Custody—Chambers. See Practice—Custody, post,
Damages—Co-respondent—Instalments—Whether court has jurisdiction to order payment by instalments [PIDDUCK v. PIDDUCK AND LIMBRICK] 481
Desertion—Termination—Conduct of deserted spouse causing deserting spouse to desist from attempting reconciliation—Impact on mind of deserting spouse—Question of fact—Communication of refusal of reconciliation having no effect on mind of deserting spouse—Whether desertion terminated [BREWER v. BREWER] 957
Evidence—Cross-examination—Adultery—Petition on ground of cruelty—Cross-prayer on ground of desertion—No allegation of adultery in pleadings—Admissibility of cross-examination as to adultery—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (c. 25), s. 32 (3) [CLIFFORD v. CLIFFORD] .. 231
Magistrates' court order on similar issue—Probative value of findings—Corroboration—Weight to be given thereto at subsequent trial of divorce petition for cruelty—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (c. 25), s. 7 (2) [TURNER v. TURNER] 944 Injunction—Divorced wife writing to child. See INJUNCTION (Divorce).
Insanity—Adultery—Defence. See Adultery—Insanity, ante.
Incurable unsoundness of mind—Care and treatment for five years immediately preceding the presentation of the petition—Respondent husband left hospital on discharge less than twenty-eight days before presentation of the petition—Care and treatment ended—Interval before presentation of a petition not an " interruption " in care and treatment—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (c. 25), s. 1 (1) (d)—Divorce (Insanity and Desertion) Act, 1958 (c. 54), s. 1 (3) [CHAPMAN v. CHAPMAN (BY HIS GUARDIAN)] 1105
Maintenance—Application—Leave of judge—Claim not included in wife's answer—Answer claiming costs but no specific matrimonial relief—Whether leave needed—Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1957 (S.I. 1957 No. 619), r. 3 (3) [G. v. G. (OTHERWISE H.)] 247
Maintenance—Wife—Dismissal by consent—Acceptance of lump sum in full satisfaction of present and future rights—Subsequent application by wife for maintenance and secured provision—Whether subsequent application competent—Whether subsequent application precluded by agreement—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (c. 25), s. 19 (2), (3) (as amended)—Matrimonial Causes (Property and Maintenance) Act, 1958 (c. 35), s. 1 (1) [L. v. L.] 834
Dismissal in 1958 by consent of wife's claims for maintenance and secured provision contained in petition—Lump sum accepted by wife in full satisfaction of all present and future rights to maintenance for herself—Subsequent application by wife in 1961 for maintenance and secured provision—Leave required to make application—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (c. 25), s. 19 (2), (3) (as amended)—Matrimonial Causes (Property and Maintenance) Act, 1958 (c. 35), s. 1 (1)—Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1957 (S.I. 1957 No. 619), r. 3 (3), proviso (ii) [L. v. L.] 20
Practice—Application to High Court while magistrates' court's order existing—Copy of maintenance order of magistrates' court to be lodged [PRACTICE DIRECTION] 1200
Variation of order—Re-marriage of wife—No power to order refund by wife of money received by her under the order after her re-marriage—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (c. 25), s. 28 (1) [YOUNG v. YOUNG (NO. 2)] 793
Re-marriage of wife—Wife having custody of child—Additional expenditure by wife due to custody of child—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (c. 25), s. 19 (3), s. 28 (3) [KIRKE v. KIRKE] 1059
Petition—Form of petition—Prayer for such further and other relief as may be just—Whether needed—Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1957 (S.I. 1957 No. 619), r. 4 (4) [G. v. G. (OTHERWISE H.)] 247 Practice—Application for maintenance. See Maintenance—Wife—Practice, ante.
Custody—Chambers—Agreement by parties that matter be referred to chambers—Judge's rejection of application for reference—Order for custody made at hearing—Respondent's non-appearance in reliance on agreement—Order not open to objection [COOPER v. COOPER] .. 539
Pleading—Prayer—" Such further and other relief as may be just "—Whether needed [G. v. G. (OTHERWISE H.)] 247
Summons—Transfer from solicitors' to counsel's list [PRACTICE DIRECTION] 171
Trial—Judge indicating view before evidence concluded—Danger of apprehension of prejudgment. See COURT OF APPEAL (New trial—Apprehension of prejudgment of issues).
Re-hearing—Jurisdiction of Divisional Court. See Appeal—Divisional Court—Jurisdiction, ante.
Variation of settlement. See VARIATION OF SETTLEMENT (MATRIMONIAL CAUSES).

PAGE

DUTY
Statutory—Limitation of action. See LIMITATION OF ACTION (Breach of statutory duty).
See also COAL MINING (Statutory duty); FACTORY (Dangerous machinery); STATUTORY DUTY.

ECCLESIASTICAL LAW
Consistory court—Jurisdiction—Faculty proceedings for confirmation of re-siting—Disregard of faculty previously granted—Whether court had jurisdiction to make mandatory order to secure observance of faculty previously granted [Re ST. JOHN-IN-BEDWARDINE, WORCESTER] .. 216
Faculty—Enforcement. See Consistory court—Jurisdiction—Faculty proceedings for confirmation of re-siting, ante.

EDUCATION
School attendance—Enforcement—Remedies—Wardship proceedings—Mother's refusal to send children to school—Local education authority's proceedings—Two convictions unavailing—Application to have children made wards of court—Directions sought as to their education—Chancery court's jurisdiction—Education Act, 1944 (c. 31), s. 36, s. 37, s. 40 (2)—Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949 (c. 100), s. 9 [Re BAKER (INFANTS)] 276

ELECTION COURT
See ELECTIONS.

ELECTIONS
Election court—Jurisdiction—Succession to peerage—Election petition alleging disqualification of candidate for election to Parliament—Jurisdiction to determine succession to peerage [Re BRISTOL SOUTH EAST PARLIAMENTARY ELECTION] 354
Local government—Aldermen—Mayor also candidate for election as alderman—Vacation of mayoral chair by mayor and an alderman chosen to preside—Vote made by mayor—Mayor's vote counted, making equality of votes each for seven candidates including himself—Presiding alderman gave casting vote for candidates for whom mayor had voted and declared them duly elected—Whether mayor was entitled to be present and vote at meeting of council over which he did not preside—Whether the seven aldermen duly elected—Local Government Act, 1933 (c. 51), Sch. 3, Part 2, para. 3 [Re WOLVERHAMPTON BOROUGH COUNCIL'S ALDERMANIC ELECTION] 446
Parliamentary—Disqualification of candidate—Peer—Disqualification attributable to status and not dependent on receiving writ of summons to House of Lords—Disqualification made known to electors before votes cast—Majority of votes cast for disqualified candidate—Validity of election of sole opponent [Re BRISTOL SOUTH EAST PARLIAMENTARY ELECTION] 354
Trade union—Pleading—Particulars. See PRACTICE (Particulars).

EMPLOYMENT
Benefits—Provided for directors and others—Taxation. See INCOME TAX (Income—Accommodation and benefits provided to directors and others).
Health—Whether duty to refuse where employment at some risk to employee's health. See MASTER AND SERVANT (Duty of master—Employment of servant).
Remuneration—Commission. See MASTER AND SERVANT (Remuneration).

ENFORCEMENT NOTICE
See TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING.

ENGAGEMENT TO MARRY
Undue influence—Engaged couple. See EQUITY (Undue influence).

EQUITY
Reimbursement. See ESTATE DUTY (Deduction of debt—Reimbursement).
Undue influence—Engaged couple—Presumption—Elderly parties—Waiver by bride of statutory rights to estate of intended husband in consideration of promise to pay lump sum on his death—No independent advice—Insufficient information as to intended husband's fortune, etc.—Inadequacy of lump sum—Transaction set aside [ZAMET v. HYMAN] 933

ESTATE DUTY
Accountability—Beneficiary absolutely entitled to settled funds subject to two successive life interests—Canadian settlement—Finance Act, 1894 (c. 30), s 8 (4) [Re LATHAM (decd.)] 903
Company—Shares—Valuation—Allowance for contingent liabilities—Balancing charge—Liability not existing at the date of death—Finance Act, 1940 (c. 29), s. 50 (1), s. 55—Finance Act, 1894 (c. 30), s. 7 (5)—Income Tax Act, 1952 (c. 10), s. 292 [WINTER (EXECUTORS OF SIR ARTHUR MUNRO SUTHERLAND (decd.)) v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.] 855
Deduction of debt—Reimbursement—Duty leviable on death of life tenant of trust funds settled by Canadian settlement—Succeeding life tenant domiciled in England accountable but did not pay duty—Whether amount of duty a debt allowable against second life tenant's free estate—Whether there was a right to reimbursement—Finance Act, 1894 (c. 30), s. 7 (1) (b), s. 9 (6), s. 20 (2) [Re LATHAM (decd.)] 903
Exemption—Property which has borne duty on death of spouse—Derivative settlement—Marriage settlement followed by derivative settlement by widow of defeasible, but otherwise absolute, interests in settled estates—Estate duty paid on death of husband on settled estates comprised in marriage settlement—Death of widow—Passing of property settled by derivative settlement—Whether estate duty ascertainable on her death was payable in respect of the settled estates so as to attract exemption under Finance Act, 1894 (c. 30), s. 5 (2) [COUTTS & CO. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.] 158
Exemption and remission—Gift in consideration of marriage—Marriage settlement—Discretionary trusts in favour of class—Inclusion of persons not within the marriage consideration—Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910 (c. 8), s. 59 (2) [RENNELL (LORD) v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.] .. 1028 Incidence—Real property—Contrary intention—Australian duty. See DEATH DUTY (Incidence—Real property).
Passing of property—Settled property—Derivative settlement—To what "settled property" reference should be made [COUTTS & CO. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.] 158

EVIDENCE
Appeal—Criminal appeal. See CRIMINAL LAW (Appeal).
Criminal proceedings, in. See CRIMINAL LAW (Evidence; Insanity; Trial—Summing-up).
Divorce. See DIVORCE.
Fresh evidence—New trial. See COURT OF APPEAL (New trial).
Further evidence—Power of appellate court to receive. See COURT OF APPEAL.
Handwriting—Criminal proceedings—Need for expert evidence. See CRIMINAL LAW.
Possession—Land. See TRESPASS (Land—Possession).

PAGE

EXAMINING MAGISTRATES
See MAGISTRATES.

EXCEPTION
Clause of exception. See SHIPPING (Lighterage).

EXCHANGE
Stamp duty. See STAMP DUTY.

EXPENSES
Deduction for income tax. See INCOME TAX (Deduction in computing profits).

FACTORY
Building regulations. See BUILDING (Building regulations).
Dangerous machinery—Duty to fence—Component on machine forming a fence preventing operator's body touching machinery—Hand tool coming into contact with machinery—Whether breach of duty to fence in that fencing not secure against hand tool—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 14 (1) [SPARROW v. FAIREY AVIATION CO., LTD.] 452
Horizontal milling machine—Machine comprising traversing table carrying block in nature of vice—Bolts to be milled affixed to block—Whether block, when moving and carrying bolts, dangerous part of machinery—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 14 (1) [EAVES v. MORRIS MOTORS, LTD.] 233
Definition—Pumping station occupied by water board—Water from springs filtered and chlorinated in filter house then put under pressure in pump house—Whether water an "article"—Whether pump house a factory—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 151 (1) (b), (6) [LONGHURST v. GUILDFORD GODALMING AND DISTRICT WATER BOARD] 545
Removal of dust—Limitation of action—Pneumoconiosis. See LIMITATION OF ACTION (Breach of statutory duty—Accrual of cause of action).
Safe place of employment—Secure foot-hold—Secure "hand-hold"—Window cleaner on ladder needing to use both hands at once to hold and clean window—Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67), s. 26 (2) [WIGLEY v. BRITISH VINEGARS, LTD.] 418 Statutory duty—Breach. See Dangerous machinery—Duty to fence, ante.
Causation. See STATUTORY DUTY (Breach).

FALSE IMPRISONMENT
Evidence—Credit—Concealment. See COURT OF APPEAL (New trial—Misleading the court at trial).

FATAL ACCIDENT
Damages—Assessment—Factors—Computation of pecuniary loss a jury question—Arithmetical calculation as check by comparison—Assessment of benefits accruing from deceased's death—Fatal Accidents Act, 1846 (c. 93), s. 2 [DANIELS v. JONES] .. ..
Measure of damages—Tortfeasor must take victim as he finds him—Cancer developing from pre-malignant condition [SMITH v. LEECH BRAIN & CO., LTD.] 1159

FENCING
Dangerous machinery. See FACTORY (Dangerous machinery).

FIREARMS
Unlawful possession of firearms at time of "apprehension" for offence—Conviction of offence other than that for which arrest was made—Offence not specified in Firearms Act, 1937, Sch. 3—Whether there could be conviction of being in possession of firearms contrary to Firearms Act, 1937 (c. 12), s. 23 (2) [R. v. BAKER] 703

FOREIGN JUDGMENT
See CONFLICT OF LAWS.

FOREIGN MARRIAGE
See NULLITY.

GAMES
Children's play causing injury to third person—Liability of occupier of land on which play permitted. See OCCUPIER (Negligence).

GHANA
See PRIVY COUNCIL.

GRIEVOUS BODILY HARM
See CRIMINAL LAW.

GUARDIAN
Foreign law, by. See CONFLICT OF LAWS (Foreign judgment—Recognition—Status).

HANDWRITING
Criminal proceedings—Need for expert evidence. See CRIMINAL LAW (Evidence).

HARBOUR
Quay—Cranes—Undertakers providing cranes for public use—Stevedores using cranes—Undertakers subsequently themselves undertaking stevedoring services—Whether undertakers entitled to refuse use of cranes to public, including stevedores—Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 27), s. 22, s. 33 [GARLAND & FLEXMAN (A FIRM) v. WISBECH CORPN.] 342

HIGHWAY
Negligence—Occupation of property adjoining highway—Liability of occupier for acts done on property causing injury to persons using highway. See OCCUPIER (Negligence).

HIRE-PURCHASE
Damages for breach of contract—Hirer's breach by not paying instalments—Goods re-sold by owners—Hirer's option to determine agreement not exercised—Measure of damages [YEOMAN CREDIT, LTD. v. WARAGOWSKI] 145
Depreciation clause. See Penalty—Depreciation, post.
Penalty—Depreciation—Agreement to pay depreciation on termination of agreement by either party—Amount of depreciation substantially greater on determination in early months—No depreciation payable, in the particular case, during last six months for which agreement would run [PHONOGRAPHIC EQUIPMENT (1958), LTD. v. MUSLU] 626

HOSPITAL
Gift to. See CHARITY (Uncertainty).

HOUSEBREAKING
Attempt. See CRIMINAL LAW (Attempt).

HOUSE OF LORDS
Appeal to—Criminal cause or matter—Jurisdiction. See CRIMINAL LAW (Appeal).
Leave to appeal—Conditions—Power to impose conditions—Revenue appeal [RENNELL (LORD) v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.] 1041
Compromise—Infant appellant—Leave to appeal to House of Lords granted by Court of Appeal—Settlement after petition lodged—Approval by House of Lords [FLACK v. WITHERS] 388

HOUSING
Insurance—Tenant's personal and household effects—Arrangements made by housing authority for issuing group policy of insurance of its tenants' personal and household effects—Premiums collected by housing authority with weekly rent—Whether insurance scheme ultra vires the housing authority—Whether insurance was an act of general management of the housing authority's properties—Housing Act, 1957 (c. 56), s. 111 (1) [ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. CRAYFORD URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL] 1002
Notice—Signature—Validity. See LANDLORD AND TENANT (Small tenement—Recovery of possession—Notice to quit—Notice of intended application for warrant for recovery of possession).

HUSBAND AND WIFE
Maintenance—Agreement—Post-nuptial settlement—Variation. See VARIATION OF SETTLEMENT (MATRIMONIAL CAUSES) (Post-nuptial settlement).
Property—Matrimonial home—Purchase by husband—Wife contributing to household expenses—Intention—Whether wife had beneficial interest in property [ALLEN v. ALLEN] 385
Summary proceedings—Reference to official referee—Jurisdiction to determine issues—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 17—Administration of Justice Act, 1956 (c. 46), s. 15 (1) (a)—R.S.C., Ord. 36A, r. 1 [Re EDWARD'S QUESTIONS] 580
Summary matrimonial jurisdiction. See MAGISTRATES.

INCOME TAX
Accommodation—Provision. See Income—Accommodation and benefits provided to directors and others, post.
Annual payment—Instalments of purchase price. See SURTAX (Annual payment—Capital or income).
Deduction in computing profits—Expenses—Medical specialist in private practice—Holder of part-time appointments as consultant—Profits of office assessable under Sch. E—Expenses not deductible under Sch. E—Whether deductible as expenses of profession under Sch. D—Income Tax Act, 1952 (c. 10), s. 122 (Sch. D, para. 1, proviso). s. 156 (Sch. E, para. 2) [MITCHELL (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. ROSS, SAME v. HIRTENSTEIN, SAME v. MARSHALL, TAYLOR-GOOBY (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. TARNESBY, SAME v. DREW] 49
"Expenses incurred wholly, exclusively and necessarily in the performance of . . . duties"—Bank manager—Subscription to club—Membership practically requisite for employment as manager—Income Tax Act, 1952 (c. 10), Rules applicable to Sch. E, Sch. 9, r. 7 [BROWN v. BULLOCK (INSPECTOR OF TAXES)] 129
Excess of rent of living accommodation provided by company over taxpayer's contribution—Residence required in London flat—Entertainment of customers there—Income Tax Act, 1952 (c. 10), Sch. 9, Rules applicable to Sch. E, r. 7 [MCKIE (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. WARNER] 348 Exemption—Exempt income—Not exempt unless taxable but for exemption. See PRIVY COUNCIL (New Zealand—Income tax—Mutual life insurance company).
Expenses. See Deduction in computing profits—Expenses, ante.
Income—Accommodation and benefits provided to directors and others—Service house of mill manager—Company's payments for coal, electricity and garden—Emoluments of manager under Sch. E—Income Tax Act, 1952 (c. 10), s. 161 (1), (3) [BUTTER (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. BENNETT] 1041
Accommodation provided for employee—Employee charged only part of rent—Whether difference income of employee—Income Tax Act, 1952 (c. 10), s. 161 (1) [MCKIE (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. WARNER] 348
Builder—Timber company possessing building powers—Purchase of houses from subsidiary building company—Object to assist managing director to re-start business—Subsequent sale at a profit—Whether investment or adventure in nature of trade—Income Tax Act, 1952 (c. 10), Sch. D, Case I, s. 123, s. 526 [LUCY & SUNDERLAND, LTD. v. HUNT (INSPECTOR OF TAXES)] 1062
Derived from any business carried on in New Zealand. See PRIVY COUNCIL (New Zealand—Income tax—Mutual life insurance company).
Instalments of purchase price. See SURTAX (Annual payment—Capital or income).
Profits—Builder—Timber company possessing building powers [LUCY & SUNDERLAND, LTD. v. HUNT (INSPECTOR OF TAXES)] 1062
Medical specialist—Part-time consultant at National Health Service hospital—Whether assessable under Income Tax Act, 1952 (c. 10), Sch. E [MITCHELL (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. ROSS, SAME v. HIRTENSTEIN, SAME v. MARSHALL, TAYLOR-GOOBY (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. TARNESBY, SAME v. DREW] 49 Profits tax. See PROFITS TAX.
Surtax. See SURTAX.
Timber merchant—Subsidiary building company—Purchase of houses as investment. See Income—Builder, ante.

INDICTMENT
See CRIMINAL LAW.

INDUSTRIAL HEREDITAMENT
See RATING (De-rating).

INFANT
Compromise—Appeal to House of Lords. See HOUSE OF LORDS (Compromise).
Education. See EDUCATION.
Jurisdiction—Inherent jurisdiction—Restriction by statute [Re BAKER (INFANTS)] 276
Maintenance—Divorce Division of High Court—Practice—Application to High Court while magistrates' court's order existing—Copy of maintenance order of magistrates' court to be lodged [PRACTICE DIRECTION] 1200

INJUNCTION
Divorce—Divorced wife—Child of the dissolved marriage—Child at school in Scotland—Injunction restraining divorced wife from allowing letter sent to child's school to be handed to him—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 45 (1) [R. v. R. AND I.] .. 461

INJUNCTION—continued. PAGE
Jurisdiction—Territorial jurisdiction—Injunction—Injunction directed to party in England against allowing act in Scotland. See Divorce—Divorced wife—Child of the dissolved marriage, ante.
Restrictive Practices Court. See RESTRICTIVE TRADE PRACTICES.

INQUIRY
Answer—Negligent. See NEGLIGENCE (Duty to take care—Statements).

INSANITY
Crime—Defence. See CRIMINAL LAW (Appeal; Insanity).
Divorce—Defence. See DIVORCE (Adultery).
Ground for. See DIVORCE.

INSURANCE
Local government. See HOUSING.

INVESTMENT CLAUSE
See TRUST AND TRUSTEE (Variation of trusts by the court).
See also WILL.

INVESTMENT COMPANY
Profits tax—Commencement of business. See PROFITS TAX (Chargeable accounting period—Determination by Inland Revenue Commissioners).

IRELAND
Marriage—Recognition of divorce abroad. See NULLITY (Foreign marriage).

IRREGULARITY
Rules of court—Non-compliance. See PRACTICE (Pleading—Delivery—Long vacation).

JOINT TORTFEASORS
See TORT.

JUDGE
Indication of judge's view in course of trial—Danger of semblance of prejudging issues [BRASSINGTON v. BRASSINGTON] 988
Notes. See COURT OF APPEAL (Judge's note).

JUDGMENT
Foreign. See CONFLICT OF LAWS (Foreign judgment).
Setting aside. See PRACTICE (Pleading—Delivery—Long vacation; Setting aside judgment).
Summary judgment—Leave to defend. See PRACTICE (Summary judgment).

JURISDICTION
Court-martial—Civil offence. See COURT-MARTIAL.
Divorce Divisional Court—Application for re-hearing. See DIVORCE (Appeal—Divisional Court).
Domestic tribunal—Jurisdiction of court in relation to determinations of tribunal—Whether redress forfeited by appeal to superior authority. See TRADE UNION (Domestic tribunal).
Foreign court. See CONFLICT OF LAWS (Foreign judgment).
Ouster—Divorce—Agreement to refer to chambers. See DIVORCE (Practice—Custody—Chambers).
See also PURCHASE TAX (Regulations—Validity).
Questions on which jurisdiction depends. See RENT CONTROL (Rent tribunal).
Trusts—Variation. See TRUST AND TRUSTEE (Variation of trusts by the court).

JURY
Criminal trial, at. See CRIMINAL LAW (Trial—Jury).

LAND
Covenant running with. See COVENANT (Running with land).
Limitation—Time. See LIMITATION OF ACTION.

LAND REGISTRATION
Limitation of action—Leasehold. See LIMITATION OF ACTION (Land—Leasehold).

LANDLORD AND TENANT
Landlord—Identity. See RENT CONTROL (Rent tribunal—Jurisdiction).
See also Lease—Business premises—Continuation, post.
Lease—Business premises—Continuation—Reversionary lease granted by head lessor to person then the tenant of an intermediate landlord—Whether intermediate landlord the "landlord"—Whether interest of intermediate landlord a tenancy which would not expire within fourteen months of the grant of the "reversionary tenancy"—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954 (c. 56), s. 28, s. 44 (1) (b) [BOWES-LYON v. GREEN] 843
Contract to grant lease more than twenty-one years after date of contract—Validity—Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 149 (3) [WEG MOTORS, LTD. v. HALES] 181
Covenant—Whether option agreement not under seal a covenant. See OPTION (Renewal of lease—Option of taking a further lease granted by agreement in writing (but not under seal) executed on same date as lease).
New tenancy—Business premises—Terms of new tenancy—Holding—Property to be comprised in new tenancy—Proper date for designating holding—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954 (c. 56), s. 32 (1) [I. & H. CAPLAN, LTD. v. CAPLAN] 1174
Notice to quit—Business premises—Date incomplete—Year of termination of tenancy left blank—Validity of notice—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954 (c. 56), s. 25, s. 66 (2)—Landlord and Tenant (Notices) Regulations, 1957 (S.I. 1957 No. 1157), reg. 4 (vii) [SUNROSE, LTD. v. GOULD] 1142 Recovery of possession—Rent restricted premises. See RENT RESTRICTION (Possession).
Rent control. See RENT CONTROL.
Rent restriction. See RENT RESTRICTION.
Small tenement—Recovery of possession—Notice to quit—Notice of intended application for warrant for recovery of possession—Notice of intended application signed by housing manager as agent of local authority—Whether latter notice validly signed—Small Tenements Recovery Act, 1838 (c. 74), s. 1, s. 7—Housing Act, 1957 (c 56), s. 158 (2), s. 166 (2) [R. v. BERKSHIRE (FOREST) JUSTICES, Ex parte DALLAIRE] 1138
Tenancy—Business premises—New tenancy. See New tenancy—Business premises, ante.
Reversionary tenancy—Agreement to grant future tenancy—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954 (c. 56), s. 28, s. 65 (3) [BOWES-LYON v. GREEN] 843

LEASE
Option. See OPTION (Renewal of lease).
Settled Land Act, 1925. See SETTLEMENT (Powers of tenant for life—Leasing).
See also LANDLORD AND TENANT.

LIBEL
Privilege—Absolute privilege—Inquiry by Benchers into conduct of barrister [LINCOLN v. DANIELS] 740
Qualified privilege—Communications to Bar Council—Libel alleged contained in letters of complaint against Queen's Counsel addressed to secretary of Bar Council—No complaint made to Benchers of Inn of Court—Letters not protected by absolute privilege [LINCOLN v. DANIELS] 740

LICENCE
Public carriers' licence. See ROAD TRAFFIC.

LICENSING
Road traffic. See ROAD TRAFFIC (Licence).

LIGHTERAGE
See SHIPPING.

LIMITATION OF ACTION
Amendment of writ—Writ issued within period of limitation—Defective indorsement claiming damages for personal injuries—Writ a nullity—Defendant informed by plaintiff's solicitor's letter shortly after accident giving rise to claim that damages for negligent driving would be claimed—Writ issued nearly three years later—Summons to set aside service after limitation period expired—Statement of claim filed after summons heard—Whether amendment should be allowed or service of writ set aside [PONTIN v. WOOD] 992
Breach of statutory duty—Accrual of cause of action—When serious harm suffered—Pneumoconiosis—Injury caused by acts outside statutory period—Injury first discovered within statutory period—Disablement within statutory period—Limitation Act, 1939 (c. 21), s. 2 (1) (a) [CARTLEDGE v. E. JOPLING & SONS, LTD.] 482
Burden of proof—Tort—Burden on plaintiff [CARTLEDGE v. E. JOPLING & SONS, LTD.] 482
Land—Leasehold—Possessory title acquired against lessee—Surrender of lease—Whether freeholder entitled to possession—Registered land—Limitation Act, 1939 (c. 21), s. 16—Land Registration Act, 1925 (c. 21), s. 75 (1) [ST. MARLYEBONE PROPERTY CO., LTD. v. FAIRWEATHER] .. 560 Negligence—Accrual of cause of action. See Breach of statutory duty, ante.
Trust—Breach of trust—Advancement. See TRUST AND TRUSTEE (Breach of trust—Consent—Nature of consent).
When time begins to run—Breach of statutory duty. See Breach of statutory duty, ante.

LIVERPOOL COURT OF PASSAGE
Judge's notes. See COURT OF APPEAL (Judge's note).

LOAN Contract. See MONEY.

LOCAL AUTHORITY
Action—Competence to bring in own name—Abatement of statutory nuisance—Rectification. See PRACTICE (Parties—Capacity—Local authority).

LOCAL GOVERNMENT
Audit—Surcharge—Application for relief—Circumstances to be considered by the court—Discretion of court to grant—Local Government Act, 1933 (c. 51), s. 230 [ANNISON v. DISTRICT AUDITOR FOR THE METROPOLITAN BOROUGH OF ST. PANCRAS. TAYLOR v. SAME] 914
Election. See ELECTIONS.
Harbours. See HARBOUR.
Insurance. See HOUSING (Insurance).

LONDON
London lighterage clause. See SHIPPING (Lighterage—Exceptions).
Road traffic—Waiting and loading restrictions. See ROAD TRAFFIC.

LONG VACATION
Pleading—Delivery. See PRACTICE (Pleading—Delivery).

MACHINERY
Dangerous. See FACTORY (Dangerous machinery).

MAGISTRATES
Examining magistrates—Remand—Adjournment granted at request of Crown before any evidence called—Whether magistrate has discretion to remand accused in custody or must remand on bail—Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952 (c. 55), s. 6 (1), s. 105 (1) [R. v. GUEST, Ex parte METROPOLITAN POLICE COMR.] 1118
Husband and wife—Cruelty—Persistent cruelty—Reasonable belief in husband's adultery deliberately induced in wife's mind by husband—Injury to wife's health [WALKER v. WALKER] .. 14 Maintenance order—Lodging for subsequent High Court application. See DIVORCE (Maintenance—Wife—Practice—Application to High Court while magistrates' court's order existing).
Order—Non-cohabitation clause—Effect of, in divorce proceedings. See DIVORCE (Evidence—Magistrates' court order on similar issue).
Small Tenements Recovery Act, 1838. See LANDLORD AND TENANT (Small tenement).

MAINTENANCE
Infant. See INFANT.
Wife. See DIVORCE.

MALAYA
See PRIVY COUNCIL.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION
Damage necessary to support action—Costs of defence and appeal—Actual costs less lump sum costs awarded by quarter sessions—Whether sufficient to support an action [BERRY v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION] 65
Malice—Motive—Recovery of sum of which prosecutor had been defrauded the ultimate aim—Prosecution for felony before civil action a duty imposed by law—Whether malice established [ABBOTT v. REFUGE ASSURANCE CO., LTD.] 1074
Reasonable and probable cause for prosecution—Need to take steps to obtain information—Admissible evidence only to be considered—Need for legal advice—Weight to be attributed to counsel's opinion—Subsequent stages of trial—Resisting submission of no case to answer—Contesting successful appeal against conviction [ABBOTT v. REFUGE ASSURANCE CO., LTD.] 1074

PAGE

MARKETS AND FAIRS
Disturbance—Annual "fair" or "wake"—Right to hold annual fair or wake acquired by inhabitants of parish by ancient usage—Enclosure award made pursuant to private Act of Parliament appointing certain parcels of land in parish on which inhabitants might hold fair—Declaration in award of future right of inhabitants to hold fair annually and bar against disturbing surface—Part of land acquired by defendant in ignorance of right—Annual fair or wake had not then been held within living memory—Planning permission obtained by defendant and building begun—Inhabitants of parish claimed to be entitled to preserve right to hold fair—Whether right existed or whether it had been waived and abandoned—Whether action was maintainable by plaintiffs as representatives of inhabitants of parish—Whether Attorney-General a necessary party—Whether right vested in parish council—Local Government Act, 1894 (c. 73), s. 6 (1) (a) [WYLD v. SILVER] 1014

MARRIAGE
Foreign marriage—Validity—Marriage in Republic of Ireland—Whether prior decree of divorce in England recognised by law of republic. See NULLITY (Foreign marriage).
Settlement—Estate duty—Exemption. See ESTATE DUTY (Exemption and remission—Gift in consideration of marriage).

MARSHALLING
Compensation—Proceeds of devise of land in Australia used initially to pay duties not chargeable thereon [Re MATTHEWS'S WILL TRUSTS] 869

MASTER AND SERVANT
Duty of master—Employment of servant—Employment only possible at some risk to health of servant—Servant wishing to engage or continue in employment—No duty on master to refuse to employ or to dismiss servant [WITHERS v. PERRY CHAIN CO., LTD.] 676
Liability of master—Causation—Presumption—Disease contracted by servant after being subjected to conditions likely to cause it—Servant not having previously suffered from the disease [GARDINER v. MOTHERWELL MACHINERY AND SCRAP CO., LTD.] 831 Negligence—Limitation of action. See LIMITATION OF ACTION (Breach of statutory duty—Accrual of cause of action).
Remuneration—Commission—"Advance commission"—Half commission paid in advance—Commission due only if delivery of goods made during employment—Whether half commission advanced during employment on orders of goods not delivered until after employment ended repayable [BRONESTER, LTD. v. PRIDDLE] 471

MATRIMONIAL HOME
See HUSBAND AND WIFE (Property).

MEASURE OF DAMAGES
See DAMAGES.

MEMORANDUM
Moneylender's contract, of. See MONEYLENDER.

MENTAL HEALTH
Hospital order—Criminal proceedings—Restriction on discharge—Inquiry as to facilities for legal custody of patient. See CRIMINAL LAW (Practice—Sentence).

MERGER
Misdemeanour. See CRIMINAL LAW (Attempt).

MISDIRECTION
Criminal trial, in. See CRIMINAL LAW (Appeal).

MISPRISION OF FELONY
See CRIMINAL LAW.

MISREPRESENTATION
Statements—Careless statements—Liability in damages. See NEGLIGENCE (Duty to take care—Proximity of relation—Statements).

MONEY
Loan—Bills purchased at discount—Post-dated cheques given as collateral security—Purchaser not a bank or discount house—Whether contract for repayment of money lent—Whether money-lending transaction [CHOW YOONG HONG v. CHOONG FAH RUBBER MANUFACTORY] 1163

MONEYLENDER
Definition of moneylender—Nature of transaction of loan distinguished. See MONEY (Loan—Bills purchased at discount).
Memorandum—Omitted terms—Reference therein to promissory note which contained the omitted words—Not permissible to look at promissory note unless copy thereof delivered or sent to borrower—Moneylenders Act, 1927 (c. 21), s. 6 (2) [EDGWARE TRUST, LTD. v. LAWRENCE] 141

MORTGAGE
Charge by way of legal mortgage—Estate of mortgagee—Whether legal term of years vested in chargee—Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 87 (2) [WEG MOTORS, LTD. v. HALES] .. 181
Estates of mortgagor [WEG MOTORS, LTD. v. HALES] 181

MOTOR CYCLIST
Negligence. See ROAD TRAFFIC (Negligence).

MOTOR VEHICLE
Waiting and loading restrictions. See ROAD TRAFFIC (London).

MURDER
See CRIMINAL LAW.

NATIONAL HEALTH SERVICE
Consultant. See INCOME TAX (Deduction in computing profits—Expenses—Medical specialist in private practice).
Specialist—Income tax—Whether holder of a public office. See INCOME TAX (Deduction in computing profits—Expenses—Medical specialist in private practice).

NATURAL JUSTICE
Domestic tribunal. See TRADE UNION (Domestic tribunal).

NEGLIGENCE
Causation—Presumption—Disease. See MASTER AND SERVANT (Liability of master—Causation).
Child. See OCCUPIER.

NEGLIGENCE—continued.
Contributory negligence—Accident partly due to plaintiff's breach of statutory duty. See STATUTORY DUTY (Breach—Causation—Breach by both employer and employee—Faults not co-extensive).
Appeal—Judge's reasons—Need for copy of judge's notes of evidence and of his reasons [JOHNSON v. REA, LTD.] 816
Motor traffic. See ROAD TRAFFIC.
Damages—Personal injury—Measure of damages—Loss of amenities of life—Loss of future earning capacity—Child aged twenty months—Mental defective as result of injury—Expense of home help and child's entering private institution in the first instance—Probability that child would spend most of his life in state institution—Total award unlikely to be used by or on behalf of child [OLIVER v. ASHMAN] 323
Measure of damages—Tortfeasor takes victim as he finds him. See DAMAGES (Remoteness of damage—Negligence—Foreseeability—Type, but not extent, of injury foreseeable).
Separate tortfeasors—Successive torts. See DAMAGES (Measure of damages—Separate tortfeasors).
Dangerous conditions—Duty of persons creating. See DANGEROUS CONDITIONS (Creation of dangerous conditions).
Duty to take care—Proximity of relation—Statements—Careless statements causing damage to persons or property—Statements actionable under principle in M'Alister (or Donoghue) v. Stevenson—Instructions negligently issued by architect to bricklayer resulting in bricklayer's personal injuries [CLAYTON v. WOODMAN & SON (BUILDERS), LTD.] 249
Statements—References given by bank honestly but without due care—No special relationship between inquirer and bank giving rise to duty of care—Whether bank liable for negligent reference—Whether duty owed by bank to take reasonable care [HEDLEY BYRNE & CO., LTD. v. HELLER & PARTNERS, LTD.] 891
Employment—Whether duty to refuse employment on ground of risk to employee's health [WITHERS v. PERRY CHAIN CO., LTD.] 676
Joint tortfeasors—Contribution. See TORT (Joint tortfeasors).
Master—Liability to servant. See MASTER AND SERVANT (Duty of master).
Motor cyclist. See ROAD TRAFFIC.
Occupier. See OCCUPIER.
Remoteness of damage. See DAMAGES (Remoteness of damage).
Road traffic. See ROAD TRAFFIC.

NEW TENANCY
See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

NEW TRIAL
See COURT OF APPEAL.

NEW ZEALAND
See PRIVY COUNCIL.

NORTHERN IRELAND
Criminal law—Insanity. See CRIMINAL LAW (Insanity—Time to which test by M'Naghten rules should be related).

NOTICE TO QUIT
See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

NUISANCE
Statutory nuisance—Action—Competence of plaintiff. See PRACTICE (Parties—Capacity—Local authority).

NULLITY
Foreign marriage—Lex loci celebrationis not providing for divorce—Husband's first marriage in Eire dissolved by English court, parties being then domiciled in England—Second marriage of husband in Republic of Ireland—Whether second marriage void—Constitution of Ireland, art. 41, s. 3 (3) [BREEN (OTHERWISE SMITH) v. BREEN] 225

OCCUPIER
Negligence—Children permitted to use land for play with a football—Land abutting on highway and separated only by low wall—Motor cyclist on highway injured as result of football kicked over wall onto highway by child—Whether occupier liable [HILDER v. ASSOCIATED PORTLAND CEMENT MANUFACTURERS, LTD.] 709

OFFICIAL REFEREE
Reference to. See HUSBAND AND WIFE (Property—Summary proceedings).

OFFICIAL SECRETS
Sentence. See CRIMINAL LAW (Sentence—Consecutive sentences).

OPTION
Renewal of lease—Option of taking a further lease granted by agreement in writing (but not under seal), executed on same date as lease—Whether option for renewal of lease or void as infringing rule against perpetuities—Whether obligation to grant new lease ran with reversion—Whether agreement was "covenant" within Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20), s. 142 (1) [WEG MOTORS, LTD. v. HALES] 181

ORDER XIV
See PRACTICE (Summary judgment).

PARK
Rateable occupation. See RATES (Rateable occupation—Public park).

PARLIAMENT
Election. See ELECTIONS.

PARTICULARS
Order for—Whether particulars ordered. See PRACTICE (Particulars).
Pleading to. See PLEADING.

PARTIES
See PRACTICE.

PARTNERSHIP
Foreign partnership—Enforcement of foreign judgment by action in England. See CONFLICT OF LAWS (Foreign judgment—Enforcement).

PAGE

PASSENGER
Liability of, in accident. See ROAD TRAFFIC (Negligence).

PEERAGES
Inalienability—Inability to renounce or surrender [Re BRISTOL SOUTH EAST PARLIAMENTARY ELECTION] 354

PENALTY
Hire-purchase agreement. See HIRE-PURCHASE.

PERPETUITIES
Rule against perpetuities—Option to renew lease. See OPTION (Renewal of lease—Option of taking a further lease granted by agreement in writing (but not under seal), executed on same date as lease).
Residuary bequest—Direction to realise and divide residue of estate—Legatee to be existing at time of realisation of residuary estate—No express power to postpone realisation—Whether gift referred to end of executor's year—Validity [Re PETRIE (decd.)] 1067

PERSON OF UNSOUND MIND
Divorce—Ground for. See DIVORCE (Insanity).

PERSONAL INJURIES
See DAMAGES (Measure of damages).

PETITION
Divorce. See DIVORCE.

PLANNING
See TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING.

PLEADING
Delivery. See PRACTICE (Pleading).
Particulars—No obligation to plead to particulars [CHAPPLE v. ELECTRICAL TRADES UNION] .. 612

PNEUMOCONIOSIS
Limitation of action. See LIMITATION OF ACTION (Breach of statutory duty—Accrual of cause of action).

POLICE
Evidence—Concealment of reduction in rank for disciplinary offence. See COURT OF APPEAL (New trial—Misleading the court at trial).

POSSESSION
Demised property, of. See RENT RESTRICTION.
Firearms, of—Criminal offence. See FIREARMS.
Land—Evidence. See TRESPASS (Land).
Small tenement, of. See LANDLORD AND TENANT (Small tenement).

POST-NUPTIAL SETTLEMENT
See VARIATION OF SETTLEMENT (MATRIMONIAL CAUSES).

POWER OF APPOINTMENT
Special power—"Born in the lifetime of" the testator. See WILL (Gift—"Born in the lifetime of" the testator).

PRACTICE
Amendment—Limitation period expired. See LIMITATION OF ACTION (Amendment of writ).
Writ—Nullity. See WRIT (Defect in indorsement).
Compromise—Appeal to House of Lords. See HOUSE OF LORDS (Compromise).
Court of Appeal. See COURT OF APPEAL.
Criminal court. See CRIMINAL LAW.
Cross examination—Credit—Concealment of material. See COURT OF APPEAL (New trial—Misleading the court at trial).
Divorce. See DIVORCE.
Particulars—Pleading—Traverse of negative allegation—Not pregnant with affirmative—Whether particulars of traverse should be ordered [CHAPPLE v. ELECTRICAL TRADES UNION] 612
Parties—Adding persons as parties—Defendant—Amendment of writ to change defendant "W.J.D. & Co. (a firm)" to "W.J.D. & Co., Ltd."—Whether a correction of a mere misnomer—Whether omission of "Limited" meant that no person was sued—Amendment sought after limitation period expired [WHITTAM v. W. J. DANIEL & CO., LTD.] 796
Capacity—Local authority—Proceedings for statutory nuisance instituted before authorising resolution—Ratification by resolution three days later—Validity—Public Health Act. 1936 (c. 49), s. 100 [WARWICK RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL v. MILLER-MEAD, MILLER-MEAD v. WARWICK RURAL DISTRICT COUNCIL] 542
Charity—Whether Charity Commissioners or Attorney-General necessary parties [NEVILLE ESTATES, LTD. v. MADDEN] 769
Pleading—Delivery—Long vacation—Irregularity—Statement of claim delivered in long vacation—No defence filed within time allowed—Judgment signed in default of defence—Whether statement of claim void or voidable—Whether judgment should be set aside—R.S.C., Ord. 64, r. 4, Ord. 70, r. 1 [MACFOY v. UNITED AFRICA CO., LTD.] 1169 Reference to referee—Matrimonial property dispute. See HUSBAND AND WIFE (Property—Summary proceedings).
Service—Setting aside service—Writ—Defective indorsement—Limitation period expired—Statement of claim delivered. See LIMITATION OF ACTION (Amendment of writ).
Setting aside judgment—Summary judgment—Specific performance—Purchaser's action—Appearance not entered by vendor—Judgment obtained under R.S.C., Ord. 14A—Judgment not carried into effect—Action commenced to have judgment set aside on ground of vendor's contractual incapacity and of undue influence—Application by purchaser to have statement of claim struck out—Whether second action appropriate procedure—Whether judgment under R.S.C., Ord. 14A, was a judgment by default within R.S.C., Ord. 27, r. 15 [DSANE v. HAGAN] 380
Solicitor—Withdrawal. See SOLICITOR (Withdrawal).
Summary judgment—Leave to defend—Conditional leave—Payment into court as condition of giving leave—Need for foundation for imposing such condition—R.S.C., Ord. 14, r. 1 [FIELDRANK, LTD. v. STEIN] 681
Setting aside—Irregularity. See Pleading—Delivery—Long vacation, ante; Setting aside judgment, ante.

PREVENTIVE DETENTION
See ROAD TRAFFIC (Dangerous driving—Sentence).

PRIVATE COMPANY
See COMPANY.

PRIVILEGE
Libel. See LIBEL.

PRIVY COUNCIL
Australia—Death duty—Incidence. See DEATH DUTY (Incidence).
New South Wales—Death duty—Incidence. See DEATH DUTY (Incidence).
Victoria—Workmen's compensation—Injury by accident arising out of or in the course of . . . employment—Worker developing silicosis long after she left employment—Compensation not payable for silicosis at date of worker leaving employment—Later Act providing that compensation to be payable in respect of silicosis due to nature of employment "at any time" prior to disablement—Victoria Workers Compensation Act, 1951 (No. 5601), s. 12 (1) [SUNSHINE PORCELAIN POTTERIES PROPRIETARY, LTD. v. NASH] 203
Ceylon—Bill of lading—Evidence of shipment of goods—Condition that weight, contents and value of bags shipped unknown [ATTORNEY-GENERAL OF CEYLON v. SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION CO., LTD.] 684
Carriage of goods by sea—Short delivery—Bills of lading stating number of bags shipped but containing condition that weight, contents and value unknown—Mode of proof of contents and weight of missing bags by consignee—Indian Carriage of Goods by Sea Act, 1925, Schedule, art. III, r. 3, r. 4 [ATTORNEY-GENERAL OF CEYLON v. SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION CO., LTD.] 684
Ghana—Trespass—Land—Possession [WUTA-OFEI v. DANQUAH] 596
Malaya—Moneylender—Loan transaction—Bills purchased at discount—Post-dated cheques maturing on same day as bills given as collateral security—Purchaser not a bank or discount house—Whether contract for the repayment of money lent—Malayan Moneylenders Ordinance, 1951 (No. 42 of 1951), s. 15, s. 16 [CHOW YOONG HONG v. CHOONG FAH RUBBER MANUFACTORY] 1163
New Zealand—Income tax—Mutual life insurance company—Assessment—Reversionary bonuses—Allotment of surplus funds for reversionary bonuses—Declared face value of maturing reversionary bonuses irrelevant—Deduction of income exempt from taxation—Income not "exempt" unless it would be subject to New Zealand taxation but for the exemption—Income from investments in Australian and English companies not therefore "exempt" from taxation and not deductible—Whether income from Australian investments held by branch in New Zealand of Australian life insurance company income "derived from" a business carried on in New Zealand—New Zealand Land and Income Tax Act, 1954 (No. 67), s. 149 (2), s. 86 (1) (i), s. 167 (a) [AUSTRALIAN MUTUAL PROVIDENT SOCIETY v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.] 1051
Sierra Leone—Practice—Pleading—Delivery in long vacation—Statement of claim—Whether a nullity or irregularity [MACFOY v UNITED AFRICA CO., LTD.] 1169
Trinidad and Tobago—Murder—Provocation—Summing-up—Issue to be left to jury although defence of provocation not raised and although accused did not testify that he was provoked [BULLARD v. R.] 470
West Indies—Criminal law—Jury—Intimidation or threat—Jury told by judge to remember their oath—Direction to put aside extraneous matters, to make up their minds one way or the other and to accept reason one from the other—Whether such coercion as to invalidate jury's verdict [SHOUKATALLIE v. R.] 996
Trinidad—Trade union—Domestic tribunal—Natural justice—Member charged with breach of union's rules none of which gave power of expulsion—Expulsion at adjourned hearing at which he was not present under another rule dealing with conduct prejudicial to interests of union—No charge of breach of such rule—Appeal by member against expulsion dismissed—No complaint of failure of natural justice—Whether expulsion valid—Whether member could seek redress in the courts [ANNAMUNTHODO v. OILFIELDS WORKERS' TRADE UNION] .. 621

PROFITS TAX
Chargeable accounting period—Determination by Inland Revenue Commissioners—Interval between company's old and new businesses—Commencement of business as investment company—Last chargeable accounting period—Period before interval—Finance Act, 1937 (c. 54), s. 19 (4), s. 20 (2) (a), (b)—Finance Act, 1947 (c. 35), s. 35 (1) (c) [E.Y.L. TRADING CO., LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.] 1121
Distribution—Distribution charge—Reconstruction—Vendor company's business sold in 1950 in consideration of shares in purchasing company—Subsequent sale by vendor company of shares of purchasing company—Liquidation of vendor company in 1955—Liability to distribution charge—Finance Act, 1947 (c. 35), s. 30 (3), s. 36 (4), s. 43 (1) [INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. J. B. HODGE & CO. (GLASGOW), LTD. (IN VOLUNTARY LIQUIDATION)] 172

PROOF
Burden of. See CRIMINAL LAW (Burden of proof); LIMITATION OF ACTION (Burden of proof).

PROPERTY
Husband and wife—Dispute between. See HUSBAND AND WIFE.

PROSECUTION
Felonious act—Duty to prosecute before bringing civil action. See MALICIOUS PROSECUTION (Malice—Motive).
Malicious. See MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

PROVOCATION
See CRIMINAL LAW (Murder).

PUBLIC HEALTH
Nuisance. See PRACTICE (Parties—Capacity).

PURCHASE TAX
Demand—Signature—Demand authorised by proper officer but signed by officer not so authorised—Customs and Excise Act, 1952 (c. 44), s. 4 (1) [COMRS. OF CUSTOMS AND EXCISE v. CURE & DEELEY, LTD.] 641
Regulations—Validity—Power of Commissioners of Customs and Excise to make regulation which "appears to them necessary" to enable them to discharge their functions—Whether commissioners sole judges of what was necessary—Ouster of court's jurisdiction—Finance (No. 2) Act, 1940 (c. 48), s. 33—Purchase Tax Regulations, 1945 (S.R. & O. 1945 No. 517), reg. 12 [COMRS. OF CUSTOMS AND EXCISE v. CURE & DEELEY, LTD.] 641

PAGE

QUALIFIED PRIVILEGE
See LIBEL (Privilege—Absolute privilege).

QUARTER SESSIONS
Appeal to—Abandonment of appeal—Application to withdraw notice of abandonment—No power to entertain application unless abandonment a nullity, as through mistake or fraud [R. v. ESSEX QUARTER SESSIONS, Ex parte LARKIN] 930

QUAY
See HARBOUR.

RATES
De-rating—Industrial hereditament—Adapting for sale—Timber—Natural drying of timber—Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (c. 22), s. 149 (1)—Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928 (c. 44), s. 3 (1) [BUNCOMBE (VALUATION OFFICER) v. BALTIC SAWMILLS CO., LTD.] 272
Purposes of user—Primary and substantial purposes—Reconditioning of parts of vehicles—Maintenance of occupier's road vehicles—Whether hereditament as a whole an industrial hereditament—Apportionment between industrial and other use—Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928 (c. 44), s. 3 (1), (2) (b), s. 4 [EAST YORKSHIRE MOTOR SERVICES, LTD. v. CLAYTON (VALUATION OFFICER)] 758
Rateable occupation—Art gallery—Trust of gallery for enjoyment by the public in perpetuity—Gallery vested in local authority—Whether trusts allowed any potentiality of beneficial occupation by the local authority [KINGSTON-UPON-HULL CORPN. v. CLAYTON (VALUATION OFFICER)] 118
Public park—Absence of formal "dedication" to the public—Acquisition for use as public walks and pleasure grounds—Powers of sale and leasing ancillary to use [BLAKE (VALUATION OFFICER) v. HENDON CORPN.] 601

RATIFICATION
Authority to sue. See PRACTICE (Parties—Capacity—Local authority).

REINSTATEMENT
Dismissed appeal. See COURT OF APPEAL (Reinstatement of dismissed appeal).

RELIGION
Charitable purpose. See CHARITY.

REMAND
See MAGISTRATES (Examining magistrates).

REMOTENESS OF DAMAGE
See DAMAGES.

RENT CONTROL
Rent tribunal—Jurisdiction—Determination of question on which jurisdiction depends—Contract of tenancy—Identity of landlord—Circumstances of landlord—Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946 (c. 34), s. 2 (2) [R. v. PADDINGTON AND ST. MARYLEBONE RENT TRIBUNAL, Ex parte HAINES] 1047

RENT RESTRICTION
Acts—Operation in rem. See Sub-tenancy—Letting—Letting to intermediate landlord outside Acts as agricultural holding let to farmer, post.
Possession—Sub-letting of whole of premises without consent of landlord—No evidence of there being such sub-letting at commencement of proceedings—Jurisdiction to make order for possession—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), Sch. 1, para. (d) [FINKLE v. STRZELCZYK] 409
Sub-tenancy—Letting—Letting to intermediate landlord outside Acts as agricultural holding let to farmer—Sub-tenancy of cottage on farm—Cottage occupied as private dwelling, not in connexion with farm work—Whether sub-tenant protected by Rent Restriction Acts—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 12 (2) proviso (iii) [CRITCHLEY v. CLIFFORD] 288 Possession. See Possession—Sub-letting of whole of premises without consent of landlord, ante.

RENT TRIBUNAL
See RENT CONTROL.

REPUDIATION
Contract. See CONTRACT.

RESTRICTIVE COVENANT
Successors in title—Implication of words. See COVENANT (Running with land—Sale of theatre and cinema properties).

RESTRICTIVE TRADE PRACTICES
Agreement—New agreement—Test whether new agreement is "to the like effect" to another agreement in respect of restrictions declared to be contrary to the public interest—"Effect"—Test to be applied where court has given reasoned judgment on reference of original agreement—Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956 (c. 68), s. 20 (3) [Re BLACK BOLT AND NUT ASSN. OF GREAT BRITAIN'S AGREEMENT (NO. 2)] 316
Injunction—Restrictions declared contrary to public interest—Party enjoined—Whether trade federation should be included in order restraining the enforcing of the restrictions or making new agreement with like restrictions—Whether Federation, a registered trade union whose members were retail newsagents, was "carrying on business"—Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956 (c. 68), s. 20 (3) [Re THE AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE NEWSPAPER PROPRIETORS' ASSN., LTD. AND THE NATIONAL FEDERATION OF RETAIL NEWSAGENTS, BOOKSELLERS AND STATIONERS] 428
Reference—Newspaper supplies—London daily newspapers—Newsagents' permits—Agreement not to supply newspapers to wholesale newsagents except on terms that newspapers supplied only to retail newsagents holding permits—Permits issued by association of newspaper proprietors—Whether removal of restriction would deny public substantial benefit—Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956 (c. 68), s. 21 (1) (b) [Re THE AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE NEWSPAPER PROPRIETORS' ASSN., LTD. AND THE NATIONAL FEDERATION OF RETAIL NEWSAGENTS, BOOKSELLERS AND STATIONERS] 428

ROAD TRAFFIC
Dangerous driving—Causing death by dangerous driving—Objective test—Admissibility of evidence of drink taken—Road Traffic Act, 1960 (c. 16), s. 1 [R. v. MCBRIDE] 6
Sentence—Preventive detention—Circumstances which justify such a sentence—Protection of public [R. v. HIGGINBOTHAM] 616

ROAD TRAFFIC—continued.

Licence—Public carriers' licence—Application—Contract A licence existing—Proposed substitution of A licence—Owner of goods carried under contract supporting application—Question whether proposed change in his best interests irrelevant to the grant of application [MERCHANDISE TRANSPORT, LTD. v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION, ARNOLD TRANSPORT (ROCHESTER), LTD. v. SAME] 495

Application—Subsidiary company's application—Undertaking to carry only parent company's goods on outward journeys—Uneconomic competition for return loads—Parent company already having C licence—Conditional B licence appropriate—Whether relationship between subsidiary and parent company could be considered [MERCHANDISE TRANSPORT, LTD. v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION, ARNOLD TRANSPORT (ROCHESTER), LTD. v. SAME] 495

Transport Tribunal's appellate jurisdiction—Objection—Whether tribunal limited to objection—Precedent—Previous decisions not to inhibit tribunal examining the merits of each case [MERCHANDISE TRANSPORT, LTD. v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION, ARNOLD TRANSPORT (ROCHESTER), LTD. v. SAME] 495

London—Waiting and loading restrictions—Prohibition of waiting longer than necessary to enable any person to "board" or "alight"—London Parking Zones (Waiting and Loading) (Restriction) Regulations, 1960 (S.I. 1960 No. 594), reg. 4 (a) [CLIFFORD-TURNER v. WATERMAN] 974

Motor vehicle—Waiting and loading restrictions—London. See London, ante.

Negligence—Contribution—Joint tortfeasors. See TORT (Joint tortfeasors).

Contributory negligence—Motor cyclist not wearing crash helmet—Whether contributory negligence [HILDER v. ASSOCIATED PORTLAND CEMENT MANUFACTURERS, LTD.] 709 Damages. See NEGLIGENCE (Damages—Personal injury).

Liability of passenger—Driver unknown—Driver driving as agent of passengers—Accident due to dangerous or careless driving and third persons injured [SCARSBROOK v. MASON] .. 767

Waiting and loading restrictions. See London, ante.

RULE AGAINST PERPETUITIES

See PERPETUITIES.

SALE

Shares—Transfer compelled by statute—Whether sale. See STAMP DUTY (Conveyance on sale—Transfer of stock—Compulsory transfer under statutory provision).

SALE OF LAND

Charity—Consent of Charity Commissioners. See CHARITY (Unincorporated association—Trust for members of synagogue).

SCAFFOLDING

See BUILDING (Building regulations).

SEA

Coast protection. See WATER AND WATERCOURSES (Coast protection).

SENTENCE

See CRIMINAL LAW (Practice; Sentence).

SERVANT

See MASTER AND SERVANT.

SETTLEMENT

Conflict of laws. See ESTATE DUTY (Deduction of debt—Reimbursement—Duty leviable on death of life tenant of trust funds settled by Canadian settlement).

Construction—Beneficial trusts—"Male issue" and "male descendants"—Whether restricted to the male line of descent [Re DU CROS' SETTLEMENT] 193

Death duty. See ESTATE DUTY.

Derivative settlement—What settled property is for purposes of estate duty. See ESTATE DUTY (Passing of property—Settled property).

Power—Foreign guardianship order. See CONFLICT OF LAWS (Foreign judgment—Recognition).

Powers of tenant for life—Leasing—Settled and unsettled property comprised in one lease—Contract to grant lease in consideration of redevelopment—Whether "agreement for a lease"—Lease to take effect after twelve years—Property leased in lots—Aggregate rent exceeding one-fifth of aggregate annual values—Settled Land Act 1925 (c. 18), s. 42 (1) (i), s. 44 (3) (iii), s. 90 (1) (iii), s. 117 (1) (x) [Re RYCROFT'S SETTLEMENTS] 581

Variation of settlement. See VARIATION OF SETTLEMENT (MATRIMONIAL CAUSES).

Variation of trusts—Jurisdiction—Variation of Trusts Act, 1958. See TRUST AND TRUSTEE (Variation of trusts by the court).

SHARE

Valuation for estate duty. See ESTATE DUTY (Company).

SHIPPING

Bill of lading—Evidence of shipment of goods—Condition that weight, contents and value of bags shipped unknown [ATTORNEY-GENERAL OF CEYLON v. SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION CO., LTD.] 684

Transfer of rights—Consignee's right to sue—Contract for sale of goods by charterers—Charter-party for carriage of goods within contract of sale—Charterers claiming for alleged shortage and contamination of goods after voyage—Whether right to sue vested in consignee (purchaser from charterers) to the exclusion of charterers—Bills of Lading Act, 1855 (c. 111), s. 1 [GARDANO & GIAMPARI v. GREEK PETROLEUM GEORGE MAMIDAKIS & CO.] 919

Carriage by sea—Lighterage. See Lighterage, post.

Carriage of goods by sea—Short delivery—Bills of lading stating number of bags shipped but containing condition that weight, contents and value unknown—Mode of proof of contents and weight of missing bags by consignee—Indian Carriage of Goods by Sea Act, 1925, Schedule, art. 111, r. 3, r. 4—Carriage of Goods by Sea Act, 1924 (c. 22), Schedule, art. 111, r. 3, r. 4 [ATTORNEY-GENERAL OF CEYLON v. SCINDIA STEAM NAVIGATION CO., LTD.] 684

Charterparty—Right of suit—Transfer. See Bill of lading—Transfer of rights, ante.

Lighterage—Exceptions—London Lighterage Clause—Unseaworthiness—Exemption from liability if loss or damage occasioned by unseaworthiness of craft—Whether unseaworthiness to be construed as at commencement of service or after—Exemption excluded if unseaworthy barge supplied recklessly—Meaning of "recklessly" [SHAWINIGAN, LTD. v. VOKINS & CO., LTD.] 396

Seaworthiness—Exception. See Lighterage, ante.

SHIPPING—continued.
Towage—Contract—Arbitration. See ARBITRATION (Stay of proceedings—Protocol agreement—Contract containing arbitration clause alleged to be a nullity).

SIERRA LEONE
See PRIVY COUNCIL.

SIGNATURE
Notice of intended application for warrant of ejectment—Whose signature sufficient. See LANDLORD AND TENANT (Small tenement—Recovery of possession—Notice to quit—Notice of intended application for warrant for recovery of possession).

SMALL TENEMENT
Recovery of possession under Small Tenements Recovery Act, 1838. See LANDLORD AND TENANT.

SOLDIER
Court-martial. See COURT-MARTIAL.

SOLICITOR
Withdrawal—Application for order where no notice of change given—Appeal to Court of Appeal pending—Practice—R.S.C., Ord. 7, r. 4 (1) [PRACTICE DIRECTION] 64

SPECIALIST
Medical—Income tax. See INCOME TAX (Deduction in computing profits—Expenses).

STAMP DUTY
Conveyance on sale—Amalgamation of companies—Shares of brewery company acquired by purchasing company from shareholders—Liquidation of brewery company—Conveyance of brewery company's land to purchasing company—Conveyance by liquidator of brewery company on authority of shareholders—Transfers of shares by vendor shareholders not registered—No evidence whether transfers stamped—Whether conveyance attracted stamp duty as a conveyance on sale—Stamp Act, 1891 (c. 39), s. 54, Sch. 1 [HENTY & CONSTABLE (BREWERS), LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.] 1146
Lease—Whether a "conveyance"—Exchange of dissimilar legal estates—Whether an exchange or conveyance on sale—Stamp Act, 1891 (c. 39), Sch. 1—Finance Act, 1930 (c. 28), s. 42—Finance Act, 1938 (c. 46), s. 50 (1) (b) [LITTLEWOODS MAIL ORDER STORES, LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.] 258
Transfer of stock—Compulsory transfer under statutory provision—Company acquiring nine-tenths of other company's stock—Transfers of dissenting shareholder's stock executed by nominee—Companies Act, 1948 (c. 38), s. 209—Whether transfer on sale—Stamp Act, 1891 (c. 39), s. 54, Sch. 1 [RIDGE NOMINEES, LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.] 1108
Exchange—Freehold estate exchanged for leasehold interest in same land—Stamp Act, 1891 (c. 39), s. 54, Sch. 1 [LITTLEWOODS MAIL ORDER STORES, LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.] .. 258
Guarantee. See "Mortgage, bond, debenture, covenant", post.
"Mortgage, bond, debenture, covenant"—"Only or principal or primary security"—Guarantee—Deed securing a payment under an agreement not under seal for sale of stock—Additional secondary or collateral security to agreement—Stamp Act, 1891 (c. 39), Sch. 1, Mortgage, bond, etc. [HENRY ANSBACHER & CO. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.] 211

STATEMENT OF CLAIM
Delivery. See PRACTICE (Pleading—Delivery).

STATEMENTS
Negligent. See NEGLIGENCE (Duty to take care).

STATUS
Foreign law. See CONFLICT OF LAWS (Foreign judgment—Recognition).

STATUTE
Construction—Conjunctive or disjunctive—"Or" not construed "and"—Army Act, 1955 (c. 18), s. 70 (2) [R. v. COX] 1194
Headings—Central headings—Reference to these in construing ambiguous paragraph [QUALTER, HALL & CO., LTD. v. BOARD OF TRADE] 389
In pari materia—"Conveyance"—Series of statutes—Whether same meaning in latter statute of series—Stamp Act, 1891 (c. 39), Sch. 1—Finance Act, 1938 (c. 46), s. 50 (1) (b) [LITTLEWOODS MAIL ORDER STORES, LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS.] 258
Mandatory or directory provisions—Coast protection—Works scheme providing for coast protection charges—Whether time limit within which coast protection authority to levy charges was mandatory or directory—Coast Protection Act, 1949 (c. 74), s. 7 (4) (b) [CULLIMORE v. LYME REGIS CORPN.] 1008
Crown—Whether bound by statute—Parens patriae jurisdiction as to infants—Education Act, 1944 (c. 31) [Re BAKER (INFANTS)] 276
Retrospective operation—Workmen's compensation—Injury before amending Act passed—Disease first noticed many years later—Worker never in employment after amendment passed [SUNSHINE PORCELAIN POTTERIES PROPRIETARY, LTD. v. NASH] 203

STATUTORY DUTY
Breach—Causation—Breach by both employer and employee—Faults not co-extensive—Apportionment of responsibility—Non-compliance with building regulations—Liability for damages shared equally—Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948 No. 1145), reg. 4, reg. 29 (4) [MCMATH v. RIMMER BROS. (LIVERPOOL), LTD.] 1154
Breach of duty not contributing to injury—Plaintiff failing to show that safety apparatus, if provided, would have been used [WIGLEY v. BRITISH VINEGARS, LTD.] 418
Limitation of action. See LIMITATION OF ACTION (Breach of statutory duty).
See also COAL MINING; FACTORY (Dangerous machinery).

STATUTORY INSTRUMENT
Validity—Power to make provision which "appears to them necessary" for discharging functions in relation to purchase tax. See PURCHASE TAX (Regulations—Validity).

STAY OF PROCEEDINGS
Arbitration. See ARBITRATION.

SUMMING-UP
Criminal proceedings. See CRIMINAL LAW (Trial).

SUMMONS
Divorce—Practice. See DIVORCE (Practice).

SURCHARGE
Local government audit. See LOCAL GOVERNMENT (Audit).

SURTAX
Annual payment—Capital or income—Purchase price payable by instalments—Total price exceeding current value of property sold—Price computed having regard to interest factor—Dissection of annual payment into capital and interest for tax purposes [VESTEY v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS., INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. VESTEY] 978
Undistributed income—Direction and apportionment—Distribution not within reasonable time after end of accounting period—Distribution following earlier decision not to distribute—Income Tax Act, 1952 (c. 10), s. 245 [C. H. W. (HUDDERSFIELD), LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS., SPENCER v. SAME, GARSIDE v. SAME] 551
Subsidiary company—Exemption—Company becoming subsidiary company towards end of accounting period—Apportionment on time basis—Shareholders ceasing to be members before end of accounting period—Dividend declared after previous decision not to declare dividend—Whether distribution within reasonable time after the accounting period—Income Tax Act, 1952 (c. 10), s. 245, s. 256 (4) [C. H. W. (HUDDERSFIELD) LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMRS., SPENCER v. SAME, GARSIDE v. SAME] 551

TENANT FOR LIFE
Powers. See SETTLEMENT (Powers of tenant for life).

THEATRE
Covenant to procure restriction on use—Covenant on sale—Whether personal covenant or binding successors in title. See COVENANT (Running with land—Sale of theatre and cinema properties).

TORT
Joint tortfeasors—Contribution—Assessment in absence of party possibly liable for contributory negligence—Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935 (c. 30), s. 6 (2) [MAXFIELD v. LLEWELLYN] 95 Separate tortfeasors—Successive torts—Damages. See DAMAGES (Measure of damages—Separate tortfeasors).

TOWAGE
Contract—Arbitration. See ARBITRATION (Stay of proceedings).

TOWN AND COUNTRY PLANNING
Building preservation order—Special architectural or historic interest—Whether architectural or historic interest of neighbouring buildings may be taken into account—Whether effect of demolition and replacement of building subject to the order on collation of buildings of which it was one relevant—Town and Country Planning Act, 1947 (c. 51), s. 29 (1) [IVEAGH (EARL) v. MINISTER OF HOUSING AND LOCAL GOVERNMENT] 98
Development—Material change of use—Question of fact and degree [EAST BARNET URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION] 878 Enforcement notice—Invalidity—Application for planning permission not determined within period allowed. See Permission for development—Notification of decision by local planning authority, post.
Notice founded on breach of condition of grant of planning permission—Comprehensive condition applying to land other than that to which permission truly related—Land used by railway company for emergency coal stacking ground and by coal merchants as coal depot—User of land as transit depot for handling and storage of crated motor vehicles carried by rail—Whether "development"—Development permitted by General Development Orders—Permission not needed—Town and Country Planning Act, 1932 (c. 48), s. 53—Town and Country Planning Act, 1947 (c. 51), s. 12 (2)—Town and Country Planning General Development Order, 1948 (S.I. 1948 No. 958), art. 3 (1), Sch. 1, Class XVIII A—Town and Country Planning General Development Order, 1950 (S.I. 1950 No. 728), art. 3 (1), Sch. 1, Class XVIII A [EAST BARNET URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION] .. 878
Permission for development—Notification of decision by local planning authority—Notice of refusal not given within time laid down in General Development Order—Mandatory requirement—Notice void—Enforcement notice given before application for development permission also invalidated—Town and Country Planning Act, 1947 (c. 51), s. 23 (3)—Town and Country Planning General Development Order, 1950 (S.I. 1950 No. 728), art. 5 (8) [EDWICK v. SUNBURY-ON-THAMES URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL] 10

TRADE
Adventure in the nature of trade—Income tax. See INCOME TAX (Income—Builder).
Restrictive practices. See RESTRICTIVE TRADE PRACTICES.

TRADE UNION
Domestic tribunal—Natural justice—Adjudication on member's conduct—Appeal by member to annual conference of delegates—Whether member could thereafter seek redress in the courts [ANNAMUNTHODO v. OILFIELDS WORKERS' TRADE UNION] 621
Election—Pleading—Particulars. See PRACTICE (Particulars).
Expulsion—Charge—Rule under which expulsion awarded not mentioned in charges—Member expelled not present at hearing [ANNAMUNTHODO v. OILFIELDS WORKERS' TRADE UNION] 621

TRANSFER
Compulsory—Sale, as. See STAMP DUTY (Conveyance on sale—Transfer of stock—Compulsory transfer under statutory provision).

TRANSPORT TRIBUNAL
Licensing—Road traffic—Appeals. See ROAD TRAFFIC (Licence—Public carriers' licence).

TRESPASS
Land—Possession—Evidence—Inference of possession where land not used—Title temporarily vested in state—Continuance of former possession [WUTA-OFEI v. DANQUAH] 596

TRIAL
Judge—Indication of view before evidence completed. See COURT OF APPEAL (New trial—Apprehension of prejudgment of issues).
See also CRIMINAL LAW.

TRIBUNAL
Decision—Natural justice—Expulsion from trade union. See TRADE UNION (Domestic tribunal).
Precedent—Previous decisions of statutory tribunal as precedent—Not to inhibit examining into merits of each case in which called on to exercise statutory discretion [MERCHANDISE TRANSPORT, LTD. v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION, ARNOLD TRANSPORT (ROCHESTER), LTD. v. SAME] 495

PAGE

TRINIDAD
See PRIVY COUNCIL (West Indies).

TRUST
Charitable trust. See CHARITY.

TRUST AND TRUSTEE
Breach of trust—Consent—Nature of consent—Requisites to disentitle beneficiary from suing for breach—Invalid exercise of power of advancement—Whether action statute-barred—Whether trustee entitled to relief—Limitation Act, 1939 (c. 21), s. 19 (2), proviso—Trustee Act, 1925 (c. 19), s. 61 [Re PAULING'S SETTLEMENT TRUSTS] 713
Charitable trust. See CHARITY.
Powers of trustee—Advancement—Exercise—Validity of particular exercises of power [Re PAULING'S SETTLEMENT TRUSTS] 713
Practice—Service—Persons not served—Approval on behalf of respondents not served withheld [Re CLARKE'S WILL TRUSTS] 1133 Relief—Breach of trust. See Breach of trust—Consent, ante.
Remuneration of trustee—Investment company—Director trustees [Re COOPER'S SETTLEMENT] 636
Uncertainty—Investment clause. See WILL (Investment clause—Direction to invest in stocks, shares, and/or convertible debentures in the "blue chip" category).
See also CHARITY (Uncertainty).
Variation of trusts by the court—Investment—Extension of powers of investment—Discretion—Special circumstances to be shown to justify departure from scope enacted by Trustee Investments Act, 1961—Invalid clause in will showing testator's wish that his trustee should invest only in "blue chip" equities—Whether special circumstances established—Trustee Act, 1925 (c. 19), s. 57—Trustee Investments Act, 1961 (c. 62), s. 15 [Re KOLB'S WILL TRUSTS] 811
Extension of powers of investment—Discretion—Special circumstances to be shown to justify departure from scope enacted by Trustee Investments Act, 1961—Two-thirds of trust fund invested in investment trust company and one-third in authorised trustee investments—Approval sought for proposed arrangement giving trustees power to invest the whole trust fund in industrial equities—Remuneration of director trustees—Whether special circumstances established—Trustee Investments Act, 1961 (c. 62), s. 15—Variation of Trusts Act, 1958 (c. 53), s. 1 [Re COOPER'S SETTLEMENT] 636
Discretion—Variation of Trusts Act, 1958 (c. 53), s. 1—Trustee Investments Act, 1961 (c. 62), Sch. 1, Part 4, para. 3 [Re CLARKE'S WILL TRUSTS] 1133
Jurisdiction—English marriage settlement to be replaced by trust abroad—Husband and wife emigrated to Canada and became domiciled there—Approval sought for proposed arrangement involving appointment of Canadian trustee in place of English trustee and resettlement of trust funds on trusts of new Canadian settlement—Variation of Trusts Act, 1958 (c. 53), s. 1 [Re SEALE'S MARRIAGE SETTLEMENT] 136

ULTRA VIRES
See HOUSING (Insurance).

UNCERTAINTY
Charitable gift. See CHARITY.
See also WILL (Investment clause—Direction to invest in stocks, shares, and/or convertible debentures in the "blue chip" category).

UNDUE INFLUENCE
See EQUITY.

UNINCORPORATED BODY
Charity. See CHARITY (Unincorporated association).

VARIATION OF MAINTENANCE ORDER
See DIVORCE (Maintenance—Wife).

VARIATION OF SETTLEMENT (MATRIMONIAL CAUSES)
Post-nuptial settlement—Maintenance agreement made between decree nisi and decree absolute of divorce—Agreement including annuities for wife and children—Agreement by wife not to sue for permanent maintenance—Whether agreement was a post-nuptial settlement—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (c. 25), s. 25 [YOUNG v. YOUNG] 695

VARIATION OF TRUSTS
Court, by. See TRUST AND TRUSTEE (Variation of trusts by the court).

VERDICT
Special verdict. See CRIMINAL LAW (Appeal—Insanity).

VICTORIA
See PRIVY COUNCIL (Australia).

WARRANT
Ejectment—Application for, under Small Tenements Recovery Act, 1838 (c. 74). See LANDLORD AND TENANT (Small tenement).

WATER AND WATERCOURSES
Coast protection—Works scheme—Coast protection charges—Time within which cost to be apportioned after the completion of the work to be specified in the scheme—Whether mandatory or directory provision—Whether determination after nearly two years was substantial compliance with time limit of six months—Coast Protection Act, 1949 (c. 74), s. 7 (4) (b), (5) [CULLIMORE v. LYME REGIS CORPN.] 1008

WATER SUPPLY
Pumping station—Whether a factory. See FACTORY (Definition).

WEST INDIES
See PRIVY COUNCIL.

WIFE
Maintenance. See DIVORCE (Maintenance).

WILL Charity. See CHARITY.
Gift—"Born in the lifetime of" the testator—Special power of appointment—Life interest appointed to a nephew's widow during widowhood if "born in the lifetime" of the testator—En ventre sa mère at death of testator—Whether "born in the lifetime" of the testator [Re STERN'S WILL TRUSTS] 1129

WILL—continued.
Investment clause—Direction to invest in stocks, shares, and/or convertible debentures in the "blue chip" category—Uncertainty—Whether clause valid [Re KOLB'S WILL TRUSTS] .. 811
Issue—Male issue—Male descendants—Whether restricted to descent through males. See SETTLEMENT (Construction—Beneficial trusts).
Legacy—Burial ground—Legacy to build house on unconsecrated part of burial ground. See BURIAL (Burial ground—Disused).
Remoteness—Time of ascertainment of legatee—When residue of testatrix' estate was realised—No trust for conversion—Whether time referred to was end of executors' year [Re PETRIE (decd.)] 1067

WINDING-UP
Company, of. See COMPANY.

WINDOW CLEANER
Factories Act—Safety. See FACTORY (Safe place of employment).

WRIT
Amendment—Limitation of action. See LIMITATION OF ACTION (Amendment of writ).
Nullity. See Defect in indorsement, post.
Parties. See PRACTICE (Parties).
Defect in indorsement—Whether nullity—Whether curable by amendment or delivery of statement of claim [PONTIN v. WOOD] 992 Service—Setting aside. See LIMITATION OF ACTION (Amendment of writ).

CASES NOTED

PAGE

Abrath v. North Eastern Ry. Co. (1883) (11 Q.B.D. 440; 52 L.J.Q.B. 620; 49 L.T. 618). Applied in Abbott v. Refuge Assurance Co., Ltd. .. 1074

Ackland & Pratten, Ltd. v. I.R. Comrs. ([1960] 3 All E.R. 377; [1960] 1 W.L.R. 1131). Dictum of CROSS, J., approved in I.R. Comrs. v. J. B. Hodge & Co. (Glasgow), Ltd. .. 172

Alexander v. Tredegar Iron & Coal Co., Ltd. ([1945] 2 All E.R. 275; [1945] A.C. 286; 114 L.J.K.B. 377; 173 L.T. 113). Considered in Cook v. National Coal Board .. 220

Ansbacher (Henry) & Co. v. I.R. Comrs. ([1960] 1 All E.R. 686; [1960] 1 W.L.R. 337). Affirmed. C.A. 211

Archer v. Catton & Co., Ltd. ([1954] 1 All E.R. 896; [1954] 1 W.L.R. 775). Approved and applied in Cartledge v. E. Jopling & Sons, Ltd. .. 482

A.-G. v. Dodington ([1897] 2 Q.B. 373; 66 L.J.Q.B. 684; 77 L.T. 299). Followed in Coutts & Co. v. I.R. Comrs. .. 158

A.-G. v. Felixstowe Gas Light Co. ([1907] 2 K.B. 984; 76 L.J.K.B. 1107; 97 L.T. 340). Applied in Ridge Nominees, Ltd. v. I.R. Comrs. .. 1108

A.-G. v H.R.H. Prince Ernest Augustus of Hanover ([1957] 1 All E.R. 53; [1957] A.C. 460; [1957] 2 W.L.R. 7). Dictum of VISCOUNT SIMONDS applied in Qualter, Hall & Co., Ltd. v. Board of Trade 389

A.-G. v. Jacobs Smith ([1895] 2 Q.B. 341; 64 L.J.Q.B. 605; 72 L.T. 714). Considered in Rennell (Lord) v. I.R. Comrs. .. 1028

A.-G. v. Mathieson ([1907] 2 Ch. 383; 76 L.J.Ch. 682; 97 L.T. 450). Followed in Neville Estates, Ltd. v. Madden .. 769

A.-G. for Colony of Hong Kong v. Kwok-a-Sing (1873) (L.R. 5 P.C. 179; 42 L.J.P.C. 64; 29 L.T. 114). Distinguished in R. v. Cox .. 1194

Baindail v. Baindail ([1946] 1 All E.R. 346; [1946] P. 129; 115 L.J.P. 68; 174 L.T. 324). Dictum of LORD GREENE, M.R., applied in Re Langley's Settlement Trusts .. 803

Baker (Infants), Re ([1961] 2 All E.R. 250; [1961] Ch. 303; [1961] 2 W.L.R. 626). Affirmed. C.A. 276

Baker v. Baker ([1953] 2 All E.R. 1199; [1954] P. 33; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 857). Applied in Walker v. Walker .. 14

Barclays Bank, Ltd. v. Ascott ([1961] 1 All E.R. 786; [1961] 1 W.L.R. 722). Dictum of BARRY, J., approved in Sunrose, Ltd. v. Gould .. 1142

Barnett v. Eccles Corpn. ([1900] 2 Q.B. 104). Considered and explained in Berry v. British Transport Commission .. 65

Beauchamp (Earl) v. Madresfield (1872) (L.R. 8 C.P. 245; 42 L.J.C.P. 32; 27 L.T. 606). Considered and applied in Re Bristol South East Parliamentary Election .. 354

Benham v. Gambling ([1941] 1 All E.R. 13; [1941] A.C. 167; 110 L.J.K.B. 53; 164 L.T. 293). Observations of VISCOUNT SIMON, L.C., applied in Oliver v. Ashman .. 323

Bennett v. Bennett ([1952] 1 All E.R. 422; [1952] 1 K.B. 262, 263). Dictum of DENNING, L.J., applied in L. v. L. .. 834

Beresford-Hope v. Sandhurst (Lady) (1889) (23 Q.B.D. 79; 58 L.J.Q.B. 316; 61 L.T. 150). Followed in Re Bristol South East Parliamentary Election .. 354

Bernal v. Bernal (1838) (7 L.J.Ch. 115). Distinguished in Re du Cros' Settlement .. 193

Berry v. British Transport Commission ([1960] 3 All E.R. 322; [1960] 3 W.L.R. 666). Reversed on one point. C.A. .. 65

Blunt v. Park Lane Hotel, Ltd. ([1942] 2 All E.R. 187; [1942] 2 K.B. 253; 111 L.J.K.B. 706; 167 L.T. 359). Considered in Clifford v. Clifford .. 231

Boaler, Re ([1914-15] All E.R. Rep. 1030; [1915] 1 K.B. 36; 83 L.J.K.B. 1637; 111 L.T. 503). Dictum of SCRUTTON, J., applied in Comrs. of Customs and Excise v. Cure & Deeley, Ltd. .. 641

Bolton v. Stone ([1951] 1 All E.R. 1086; [1951] A.C. 867). Dictum of LORD REID applied in Hilder v. Associated Portland Cement Manufacturers, Ltd. .. 709

Bolton (H. L.) (Engineering) Co., Ltd. v. Graham (T. J.) & Sons, Ltd. ([1956] 3 All E.R. 626; [1957] 1 Q.B. 168; [1956] 3 W.L.R. 809). Dictum of DENNING, L.J., approved in Bowes-Lyon v. Green 843

Bonnington Castings, Ltd. v. Wardlaw ([1956] 1 All E.R. 615; [1956] A.C. 613; [1956] 2 W.L.R. 707). Applied in Wigley v. British Vinegars, Ltd. .. 418

Bosworth and Gravesend Corpn., Re ([1905] 2 K.B. 426; 74 L.J.K.B. 810; 93 L.T. 226). Considered in Re Jewison's Will Trusts .. 1022

Brewster, Re ([1908] 2 Ch. 365; 77 L.J.Ch. 605; 99 L.T. 517). Followed in Re Matthews's Will Trusts S69

Bristow v. Cormican (1878) (3 App. Cas. 657). Dictum of LORD HATHERLEY applied in Wuta-Ofei v. Danquah .. 596

Brown v. Bullock ([1961] 1 All E.R. 206; [1961] 1 W.L.R. 53). Affirmed. C.A. .. 129

Brown v. Notley (1848) (18 L.J.Ex. 40; 12 L.T.O.S. 223). Dictum of PARKE, B., disapproved in Wuta-Ofei v. Danquah .. 596

Bullard v. R. ([1957] A.C. 635; [1957] 3 W.L.R. 656). Considered in R. v. Porritt .. 463

Bullock v. G. John Power (Agencies), Ltd. ([1956] 1 All E.R. 498; [1956] 1 W.L.R. 171). Applied in Eaves v. Morris Motors, Ltd. .. 233

Bullock-Webster, Re ([1936] Ch. 1; 105 L.J.Ch. 291; 153 L.T. 448). Distinguished in Re Latham (decd.) .. 903

Burnell v. Downham Market U.D.C. ([1952] 1 All E.R. 601; [1952] 2 Q.B. 55). Considered in Kingston-upon-Hull Corpn. v. Clayton .. 118

Caldow v. Pixell (1877) (2 C.P.D. 566; 46 L.J.Q.B. 543; 36 L.T. 470). Dicta of DENMAN, J., applied in Cullimore v. Lyme Regis Corpn. .. 1008

Canada & Dominion Sugar Co., Ltd. v. Canadian National (West Indies) Steamships, Ltd. ([1947] A.C. 46; [1947] L.J.R. 385). Considered in A.-G. of Ceylon v. Scindia Steam Navigation Co., Ltd. 684

Candler v. Crane, Christmas & Co. ([1951] 1 All E.R. 426; [1951] 2 K.B. 164). Considered in Clayton v. Woodman & Son (Builders) Ltd. .. 249

—— Applied in Hedley Byrne & Co., Ltd. v. Heller & Partners, Ltd. .. 891

—— ([1951] 1 All E.R. 440; [1951] 2 K.B. 191). Dictum of ASQUITH, L.J., applied in Hedley Byrne & Co., Ltd. v. Heller & Partners, Ltd. .. 891

Carltona, Ltd. v. Works Comrs. ([1943] 2 All E.R. 564). Dictum of LORD GREENE, M.R., applied in Comrs. of Customs and Excise v. Cure & Deeley, Ltd. .. 641

Cavanagh v. Ulster Weaving Co., Ltd. ([1959] 2 All E.R. 751, 752; [1960] A.C. 166, 167; [1959] 3 W.L.R. 274). Dictum of LORD SOMERVELL OF HARROW applied in Hilder v. Associated Portland Cement Manufacturers, Ltd. .. 709

Chillingworth v. Chambers ([1896] 1 Ch. 699; 65 L.J.Ch. 347; 74 L.T. 37). Observations of LINDLEY, L.J., considered in Re Pauling's Settlement Trusts .. 713

Clayton v. Kingston-upon-Hull Corpn. ([1960] 3 All E.R. 840; [1961] 1 Q.B. 345; [1961] 2 W.L.R. 1). Affirmed. H.L. .. 118

Clayton v. Woodman & Son (Builders), Ltd. (post, p. 249; [1961] 3 W.L.R. 987). Distinguished in Hedley Byrne & Co., Ltd. v. Heller & Partners, Ltd. .. 891

Clayton Newbury, Ltd. v. Findlay ([1953] 2 All E.R. 826; [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1194). Considered in Bronester, Ltd. v. Priddle .. 471

Close v. Steel Co. of Wales, Ltd. ([1961] 2 All E.R. 953; [1961] 3 W.L.R. 319). Applied in Eaves v. Morris Motors, Ltd. .. 233

—— Applied in Sparrow v. Fairey Aviation Co., Ltd. .. 452

PAGE

Cobb v. Cobb ([1955] 2 All E.R. 696; [1955] 1 W.L.R. 781). Considered in Allen v. Allen 385
Collison, Re (1879) (12 Ch.D. 834; 48 L.J.Ch. 720; 41 L.T. 175). Applied in Re Petrie (decd.) .. 1067
Cornish v. Brook Green Laundry, Ltd. ([1959] 1 All E.R. 373; [1959] 1 Q.B. 394; [1959] 2 W.L.R. 215). Applied in Bowes-Lyon v. Green 843
Cowley (Earl) v. Cowley (Countess) ([1901] A.C. 450; 70 L.J.P. 83; 85 L.T. 254). Considered in Re Bristol South East Parliamentary Election 354
Cox v. Cutler & Sons, Ltd. and Hampton Court Gas Co. ([1948] 2 All E.R. 667; [1949] L.J.R. 297). Dictum of SCOTT, L.J. followed in Longhurst v. Guildford Godalming and District Water Board .. 545
Davies v. Elsby Brothers, Ltd. ([1960] 3 All E.R. 672; [1961] 1 W.L.R. 170). Distinguished in Whittam v. W. J. Daniel & Co., Ltd. 796
Davies v. Swan Motor Co. (Swansea), Ltd. ([1949] 1 All E.R. 632; [1949] 2 K.B. 326). Dicta of DENNING, L.J., applied in McMath v. Rimmer Bros. (Liverpool), Ltd. 1154
Den of Airlie S.S. Co., Ltd. v. Mitsui & Co., Ltd. and British Oil & Cake Mills, Ltd. (1912) (106 L.T. 451). Applied in Gardano & Giampari v. Greek Petroleum George Mamidakis & Co. 919
Director of Public Prosecutions v. Smith ([1960] 3 All E.R. 172; [1961] A.C. 335; [1960] 3 W.L.R. 560). Dictum of VISCOUNT KILMUIR, L.C., applied in R. v. Metharam 200
Duffy, Re ([1948] 2 All E.R. 756; [1949] Ch. 28; [1949] L.J.R. 133). Considered in Winter v. I.R. Comrs. 855
—— ([1948] 2 All E.R. 760; [1949] Ch. 36, 37; [1949] L.J.R. 137). Dictum of LORD GREENE, M.R., disapproved in Winter v. I.R. Comrs. 855
Duke's Court Estates, Ltd. v. Associated British Engineering, Ltd. ([1948] 2 All E.R. 137; [1948] Ch. 458; [1948] L.J.R. 1892). Followed in Chapple v. Electrical Trades Union 612
Dulieu v. White & Sons ([1901] 2 K.B. 679; 70 L.J.K.B. 842; 85 L.T. 130). Principle stated by KENNEDY, J., applied in Smith v. Leech Brain & Co., Ltd. 1159
Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co., Ltd. v. New Garage & Motor Co., Ltd. ([1914-15] All E.R. Rep. 742; [1915] A.C. 86; 83 L.J.K.B. 1576; 111 L.T. 863). Dictum of LORD DUNEDIN applied in Phonographic Equipment (1958), Ltd. v. Muslu 626
Dunne v. Byrne ([1912] A.C. 407; 81 L.J.P.C. 202; 106 L.T. 394). Considered in Re Smith's Will Trusts 824
Eaves v. Morris Motors, Ltd. ([1960] 3 All E.R. 656; [1961] 1 W.L.R. 511). Reversed. C.A. 233
Elliot v. Joicey ([1935] All E.R. Rep. 589; [1935] A.C. 233; 104 L.J.Ch. 122; sub nom. Re Joicey, Joicey v. Elliot, 152 L.T. 404). Principle stated by LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN explained and applied in Re Stern's Will Trusts 1129
Emanuel v. Symon ([1908] 1 K.B. 309; 77 L.J.K.B. 184; 98 L.T. 308). Dictum of BUCKLEY, L.J., considered in Blohn v. Desser 1
Evans v. Benyon (1887) (37 Ch.D. 329; 58 L.T. 700). Considered in Re Pauling's Settlement Trusts .. 713
Farnell's Settled Estates, Re (1886) (33 Ch.D. 599). Distinguished in Re Rycroft's Settlements .. 581
Felstead v. R. ([1914-15] All E.R. Rep. 41; [1914] A.C. 534; 83 L.J.K.B. 1132; 111 L.T. 218). Followed in R. v. Duke 737
Fendoch Investment Trust Co. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., Alporteno Investment Trust Co. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. ([1943] 2 All E.R. 413; 169 L.T. 203; affd. H.L., [1945] 2 All E.R. 140; sub nom. Alporteno Investment Trust Co. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., Fendoch Investment Trust Co. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., 114 L.J.K.B. 291; 173 L.T. 35). Applied in C. H. W. (Huddersfield), Ltd. v. I.R. Comrs. 551
Foley (Lady) v. Fletcher (1858) (28 L.J.Ex. 100; 33 L.T.O.S. 11). Dicta of POLLOCK, C.B., and BRAMWELL, B., not followed in Vestey v. I.R. Comrs. 978
Foster (John) & Sons, Ltd. v. I.R. Comrs. ([1894] 1 Q.B. 516; 63 L.J.Q.B. 173; 69 L.T. 817). Applied in Ridge Nominees, Ltd. v. I.R. Comrs. 1108
Francis Jackson Developments, Ltd. v. Hall ([1951] 2 All E.R. 74; [1951] 2 K.B. 488). Distinguished in R. v. Paddington and St. Marylebone Rent Tribunal, Ex parte Haines 1047
Fribance v. Fribance ([1957] 1 All E.R. 357; [1957] 1 W.L.R. 384). Considered in Allen v. Allen .. 385
Fry v. Salisbury House Estate, Ltd. ([1930] All E.R. Rep. 538; [1930] A.C. 432; 99 L.J.K.B. 403; 143 L.T. 77). Applied in Mitchell v. Ross 49
Furness Ry. Co. v. I.R. Comrs. (1864) (33 L.J Ex. 173; 10 L.T. 161). Applied in Ridge Nominees, Ltd. v. I.R. Comrs. 1108
Gas Light & Coke Co. v. Towse (1887) (35 Ch.D. 519; 56 L.J.Ch. 889; 56 L.T. 602). Applied in Re Rycroft's Settlements 581
Gilmour v. Coats ([1949] 1 All E.R. 848; [1949] A.C. 426; [1949] L.J.R. 1034). Applied in Neville Estates, Ltd. v. Madden 769
Ginty v. Belmont Building Supplies, Ltd. ([1959] 1 All E.R. 423, 424). Principle approved in McMath v. Rimmer Bros. (Liverpool), Ltd. 1154
Great Western Ry. Co. v. I.R. Comrs. ([1894] 1 Q.B. 507; 63 L.J.Q.B. 405; 70 L.T. 86). Applied in Ridge Nominees, Ltd. v. I.R. Comrs. 1108
Green v. Bowes-Lyon ([1961] 1 All E.R. 13; [1961] 1 W.L.R. 503). Affirmed. H.L. 843
Hankey v. Clavering ([1942] 2 All E.R. 311; [1942] 2 K.B. 326; 111 L.J.K.B. 711; 167 L.T. 193). Distinguished in Sunrose, Ltd. v. Gould 1142
Hare v. Putney Overseers (1881) (7 Q.B.D. 223; 50 L.J.M.C. 81; 45 L.T. 339). Considered in Kingston-upon-Hull Corpn. v. Clayton 118
Harpur's Will Trusts, Re ([1960] 3 All E.R. 237; [1960] 3 W.L.R. 607). Affirmed. C.A. 588
Harris v. Bright's Asphalt Contractors, Ltd. ([1953] 1 All E.R. 395; [1953] 1 Q.B. 617; [1953] 1 W.L.R. 341). Approved in Oliver v. Ashman 323
Hawken (S.A.), Ltd., Re ([1950] 2 All E.R. 413). Dictum of WYNN-PARRY, J., applied in Re Davis Investments (East Ham), Ltd. 926
Hayfield v. Hayfield ([1957] 1 All E.R. 601; [1957] 1 W.L.R. 477). Dictum of SACHS, J., applied in Young v. Young (No. 2) 793
Henty & Constable (Brewers), Ltd. v. I.R. Comrs. ([1961] 2 All E.R. 372; [1961] 1 W.L.R. 1018). Affirmed. C.A. 1146
Herniman v. Smith ([1938] 1 All E.R. 8; [1938] A.C. 316; 107 L.J.K.B. 230). Test approved, applied in Abbott v. Refuge Assurance Co., Ltd. 1074
Heyman v. Darwins, Ltd. ([1942] 1 All E.R. 337; [1942] A.C. 356; 111 L.J.K.B. 241; 166 L.T. 306). Considered in The Tradesman 661
Hill v. Baxter ([1958] 1 All E.R. 196; [1958] 1 Q.B. 284; [1958] 2 W.L.R. 81). Dicta of DEVLIN, J., followed in Bratty v. A.-G. for Northern Ireland 523
Hill v. Luton Corpn. ([1951] 1 All E.R. 1028; [1951] 2 K.B. 387). Considered and distinguished in Pontin v. Wood 992
Hip Foong Hong v. Neotia & Co. ([1918] A.C. 894; 87 L.J.P.C. 145; 119 L.T. 590). Dictum of LORD Buckmaster applied in Meek v. Fleming 148
Hoare v. Grazebrook, M. & W., Ltd. ([1957] 1 All E.R. 470; [1957] 1 W.L.R. 638). Disapproved by WILLMER, L.J., in Eaves v. Morris Motors, Ltd. 240
Hoare v. Green (Robert), Ltd. ([1907] 2 K.B. 315; 76 L.J.K.B. 730; 96 L.T. 724). Considered in Longhurst v. Guildford Godalming and District Water Board 545
Hogarth Shipping Co., Ltd. v. Blyth, Greene, Jourdain & Co., Ltd. ([1917] 2 K.B. 534; 86 L.J.K.B. 1426; 117 L.T. 290). Applied in A.-G. of Ceylon v. Scindia Steam Navigation Co., Ltd. 684

PAGE

Hogarth Shipping Co., Ltd. v. Blyth, Greene, Jourdain & Co., Ltd. ([1917] 2 K.B. 542). Dictum of LUSH, J., applied in A.-G. of Ceylon v. Scindia Steam Navigation Co., Ltd. 684
Hughes v. Bank of New Zealand ([1938] 1 All E.R. 778; [1938] A.C. 366; 107 L.J.K.B. 306; 158 L.T. 463). Distinguished in Mitchell v. Ross 49
Hyde v. Pimley ([1952] 2 All E.R. 104; [1952] 2 Q.B. 511). Dictum of SIR RAYMOND EVERSHED, M.R., explained in Finkle v. Strzelczyk 409
Inglis v. Robertson & Baxter ([1898] A.C. 630; 67 L.J.P.C. 114; 79 L.T. 227). Dictum of LORD HERSCHELL applied in Qualter, Hall & Co., Ltd. v. Board of Trade 389
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Baddeley ([1955] 1 All E.R. 525; [1955] A.C. 572; [1955] 2 W.L.R. 552). Distinguished in Neville Estates, Ltd. v. Madden 769
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Hodge (J.B.) & Co. (Glasgow), Ltd. (post, p. 172; [1961] 1 W.L.R. 1216). Distinguished in E. Y. L. Trading Co., Ltd. v. I.R. Comrs. 1121
Inland Revenue Comrs v. Priestley ([1901] A.C. 208; 70 L.J.P.C. 41; 84 L.T. 700). Followed in Coutts & Co. v. I.R. Comrs. 158
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Ramsay ([1935] All E.R. Rep. 854; 154 L.T. 147). Dictum of ROMER, L.J., not followed in Vestey v. I.R. Comrs. 978
Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Wesleyan and General Assurance Society ([1946] 2 All E.R. 751; 176 L.T. 85). Dictum of LORD GREENE, M.R., not followed in Vestey v. I.R. Comrs. 978
Johnson v. Crook (1879) (12 Ch.D. 644; 48 L.J.Ch. 779; 41 L.T. 401). Dictum of SIR GEORGE JESSEL, M.R., applied in Re Petrie (decd.) 1067
Johnson v. J. Stone & Co. (Charlton), Ltd. ([1961] 1 All E.R. 869; [1961] 1 W.L.R. 849). Overruled in Sparrow v. Fairey Aviation Co., Ltd. 452
Jones v. I.R. Comrs. ([1895] 1 Q.B. 484; 64 L.J.Q.B. 84; 71 L.T. 763). Applied in Henry Ansbacher & Co. v. I.R. Comrs. 211
Kara v. Kara and Holman ([1948] 2 All E.R. 17; [1948] P. 289). Dicta of LORD GREENE, M.R., applied in Turner v. Turner 944
Kirkness v. John Hudson & Co., Ltd. ([1955] 2 All E.R. 345; [1955] A.C. 696; [1955] 2 W.L.R. 1135). Considered in Ridge Nominees, Ltd. v. I.R. Comrs. 1108
L. v. L. (post. p. 20; [1961] 3 W.L.R. 544). Reversed. C.A. 834
Ladd v. Marshall ([1954] 3 All E.R. 748; [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1491). Dictum of DENNING, L.J., applied in Crook v. Derbyshire 786
Lambeth Overseers v. London County Council ([1897] A.C. 625; 66 L.J.Q.B. 806; 76 L.T. 795). Explained and distinguished in Kingston-upon-Hull Corpn. v. Clayton 118
—— Followed in Blake v. Hendon Corpn. 601
Lamont (James) & Co., Ltd. v. Hyland, Ltd. (No. 1) ([1950] 1 All E.R. 341; [1950] 1 K.B. 585). Considered and distinguished in National Benzole Co., Ltd. v. Gooch 1097
Langley's Settlement Trusts, Re ([1961] 1 All E.R. 78; [1961] 1 W.L.R. 41). Affirmed. C.A. 803
Le Lievre v. Gould ([1893] 1 Q.B. 491; 62 L.J.Q.B. 353; 68 L.T. 626). Considered in Clayton v. Woodman & Son (Builders), Ltd. 249
—— Applied in Hedley Byrne & Co., Ltd. v. Heller & Partners, Ltd. 891
Leahy v. A.-G. of New South Wales ([1959] 2 All E.R. 300; [1959] A.C. 457; [1959] 2 W.L.R. 722). Applied in Neville Estates, Ltd. v. Madden 769
Lewis v. Lewis ([1958] 1 All E.R. 859; [1958] P. 193; [1958] 2 W.L.R. 747). Considered in Clifford v. Clifford 231
Liddiard, Re (1880) (14 Ch.D. 310; 49 L.J.Ch. 373; 42 L.T. 621). Considered in Re Seale's Marriage Settlement 136
Lilley v. Roney (1892) (61 L.J.Q.B. 727). Distinguished in Lincoln v. Daniels 740
Lincoln v. Daniels ([1960] 3 All E.R. 205; [1960] 1 W.L.R. 852). Affirmed. C.A. 740
Littlewoods Mail Order Stores, Ltd. v. I.R. Comrs. ([1961] 1 All E.R. 195; [1961] Ch. 210; [1961] 2 W.L.R. 25). Affirmed. C.A. 258
London & North Eastern Ry. Co. v. British Trawlers' Federation, Ltd. ([1934] All E.R. Rep. 589; [1934] A.C. 301; 103 L.J.K.B. 320; sub nom. British Trawlers' Federation v. London & North Eastern Ry. Co., 150 L.T. 467). Dictum of LORD MACMILLAN followed in Garland & Flexman (a firm) v. Wisbech Corpn. 342
London County Council v. Greenwich Corpn. ([1928] All E.R. Rep. 724; [1929] 1 Ch. 305; 98 L.J.Ch. 49; 140 L.T. 456). Considered in Re Jewison's Will Trusts 1022
Longhurst v. Guildford Godalming and District Water Board ([1960] 3 All E.R. 664; [1961] 1 Q.B. 408; [1960] 3 W.L.R. 1059). Affirmed. H.L. 545
Lort-Williams v. Lort-Williams ([1951] 2 All E.R. 245; [1951] P. 403). Dictum of DENNING, L.J., applied in Young v. Young 695
Lywood v. Warwick (1860) (30 L.J.Ch. 507). Followed in Re Du Cros' Settlement 193
M. (an infant) Re ([1961] 1 All E.R. 788; [1961] Ch. 328; [1961] 2 W.L.R. 350). Applied in Re Baker (infants). 276
M'Alister v. Stevenson ([1932] All E.R. Rep. 1; [1932] A.C. 562; 101 L.J.P.C. 119; 147 L.T. 281). Applied in Clayton v. Woodman & Son (Builders), Ltd. 249
McNeill, Re ([1957] 3 All E.R. 508; [1958] Ch. 259; [1957] 3 W.L.R. 1007). Applied in Re Latham (decd.) 903
Mancini v. Director of Public Prosecutions ([1941] 3 All E.R. 272; [1942] A.C. 1; 111 L.J.K.B. 84; 165 L.T. 353). Applied in Bratty v. A.-G. for Northern Ireland 523
Married Women's Property Act, 1882, Re, Re Humphery and Humphery ([1917] 2 K.B. 72; 86 L.J.K.B. 775; 117 L.T. 7). Not followed in Re Edward's Questions 580
Marshall v. Nottingham City Corpn. ([1960] 1 All E.R. 665; [1960] 1 W.L.R. 717). Dictum of GLYN-JONES, J., applied in East Barnet U.D.C. v. British Transport Commission 878
Meering v. Grahame-White Aviation Co., Ltd. (1919) (122 L.T. 44). Applied in Abbott v. Refuge Assurance Co., Ltd. 1074
Melvill v. Melvill ([1930] All E.R. Rep. 79; [1930] P. 159; 99 L.J.P. 65; 143 L.T. 206). Distinguished in Young v. Young 695
Midland Bank Executor and Trustee Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. ([1959] 1 All E.R. 180; [1959] Ch. 277; [1959] 2 W.L.R. 77). Considered in Coutts & Co. v. I.R. Comrs. 158
Mills v. Mills ([1940] 2 All E.R. 254; [1940] P. 124; 109 L.J.P. 86; 163 L.T. 272). Not followed in L. v. L. 20
—— Followed in L. v. L. 834
Mills Conduit Investments, Ltd. v. Tattersall ([1940] 1 All E.R. 283; 162 L.T. 382). Dictum of DU PARCQ, L.J., applied in Edgware Trust, Ltd. v. Lawrence 141
Mitchell v. Ross ([1960] 2 All E.R. 218; [1960] Ch. 498; [1960] 2 W.L.R. 766). Reversed. H.L. .. 49
Moore (Percy G.), Ltd. v. Stretch ([1951] 1 All E.R. 228). Distinguished in Critchley v. Clifford .. 288
Mounsdon v. Weymouth and Melcombe Regis Corpn. ([1960] 1 All E.R. 538; [1960] 1 Q.B. 645; [1960] 2 W.L.R. 484). Applied in East Barnet U.D.C. v. British Transport Commission 878
Mountain (Alexander) & Co. v. Rumere, Ltd. ([1948] 2 All E.R. 484; [1948] 2 K.B. 441). Dictum of COHEN, L.J., applied in Whittam v. W. J. Daniel & Co., Ltd. 796
Muller v. Trafford ([1901] 1 Ch. 54; 70 L.J.Ch. 72). Considered in Weg Motors, Ltd. v. Hales 181
New Chinese Antimony Co., Ltd. v. Ocean S.S. Co., Ltd. ([1917] 2 K.B. 664; 86 L.J.K.B. 1417; 117 L.T. 297). Distinguished in A.-G. of Ceylon v. Scindia Steam Navigation Co., Ltd. 684
Nicholls v. Austin (Leyton), Ltd. ([1946] 2 All E.R. 92; [1946] A.C. 493; 115 L.J.K.B. 329; 175 L.T. 5). Applied in Sparrow v. Fairey Aviation Co., Ltd. 452

PAGE

Nicholls v. Austin (Leyton), Ltd. ([1946] 2 All E.R. 92; [1946] A.C. 493; 115 L.J.K.B. 329; 175 L.T. 5). Applied in Eaves v. Morris Motors, Ltd. .. 233
Nicoll v. Austin (1935) (19 Tax Cas. 531). Considered in Butter v. Bennett .. 1041
Nocton v. Lord Ashburton ([1914-15] All E.R. Rep. 45; [1914] A.C. 932; 83 L.J.Ch. 784; 111 L.T. 641). Considered in Hedley Byrne & Co., Ltd. v. Heller & Partners, Ltd. .. 891
Norfolk (Earldom) Case ([1907] A.C. 10; 76 L.J.P.C. 9; 95 L.T. 682). Followed in Re Bristol South East Parliamentary Election .. 354
North Riding of Yorkshire County Valuation Committee v. Redcar Corpn. ([1942] 2 All E.R. 589; [1943] K.B. 114; 112 L.J.K.B. 97; 168 L.T. 81). Distinguished in Blake v. Hendon Corpn. .. 601
Nouvion v. Freeman (1889) (15 App. Cas. 1; 59 L.J.Ch. 337; 62 L.T. 189). Applied in Blohn v. Desser 1
Oak Property Co., Ltd. v. Chapman ([1947] 2 All E.R. 1; [1947] K.B. 886; [1947] L.J.R. 1327; 177 L.T. 364). Considered in Finkle v. Strzelczyk .. 409
Olds Discount Co., Ltd. v. John Playfair, Ltd. ([1938] 3 All E.R. 275; 159 L.T. 332). Applied in Chow Yoong Hong v. Choong Fah Rubber Manufactory .. 1163
Oliver v. Ashman ([1960] 3 All E.R. 677; [1961] 1 Q.B. 337; [1960] 3 W.L.R. 924). Affirmed for reasons partly different. C.A. .. 323
Overseas Tankship (U.K.), Ltd. v. Morts Dock & Engineering Co., Ltd. (The Wagon Mound) ([1961] 1 All E.R. 404; [1961] A.C. 388; [1961] 2 W.L.R. 126). Considered in Smith v. Leech Brain & Co., Ltd. .. 1159
Pachner v. Parker (formerly Pachner) ([1960] 1 All E.R. 159; [1960] 1 W.L.R. 486). Applied in L. v. L. .. 20
Palmer v. Palmer ([1954] 3 All E.R. 494; [1955] P. 4; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 756). Applied in S. v. S. .. 133
Parsons v. Barclay & Co., Ltd. (1910) (103 L.T. 199). Dictum of COZENS-HARDY, M.R., followed in Hedley Byrne & Co., Ltd. v. Heller & Partners, Ltd. .. 891
Pinson v. Lloyds & National Provincial Foreign Bank, Ltd. ([1941] 2 All E.R. 636; [1941] 2 K.B. 72; 110 L.J.K.B. 657; 165 L.T. 360). Applied in Chapple v. Electrical Trades Union .. 612
—— ([1941] 2 All E.R. 644; [1951] 2 K.B. 84; 110 L.J.K.B. 663; 165 L.T. 364). Dictum of STABLE, J., applied in Chapple v. Electrical Trades Union .. 612
Point of Ayr Collieries, Ltd. v. Lloyd-George ([1943] 2 All E.R. 547). Dictum of LORD GREENE, M.R., applied in Comrs. of Customs and Excise v. Cure & Deeley, Ltd. .. 641
Polemis and Furness, Withy & Co., Ltd., Re ([1921] All E.R. Rep. 40; [1921] 3 K.B. 560; sub nom., Polemis v. Furness, Withy & Co., 90 L.J.K.B. 1353; 126 L.T. 154). Treated as not binding in Smith v. Leech Brain & Co., Ltd. .. 1159
Ponsford and Newport District School Board, Re ([1894] 1 Ch. 454; 63 L.J.Ch. 278; sub nom. Ponsford v. Newport District School Board, 70 L.T. 502). Considered in Re Jewison's Will Trusts .. 1022
Pope v. D. Murphy & Son, Ltd. ([1960] 2 All E.R. 873; [1960] 2 W.L.R. 861). Overruled in Oliver v. Ashman .. 323
Potteries Electric Traction Co., Ltd. v. Bailey ([1930] All E.R. Rep. 63; [1931] A.C. 151; 100 L.J.K.B. 153; 144 L.T. 410). Applied in East Yorkshire Motor Services, Ltd. v. Clayton .. 758
Praed v. Graham (1889) (24 Q.B.D. 55; 59 L.J.Q.B. 230). Dictum of LORD ESHER, M.R., applied in Meek v. Fleming .. 148
Pratt v. Pratt ([1939] 3 All E.R. 438; [1939] A.C. 420; 108 L.J.P. 98; 161 L.T. 50). Dictum of LORD MACMILLAN adopted by LORD ROMER in COHEN v. COHEN ([1940] 2 All E.R. 335; [1940] A.C. 638; 109 L.J.P. 56; 163 L.T. 184). Explained in Brewer v. Brewer .. 957
Prince v. Prince ([1950] 2 All E.R. 375; [1951] P. 71) Followed in Turner v. Turner .. 944
Prout v. Hunter ([1924] All E.R. Rep. 53; [1924] 2 K.B. 736; 93 L.J.K.B. 993; 132 L.T. 193). Applied in Critchley v. Clifford .. 288
Pyx Granite Co., Ltd. v. Ministry of Housing and Local Government ([1959] 3 All E.R. 6; [1960] A.C. 268; [1959] 3 W.L.R. 357). Dictum of VISCOUNT SIMONDS applied in Comrs. of Customs and Excise v. Cure & Deeley, Ltd. .. 641
Qualter, Hall & Co., Ltd. v. Board of Trade ([1961] 1 All E.R. 210; [1961] Ch. 121; [1961] 2 W.L.R. 63). Affirmed in part. C.A. .. 389
Quartz Hill Gold Mining Co. v. Eyre (1883) (11 Q.B.D. 674; 52 L.J.Q.B. 488; 49 L.T. 249). Considered in Berry v. British Transport Commission .. 65
R. v. Caddy ([1959] 3 All E.R. 138 n.; [1959] 1 W.L.R. 868). Applied in R. v. Essex Quarter Sessions, Ex parte Larkin .. 930
R. v. Cook ([1959] 2 All E.R. 97; [1959] 2 Q.B. 340; [1959] 2 W.L.R. 616). Applied in R. v. Flynn .. 58
R. v. County Licensing (Stage Plays) Committee of Flint C.C., Ex parte Barrett ([1957] 1 All E.R. 122; [1957] 1 Q.B. 367, 368; [1957] 2 W.L.R. 103). Dictum of JENKINS, L.J., adopted in Merchandise Transport, Ltd. v. British Transport Commission .. 495
R. v. Day ([1940] 1 All E.R. 403; 162 L.T. 408). Ruling of CROOM-JOHNSON, J., approved in R. v. Tilley .. 406
R. v. Ellis ([1910] 2 K.B. 746; 79 L.J.K.B. 841; 102 L.T. 922). Dicta applied in R. v. Jones .. 668
R. v. Hopper ([1914-15] All E.R. Rep. 914; [1915] 2 K.B. 431; 84 L.J.K.B. 1371; 113 L.T. 381). Followed in R. v. Porritt .. 463
R. v. Martin ([1956] 2 All E.R. 86; [1956] 2 Q.B. 272; [1956] 2 W.L.R. 975). Considered in R. v. Cox 1194
R. v. Moore ([1957] 2 All E.R. 703 n.; [1957] 1 W.L.R 841). Applied in R. v. Essex Quarter Sessions, Ex parte Larkin .. 930
R. v. Naylor ([1961] 2 All E.R. 932; [1961] 3 W.L.R. 898). Considered in R. v. Cox .. 1194
R. v. Rice and Wilton (1866) (L.R. 1 C.C.R. 21; 35 L.J.M.C. 93; 13 L.T. 678). Followed in R. v. Quinn .. 88
R. v. Rickard (1918) (88 L.J.K.B. 720; 119 L.T. 192). Observations of SALTER, J., applied in R. v. Tilley .. 406
R. v. Smith ([1961] 2 All E.R. 743; [1961] 1 W.L.R. 1046). Considered in R. v. Higginbotham .. 616
R. v. Taylor ([1915] 2 K.B. 712, 713; 84 L.J.K.B. 1672; 113 L.T. 513). Dictum of LORD READING, C.J., applied in R. v. Duke .. 737
Raby v. Ridehalgh (1855) (24 L.J.Ch. 528; 25 L.T.O.S. 19). Applied in Re Pauling's Settlement Trusts .. 713
Ravenga v. Mackintosh (1824) (2 L.J.O.S.K.B. 137). Considered in Abbott v. Refuge Assurance Co., Ltd. .. 1074
Reading Trust, Ltd. v. Spero ([1929] All E.R. Rep. 411; [1930] 1 K.B. 507, 508; 99 L.J.K.B. 192; 142 L.T. 365). Dicta of GREER, L.J., considered in Edgware Trust, Ltd. v. Lawrence .. 141
Reed v. Cattermole ([1937] 1 All E.R. 541; [1937] 1 K.B. 613; 106 L.J.K.B. 407; 156 L.T. 389). Considered in Butter v. Bennett .. 1041
Rhondda's (Viscountess) Case ([1922] 2 A.C. 362; 92 L.J.P.C. 89; 128 L.T. 160). Dictum of VISCOUNT BIRKENHEAD, L.C., followed in Re Bristol South East Parliamentary Election .. 354
—— ([1922] 2 A.C. 393; 92 L.J.P.C. 104; 128 L.T. 171). Dictum of LORD WRENBURY applied and followed in Re Bristol South East Parliamentary Election .. 354
Ridge Nominees, Ltd. v. I.R. Comrs. ([1961] 2 All E.R. 354; [1961] 3 W.L.R. 393). Reversed. C.A. .. 1108
Rivoli Hats, Ltd. v. Gooch ([1953] 2 All E.R. 823; [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1190). Considered in Bronester, Ltd. v. Priddle .. 471
Roberts v. Dorman Long & Co., Ltd. ([1953] 2 All E.R. 432; [1953] 1 W.L.R. 946). Dictum of LORD GODDARD, C.J., stated to have been overruled in Wigley v. British Vinegars, Ltd. .. 418

PAGE

Rogers v. Arnott ([1960] 2 All E.R. 417; [1960] 2 Q.B. 244; [1960] 3 W.L.R. 73). Distinguished in R. v. Males 705
Rose v. Ford ([1937] 3 All E.R. 380, 381; [1937] A.C. 861; 106 L.J.K.B. 592; 157 L.T. 183). Observations of LORD ROCHE applied in Oliver v. Ashman 323
Royal Aquarium and Summer and Winter Garden Society, Ltd. v. Parkinson ([1892] 1 Q.B. 447; 61 L.J.Q.B. 414; 66 L.T. 517). Dictum of FRY, L.J., not followed in Lincoln v. Daniels 740
Rudler v. Franks ([1947] K.B. 530; [1947] L.J.R. 658; 176 L.T. 326). Distinguished in Critchley v. Clifford 288
Russell v. Russell ([1956] 1 All E.R. 470; [1956] P. 295; [1956] 2 W.L.R. 551). Dictum of JENKINS, L.J., applied in L. v. L. 834
St. John, Hampstead, Re ([1939] P. 281; 160 L.T. 641). Considered in Re Jewison's Will Trusts .. 1022
Samuel, Re ([1945] 2 All E.R. 319; [1945] Ch. 364; 114 L.J.Ch. 337; 173 L.T. 278). Considered and distinguished in National Benzole Co., Ltd. v. Gooch 1097
Secretary of State in Council of India v. Scoble ([1903] A.C. 299; 72 L.J.K.B. 617; 89 L.T. 1). Applied in Vestey v. I.R. Comrs. 978
Selot's Trust, Re ([1902] 1 Ch. 488; 71 L.J.Ch. 192). Followed in Re Langley's Settlement Trusts 803
Shaw v. Director of Public Prosecutions ([1961] 2 All E.R. 452; [1961] 2 W.L.R. 917). Dictum of VISCOUNT SIMONDS applied in R. v. Quinn 88
—— ([1961] 2 All E.R. 468; [1961] 2 W.L.R. 940). Dictum of LORD HODSON applied in R. v. Quinn 88
Sheffield Corpn. v. Tranter ([1957] 2 All E.R. 583; [1957] 1 W.L.R. 843). Followed in Blake v. Hendon Corpn. 601
Shelley v. New South Wales Institution for the Deaf and Dumb and the Blind ([1919] A.C. 650). Followed in Re Matthews's Will Trusts 869
Smith v. Selwyn ([1914] 3 K.B. 98; 83 L.J.K.B. 1339; 111 L.T. 195). Applied in Abbott v. Refuge Assurance Co., Ltd. 1074
Smith & Co. v. Bedouin Steam Navigation Co. ([1896] A.C. 70; 65 L.J.P.C. 8). Applied in A.-G. of Ceylon v. Scindia Steam Navigation Co., Ltd. 684
Society for Training Teachers of the Deaf and Whittle's Contract, Re ([1907] 2 Ch. 486; 76 L.J.Ch. 656; 97 L.T. 538). Not followed in Neville Estates, Ltd. v. Madden 769
Somerset, Re ([1894] 1 Ch. 265; 63 L.J.Ch. 46; 69 L.T. 747). Observations of LINDLEY, L.J., considered in Re Pauling's Settlement Trusts 713
Sothern-Smith v. Clancy ([1941] 1 All E.R. 116; [1941] 1 K.B. 283; 110 L.J.K.B. 191; 164 L.T. 211). Dictum of SIR WILFRID GREENE, M.R., applied in Vestey v. I.R. Comrs. 978
Sparrow v. Fairey Aviation Co., Ltd. ([1961] 1 All E.R. 216; [1961] 1 W.L.R. 844). Affirmed. C.A. 452
Spiller v. Turner ([1897] 1 Ch. 911; 66 L.J.Ch. 435; 76 L.T. 622). Applied in Re Latham (decd.) .. 903
Spira v. Spira ([1939] 3 All E.R. 924). Considered in Dsane v. Hagan 380
Sutherland (decd.), Re ([1960] 3 All E.R. 270; [1960] Ch. 611; [1960] 3 W.L.R. 491). Reversed. H.L. 855
Swan v. Swan ([1953] 2 All E.R. 854; [1953] P. 258; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 591). Applied in S. v. S. 133
Taylor v. Twinberrow ([1930] All E.R. Rep. 342; [1930] 2 K.B. 16; 99 L.J.K.B. 313; 142 L.T. 648). Considered in St. Marylebone Property Co., Ltd. v. Fairweather 560
Tennant v. Smith ([1892] A.C. 150; 61 L.J.P.C. 11; 66 L.T. 327). Considered in Butter v. Bennett 1041
Thellusson v. Lord Rendlesham (1859) (28 L.J.Ch. 948; sub nom. Thellusson v. Robarts, 33 L.T.O.S. 379). Distinguished in Re du Cros' Settlement 193
Thorogood v. Van Den Berghs & Jurgens, Ltd. ([1951] 1 All E.R. 682; sub nom. Thurogood v. Van Den Berghs & Jurgens, Ltd., [1951] 2 K.B. 537). Applied in Longhurst v. Guildford Godalming and District Water Board 545
Tichborne v. Weir (1892) (67 L.T. 735). Applied in St. Marylebone Property Co., Ltd. v. Fairweather 560
Tickler v. Tickler ([1943] 1 All E.R. 59). Dictum of SCOTT, L.J., applied in Brewer v. Brewer .. 957
Tillmanns & Co. v. S.S. Knutsford, Ltd. ([1908] 2 K.B. 385; 77 L.J.K.B. 778; sub nom. S.S. Knutsford, Ltd. v. Tillmanns & Co., 99 L.T. 399). Applied in Re Latham (decd.) 903
Tolson v. Sheard (1877) (5 Ch.D. 19; 46 L.J.Ch. 815; 36 L.T. 756). Applied in Re Rycroft's Settlements 581
Victoria Insurance Co., Ltd. v. Junction North Broken Hill Mine ([1925] A.C. 354). Considered in Sunshine Porcelain Potteries Pty., Ltd. v. Nash 203
Villar v. Gilbey ([1907] A.C. 139; 76 L.J.Ch. 339; 96 L.T. 511). Considered in Re Stern's Will Trusts 1129
Walker v. Bletchley Flettons, Ltd. ([1937] 1 All E.R. 175). Dictum of DU PARCQ, J., applied in Eaves v. Morris Motors, Ltd. 233
—— Test formulated by DU PARCQ, J., applied in Wigley v. British Vinegars, Ltd. 418
Walter v. Yalden ([1902] 2 K.B. 304; 71 L.J.K.B. 693; 87 L.T. 97). Overruled in St. Marylebone Property Co., Ltd. v. Fairweather 560
Watson v. M'Ewan ([1905] A.C. 480; 74 L.J.P.C. 151; 93 L.T. 489). Considered in Lincoln v. Daniels 740
Weg Motors, Ltd. v. Hales ([1960] 3 All E.R. 762; [1961] Ch. 176; [1960] 3 W.L.R. 964). Affirmed. C.A. 181
Weldon v. Neal (1887) (19 Q.B.D. 395; 56 L.J.Q.B. 621). Dictum of LORD ESHER, M.R., considered in Pontin v. Wood 992
Wells-King v. Wells-King ([1955] 1 All E.R. 585; [1955] 1 W.L.R. 309). Followed in Turner v. Turner 944
White, Re ([1893] 2 Ch. 41; 62 L.J.Ch. 342; 68 L.T. 187). Distinguished in Re Smith's Will Trusts 824
Wholesale Confectioners' Alliance of Great Britain and Northern Ireland's Agreement (No. 2), Re ([1961] 2 All E.R. 9; L.R. 2 R.P. 239; [1961] 1 W.L.R. 617). Dictum not followed in Re Newspaper Proprietors' Assocn., Ltd. and National Federation of Retail Newsagents, Booksellers and Stationers' Agreement 428
Wiffen v. Bailey and Romford Urban Council ([1914-15] All E.R. Rep. 974; [1915] 1 K.B. 610; 84 L.J.K.B. 694; 112 L.T. 278). Dictum of PHILLIMORE, L.J., considered and explained in Berry v. British Transport Commission 65
Wilkins, Re (1881) (18 Ch.D. 634; 50 L.J.Ch. 774; 45 L.T. 244). Applied in Re Petrie (decd.) .. 1067
Williams v. Bayley (1866) (L.R. 1 H.L. 220; 35 L.J.Ch. 726; 14 L.T. 807). Dictum of LORD WESTBURY disapproved in Sykes v. Director of Public Prosecutions 33
Wood v. Wood ([1891] P. 276; 60 L.J.P. 68; 64 L.T. 589). Observations of LINDLEY, L.J., applied in KIRKE v. KIRKE 1059
Woodall v. Clifton ([1905] 2 Ch. 257; 74 L.J.Ch. 555; 93 L.T. 257). Followed in Weg Motors, Ltd. v. Hales 181
Woods v. Martins Bank, Ltd. ([1958] 3 All E.R. 166; [1959] 1 Q.B. 55; [1958] 1 W.L.R. 1018). Distinguished in Hedley Byrne & Co., Ltd. v. Heller & Partners, Ltd. 891
Woolmington v. Director of Public Prosecutions ([1935] All E.R. Rep. 1; [1935] A.C. 462; 104 L.J.K.B. 433; 153 L.T. 232). Applied in Bratty v. A.-G. for Northern Ireland 523
Worms v. De Valdor (1880) (49 L.J.Ch. 261; 41 L.T. 791). Followed in Re Langley's Settlement Trusts 803
Yenidje Tobacco Co., Ltd., Re ([1916] 2 Ch. 426; 86 L.J.Ch. 1; 115 L.T. 530). Considered in Re Davis Investments (East Ham), Ltd. 926
Young v. Young ([1961] 2 All E.R. 843; [1961] 1 W.L.R. 955). Reversed. C.A. 695

STATUTES, ETC., NOTED

PAGE

Administration of Justice Act, 1956 (c. 46), s. 15 (1) (a) .. 580
Administration of Justice Act, 1960 (c. 65), s. 1 (2) .. 299
Arbitration Act, 1950 (c. 27), s. 4 .. 661
Army Act, 1955 (c. 18), s. 70 (2) .. 1194
Bills of Lading Act, 1855 (c. 111), s. 1 .. 919
Carriage of Goods by Sea Act, 1924 (c. 22), Schedule, art. III, r. 3, r. 4 .. 684
Charitable Trusts Act, 1853 (c. 137), s. 62 .. 769
Charitable Trusts (Validation) Act, 1954 (c. 58), s. 1 (1) .. 588
Coast Protection Act, 1949 (c. 74), s. 7 (4) (b), (5) .. 1008 Companies Act, 1948 (c. 38)—
s. 129 (4) .. 389
s. 209 .. 1108
s. 222 (f) .. 926
Sch. 7, para. 7 (1), para. 9 .. 389
Criminal Appeal Act, 1907 (c. 23)—
s. 3 .. 737
s. 4 (1) .. 969
s. 9 .. 633
Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (c. 36)—
s. 1, proviso (f) (i) .. 668
(ii) .. 58
Criminal Procedure Act, 1851 (c. 100), s. 12 .. 705
Criminal Procedure Act, 1865 (c. 18), s. 8 .. 406
Customs and Excise Act, 1952 (c. 44), s. 4 (1) .. 641
Disused Burial Grounds Act, 1884 (c. 72), ss. 2, 3 .. 1022
Divorce (Insanity and Desertion) Act, 1958 (c. 54), s. 1 (3) .. 1105
Education Act, 1944 (c. 31), ss. 36, 37, 40 (2) .. 276
Factories Act, 1937 (c. 67)—
s. 14 (1) .. 233, 452
s. 26 (2) .. 418
s. 151 (1) (b), (6) .. 545
Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (c. 22), s. 149 (1) .. 272
Fatal Accidents Act, 1846 (c. 93), s. 2 .. 24
Finance Act, 1894 (c. 38)—
s. 5 (2) .. 158
s. 7 (1) (b) .. 903
(5) .. 855
ss. 8 (4), 9 (6), 20 (2) .. 903
Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910 (c. 8), s. 59 (2) .. 1028
Finance Act, 1930 (c. 28), s. 42 .. 258
Finance Act, 1937 (c. 54), ss. 19 (4), 20 (2) (a) (b) .. 1121
Finance Act, 1938 (c. 46), s. 50 (1) (b) .. 258
Finance Act, 1940 (c. 29), ss. 50 (1), 55 .. 855
Finance (No. 2) Act, 1940 (c. 48), s. 33 .. 641
Finance Act, 1947 (c. 35)—
s. 30 (3) .. 172
s. 35 (1) (c) .. 1121
ss. 36 (4), 43 (1) .. 172
Firearms Act, 1937 (c. 12), s. 23 (2) .. 703
Furnished Houses (Rent Control) Act, 1946 (c. 34), s. 2 (2) .. 1047
Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (c. 27), ss. 22, 33 .. 342
Homicide Act, 1957 (c. 11), s. 3 .. 463
Housing Act, 1957 (c. 56)—
s. 111 (1) .. 1002
ss. 158 (2), 166 (2) .. 1138
Income Tax Act, 1952 (c. 10)—
s. 122, Sch. D, para. 1, proviso .. 49
s. 123, Sch. D, Case I .. 1062
s. 156, Sch. E, para. 2 .. 49
s. 161 (1) .. 348, 1041
(3) .. 348
ss. 245, 256 (4) .. 551
s. 292 .. 855
s. 526 .. 1062
Sch. 9, Rules applicable to Sch. E, r. 7 .. 129, 348
Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (c. 17), s. 12 (2), proviso (iii) 288
Land Registration Act, 1925 (c. 21), s. 75 (1) .. 560
Land Transfer Act, 1897 (c. 65), s. 4 (1) .. 869 Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954 (c. 56)—
s. 25 .. 1142
s. 28 .. 843
s. 32 (1) .. 1174
s. 44 (1) (b) .. 843
s. 66 (2) .. 1142
Law of Property Act, 1925 (c. 20)—
s. 79 .. 83
ss. 87 (2), 142 (1) .. 181
Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935 (c. 30), s. 6 (2) .. 95
Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949 (c. 100), s. 9 .. 276 Limitation Act, 1939 (c. 21)—
s. 2 (1) (a) .. 482
s. 16 .. 560
s. 19 (2) proviso .. 713
Local Government Act, 1894 (c. 73), s. 6 (1) (a) .. 1014
Local Government Act, 1933 (c. 51)—
s. 230 .. 914
Sch. 3, Part 2, para. 3 .. 446
Magistrates' Courts Act, 1952 (c. 55), ss. 6 (1), 105 (1) .. 1118
Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c. 75), s. 17 .. 580

PAGE

Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (c. 25)—
s. 1 (1) (d) .. 1105
s. 7 (2) .. 944
s. 19 (2) .. 20, 834
(3) .. 834, 1059
s. 25 .. 695
s. 28 (1) .. 793
(3) .. 1059
s. 32 (3) .. 231
Matrimonial Causes (Property and Maintenance) Act, 1958 (c. 35), s. 1 (1) .. 20, 834
Mental Health Act 1959 (c. 72), ss. 60, 65 .. 616
Mines and Quarries Act, 1954 (c. 70), s. 34 (1) (b) .. 220
Moneylenders Act, 1927 (c. 21), s. 6 (2) .. 141
Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (c. 100), s. 18 .. 200
Official Secrets Act, 1911 (c. 28), s. 1 (1) (c) .. 125
Official Secrets Act, 1920 (c. 75), s. 8 (1) .. 125
Open Spaces Act, 1887 (c. 32), s. 4 .. 1022
Open Spaces Act, 1906 (c. 25), s. 20 .. 1022
Public Health Act, 1936 (c. 49), s. 100 .. 542
Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928 (c. 44)—
s. 3 (1) .. 272, 758
(2) (b), s. 4 .. 758
Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (c. 32), Sch. 1, para. (d) .. 409 Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956 (c. 68)—
s. 20 (3) .. 316, 428
s. 21 (1) (b) .. 428
Road Traffic Act, 1960 (c. 16)—
ss. 1, 2 .. 6
s. 3 (1) .. 1194
s. 6 .. 6
Small Tenements Recovery Act, 1838 (c. 74), ss. 1, 7 .. 1138
Stamp Act, 1891 (c. 39)—
s. 54 .. 258, 1108, 1146
Sch. 1 .. 211, 258, 1108, 1146
Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (c. 49), s. 45 (1) .. 461
Town and Country Planning Act, 1932 (c. 48), s. 53 .. 878 Town and Country Planning Act, 1947 (c. 51)—
s. 12 (2) .. 878
s. 23 (3) .. 10
s. 29 (1) .. 98
Trial of Lunatics Act, 1883 (c. 38), s. 2 (1) .. 737
Trustee Act, 1925 (c. 19)—
s. 57 .. 811
s. 61 .. 713
Trustee Investments Act, 1961 (c. 62)—
s. 15 .. 636, 811
Sch. 1, Part 4, para. 3 .. 1133
Variation of Trusts Act, 1958 (c. 53), s. 1 .. 136, 636, 1133

COMMONWEALTH AND DEPENDENCIES

Indian Carriage of Goods by Sea Act, 1925, Schedule, art. III, r. 3, r. 4 .. 684
Malayan Moneylenders Ordinance, 1951 (No. 42 of 1951), ss. 15, 16 .. 1163
New Zealand Land and Income Tax Act, 1954 (No. 67), ss. 149 (2), 86 (1) (i), 167 (a) .. 1051
Victoria Workers Compensation Act, 1951 (No. 5601), s. 12 (1) .. 203

RULES

Judges' Rules, r. 3 .. 972
Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1957 (S.I. 1957 No. 619)—
r. 3 (3) .. 247
proviso (ii) .. 20
r. 4 (4) .. 247
r. 36 (1) .. 944
R.S.C.—
Ord. 7, r. 4 (1) .. 64
Ord. 14, r. 1 .. 681
Ord. 14A .. 380
Ord. 27, r. 15 .. 380
Ord. 36A, r. 1 .. 580
Ord. 64, r. 4, Ord. 70, r. 1 .. 1169

REGULATIONS

Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948 No. 1145)—
reg. 3 (2) .. 108
reg. 4 .. 1154
regs. 5, 7 (1), (4), 8 (1), 12 (2), 24 (1) .. 108
reg. 29 .. 1154
Landlord and Tenant (Notices) Regulations, 1957 (S.I. 1957 No. 1157), reg. 4 (vii) .. 1142
London Parking Zones (Waiting and Loading) (Restriction) Regulations, 1960 (S.I. 1960 No. 594), reg. 4 (a) .. 974
Purchase Tax Regulations, 1945 (S.R. & O. 1945 No. 517), reg. 12 .. 641

ORDERS

Town and Country Planning General Development Order, 1948 (S.I. 1948 No. 958), art. 3 (1), Sch. 1, Class XVIII A .. 878 Town and Country Planning General Development Order (S.I. 1950 No. 728)— art. 3 (1) .. 878
art. 5 (8) .. 10
Sch. 1, Class XVIII A .. 878

MISCELLANEOUS

Constitution of Ireland, art. 41, s. 3 (3) .. 225

WORDS AND PHRASES

	PAGE
Advance commission	471
Agreement for a lease [Settled Land Act, 1925, s. 117 (1) (x)]	581
Alight (" for so long as may be necessary for the purpose of enabling any person to . . . alight from the vehicle ")	974
And [not substituted for " or " in penal enactment]	1194
Appears to them necessary	641
Apprehension [Firearms Act, 1937, s. 23 (2)]	703
Article	545
At any time [retrospective operation of statute]	203
Blue chip [investments]	811
Board (" for so long as may be necessary for the purpose of enabling any person to board . . . the vehicle ")	974
Born in the lifetime of	1129
Contingent liability	855
Conveyance [Stamp Duty—Whether lease or exchange a conveyance]	258
Covenant [within s. 142 (1) of Law of Property Act, 1925]	181
Debts	869
Dedication	601
Derived from (" income derived from any business carried on in New Zealand ")	1051
Descendants—See " Male descendants ".
Development	878
Effect—See " To the like effect ".
Error of the court at the hearing	449
Exempt (" income exempt from taxation ")	1051
Expenses incident to the execution of the preceding trusts	869
Expenses incurred wholly, exclusively and necessarily in the performance of . . . duties—See " Wholly, exclusively and necessarily ".
Fair	1019
First class [investments]	811
Future tenancy [Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954, s. 28]	843
Gangway	108
General management [Housing Act, 1947, s. 111 (1)]	1002
Hand-hold [Factories Act, 1937, s. 26 (2)]	418
Hospital	824
Interruption	1105
Issue—See " Male issue ".
Landlord [Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954, s. 44 (1)]	843
Lease—See " Agreement for a lease ".
Liability—See " Contingent liability ".
Like effect—See " To the like effect ".
Lord of Parliament	354
Male descendants	193
Male issue	193
Management—See " General management ".
Mixed charity	769
Mortgage, bond, debenture, covenant	211
Necessary—See " Appears to them necessary ".
Obstruction [Mines and Quarries Act, 1954, s. 34 (1) (b)]	220
Or (" and " not substituted for " or " in penal enactment]	1194
Parliament—See " Lord of Parliament ".
Post-nuptial settlement [Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950, s. 25]	695
Procure	83
Realised—See " When the residue of my estate is realised ".
Residue—See " When the residue of my estate is realised ".
Reversionary tenancy [Landlord and Tenant Act, 1954, s. 65 (3)]	843
Safely be done	108
Sale [whether compulsory acquisition was a sale]	1108
Security [Stamp Act, 1891, Sch.—" Mortgage, bond, etc."]	211
Settled Land Act, 1925 (c. 18) ss. 42 (1) (i), 44 (3) (iii), 90 (1) (iii), 117 (1) (x)	581
Show—See " Tending to show ".
Tenancy—See " Future tenancy ", " Reversionary tenancy ".
Tending to show [Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, s. 1 proviso (f)]	668
Testamentary expenses	869
Time—See " at any time ".
To the like effect [Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956, s. 20 (3) (b)]	316
Wake	1019
When the residue of my estate is realised	1067
Wholly, exclusively and necessarily	129, 348
Wholly maintained by voluntary contributions	769

CORRIGENDA

[1961] 2 All E.R.

p. 652 INLAND REVENUE COMRS. v. R. WOOLF & CO., LTD. Counsel: for " J. M. Price " read " J. R. B. Price ".

p. 896 MORRISON ROSE & PARTNERS v. HILLMAN. Solicitors: for " Howard, Kennedy & Co." read " Joelson & Co."

[1961] 3 All E.R.

p. 381 DSANE v. HAGAN. Counsel for the plaintiff: for " J. Maurice Price " read "A. Leolin Price."

p. 408 R. v. TILLEY. Solicitors: for " Linsley-Thomas & Co." read " Peters & Peters ".

p. 681 FIELDRANK, LTD. v. STEIN. Counsel: for " M. P. Solomon " read " Peter Solomon ".

p. 736 Re PAULING'S SETTLEMENT TRUSTS. Solicitors: read " Bird & Bird (for the plaintiffs); Charles Russell & Co. (for the trustees, the bank) " instead of as printed.

p. 796 WHITTAM v. W. J. DANIEL & CO., LTD. Line D. 5: for " W. G." read " W. J."

p. 815 Re KOLB'S WILL TRUSTS. Solicitors: for " D. H. Kramer & Co." read "A. Kramer & Co."

p. 941 ZAMET v. HYMAN. Line H. 5: for " council " read " counsel ".

p. 969 R. v. JOHNSON. Line B. 4: for " thereby assumes " read " does not thereby assume ".

p. 991 BRASSINGTON v. BRASSINGTON. Solicitors for the respondent husband: for " F. W. P. Lupton " read " Vizard, Oldham, Crowder & Cash, agents for Chamberlain, Johnson & Parke, Llandudno ".

THE ALL ENGLAND
LAW REPORTS
INCORPORATING THE
LAW TIMES REPORTS AND THE
LAW JOURNAL REPORTS

BLOHN v. DESSER AND OTHERS.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION (Diplock, J.), April 20, 21, May 1, 2, 3, 1961.]

Conflict of Laws—Foreign judgment—Enforcement—Action in England—Whether foreign judgment against partnership a final and conclusive judgment on which to found action against individual partner.

Conflict of Laws—Foreign judgment—Jurisdiction of foreign court—Partnership abroad—Sleeping partner in United Kingdom—Action in personam against debtor not resident in foreign country but carrying on business there through partnership.

The defendant, who at all times resided in England, was a partner in a firm carrying on business in Vienna at a place of business there, and, though the defendant took no part in and received no income from the business, her name appeared on the commercial register in Vienna as a partner. On July 15, 1957, the plaintiff, an Austrian national resident in Vienna, obtained judgment against the firm, but not against the defendant personally, in the Commercial Court of Vienna on a bill of exchange accepted by another partner, D., in the name and on behalf of the firm. D., who was the defendant's brother, at all times was resident in Vienna and was the sole managing partner of the firm. In Austrian law a partnership was not a separate legal entity and a successful action against a partnership firm did not impose personal liability on individual partners, and to obtain execution against the personal assets of a partner a further action had to be brought against the individual partner himself. In such an action the partner was estopped by the doctrine of res judicata from raising defences which could have been raised by the firm in the original action but was entitled to raise defences personal to himself or arising from matters subsequent to the judgment against the firm. In an action by the plaintiff in the English courts brought on the Austrian judgment,

Held: (i) the court of a foreign country had jurisdiction to entertain an action in personam against a debtor who did not reside physically in the country, but who, at the time of the action, was carrying on business through an agent resident in the country, where the transaction was effected by the agent at his place of business; the Austrian court had, therefore, jurisdiction to entertain the action against the defendant on the bill of exchange, the jurisdiction resting on implied agreement of the defendant by conduct to submit to the jurisdiction of the Austrian court in respect of the transaction.

Dictum of BUCKLEY, L.J., in Emanuel v. Symon ([1908] 1 K.B. at p. 309) considered.

(ii) the judgment of the Austrian court was not, however, enforceable in the English court against the defendant personally, because (a) it conferred no right against her personal assets, as distinct from the partnership assets, and (b) it was not a final and conclusive foreign judgment such as was requisite for the purpose of being so enforced, since, on the evidence of Austrian law, the defendant might have raised defences that were not concluded by the judgment against the partnership, and the fact that the defendant had not relied on any of these defences in the English action on the judgment did not render that judgment enforceable therein.

Nouvion v. Freeman ((1889), 15 App. Cas. 1) applied.

[As to foreign judgments in personam as causes of action, and the conditions essential to the enforcement of a foreign judgment, see 7 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 140-143, paras. 249-252 and 144-147, paras. 256-260; and for cases on the subject, see 11 Digest (Repl.) 502-524, 1204-1368.]

Cases referred to:

Emanuel v. Symon, [1908] 1 K.B. 302; 77 L.J.K.B. 180; 98 L.T. 304; 11 Digest (Repl.) 503, 1211.

Littauer Glove Corpn. v. F. W. Millington (1920), Ltd., (1928), 44 T.L.R. 746; 9 Digest (Repl.) 33, 29.

Nouvion v. Freeman, (1889), 15 App. Cas. 1; 59 L.J.Ch. 337; 62 L.T. 189; 11 Digest (Repl.) 513, 1282.

Action.

The plaintiff, an Austrian national resident in Vienna, sued three members of a partnership firm established under Austrian law and carrying on business in Vienna under the name Salvator Malzkaffee Gesellschaft Deri & Co. Two of the defendants resided outside the jurisdiction of the court and the first defendant, Mrs. Margarete Desser, who had resided in England for many years, was the only defendant served with the writ and to enter an appearance to the action. She took no part in, and received no income from, the firm in Vienna, but her name remained on the commercial register in Vienna as a partner in the firm and in Austrian law she remained a partner. The plaintiff's claim arose out of transactions in Austria between the plaintiff and one Franz Diamant, the first defendant's brother, who was the sole managing partner of the firm and at all times was resident in Austria. The plaintiff claimed against the first defendant: (i) £1,003 as a judgment debt on a judgment obtained by the plaintiff against the partnership firm in the Commercial Court of Vienna on July 15, 1957, on a bill of exchange, dated Nov. 3, 1956, payable on Feb. 2, 1957, and accepted by Franz Diamant in the name and on behalf of the firm; (ii) alternatively seventy thousand Austrian schillings on the bill of exchange itself; and (iii) in the further alternative, the sterling equivalent of seventy thousand schillings on an account stated.

The claim under head (i), with which alone this report is concerned, was contested on the ground that the Austrian judgment did not create a cause of action against the first defendant in the English courts since (inter alia) the Commercial Court of Vienna did not have jurisdiction over the first defendant and the judgment of that court was not final and conclusive as against her. The relevant findings of Austrian law are set out in the judgment.

Paul Sieghart for the plaintiff.

Leonard Caplan, Q.C., and H. Lester for the first defendant.

DIPLOCK, J., having held on the facts found by him that the plaintiff's claim based on the bill of exchange and the account stated failed, continued: There remains to be dealt with the plaintiff's claim on the Austrian judgment. In Austrian law the individual partners of a partnership firm are potentially liable for the debts of the partnership, and the partnership does not possess a separate personality. A creditor seeking to recover judgment in the Austrian courts in respect of a partnership debt can either sue the partnership firm in the firm's name, as the plaintiff did in the present case, or can sue the individual partners in their own names, or may take both these steps simultaneously. If, as in the present case, the partners are not sued individually, but an action is brought against a partnership firm in the partnership name, execution can

A be obtained only against the partnership assets, and not against the assets of the individual partners. In order to render the individual partners personally liable so as to obtain execution against their personal assets, it is necessary to bring a further action against the individual partner sought to be rendered liable. In Austrian law there is no doctrine of merger of the original debt in the judgment; the action against individual partners is accordingly brought B on the original debt. But the doctrine of estoppel by res judicata applies, and the individual partner cannot raise any defence which could have been raised on behalf of the partnership in the original action against the partnership firm. He can, however, raise other defences, either personal to himself such as that he was not a partner at the material time, or defences arising out of matters subsequent to the judgment such as that the debt has been satisfied in whole or C in part since the judgment.

The expert witnesses in Austrian law were not agreed whether an individual person could raise as a defence the fact that the judgment against the partnership firm had been obtained by fraud, or whether, if he desired to allege this, he had to bring separate proceedings to have the judgment against the partnership firm set aside. Faced with the invidious task of choosing between rival D experts, I prefer the view that separate proceedings to set the judgment aside are required, if it is desired to resist the claim on the ground that the judgment was obtained by fraud.

That is the background of Austrian law against which I have to consider whether the plaintiff can establish a cause of action based, not on the bill of exchange itself or the account stated, but based on the Austrian judgment E against the partnership firm. The first defendant says that this judgment does not create a cause of action against her in the English courts for three reasons: (i) that it was obtained by fraud; (ii) that the Commercial Court of Vienna by which judgment was pronounced had no jurisdiction to give judgment; and (iii) that the judgment was not a final and conclusive judgment against her, in the sense in which that expression is used in the English courts. [HIS LORD-F SHIP, having stated that he was not prepared to hold that the judgment of the Commercial Court of Vienna had been obtained by fraud, continued:] The second ground on which the first defendant relies, namely, that the Commercial Court of Vienna had no jurisdiction to pronounce judgment against her, raises a point of law on which there is no direct authority. The first defendant was at no relevant time resident or present in Austria. She was, however, a sleeping G partner in the Austrian firm which carried on business in Vienna at a place of business there, and whose managing partner, Mr. Diamant, was resident in Vienna. The Austrian firm, as I have said, had no separate legal personality in Austrian law.

The position is, therefore, that the first defendant at all material times carried on business in Vienna, not in person, but through an agent resident in Vienna. H Does this render her amenable to the jurisdiction of the Austrian courts in respect of a business transaction effected on her behalf in Vienna by that agent, if the action is brought at a time when the business is still being carried on? This is a question which is devoid of authority, no doubt because in the modern world business is generally conducted by corporations, that is to say, fictitious persons who can only be resident through an agent. In the case of a corporation, I therefore, the relevant problem tends to be whether the corporation, through its agent, is resident in the foreign country: see, for example, Littauer Glove Corpn. v. F. W. Millington (1920), Ltd. (1). A natural person, however, can only be resident in person.

I cannot, therefore, escape reaching a decision on the question of principle: Has a court of a foreign country jurisdiction in an action in personam against a debtor who does not reside physically in the country but who, at the time of the action, carries on business at a place in that country through an agent resident in that country, where the action is brought in respect of a transaction effected by that agent at his place of business?

(1) (1928), 44 T.L.R. 746.

In Emanuel v. Symon (2) BUCKLEY, L.J., enumerated the five cases in which an English court would enforce a foreign judgment. His enumeration was as follows:

> "(1) Where the defendant is a subject of the foreign country in which the judgment has been obtained; (2) where he was resident in the foreign country when the action began; (3) where the defendant in the character of plaintiff has selected the forum in which he is afterwards sued; (4) where he has voluntarily appeared; and (5) where he has contracted to submit himself to the forum in which the judgment was obtained."

There may be some doubt whether today it would be held that the jurisdiction exists in the first category of cases, but the other four cases have never been questioned. It is also, I think, clear law that the contract referred to in the fifth case, to submit to the forum in which the judgment was obtained, may be express or implied.

It seems to me that, where a person becomes a partner in a foreign firm with a place of business within the jurisdiction of a foreign court, and appoints an agent resident in that jurisdiction to conduct business on behalf of the partnership at that place of business, and causes or permits, as in the present case, these matters to be notified to persons dealing with that firm by registration in a public register, he does impliedly agree with all persons to whom such a notification is made—that is to say, the public—to submit to the jurisdiction of the court of the country in which the business is carried on in respect of transactions conducted at that place of business by that agent.

While I do not accept that comity is the basis on which English courts recognise and enforce foreign judgments, for there are many instances in which English courts exercise jurisdiction in personam over non-resident foreigners, where they do not recognise a similar jurisdiction in a foreign court, it is to be observed that the English courts under R.S.C., Ord. 48A, r. 1, do purport to exercise jurisdiction over non-resident foreign partners of partnership firms carrying on business at a place of business in England. I hold, therefore, in the absence of any binding authority on me, that the Commercial Court of Vienna had jurisdiction to entertain an action against the first defendant on the bill of exchange.

This, however, does not conclude the matter. The plaintiff did not obtain a judgment against the first defendant personally, but only a judgment against the firm. The judgment is no doubt final and conclusive against the firm and can be executed against the partnership assets. But in Austrian law of itself it creates no personal liability against the first defendant and gives no right of execution against her personal assets. In order to render her personally liable in Austrian law a further action must be brought against her in Austria, and a further judgment against her personally must be obtained. This is not merely a procedure for obtaining execution of an existing judgment for in the action against her, although she would be estopped by res judicata from raising any defence which could have been raised in the action against the partnership, she could raise other defences personal to herself, such as that she was not a partner at the relevant time, or defences arising after the original judgment, such as payment of the debt in whole or in part.

In my opinion, the judgment against the partnership firm is not enforceable against the first defendant in England on the alternative grounds either (a) that it is not a judgment against her personally, or (b) that if it is, it is not a final and conclusive judgment.

---

(2) [1908] 1 K.B. at p. 309.

A What is a final and conclusive judgment in English law so as to entitle a judgment creditor to sue on it in the English courts? LORD HERSCHELL in Nouvion v. Freeman (3) said this:

> "My Lords, I think that in order to establish that such a judgment has been pronounced [that is to say, a final and conclusive judgment of a foreign court] it must be shown that in the court by which it was pronounced it B conclusively, finally, and for ever established the existence of the debt of which it is sought to be made conclusive evidence in this country, so as to make it res judicata between the parties. If it is not conclusive in the same court which pronounced it, so that notwithstanding such a judgment the existence of the debt may between the same parties be afterwards contested in that court, and upon proper proceedings being taken and such contest C being adjudicated upon, it may be declared that there existed no obligation to pay the debt at all, then I do not think that a judgment which is of that character can be regarded as finally and conclusively evidencing the debt, and so entitling the person who has obtained the judgment to claim a decree from our courts for the payment of that debt."

D LORD BRAMWELL put the matter more succinctly in his speech where he said (4):

> "There is an essential difference, therefore, between the case where a court of competent jurisdiction has entertained all the controversies between the parties which they could and chose to raise, and come to a conclusion, which is to be presumed to be accurate, and this case where there is no ground for saying that all possible controversies between the parties have E been decided."

The judgment of the Austrian court against the partnership firm does not, in my view, enable the plaintiff to say as against the first defendant that all possible controversies between the parties have been decided by the judgment against the partnership firm, because on the evidence of Austrian law there are defences which would be available to her which are not concluded by the judgment F that the partnership firm is liable. It is irrelevant that the first defendant has not sought, in the present action on the judgment to raise the only kinds of defences which would have been available to her had she been sued personally in Austria after the judgment against the partnership firm had been given. The question is not whether she could have successfully defended an action in Austria, but whether the judgment against the partnership firm on which she G is sued in England falls within the category of a final and conclusive judgment against her—a category of judgment which alone the English courts will enforce.

Interesting questions might have arisen had the plaintiff, instead of suing on the judgment, sought to rely on it as an estoppel by res judicata by way of reply to the defence to the cause of action on the bill of exchange that it was accepted without authority, but this has not been pleaded and fortunately I H need not consider it.

I hold, therefore, that the plaintiff cannot recover against the first defendant on the judgment, and the action accordingly fails.

Judgment for the first defendant.

Solicitors: J. F. Beer & Co. (for the plaintiff); Cecil Altman & Co. (for the first defendant).

[Reported by WENDY SHOCKETT, Barrister-at-Law.]

---

(3) (1889), 15 App. Cas. at p. 9.

(4) (1889), 15 App. Cas. at p. 15.

R. v. McBRIDE.

A

[COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL (Lord Parker, C.J., Slade, Ashworth, Paull and Salmon, JJ.), June 9, 23, 1961.]

Road Traffic—Dangerous driving—Causing death by dangerous driving—Objective test—Admissibility of evidence of drink taken—Road Traffic Act, 1960 (8 & 9 Eliz. 2 c. 16), s. 1.

B

Criminal Law—Indictment—Joinder of counts—Dangerous driving—Causing death by dangerous driving—Drunk in charge—Road Traffic Act, 1960 (8 & 9 Eliz. 2 c. 16), s. 1, s. 2, s. 6.

On the trial of an accused on a charge of causing death by dangerous driving (the proper test of which is an objective, not subjective, test), laid under s. 1 of the Road Traffic Act, 1960*, evidence that the accused driver was at the time adversely affected by drink is of probative value and admissible, and its admissibility is not limited to rebuttal of such a defence as that the accused was not in control of the vehicle through no fault of his own; such evidence must tend to show either that the amount of drink taken was such as adversely to affect a driver or that the driver (the accused) was in fact adversely affected, but the court has an overriding discretion to exclude such evidence where its prejudicial effect outweighs its probative value.

C

D

In the opinion of the Court of Criminal Appeal, but without giving any general direction, an indictment containing a charge under s. 1 of the Road Traffic Act, 1960 (causing death by reckless or dangerous driving), should not also include a charge under s. 6† (driving or being in charge of a motor vehicle when under the influence of drink or drugs); but a charge under s. 6 may be coupled with a charge under s. 2 (reckless or dangerous driving).

E

Appeal dismissed.

[As to causing death by dangerous driving, see 10 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 740, para. 1422 and Supplement; 33 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 622, para. 1047.

F

For the Road Traffic Act, 1960, s. 1, see 40 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 711.]

Cases referred to:

Harris v. Public Prosecutions Director, [1952] 1 All E.R. 1044; [1952] A.C. 694; 116 J.P. 248; 36 Cr. App. Rep. 39; 14 Digest (Repl.) 423, 4118.

G

Hill v. Baxter, [1958] 1 All E.R. 193; [1958] 1 Q.B. 277; 122 J.P. 134; 42 Cr. App. Rep. 51; [1958] 2 W.L.R. 76; 3rd Digest Supp.

Noor Mohamed v. R., [1949] 1 All E.R. 365; [1949] A.C. 182; 14 Digest (Repl.) 421, 4097.

Appeal.

H

This was an appeal by James McBride against his conviction on Mar. 30, 1961, at the Central Criminal Court before JUDGE BLOCK and a jury of causing death by dangerous driving contrary to s. 1 of the Road Traffic Act, 1960. He was sentenced to six months' imprisonment and disqualified from holding a driving licence for ten years.

I

* Section 1, so far as material, reads: "(1) A person who causes the death of another person by the driving of a motor vehicle on a road recklessly, or at a speed or in a manner which is dangerous to the public, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, including the nature, condition and use of the road, and the amount of traffic which is actually at the time, or which might reasonably be expected to be, on the road, shall be liable on conviction on indictment to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years."

† Section 6, so far as material, reads: "(1) A person who, when driving or attempting to drive a motor vehicle on a road or other public place, is unfit to drive through drink or drugs shall be liable—(a) on conviction on indictment, to a fine or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years or to both a fine and such imprisonment . . ."

A The appellant had been indicted solely on s. 1 of the Act of 1960, and, at the magistrates' court, the prosecution had sought to adduce evidence that the appellant had "drink taken" and the magistrates had ruled that such evidence was inadmissible. His Honour on Mar. 8, 1961, heard argument whether evidence relating to the amount of alcohol the appellant was said to have consumed should be admitted or not, and ruled that such evidence should be admitted B because it was desirable that the jury should have before them the whole picture in making the objective test whether or not the driving was dangerous. The case was then adjourned to Mar. 27, 1961, when, after His Honour had affirmed his ruling on Mar. 8, 1961, the jury was sworn and the trial proceeded. In his summing-up he referred to this ruling as follows—

C "Some criticism has been levelled at the admission in this case of the evidence for the prosecution that, to put it no higher, at this stage [viz., when the accident occurred] McBride had 'drink taken', but I think it is right that you should know the circumstances. When you first sat on this case on Monday morning you recollect that I asked you to go out for a few minutes. During that time Mr. Hudson submitted to me that the evidence D as to drink should be excluded as being irrelevant and prejudicial. I ruled against him, because I felt that it was part of the circumstances of this case, and I was fortified in my decision by a decision which is briefly reported before Elwes, J. [i.e., R. v. Richardson] on circuit, where, as I see it, the circumstances were more or less the same as in this case. The short report in this case says that the defendant was charged with causing the E death of a person by dangerous driving. The prosecution sought to lead evidence that the defendant had been to certain public houses and had taken drink before the accident. The defendant was not charged with the offence of driving under the influence of drink, and the submission was made to Elwes, J., and he decided that such evidence was always admissible quite irrespective of whether there was a charge of driving under the in- F fluence of drink. Where the evidence disclosed that the car was being driven in a certain manner such evidence was undoubtedly relevant to the charge of dangerous driving. With that authority behind me and considering, as I did and do, that it is all part of the history of the offence which you have to investigate I thought it proper that you should hear it, and it is in those circumstances in which you have heard this quite considerable G evidence on the subject. But, as I say, it is incidental to your main duty, which is to decide whether in this case the driving was dangerous, a purely objective test. The reason for it is not necessary for your decision."

His Honour then summarised the evidence and at the end of his summing-up said:

H "In no sense are you trying this man for driving under the influence of drink to such an extent he had not proper control of the car. In so far as that matter is concerned, putting it at its lowest, you may think that it has nothing to do with this accident at all. Putting it at its highest, you may think that it explains the whole incident . . ."

I The jury, after retiring for about an hour, returned a verdict of guilty. After sentence, His Honour granted a certificate that the case was fit for appeal against conviction on the ground that the question whether, although the appellant was indicted solely on s. 1 of the Act of 1960, evidence was admissible that the appellant had taken intoxicating drink was a question of law of public importance. On May 9, 1961, the Court of Criminal Appeal (Lord Parker, C.J., Ashworth and Lawton, JJ.) adjourned the case for hearing before a Full Court of five judges and granted the appellant bail. On June 9, 1961, the court dismissed the appeal stating that it would give its reasons in writing at a later date. The facts are set out in the judgment of the court. The cases enumerated below were cited in argument in addition to those in the judgment*. A

W. M. F. Hudson for the appellant.

R. D. L. Du Cann for the Crown.

Cur. adv. vult.

B

June 23. ASHWORTH, J., read the following judgment of the court: The appellant was convicted at the Central Criminal Court on an indictment charging him under s. 1 of the Road Traffic Act, 1960, with causing death by dangerous driving. He has appealed to this court in pursuance of a certificate granted by the learned trial judge, the point in issue being whether evidence was rightly admitted to the effect that before the collision which resulted in the death of the deceased the appellant had " drink taken ". As this matter has been the subject of conflicting judicial rulings, a court of five judges was constituted for hearing the appeal. C

The charge arose out of a collision in Edgware Road, London, between a van driven by the appellant and a motor car coming towards him. It was alleged against the appellant that, when he was overtaking a trolley-bus at a time when it was unsafe to do so, he drove on the wrong side of the road in the face of approaching traffic. Evidence as to the appellant's condition and as to the drink which he had consumed was such as might have justified a charge under s. 6 of the Road Traffic Act, 1960, (1), although no such charge was in fact preferred. Objection to such evidence had been successfully taken before the committing justices, but notice of additional evidence had been duly served on the appellant's solicitors, and no question arose of their having been taken by surprise. At the trial, after hearing argument from both sides, the learned judge decided that the evidence was admissible in law and that in the exercise of his discretion he ought to admit it. D E

Before this court, counsel for the appellant contended in the first place that evidence as to drink taken by a person accused only of dangerous driving is inadmissible in law as being irrelevant. In his submission such evidence may explain why a person drove dangerously but is irrelevant to the preliminary question whether he did so in fact, which must be considered objectively and not subjectively in relation to the particular driver. F

This court does not propose in any way to qualify the principle, which must now be regarded as well established, that in cases of dangerous driving the proper G

---

* I.e., H.M. Advocate v. Tully, 1935 S.C. (J.) 8;
Procurator-Fiscal of Dundee v. Davidson, [1938] 54 Sh. Ct. Rep. 119;
R. v. Ward, [1954] Crim. L.R. 940;
Burrell v. Hunter, [1956] Sc. L.T. (Sh. Ct.) 75;
R. v. Fisher, [1960] Crim. L.R. 135;
R. v. Richardson, [1960] Crim. L.R. 135, before ELWES, J., at Leeds Assizes (summarised at p. 7, letters E and F, ante); H
R. v. Norrington, [1960] Crim. L.R. 432;
R. v. Spurge, [1961] 2 All E.R. 688;
In R. v. Fisher, supra, the commissioner (N. J. SKELHORN, Q.C.) at Leeds Assizes, where an accused was tried on a charge of causing death by dangerous driving, admitted evidence to the effect that the accused had spent practically the whole day—it being a bank holiday which extended the hours of opening—in various public houses and shortly before setting off on the journey in the course of which the offence was alleged to have been committed, a girl whom he had offered to take as a passenger in his car had refused because she thought he was drunk. The commissioner admitted the evidence because the accused's alleged condition was relevant to the particular facts that, when driving round a slight bend, the near side of the front wheel of the car driven by the accused hit against the kerb and the car then went at an angle up the road for about a hundred yards before colliding with a stationary vehicle on the accused's wrong side of the road. On those facts it appeared material to inquire why the accused's car had hit the kerb and why, having done so, it was not possible to control it for so long a distance. I

(1) The relevant part of s. 6 is set out in footnote†, p. 6, ante.

A test for the tribunal to apply is what is generally known as the objective test. Juries are frequently invited to consider the matter from the point of view of an imaginary person who could see what happened and thus make up his mind whether in all the circumstances the accused was driving dangerously. In the majority of cases no doubt this approach to the problem is both convenient and correct, but cases may arise in which a bystander, however observant, would B not be aware of all the circumstances relevant to the issue whether the accused was driving dangerously. For example, he would be unaware of the condition of the driver in regard to sleepiness or the effect of drink. Dangerous driving may occur without a collision or, indeed, without any indication from the speed or movement of the vehicle that the driving of it was in the circumstances dangerous: see Hill v. Baxter (2).

C In the opinion of this court, if a driver is adversely affected by drink, this fact is a circumstance relevant to the issue whether he was driving dangerously. Evidence to this effect is of probative value and is admissible in law. In the application of this principle two further points should be noticed. In the first place, the mere fact that the driver had had drink is not of itself relevant: in order D to render evidence as to the drink taken by the driver admissible, such evidence must tend to show that the amount of drink taken was such as would adversely affect a driver or, alternatively, that the driver was in fact adversely affected. Secondly, there remains in the court an overriding discretion to exclude such evidence if in the opinion of the court its prejudicial effect outweighs its probative value. It is impossible to lay down any general rule as to the way in which E this discretion should be exercised, as each case must be considered in the light of its own particular facts, but in the opinion of this court, if such evidence is to be introduced, it should at least appear of substantial weight. In the present case the evidence as to the appellant's condition in regard to drink was clearly of substantial weight and, in the opinion of this court, the learned judge rightly exercised his discretion in admitting it.

F It was also contended for the appellant that evidence as to drink taken by a driver could only be adduced by the prosecution by way of rebuttal of a defence suggesting that through no fault of his own the driver was not in control of the vehicle when it was said to have been driven dangerously. In support of this contention reference was made to Noor Mohamed v. R. (3), and Harris v. Public Prosecutions Director (4), but the problem considered in those cases was altogether G different from that involved in the present case. In those cases the question was whether evidence of similar events which occurred on other occasions was admissible in support of the main charge: in the present case the matters covered by the disputed evidence formed part of the story involved in the main charge itself. In the opinion of this court there is no foundation for the contention that the admissibility of this type of evidence is limited in the way suggested. H

In the course of the argument before this court a request was made by counsel for the prosecution that some guidance should be given on the question whether a charge under s. 6 of the Act of 1960 should be preferred in addition to a charge of dangerous driving, assuming that there is evidence to justify such additional charge. Without wishing to give any general direction this court is of the I following opinion: (a) an indictment containing a charge under s. 1 of the Act (causing death by dangerous driving) should not include a charge under s. 6. This view is in accordance with the practice under which an indictment charging manslaughter has not included a count alleging driving under the influence of drink; (b) a charge under s. 6 may properly be coupled with a charge of dangerous

(2) [1958] 1 All E.R. 193; [1958] 1 Q.B. 277.
(3) [1949] 1 All E.R. 365; [1949] A.C. 182.
(4) [1952] 1 All E.R. 1044; [1952] A.C. 694.

driving under s. 2 if the evidence regarding the influence of drink on the driver is such as to justify it. A

As was indicated at the conclusion of the argument, this appeal is dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Registrar, Court of Criminal Appeal (for the appellant); Solicitor, Metropolitan Police (for the Crown). B

[Reported by N. P. METCALFE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

EDWICK v. SUNBURY-ON-THAMES URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL AND ANOTHER. C

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION (Salmon, J.), June 26, 1961.]

Town and Country Planning—Permission for development—Notification of decision by local planning authority—Notice of refusal not given within time laid down in General Development Order—Mandatory requirement—Notice void—Enforcement notice given before application for development permission also invalidated—Town and Country Planning Act, 1947 (10 & 11 Geo. 6 c. 51), s. 23 (3)—Town and Country Planning General Development Order, 1950 (S.I. 1950 No. 728), art. 5 (8). D

Prior to Aug. 16, 1957, the plaintiff had been using land which he owned for the display and sale of motor cars without planning permission. On that date the local planning authority served an enforcement notice on the plaintiff requiring him to discontinue the user. On Sept. 10, 1957, the plaintiff applied for permission to continue the use of the land for the display and sale of motor cars* and, accordingly, under s. 23 (3) (a) of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, the enforcement notice became ineffective until the final determination of the application. The local planning authority took no steps regarding the plaintiff's application until, more than two years later, by notice dated Jan. 7, 1960, they purported to refuse the application. The plaintiff claimed that the notice of Jan. 7 was void as it was not given within the period allowed by art. 5 (8)† of the Town and Country Planning General Development Order, 1950, and that, accordingly, the enforcement notice was of no effect. E F G

Held: the words of art. 5 (8) of the General Development Order of 1950 were mandatory, not merely directory, and as the local planning authority had failed to notify the plaintiff of their decision within the period allowed by art. 5 (8), the notice of refusal dated Jan. 7, 1960, was void and, therefore, the enforcement notice was no longer valid. H

[For the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, s. 23 (3), see 25 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 525.

For the Town and Country Planning General Development Order, 1950, art. 5 (8), see 21 HALSBURY'S STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS (First Re-issue) 92.]

Case referred to:

East Riding County Council v. Park Estate (Bridlington), Ltd., [1956] 2 All E.R. 669; [1957] A.C. 223; 120 J.P. 380; [1956] 3 W.L.R. 312; 3rd Digest Supp. I

Action.

This was an action by Frederick Arthur Edwick claiming declarations and an

---

* By s. 18 (1) of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, an application to continue any use of land is an application for "permission to develop land" within s. 14 (3).

† The relevant terms of art. 5 (8) are set out at p. 12, letter B, post.

A injunction against the Sunbury-on-Thames Urban District Council and the Middlesex County Council. At all material times the plaintiff was the owner of land known as 383, Staines Road West, Ashford Common, in the urban district of Sunbury-on-Thames, in the county of Middlesex. The first defendants were Sunbury-on-Thames Urban District Council and the second defendants were Middlesex County Council who were the local planning authority. For some time B prior to Aug. 16, 1957, the plaintiff had been using the land for purposes for which planning permission had not been given, namely, for the display and sale of second-hand cars. On Aug. 16, 1957, the first defendants, on behalf of the second defendants, served an enforcement notice on the plaintiff to discontinue this user of the land. On Sept. 10, 1957, the plaintiff applied for planning permission to use the land for the display and sale of second-hand cars, but he heard nothing C further about the application until by notice dated Jan. 7, 1960, viz., more than two years after the application had been made, the first defendants, on behalf of the second defendants, purported to refuse the application. By para. 6 of the statement of claim the plaintiff contended that the notice of Jan. 7, 1960, was void and of no effect and that by virtue of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, the enforcement notice of Aug. 16, 1957, was also of no effect. Accordingly, D the plaintiff claimed in addition to an injunction restraining the defendants from doing any acts pursuant to the enforcement notice, declarations that the enforcement notice was of no effect and that the notice refusing permission was void and of no effect. By order dated Feb. 22, 1961, it was ordered that the point of law raised by the plaintiff in para. 6 of his statement of claim should be tried without further pleadings and set down for trial within seven days. The E relevant statutory provisions are set out in the judgment.

R. M. Bingham, Q.C., and G. B. H. Currie for the plaintiff.
J. R. Willis, Q.C., and G. J. Ponsonby for the defendants.

SALMON, J., stated the facts and continued: It is necessary to refer to certain sections of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, which is the Act F applicable to this case. Section 23 provides for the service of an enforcement notice. Section 23 (3) is as follows:

> "Subject to the provisions of the next following subsection, an enforcement notice shall take effect at the expiration of such period (not being less than twenty-eight days after the service thereof) as may be specified therein: Provided that—(a) if within the period aforesaid an application is made to G the local planning authority under this Part of this Act for permission for the retention on the land of any buildings or works, or for the continuance of any use of the land, to which the enforcement notice relates, the notice shall be of no effect pending the final determination of that application, and if such permission as aforesaid is granted on that application, the notice shall not take effect . . ."

H Section 14 (3), so far as it is material, provides as follows:

> "Provision may be made by a development order for regulating the manner in which applications for permission to develop land are to be dealt with by local planning authorities, and in particular . . . (d) for requiring the local planning authority to give to any applicant for permission, within I such time as may be prescribed by the order, such notice as may be so prescribed as to the manner in which his application has been dealt with . . ."

Section 18 (1) makes it plain that the words in s. 14 (3) "permission to develop land" include permission "for the continuance of any use of land instituted before" the date of the application. The material words of s. 18 (1) are as follows:

> "The power to grant permission to develop land under this Part of this Act shall include power to grant permission . . . for the continuance of any use of land instituted before [the date of the application] (whether without permission granted under this Part of this Act or in accordance with permission so granted for a limited period only) . . ." A

The development order which regulates the manner in which local planning authorities are to deal with applications for permission to develop land is the Town and Country Planning General Development Order, 1950 (S.I. 1950 No. 728). The relevant article is art. 5, paras. (8) and (9). They read as follows: B

" (8) The period within which the local planning authority shall give notice to an applicant of their decision or determination or of the reference of an application to the minister shall be the following period from the date of receipt of the application, namely . . . (b) in the case of an application for permission for development affecting trunk roads or for any approval in connexion therewith, three months, and (c) in any other case, two months, or such extended period as may at any time be agreed upon in writing between the applicant and the local planning authority." C

It is doubtful whether para. (8) (b) or (c) apply in this case, but it matters not, because the notification of the decision was made a great deal longer than three months after the application was made. Then art. 5 (9) reads: D

" Every such notice shall be in writing and (a) in the case of an application for planning permission or approval, where the local planning authority decide to grant such permission or approval subject to conditions or to refuse it, they shall state their reasons in writing, and send with the decision a notification in the terms (or substantially in the terms) set out in Part 2 of Sch. 2 hereto." E

Now art. 5, by the words which I have recited, appears to require that the application made by the owner of the land shall be dealt with within a certain period, and that the notification of the decision by the planning authority shall be in writing and shall state its reasons.

This case really turns on whether the words in art. 5, to which I have referred, are mandatory or directory only. This is a point of some general importance, and one which is quite free from authority. It is not a particularly easy point to decide. In my judgment, the language of art. 5, paras. (8) and (9), strongly suggests that the intention is that the words shall be mandatory rather than directory. Counsel for the defendants relies in his argument to the contrary particularly on the words " or such extended period as may at any time be agreed upon in writing between the applicant and the local planning authority ". He says that, assuming that this is a case to which para. 8 (c) applies, that is to say, a case in which the notification shall be within two months, the fact that that period may be extended " at any time " means that the parties may agree, whether within the two months or later than the two months, that the period shall be extended. Assuming, without deciding it, that he is right in that contention, it still seems to me not to be conclusive of the matter. If the words are mandatory, and the notice has to be given within the two months, there is no reason why provision should not be made that the applicant can, if he likes, where he has a right to have the notification within the two months, agree with the local planning authority thereafter that he will not insist on his rights but that the period may be extended. F G H

I am impressed by the argument put forward on behalf of the plaintiff, that, unless those words are mandatory, it would mean that the local planning authority could delay for as long as they liked, and in five, or it may be ten, years after the land had been continued to be used in the way which it was used before the service of the enforcement notice, the local planning authority could suddenly publish their decision and enforce an enforcement notice, which, in fact, had been a dead letter for some five or ten years. It is said that it is unlikely that any local planning authority would behave so unreasonably, and that may well be so. I

A But I have to consider whether, when Parliament and the minister were considering this matter, it was intended to give any local planning authority such exceptional latitude. It seems to me that the scheme of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, and of the Town and Country Planning General Development Order, 1950, is to lay down, as is stated in s. 14 (3) of the Act, the manner in which these applications are to be dealt with. They are to be dealt with expeditiously, B that is within thirty months or three months or two months, according to whether they come within the provisions of art. 5 (8), paras. (a), (b) or (c). They are to be dealt with in writing, and reasons are to be given. I cannot, for my part, believe that any such language as is used in the General Development Order of 1950 is directory only. In my judgment, it is mandatory.

I have been referred to a passage in the speech of VISCOUNT SIMONDS in East C Riding County Council v. Park Estate (Bridlington), Ltd. (1), where he said:

> "It was in the first place contended that the Act of 1947 was highly technical and, as it encroached on private rights, the court must insist on strict and rigid adherence to formalities. This, as a general proposition, commands assent and not the less because disregard of an enforcement notice is an offence involving sufficiently serious penal consequences."

D I do not think it inconsonant with the general scheme of the Act and the order that there should be laid down, as in my view there are, stringent terms on which a local planning authority is to deal with applications made to it.

Counsel for the defendants has argued that, even if a local planning authority were to be dilatory and fail, without any good reason, to deal with an application, and fail to obtain the consent of the applicant to a delay, yet the applicant E would suffer no inconvenience by reason of the provisions of s. 16 of the Act of 1947. I do not think that I need read s. 16 of the Act. It seems to me that this provides, amongst other things, that, if the local planning authority failed to deal with an application within the time specified in the order, that is to say, within two months in this case, or three months, as the case may be, then, within twenty-eight days of the expiration of the period within which the application F should have been dealt with, the applicant has a right to go to the minister (2). The applicant can treat the failure of the local planning authority to deal with his application as a refusal, and appeal to the minister, but he has to do that within twenty-eight days. Section 16 confers on the applicant a certain right which he can exercise if he desires to do so. There are a number of cases of which one can think where it would be in his interest to exercise that right; for example, G if he had not done anything with his land, and the application to the local planning authority was for permission to do something, and it would not be wise to start doing it until he had received permission, he no doubt would invoke the provisions of s. 16 so as to reach a decision; or he might extend the time of the local planning authority. But in a case such as the present, where the applicant has been using his land, and, according to the provision of the Act (3), a H failure by the local planning authority to deal with his application to continue using the land as it had been used in the past makes the enforcement notice which has been served ineffective, I cannot conceive why an applicant should wish to invoke s. 16. Moreover, as I say, it might be that the applicant would say at the end of the two months' period "Well, I am prepared to wait. I shall no doubt be hearing from the ministry". Then twenty-eight days would go by, and I perhaps a further few weeks, and he would write and nothing would happen. He would then have lost his rights (4) under s. 16, and, because of the dilatoriness—

(1) [1956] 2 All E.R. at p. 672; [1957] A.C. at p. 233.

(2) Section 16 (1) of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, provides: "Where application is made under [Part III of the Act of 1947] to a local planning authority for permission to develop land . . . and that permission . . . is refused by that authority . . . then if the applicant is aggrieved by their decision he may by notice served within the time, not being less than twenty-eight days from the receipt of notification of their decision . . . appeal to the minister." (3) See s. 23 (3) (a) of the Act of 1947.

(4) See art. 11 (1) (a) of the Order of 1950.

I am not saying that in this case there was any dilatoriness, I am considering the construction of the section and the order, which have general application—in the case to which I have referred he would have lost his rights for ever.

I do not think that to construe those words of the order as being mandatory is any great hardship to the local planning authority. Another enforcement notice could always be served, and it does, to my mind, protect a land owner from what would be, or might be, a grave injustice in some cases; that is to say, that nothing would happen for two months, and longer, and the applicant would assume perhaps, as I think he is entitled to under the statute, that the enforcement notice was of no effect. He would look at the order and would see that the local planning authority cannot apparently, according to the words of the order, deal with the application unless it deals with it within the time prescribed, and he would order his affairs accordingly. Then, at the end of a very long period, he might find that he was in contravention of the enforcement notice.

For those reasons I have come to the conclusion that the words in the General Development Order, 1950, are mandatory. It does not, of course, follow from what I have been saying that all the provisions in art. 5 are mandatory. It may be that some of the provisions in other paragraphs of art. 5 are directory. One would have to look at each paragraph by itself and the language used in order to decide whether the words were mandatory or directory only.

In my judgment, for the reasons which I have indicated, the language in para. (8) of art. 5 is mandatory, and I accordingly decide that the notice of Jan. 7, 1960, is void, and accordingly the enforcement notice is void also.

Declarations accordingly.

Solicitors: I. A. Landy, Laufer & Co. (for the plaintiff); Kenneth Goodacre (for the defendants).

[Reported by WENDY SHOCKETT, Barrister-at-Law.]

WALKER v. WALKER.

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Lord Merriman, P., and Lloyd-Jones, J.), June 5, 6, 1961.]

Magistrates — Husband and wife — Cruelty — Persistent cruelty — Reasonable belief in husband's adultery deliberately induced in wife's mind by husband— Injury to wife's health.

A husband who carries on deliberately such a course of conduct as induces in his wife a reasonable belief that he is carrying on an adulterous association and thereby causes injury to her health, is guilty of persistent cruelty towards her.

The husband was known to be associating with a widow who lived in the house next door (which he owned) and he deliberately induced in his wife the belief that he was committing adultery with this widow. The wife was unable to prove that adultery had been committed. Nevertheless the husband's conduct caused injury to the wife's mental health. Although the wife occupied a separate bedroom from the husband, she had not set up a separate household so as to found a charge of constructive desertion against him. On appeal against a separation order made by a magistrates' court on the ground that the husband had been guilty of persistent cruelty,

Held: the separation order was rightly made since the husband's conduct amounted to persistent cruelty.

Baker v. Baker ([1953] 2 All E.R. 1199) applied.

Appeal dismissed.

[As to a reasonable belief in adultery constituting constructive desertion, see

A 12 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 247, para. 461, note (b); and as to the relationship of cruelty to desertion as regards matrimonial causes, see ibid., pp. 249, 250, para. 464.

As to cruelty as a matrimonial offence, see 12 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 269, 270, paras. 514-516; and as to persistent cruelty for the purposes of the summary matrimonial jurisdiction, see ibid., pp. 481, 482, para. 1076; and for B cases on the subject, see 27 DIGEST (Repl.) 351, 2906 and Supplements.]

Cases referred to:

Allen v. Allen, [1951] 1 All E.R. 724; 115 J.P. 229; 27 Digest (Repl.) 84, 633.

Baker v. Baker, [1953] 2 All E.R. 1199; [1954] P. 33; 117 J.P. 556; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 857; 3rd Digest Supp.

C Everitt v. Everitt, [1949] 1 All E.R. 908; [1949] P. 374; 113 J.P. 279; 27 Digest (Repl.) 348, 2881.

Glenister v. Glenister, [1945] 1 All E.R. 513; [1945] P. 30; 114 L.J.P. 69; 172 L.T. 250; 109 J.P. 194; 27 Digest (Repl.) 367, 3040.

Hopes v. Hopes, [1948] 2 All E.R. 920; [1949] P. 227; [1949] L.J.R. 104; 113 J.P. 10; 27 Digest (Repl.) 340, 2818.

D West v. West, [1954] 2 All E.R. 505; [1954] P. 444; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 163; 3rd Digest Supp.

Appeal.

The husband appealed against a separation order made by the Rugeley justices on Mar. 8, 1961, on the wife's application under the Matrimonial Proceedings (Magistrates' Courts) Act, 1960, and on her complaints that the husband E had been guilty of persistent cruelty towards her, that he had committed adultery, that he had deserted her, and that he had been guilty of wilful neglect to provide reasonable maintenance for her. The justices found that the husband had been guilty of persistent cruelty but dismissed the other complaints; and they made a separation order in the wife's favour and ordered the husband to pay her maintenance at the rate of £5 a week.

F The husband now appealed against the finding of persistent cruelty.

R. I. Gray for the husband.

F. P. Shier for the wife.

LORD MERRIMAN, P.: The sole question is whether the finding of persistent cruelty is justified. Before I discuss the interesting question whether G it is or is not justified I must deal shortly with the other issues. Wilful neglect disappeared very early in the hearing when it was made apparent that the husband was providing a regular sum of money for the wife. I need say no more about that. Desertion, which was alleged to be of a constructive character, can, as is not really disputed, subsist with persistent cruelty. Indeed, it is a commonplace to say that very often the facts of the case are such that either a finding of constructive H desertion or a finding of cruelty would be equally appropriate, but that is not so in this case for one simple reason.

I do not propose to go through all the details of the matter but suffice it to say that although the parties were living in a state of considerable unease, to put it mildly, at the time that the wife's complaint was made in February, 1961, and were still living in that state of unease at the time of the hearing on Mar. 8, I there was no evidence which would satisfy, in my opinion, the test in Hopes v. Hopes (1) that they were living as two separate households, though under the same roof. As far as I can judge, it was not seriously attempted to prove that they were and if it had been, the answer, I think, would have been simple. It was common ground that in substance up to the date of her various complaints in February, the wife was still so far keeping one household with her husband that, although sexual intercourse had ceased, and they were no longer sleeping in the same bedroom, she was, in fact, cooking his meals. That, I think, on the authorities would itself have been sufficient to dispose of the charge of desertion because on those facts it would not be right to hold that there was that necessary ingredient in any charge of desertion, constructive or otherwise, namely, a state of de facto separation.

(1) [1948] 2 All E.R. 920; [1949] P. 227.

There remains then only the charge of adultery. On that the magistrates said that, having regard to the heavy burden of proof in cases of adultery, they did not think that the wife could succeed on this charge.

That brings me to what is the real point in the present case. I am paraphrasing the magistrates' findings because this aspect of the case was not disputed in the course of the very clear argument which counsel for the husband has addressed to us. In substance they said that while they were not able to find that adultery had been proved, they were plainly of opinion that the husband had so conducted himself as to induce the belief, reasonable in the wife's mind, that he had been and was committing adultery with a woman who was living in the next-door house, a house which happened to be owned by the husband as was the matrimonial home itself. Moreover, having said that they did not think that the wife could succeed on the charge of adultery, they said:

> "We can well understand her suspicion and resentment, inflamed as it must be in a small well-knit community by local gossip" and they said that although they had not the benefit of medical evidence

> "it was obvious that the wife was in a highly overwrought nervous state and although this may be partly explained by her age, we have no doubt that it has been largely caused by her husband's persistent course of conduct and we are quite satisfied that the husband knew that his conduct was causing his wife distress and pain and that if he persisted in his course of conduct her mental and physical health would suffer and the marriage would break up. For these reasons we are satisfied that the husband has treated his wife with persistent cruelty and shall make an order accordingly."

This raises then in plain form the question, not without importance, whether the deliberate inducement by the husband of the belief that he is carrying on an adulterous association with the woman next door can in law amount to persistent cruelty, providing, of course, that in addition to that particular form of ill-treatment there is added the element of danger to health—mental health in this case, as is found, or at least a reasonable apprehension of such a danger.

I think that this point, in final analysis, is a very simple one and can be dealt with quite shortly. The principle laid down in Glenister v. Glenister (2) about the legal effect of the inducing of the belief in the adultery of one spouse in the mind of the other spouse by the conduct of the wrong-doing spouse, has been accepted in the Court of Appeal in at least three cases; namely in Everitt v. Everitt (3), in Allen v. Allen (4) and, finally, to mention only one other, in West v. West (5). The principle is perfectly well established but, hitherto, I think it is fair to say that up to a certain point it has always been used as a shield against, to quote one simple example, a charge of desertion. It has been applied, however, as the law has developed, to resist a charge of wilful neglect to maintain for the same reasons as it was applied to desertion. Finally there is the decision in Baker v. Baker (6). In that case it was held by this court, myself and PEARCE, J., that if a husband deliberately induces in his wife (7)

> ". . . the belief that he is carrying on an adulterous association, and, in consequence, his wife leaves the matrimonial home, he can be held to have

(2) [1945] 1 All E.R. 513; [1945] P. 30.
(3) [1949] 1 All E.R. 908; [1949] P. 374.
(4) [1951] 1 All E.R. 724.
(5) [1954] 2 All E.R. 505; [1954] P. 444.
(6) [1953] 2 All E.R. 1199; [1954] P. 33.
(7) [1953] 2 All E.R. at p. 1200; [1954] P. at p. 36.

A expelled her, and, therefore, to have deserted her, even though she fails to bring a charge, or to prove the fact, of adultery."

If that is true of constructive desertion, I am unable to understand why it should not be equally true, on the same facts, of persistent cruelty. If the ill-treatment consisting of deliberately inducing belief in an adulterous association is, in B appropriate circumstances, held sufficient to justify the allegation that the wife has positively been expelled from the home, I can see no reason why the same conduct should not also be held to constitute the offence of persistent cruelty. It is a commonplace, of course, to say that persistent cruelty and constructive desertion frequently depend on the same set of facts. They are not necessarily the same thing and, as I have already pointed out, in the present case they C cannot be the same thing because the facts here lack the necessary element of separation of the spouses which would be necessary in order to justify a finding of constructive desertion.

I could cite other passages in the magistrates' very clearly reasoned statement of their findings which would dot the " i's " and cross the " t's "; for example, I have not the slightest doubt in my own mind that this is a case in which the D husband has deliberately gone out of his way to try to persuade his wife that the association was adulterous. (I am assuming for the moment in his favour that there never has been adultery, in fact, and am accepting the magistrates' finding that adultery is not proved to their satisfaction.) That, to my mind, is as clear as anything could possibly be. I will only give one instance of it. I bear in mind that this was a happy couple until this association began some time in E 1959. There came a time in August, 1960, when this association was going on and was being flaunted by the husband in the face of the wife, causing her, as I am satisfied that it did, very great distress, and the husband went away for two days. The wife said that, on Aug. 19, 1960, she went away and returned on Aug. 21 and that when she came back she told him, on Aug. 22, that the gossip was that he had been away with this woman on Aug. 20. Then, if any time, was F the time to say that it was utterly untrue, he had been to Aston Villa and then on to Walsall for another purpose and that he had never had the woman with him at all; that it was a complete myth. He said that before the magistrates, who did not believe him, but to the wife he said in effect " Nothing will induce me to my dying day to tell you where we went ". I emphasise the word " we ". Nothing could be more conclusive of a deliberate intention to distress the wife G by pretending or asserting, albeit asserting falsely, if it were false, that he had taken this woman away for an adulterous week-end. In my opinion, if that incident stood alone it would be sufficient. But it plainly does not stand alone because there is this constant flaunting of the association with this woman in the wife's face. The wife or the son, in spite of the denial of the husband and the woman named, on two occasions caught them in compromising circumstances H and the whole thing was being conducted, in my opinion, in a way most calculated to injure the wife's feelings and ultimately her health. This was a wife, I repeat, with whom until 1959, at any rate, there had been complete happiness and the raising of a family of two sons, both of whom were by this time grown up.

It has been argued that adultery itself, let alone a reasonable belief in adultery, cannot amount to persistent cruelty unless, it is said, there is some substantial I degree of misconduct on top of, or outside, the actual impropriety of the association. Those are very fine resounding words but, in my opinion, they fit the present case exactly because when an association with the woman who lives in the next house, which is owned by the husband, is being carried on and flaunted in the face of the wife, and with the deliberate pretence, at any rate, that he has taken the woman away for a particular week-end and so forth, I should say that that is undoubtedly a substantial degree of misconduct on top of the impropriety of the association itself. In other words, I think that there is ample evidence of ill-treatment—grave conjugal unkindness—in connexion with this association which, coupled with the undoubted results on the wife's mental health as found by the magistrates, satisfies the legal description of cruelty, and of persistent cruelty in the present case, which necessitates proof not only of the ill-treatment but of the resulting injury, actual or apprehended.

In my opinion, in the final analysis, this is a perfectly plain case of persistent cruelty. I think that the magistrates were entirely right and that this appeal should fail.

LLOYD-JONES, J.: I agree so entirely with what LORD MERRIMAN, P., has said that I have grave doubts whether I should, or need, add anything at all. But the point is one of interest and perhaps I ought just to add a few words to associate myself, positively rather than formally, with my Lord's judgment.

Counsel for the husband conceded that if the wife had seen fit to separate from her husband because of his conduct, as I think he agreed that she was entitled to do by reason of that conduct, she would have been able to establish a case of constructive desertion. As LORD MERRIMAN, P., has pointed out, it was not competent to her on the given facts of the present case to rely on that ground and the question, therefore, does resolve itself into whether or not the conduct of which the husband was guilty in the present case, and which would have amounted to constructive desertion in a different set of circumstances, also amounts to cruelty.

I agree entirely that his conduct on the evidence falls absolutely within the language used by LORD MERRIMAN, P., in Baker v. Baker (8). In the present case, the husband, as far back as October, 1959, had made it plain to his wife and, indeed, to his two grown-up sons, that the widow neighbour, to whom he had already paid some attention, had come to occupy a very important part in his life. When there was a question of going for a holiday to Blackpool in 1959 he, on learning that the neighbour was not going, refused to consider going himself. He said that he would not go and when he was prevailed on ultimately by his wife and by his sons to go, he behaved in a fashion which is only consistent with that of a man whose affections were deeply engaged in respect of this woman next door, because, according to the wife, and it was not in issue, he said that he wished he was dead and cried. That was the outcome of an attempt to persuade him that he ought to go to Blackpool with his wife whether the neighbour was ready to go or not. Then at later stages thereafter until December, 1960, there were instances when he was seen going next door, and that is not in question. The justices found that he frequently went next door, although he himself sought to say that he went some half-dozen times only, but he was plainly not believed. Not only did he go next door but he was seen in compromising circumstances. It was admitted that he had kissed this woman; his own son saw him do so and his wife saw him do so, and his wife saw him with this woman on his knee on one occasion.

LORD MERRIMAN, P., has already referred to the incident in 1960 when the wife was away for some days and on her return, far from giving her any reassurance that local gossip had no foundation to it, the husband quite deliberately engendered in her mind the belief that he had been away with the woman next door. That led to the fact that the wife felt that she could no longer share his bed with him and she went to another bed and another room. The husband, far from trying to remedy that state of affairs, maintained for a period of many months an obdurate and sulky silence, not only in relation to his wife but plainly also in relation to both his sons, and nothing could apparently induce him in any way to allay his wife's fears and suspicions. In my judgment, it is clear that she was the sort of woman who would have welcomed any kind of comfort that he could have given her and he gave her none. So matters went on until she was driven into an excessive course of conduct which against the background

(8) [1953] 2 All E.R. at p. 1200; [1954] P. at p. 36.

A of her marriage, which had been admittedly happy up until October, 1959, or thereabouts, would have been until then unthinkable in her relations with her husband. Her own admission is that she was driven to striking him, not only with a blow of the hand but also with some coat-hangers. She also admitted that she had on one occasion threatened in her distraction to kill him. The husband went so far as to say that she, in fact, actually threatened him with a B knife, although that was not accepted, but it all points to the fact of a very distracted woman and, in my judgment, she was driven into that state of distraction by her husband's positive conduct, for I am unable to accept the idea that going next door over and over again was purely negative in character. When the wife knew and made known her feelings about his visits next door it is, in my view, quite erroneous to describe his visits next door as merely C negative conduct. Then she was driven into an attack on the woman next door which led to that woman's departure to some other part of the village.

It has been argued by counsel for the husband that, whatever the position may have been with the woman next door up to Christmas time when she left, though he does not concede that there had been any conduct that could be cruelty even up to that point, that for about six weeks to two months afterwards D the wife is unable to establish that there had been any continued association between the husband and the woman next door. I tried to point out in the course of the argument, and I would like to repeat, that in my view as the husband admittedly did nothing to reassure her, or to allay her suspicions during that six weeks or two months, that, in one sense, might have been more difficult to bear because the wife was no longer in a position even to observe whether E or not he was going to the woman next door for she was no longer there but somewhere else. She had not the slightest encouragement from the husband positively to believe that the association had been discontinued and, indeed, actually at the hearing the husband said two things that indicated that he would not, even if he had not been seeing this woman, have given her any assurance of any kind but would still have tormented his wife with the possibility F that at any time he would associate again or continue to associate with this woman. The first piece of evidence is, as it reads in my note of the evidence: "I told wife that I am not keeping away from [the widow] for her" and the other is, as I think, presumably in answer to some question or suggestion from the justices: "I will not give any promise after the way she has treated me", and that means: "I will not give any promise not to see this other woman".

G In those circumstances I think that there was a course of conduct which amounted to cruelty, up to the time when the woman next door left. I see no reason to deny the wife her remedy in this case because she was not in a position in the last six weeks before she brought her summons to establish that she had seen them, in fact, associating together. In my judgment it makes no difference and, indeed, it is as I suggested, although I only throw it out as a suggestion, H possible that these six weeks might have been in one sense even more difficult to bear because of the unallayed suspicion which remained naturally in her mind. I agree with LORD MERRIMAN, P., that this appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Field, Roscoe & Co., agents for Gardner, Railton & Co., Rugeley (for the husband); Gregory, Rowcliffe & Co., agents for Pickering & Pickering, Stafford (for the wife).

[Reported by A. T. HOOLAHAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

L. v. L.

A

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Marshall, J.), June 27, 1961.]

Divorce—Maintenance—Wife—Dismissal in 1958 by consent of wife's claims for maintenance and secured provision contained in petition—Lump sum accepted by wife in full satisfaction of all present and future rights to maintenance for herself—Subsequent application by wife in 1961 for maintenance and secured provision—Leave required to make application—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (14 Geo. 6 c. 25), s. 19 (2), (3) (as amended) —Matrimonial Causes (Property and Maintenance) Act, 1958 (6 & 7 Eliz. 2 c. 35), s. 1 (1)—Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1957 (S.I. 1957 No. 619), r. 3 (3), proviso (ii).

B

C

The parties were married in 1930 and in 1938 the husband left the wife. In 1953, the husband entered into a deed of covenant to pay maintenance to the wife during their joint lives or for a period of seven years, whichever should be the shorter period. In March, 1955, the wife filed a petition for divorce in which she prayed for maintenance and a secured provision. The wife was granted a decree which was made absolute in June, 1955, but no order for maintenance was made in her favour. In 1958 the husband and wife agreed to commute the payments under the deed by a lump sum payment of £660 (being the amount payable for the remaining portion of the seven-year term) on condition that the deed be cancelled and that the wife's prayer for maintenance contained in her petition be dismissed. The husband accordingly paid £660 and on Feb. 13, 1958, an order was made by consent dismissing the wife's application for maintenance and secured provision as contained in her petition, she "having accepted the said sum in full satisfaction of all present and future rights to maintenance for herself." At that date, the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950, s. 19 (2) and (3), provided that an order for maintenance and secured provision could be made "on" the making of a decree but after Jan. 1, 1959, the Matrimonial Causes (Property and Maintenance) Act, 1958, s. 1 (1), gave the court power to make such orders at any time after the making of a decree. In March, 1961, the wife applied for maintenance and a secured provision.

D

E

F

Held: by virtue of s. 1 (1) of the Act of 1958, the wife was no longer precluded from applying for maintenance and a secured provision, but since the prayer in her petition had been dismissed by the order of Feb. 13, 1958, she required the leave of a judge pursuant to the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1957, r. 3 (3), proviso (ii), to make the present application; that leave would be given and the matter would be referred to the registrar on the question whether any, and if so what, order should be made in the wife's favour.

G

Mills v. Mills ([1940] 2 All E.R. 254) not followed in view of Matrimonial Causes (Property and Maintenance) Act, 1958, s. 1.

Pachner v. Parker (formerly Pachner) ([1960] 1 All E.R. 159) applied.

H

[Editorial Note. The Matrimonial Causes (Property and Maintenance) Act, 1958, was brought into operation on Jan. 1, 1959, by the Matrimonial Causes (Property and Maintenance) Act (Commencement) Order, 1958 (S.I. 1958 No. 2080).

As to the effect of a previous consent order on an application for maintenance, see 12 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 439, para. 985, note (g); and for a case on the subject, see 27 DIGEST (Repl.) 615, 5759.

I

For the Matrimonial Causes (Property and Maintenance) Act, 1958, s. 1 (1), see 38 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 441.

For the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950, s. 19, see 29 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 407.

For the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1957, r. 3 (3), see 10 HALSBURY'S STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS (First Re-issue) 218.]

A Cases referred to:

Mills v. Mills, [1940] 2 All E.R. 254; [1940] P. 124; 109 L.J.P. 86; 163 L.T. 272; 27 Digest (Repl.) 615, 5759.

Pachner v. Parker (formerly Pachner), [1960] 1 All E.R. 159; [1960] 1 W.L.R. 486.

Adjourned Summons.

B The wife issued a summons applying for maintenance and a secured provision. On Mar. 29, 1961, the application came before Mr. Registrar KINSLEY, who referred the matter to the judge. The facts appear in the judgment.

J. B. Mortimer for the wife.

A. C. H. de Piro for the husband.

C Cur. adv. vult.

June 27. MARSHALL, J., read the following judgment: The parties were married on July 23, 1930, and there is one child now twenty-five years of age. They lived together until 1938 when the husband left, never to return to the wife. On Oct. 31, 1953, the husband entered into a deed of covenant to pay to the wife during their joint lives or for a period of seven years (whichever should be D the shorter period) on the first of each month £40 for the first twelve months and thereafter £20 per month. On Mar. 4, 1955, the wife filed a petition for divorce on the ground of her husband's desertion in the prayer of which she asked, inter alia, for maintenance and for a secured provision. On May 13, 1955, a decree nisi was granted which was made absolute on June 27, 1955. It will be seen that at this time the deed of covenant was still current and no order E was made as to maintenance or secured provision.

From the correspondence exhibited to an affidavit dated Mar. 28, 1961, sworn by the husband's solicitors, it is clear that by the end of 1957 the wife, who was in some financial difficulties, was desirous of leaving England for good, and was asking that she be paid the amount that would fall due under the deed of covenant if it ran the full period of seven years. The husband was only prepared to do F this on certain conditions, to which the wife ultimately agreed in letters passing between solicitors dated Feb. 3, 1958, and Feb. 7, 1958. Although the wife contends that she did not fully understand the implications of the agreement, having read the correspondence, I am satisfied that she was independently advised by a solicitor at the time and that the terms of the agreement having been explained to her she readily consented to be bound by them. Her main G wish at that time was to secure a substantial sum of money wherewith to meet some (if not all) of her financial obligations in this country and to pay for her passage to Israel in which country she hoped permanently to settle.

By this agreement the husband agreed to commute the payments under the deed of covenant by a lump-sum payment of £660 (the amount due under the unexpired portion of the deed of covenant) on the following conditions: H (i) That the deed of covenant be cancelled. (ii) That the wife's application for maintenance contained in her petition dated Mar. 4, 1955, be dismissed on receipt of the sum of £660. (iii) That the wife should make no further attempt to get in touch with the husband after the completion of the transaction. (iv) That the wife should make no attempt to find out the husband's whereabouts through his then solicitor. On Feb. 15, 1958, the wife, in the presence of her I solicitor, signed (i) a deed of revocation of the deed dated Oct. 31, 1953; (ii) a written undertaking to comply with conditions (iii) and (iv) of the agreement.

The sum of £660 having been paid to the wife a summons in agreed terms was issued and came before Mr. Registrar KINSLEY on Feb. 13, 1958, who by consent made the following order:

> "The [husband] having paid to the [wife] the sum of £660 and the [wife] having accepted the said sum in full satisfaction of all present and future rights to maintenance for herself, it is ordered that the [wife's] application for maintenance and secured provision as contained in the prayer of the petition herein be and the same is hereby dismissed. [Wife's] costs."

I have seen the file of the original proceedings and have seen the consent summons dated Feb. 10, 1958. It was taken out by the husband's solicitors and a consent to an order in its terms was signed by the wife's solicitors.

The terms of the summons make it clear that the sum of £660 had been accepted " in full satisfaction " of all present and future rights to maintenance for herself. Although I am far from satisfied that the terms of the agreement which I have already set out made clear that the sum of £660 was anything more than a commuting of the payments due for the unexpired portion of the seven-year period covered by the then current deed of covenant, the consent by the wife's solicitors to an order, in the terms of the summons, which clearly provides for the " satisfaction of all present and future rights to maintenance for herself " must now be taken to have been consented to by the wife.

From the indorsement on the summons it is clear that only the husband's solicitors appeared before the registrar. On the summons thus consented to on the wife's behalf the registrar was clearly justified in making the order that he did. I am not satisfied that the full terms of the original agreement contained in the correspondence were ever called to his attention and it appears reasonably clear that his order was based solely on the terms set out in the consent summons. Whilst this is an unfortunate aspect of the case, I am satisfied that the solicitors acting for each party believed that the order thus obtained from the learned registrar fell within the decision in Mills v. Mills (1) and on the law as it then stood it was intended by them that the order should put an end to any right to future maintenance for the wife.

There never had been any order of the court for maintenance, and the fact that the wife's application for maintenance, contained in her petition, was dismissed, in my judgment brought to the husband the same protection against future claims for maintenance by the wife, which the decision in Mills v. Mills (1) gave to the husband in that case. As the wife could only thereafter proceed by way of a new application, the court's jurisdiction, which permitted only the making of an order for maintenance " on any decree for divorce ", could not be exercised in her favour. Counsel for the wife, no longer relying on the Maintenance Agreements Act, 1957, has argued that having regard to the terms of s. 1 of the Matrimonial Causes (Property and Maintenance) Act, 1958, the decision in Mills v. Mills (1) no longer prevents the wife, who is now back in this country, and in receipt of national assistance, from bringing proceedings for maintenance. Section 1 (1) reads as follows:

> " Any power of the court, under the enactments mentioned in the next following subsection, to make an order on a decree for divorce, nullity of marriage or judicial separation shall (subject as mentioned in sub-s. (3) of this section) be exercisable either on pronouncing such a decree or at any time thereafter."

The words " at any time thereafter " are important. Section 1 (2) reads:

> " The said enactments are the following provisions of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (in this Act referred to as ' the Act of 1950 '), that is to say, —(a) sub-ss. (2) and (3) of s. 19 (whereby, on a decree for divorce or nullity of marriage, the court may order the husband to make a secured provision for the wife or to pay her a monthly or weekly sum), and those subsections as extended by sub-s. (4) of that section (whereby the like provision or payments may be ordered for a husband where a petition for divorce is presented by his wife on the ground of his insanity) . . ."

The only other relevant subsection to which I need refer is sub-s. (3) (a), which

(1) [1940] 2 All E.R. 254; [1940] P. 124.

A is as follows:

> " any reference in sub-s. (1) of this section to a decree shall be construed as a reference to a decree nisi, and the reference to any time after a decree shall be construed as a reference to any such time whether before or after the decree has been made absolute."

B By these provisions the power of the court to make an order for maintenance under s. 19 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950, is no longer confined to the period " on " making a decree. It is now exercisable " at any time thereafter."

In the circumstances the law on which the decision in Mills v. Mills (2) was based no longer stands and I have come to the conclusion that counsel for the wife is right and that the wife is no longer precluded by that decision from C bringing a claim for maintenance. Indeed, I am satisfied that the policy of the Matrimonial Causes (Property and Maintenance) Act, 1958, was intended to cover just this type of case and having regard to the differences which I have already pointed out, between the agreement between the wife and the husband, as set out in the exhibited correspondence, and the summons on which by consent the order of Mr. Registrar KINSLEY dated Feb. 13, 1958, was based, I am all D the more happy that the law now permits a new inquiry on the question of maintenance taking into account past agreements and the conduct of both parties.

Since there is now no application for maintenance in the petition, it having been dismissed by the order of Feb. 13, 1958, and as any new application by the wife on the authority of Pachner v. Parker (formerly Pachner) (3) must be made E in accordance with the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1957, as amended, I think that it is necessary for the wife to obtain under r. 3 (3) the leave of a judge to file a new claim for maintenance. This leave I give. The case will be returned to the registrar to consider, in the light of the facts, what order, if any, should be made in respect of the wife's maintenance. The costs of the hearing before the registrar on Mar. 29, 1961, and before me to be the wife's.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Benson, Mazure & Co. (for the wife); Gamlen, Bowerman & Forward (for the husband).

[Reported by A. T. HOOLAHAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

---

(2) [1940] 2 All E.R. 254; [1940] P. 124.

(3) [1960] 1 All E.R. 159.

DANIELS v. JONES.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Holroyd Pearce, Willmer and Pearson, L.JJ.), June 14, 15, 16, 19, 1961.]

Fatal Accident—Damages—Assessment—Factors—Computation of pecuniary loss a jury question—Arithmetical calculation as check by comparison—Assessment of benefits accruing from deceased's death—Fatal Accidents Act, 1846 (9 & 10 Vict. c. 93), s. 2.

In the assessment of damages under the Fatal Accidents Act, 1846, s. 2, the court necessarily undertakes arithmetical calculations, and various methods of reaching a correct estimate may be adopted. But such calculations do not provide a substitute for common sense and an arithmetical calculation which shows that a well-knit family lost nothing by the death of the father, who was the breadwinner earning a high income and who himself lived frugally while providing generously for his family, must be rejected as repugnant to common sense.

The assessment of damages under the Fatal Accidents Act, 1846, including assessment of dependency, benefit to the widow from the deceased's estate, and estimate of the deceased's future income after tax paid, considered.

Appeal dismissed.

[As to basis of assessment of damages under the Fatal Accidents Acts, see 28 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 100, para. 110; and for cases on the subject, see 36 DIGEST (Repl.) 221-224, 1176-1194.

For the Fatal Accidents Act, 1846, s. 2, see 17 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 5.]

Appeal.

This was an appeal by the defendant from a judgment of WINN, J., given on July 13, 1960, at a trial of an action without a jury awarding the plaintiff the sum of £14,890 2s. damages and dismissing the counterclaim. The plaintiff, the widow and executrix of Joseph Lionel Daniels, deceased, brought the action under the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934, and the Fatal Accidents Acts, 1846 to 1908, on behalf of the estate of the deceased, and on behalf of herself and the children of the marriage. The deceased was killed in a collision of his Jaguar motor car with another Jaguar motor car coming from the opposite direction; the collision was alleged to be due to the negligence of the defendant. In his defence and counterclaim the defendant, who was himself injured in the collision, alleged that the accident was due solely to the negligence of the deceased, alternatively that the deceased contributed to it by his negligence and counterclaimed damages. The defendant now appealed to the Court of Appeal on the question of liability and of quantum. The case is not reported on the question of liability.

Stephen Chapman, Q.C., and M. D. Van Oss for the defendant.
John Thompson, Q.C., and R. C. Hutton for the plaintiff.

June 19. The following judgments were read.

HOLROYD PEARCE, L.J.: The second question in this appeal is whether the learned judge was right in his assessment of the amount of damages under the Fatal Accidents Acts, 1846 to 1908. The defendant argues that he has awarded too large a sum of damages, since his assessment of the dependency was too high and that of the widow's inheritance too low.

The widow was fifty-four at the time of the death of her husband. The deceased was fifty years eleven months old. He was the chairman and managing director of a private company, T. H. & J. Daniels, Ltd., with subsidiary companies. The company was formed in 1904. It carried on business as hydraulic engineers and had interests in other fields of engineering. The judge described it thus:

A "The parent company was concerned with engineering and, more particularly, hydraulic engineering, and, as a speciality, the manufacture of hydraulically operated machinery for use in manufacturing articles, but there were steam plant interests and other interests. It was a very well-spread, diversified and varied industry; . . . I have had the advantage of seeing five sets of accounts of the company. I do not think it is necessary B to go into any detail about the contents and effect of those accounts; it will suffice, I feel, for me to say that the general impression, a clear impression free from doubt, on my mind is that year by year the company was progressing, developing, prospering and had a very solid basis for future success and security."

C Thus, the company was successful and well managed; and the deceased had a large income from his salary, director's fees and dividends.

There were five children, of whom two were grown up and had married. There is a girl who was thirteen. Her school fees are paid out of dividends on shares given by her father. There are also two boys who were fifteen and eighteen respectively. They both contribute to their keep from dividends on shares D given by their father.

The judge considered all the evidence and worked out the complicated considerations in this case in a masterly and lucid analysis. Its effect may be summarised thus. He found that the net earnings of the deceased for three years preceding the accident were £3,400, £2,900 and £3,750. Therefore he took the average earnings as £3,300 net. His forecast of the future prospects E was that there would be a £200 per annum increase in net earnings running over thirteen years. He said:

"I have had to do the best I can to assess what probably would have been the change of trend in Mr. Daniels' income over the years to come. It seems to me that the fairest way, the best way, to arrive at that is to suppose that over the period of thirteen years which, as I shall indicate later, I have F taken for the purpose of capitalising the annual loss, that income would have increased at the average rate year by year, sometimes more sometimes less, of the equivalent of £200 a year net of tax, and I have therefore regarded the deceased's net income for the period of thirteen years as beginning at £3,300 and rising to £6,100. I have chosen to take the average to the fourteen year period, it will be appreciated. Thirteen years at £200 being G £2,600—£3,300 to £5,900 and one more year to £6,100 so as to get a smoothing out of the range. I deliberately mention specific figures in this particular judgment because it may be that one or other party would desire to have this difficult case further considered in another court."

Thus, over thirteen years the average net income would be £4,600. That figure is said to be too high. He assessed dependency at two-thirds of the total net H income. Two-thirds is said to be too high, and half is suggested. The judge justified that assessment by the following passages.

"He was clearly a good father, concerned properly but not extravagantly or excessively to provide for his children. In 1955 he gave over £20,000 of shares to his wife and children. It is germane to this part of my assess- I ment of the material matters that I should say that here, judging the late Mr. Daniels as a person, partly from my judgment of his widow as a person, as well as from the evidence of what he did in relation to his property. The late Mr. Daniels probably devoted, on the average, and would have continued to devote on the average, something of the order of two-thirds of his net income after taxation to the group of persons comprised in his family, using the other one-third of his net income to a very considerable extent for charitable purposes though partly, of course, on necessary clothing and other things that he might wish, within his simple scope of requirements, to have for himself in the way of books, pictures, furniture and all such things, and, of course, some expenditure on his private use of his motor car. As his income increased, and I shall have occasion to make it clear that in my judgment it would have increased materially as the years went on but for his untimely death, I think, and proceed upon the footing that the proportion would not greatly have changed in that respect, the proportion of his net income which he would have devoted to his family on the one hand and to all other purposes on the other. The closest calculation that I was able to make produced a figure of 20/33rds, but I think 22/33rds or 2/3rds is probably as near a figure as one can arrive at for this purpose . . . I consider that two-thirds of that amount or thereabouts should be regarded as attributable to expenditure on the family, and, again stressing that I am dealing in round figures, I treat the dependency as £3,000 a year. I ought perhaps to say, so that the matter is on record, that in the three years before the deceased's death the actual expenditure for household purposes averaged just under £2,000 and may be regarded as £2,000 a year. On the other hand, it is right to suppose that the tendency would have been to spend rather more than less upon the family than two-thirds of the available net income, and although I have taken two-thirds I think it is on the plus side of two-thirds, and the product of two-thirds is something that should be influenced in my own mind, which I should allow to be influenced, upwards rather than downwards to an incalculable extent. He might, more probably than not, have made further gifts."

To assess the present value of £3,000 for thirteen years at four per cent., he proceeded on the basis of a multiplier of about 9.9, being the figure for finding the present value of an annuity for thirteen years. He estimated the total at £33,000. He said:

"Taking that £3,000 a year for a period of thirteen years as an equivalent capital value today at four per cent., and I deliberately take rather a low percentage, the multiplier appropriate is the factor of 9.9, that is to say if one takes thirteen or fourteen years, and again I deliberately retain liberty to go between the two and to allow myself to be affected by looking at the one and at the other when expressing the annual return or the annual benefit to the family. Thus one is dealing with the equivalent of approximately £33,000 as an immediate capital sum."

It is argued that the resulting figure should arithmetically be £29,700 and not £33,000. Therefore a question arises whether the judge made an arithmetical mistake or a deliberate adjustment. If the former, it falls to be corrected under the judge's concluding paragraph where he says:

"The result of those calculations and subject to arithmetical errors, which I am ready to accept have probably occurred, is £33,000 less the set-off of £18,200, namely £14,800."

The learned judge then concluded:

"I therefore take that £33,000 into my calculation. That is the debit side of this balance which has to be struck in these fatal accident cases between the monetary loss, deprivation, incurred by the family group as a result of the death, and the benefits in terms of money which have come to those same persons by reason of the death."

He then dealt with the value of the assets. He started with a round figure of £23,000, derived from the probate figures, and went through some complicated adjustments. That figure of £23,000 contains the value of ordinary shares in T. H. & J. Daniels, Ltd., which were admittedly undervalued. Of those shares 10,400 were the property of the deceased at the time of his death, and six thousand came to his estate on the death of his mother after the accident, viz., in December,

A 1959. The judge had to value those shares correctly to find the true value of the estate. The task was complicated by the fact that a year after the accident there was an issue of one bonus share for every ordinary share held and that the latter block of shares had been valued on an expectancy only. He valued the shares before the bonus issue at 30s. each, which led him to add to the value of the estate £2,600 in respect of the ordinary shares held by the deceased (plus B £250 in respect of preference shares) and £5,000 in respect of the shares received after the death of his mother. By those additions he increased the value of the estate to £30,750.

That being a gross sum, the judge had to work out the proper amount of death duty attributable to it. He assessed and deducted death duties in the sum of £10,000. After that deduction he found the net value of the estate which the C plaintiff received through the death to be £20,750. But the judge found that the plaintiff already had an expectancy in the husband's assets the value of which was 12½ per cent. That percentage of £20,750 is £2,650, which fell to be deducted from the benefit which the plaintiff received by the death of the deceased. That leaves a net benefit of £18,200. The judge explained it in these words:

D

> "There is a further consideration which I feel cannot be overlooked and that is that the £20,750 that I have mentioned is the valuation that I put on the assets that came to Mrs. Daniels as a result of the death of her husband. She has had those assets sooner than she could ever have had them if he had lived to the end of his natural life. However, she had before his death a chance of surviving him and inheriting those assets. In my judgment, she E had such a chance because although she was three years older than her husband, her expectancy of life is, on the accepted tables of the Registrar General, just about the same, and she would not be exposed, as he would be, to all the strain, and, indeed, hazards of strenuous business life involving a good deal of travel by road, rail and perhaps air. I feel that this chance would be overvalued if I put it at twenty per cent., and think it would be F right to regard her as having had already the equivalent of a 12½ per cent. interest in those same assets before the death of her husband. I therefore subtract from £20,750 that 12½ per cent. and arrive at the figure of £18,200."

In the result, the dependency was £33,000, from which had to be deducted the value she received from the estate of £18,200, leaving a balance of £14,800, for G which (together with £90 funeral expenses) the learned judge gave judgment.

The defendant raised the following contentions. On the question of dependency he put forward three points. First, the deceased would never have attained a net income of £6,100 per annum in view of the weight of taxation and therefore the average of £4,600 per annum net is too high. Secondly, the dependency should be half and not two-thirds. Thirdly, the apparent error H of £33,000 for £29,700 should produce a reduction in the judgment of £3,300 from £14,890 to £11,590. On the question of the value of the estate, the defendant contends that the value of the shares should be 40s. each, or some other figure higher than 30s. That would require corresponding adjustments in the judge's estimate of both the shares owned at death by the deceased and the shares which came to his estate twenty months later on his mother's death.

I If counsel for the defendant is right on all his contentions it is shown that the widow has lost nothing by her husband's death. If that be so, it is a strange result in this case. This was plainly a very happy marriage and the husband was a high-earning, frugal man who saved and provided very generously for his family. It is difficult to believe that the widow had sustained no loss when she found herself in possession of his capital of £40,000 (to take counsel for the defendant's figure) less upwards of £10,000 death duties, and when his high earnings were no longer available for the family. If counsel's arguments are correct and if arithmetically the conclusion must be that there is no loss in this case, arithmetic has failed to provide the answer which common sense demands. It must be remembered that this is a question of fact expressly left to the jury by s. 2 of the Fatal Accidents Act, 1846. That section provides that > "... the jury may give such damages as they may think proportioned to the injury resulting from such death to the parties respectively for whom and for whose benefit such action shall be brought ..."

Since the question is one of actual material loss, some arithmetical calculations are necessarily involved in an assessment of the injury. But they do not provide a substitute for common sense. Much of the calculation must be in the realms of hypothesis, and in that region arithmetic is a good servant, but a bad master.

The learned judge expressly said:

> "I have made numerous calculations and checks for myself in order to arrive at what is bound, I think, in such a case to be a general effect of my assessments upon the different bases and indeed varying assumptions and estimates."

He appreciated throughout that his was but one way of arriving at a correct estimate of the loss. The slightly different approach put forward by PEARSON, L.J., during argument based more directly on the loss of earning capacity to the family was an equally valid approach.

This was an unusually well-knit family, as the evidence shows and the judgment accepts. Inferences and hypotheses in such a case are different from those where the deceased is not so wholehearted and successful a provider for his family. Each case must depend on its facts. On the facts of this case I would not myself accept that the whole of the estate that came to the wife was a benefit, less the 12½ per cent. chance which she had of inheriting had the accident not occurred. The learned judge did not take into account the benefit which the wife had during her husband's life from the capital which was invested in his name. In some cases, of course, a wife derives little benefit from capital invested in her husband's name. But in such a case as the present the wife could clearly call on it if it were needed almost to the same extent as if it stood in her own name. It may be said that there must always in theory be some material benefit in a wife having capital actually under her control instead of under the control of a husband, even when he is clearly prepared to use it for family purposes, and if need arises to spend it on his wife (for example, if an expensive illness so required). In this case that benefit was small in real fact. There was but little profit to the wife in having the capital (shorn by death duties) in her own hands instead of having a larger sum (not so shorn) in her husband's hands.

If it were necessary to uphold the figure of the learned judge, which in my judgment is the correct figure, I would hold that he gave too great an allowance to the defendant in respect of the capital which she inherited. But I do not find it necessary since in my view the path by which he arrived at his figure was a reasonable one and it led him to a reasonable conclusion. I do not accept the argument that his average net figure of £4,600 for income cannot be supported. Counsel for the defendant criticises with some force the top net figure at the end of the hypothetical scale of earnings, which would need an extremely large gross income to produce it. But that criticism is founded on surtax remaining as it is.

Counsel for the plaintiff fairly contends that that argument based on tax remaining as it is can be rebutted by changes of taxation that have arisen since the trial. For it may be that the judge took into account the possibility of surtax being lowered, and if so it now appears that he had justification for that view. Moreover, an average of £4,600 might have been reached by earlier increases of salary and fees without the deceased ever attaining a figure of £6,000, a possibility of which the judge no doubt was well aware. In my judgment he was entitled to calculate on the hypothesis of an average of £4,600 a year net.

His figure of two-thirds dependency is criticised. But it is clear that it was based on a very careful investigation of the way in which the deceased had

A spent his money. In the judge's view there would have been further and possibly even increased generosity to the family, including those who had already left the home. The only rivals to the family's claims on his generosity were the claims of charity. In the judge's view, which I accept, personal self-indulgence was not a competitor. The judge arrived at the conclusion, futura praeteritis auguratus, using the past as an augury of the future, that two-thirds was B the correct figure. He had a close and more personal insight into this family than we can derive merely from the transcript, and I find nothing to indicate any error in his estimate derived from it.

The question whether he made a mistake of £3,000 in his arithmetic is not easy but I feel little doubt as to the answer. I have already read the passage in which the judge dealt with that. The multiplier for fourteen years would C be 10.563, which would clearly not produce £33,000. But if one assumes that the judge used a multiplier of ten for convenience, that would explain his reference to retaining liberty to go between thirteen and fourteen years, that is between 9.865 and 10.563. The figure would then be £30,000. Then, I am inclined to think, the judge, remembering that he was doing the sum two and a half years after the accident (which was the date on which the sum became due), D and that by his multiplier he was taking from the total sum a discount for future interest at four per cent., felt that he must in fairness make an allowance to the widow for interest at the same rate during the time in which she had been out of her money. Interest on £30,000 for two and a half years at four per cent. is £3,000. Thus the total figure would properly be £33,000. It must be conceded that he should perhaps have made a similar addition to the other side of E the balance, namely, the net value of the estate. But that error of omission could easily occur in so complicated a calculation given in an oral judgment. Moreover he may have had some good reason for the omission.

The blatant error of arithmetic for which the defendant contends seems to me unlikely, for the following reasons. £33,000 was the final or master figure on one side of the balance. An obvious substantial error of commission is quite F out of character with the rest of the judgment. Moreover, the judge, as is shown by the transcript of a later application, read through the transcript of the judgment and corrected two errors of arithmetic without changing the figure of £33,000. In my judgment, therefore, no sufficient ground is shown for the suggested reduction of £3,000 or for thus altering the final figure of the judge's assessment.

G There is the final question of the value of the shares. It is not easy to value a minority holding in a private company. There is no free market, and the minority holders may find themselves in a difficult position, especially when they wish to sell. Asset value has an effect, but it is not a deciding factor since the shareholder cannot procure a winding-up. On the other hand, this was a company with a good future. That finding cannot be disregarded, though it was H a prophecy by the judge in gauging the prospects of the deceased and might not be fully reflected in the price obtainable for the shares. The judge, however, had the actual evidence of the limited market in these shares in 1958, namely, a sale of shares at 23s. and a sale at 25s. There was nothing to suggest that these were not sales by a willing seller to a willing buyer, or that they did not fairly represent the price which these shares would then command. The judge added I 5s. per share to the higher of the two prices. In my judgment, the evidence entitled him to find as he did.

The whole family of the deceased, and in particular the widow, suffered a very severe financial loss by the death of this highly paid, frugal and generous provider. If a jury had in a more rough and ready way, without any niceties of calculation, assessed the damages at £15,000, one would in my judgment consider it a good verdict. The learned judge, with a more scientific and judicial approach, has arrived at a figure of £14,700. In spite of counsel for the defendant's fair and forceful argument, I see nothing to criticise either in his method or his conclusion. I would therefore on both counts dismiss this appeal.

WILLMER, L.J.: I have reached the same conclusion. The argument for the defendant, if it be sound, proves conclusively that the plaintiff and her family, so far from having suffered a pecuniary loss, are actually better off as the result of the death of the deceased. Such a result is so repugnant to common sense as to cast a good deal of suspicion on the validity of the argument which leads to it. The fallacy of the argument, I think, lies in the fact that it treats the question to be solved in a case such as this as if it were one of precise arithmetical calculation. But in point of fact the assessment of a claim under the Fatal Accidents Acts, 1846 to 1908, is essentially a jury question, as appears clearly enough from the wording of s. 2 of the Fatal Accidents Act, 1846, to which HOLROYD PEARCE, L.J., has already referred. The claim must, of course, be based on the actual known figures, both of the earnings of the deceased and of any pecuniary benefit accruing to the plaintiff as the result of his death. But these figures have to be related to all the other known circumstances of the particular case, and must be considered in the light of a great number of imponderable factors. The result must be largely a matter of estimation, and the jury are directed by the Act to award " such damages as they may think proportioned to the injury resulting from " the death.

The argument presented on behalf of the defendant in the present case was no doubt aided by the fact that the learned judge, in the course of an outstandingly careful and detailed judgment, showed his workings, in the sense that he made and disclosed a number of arithmetical calculations before arriving at his final figure. Even so I do not think that in a case of this character an appellant can succeed in this court merely by showing (assuming that he can show) that this or that figure is erroneous, or this or that calculation is inaccurate. In what is essentially a jury question the over-all picture is what matters. It is the wood that has to be looked at, and not the individual trees.

In these circumstances I do not propose to refer again to the detailed figures proved in evidence, which HOLROYD PEARCE, L.J., has already discussed. I content myself with referring in the broadest outline to what I conceive to be the essential features of the case. There is no doubt but that the deceased, who was clearly a man of quite exceptional ability, was earning a very large and increasing income at the time of his death. His gross earned income for the last year of his life was at the rate of about £6,000 a year, and the evidence showed that by the time of the trial it would, if he had lived, have increased in all probability to something in excess of £7,000 a year gross. He was not yet fifty-one years of age and could look forward to the probability that his best earning years still lay before him. But what is vitally important is to consider how he was in the habit of spending his income. The evidence showed that this was a singularly united family, and that the deceased was conscious to an unusual degree of his family obligations. He was a man of simple tastes and spent little on himself. He was, it appears, a generous subscriber to charity. But apart from this, he devoted the bulk of what was left of his income after taxation to making provision for his wife and family. I do not think it is right to look only at what he actually expended by way of allowances to them. In so far as he did not spend his income, but invested it, he was, as it seems to me, equally doing so for the benefit of his wife and family. They enjoyed the benefit not only of his generous expenditure on them, but also the security of living with a man of large income and growing capital resources, the great part of which was available for their benefit even if not immediately used in expenditure on them.

All this has been lost, thanks to the death of the deceased, and all there is to set against it is the fact that his estate, depleted to a considerable extent by the payment of death duties, has passed to his widow under his will. No doubt this is a matter to be taken into consideration, by way of set-off against the loss of

A the benefit of the deceased's income. But I do not at all assent to the proposition that, in the particular circumstances of this case, the value of the estate is to be set off pound for pound against the loss of income as a matter of precise arithmetical calculation. There has been considerable dispute as to the value of the deceased's estate. But whatever its value, the reality of the situation is that for all practical purposes the widow (and her family) were enjoying the B benefit of it almost as much before the death of the deceased as they do now. The fact that the wife, under the will of the deceased, has now become absolutely entitled to what is left of the estate is in the circumstances a change of form rather than of substance. Furthermore, I think that there is this additional factor to be taken into account. If the deceased had not been killed, it is reasonably certain that by wise investment of his surplus income he would have C been able, as the years passed, materially to increase the value of the estate, to which the widow would have succeeded if he had still pre-deceased her. If it be right to set off against the loss of income such pecuniary benefit as the widow received by succeeding now to the estate of the deceased, it must also be right to take into account the fact that, owing to the premature death of the deceased, the estate is of less value now than it would have been if he had completed his D normal expectation of life.

In these circumstances I have not thought it necessary to arrive at any concluded opinion as to the monetary value of the deceased's estate—or what was left of it after the payment of death duties—in the hands of the widow. For I cannot bring myself to think that the mere change in the title to the shares which passed brought any substantial benefit to the widow. I am disposed to E agree with the suggestion put forward during the argument by PEARSON, L.J., that the real change which has occurred has been the total loss of the deceased's very considerable and increasing earned income. This is a very real, and a very substantial, loss, for which the acquisition of what is left of his estate affords but little compensation.

I do not propose to go into the figures of what the income of the deceased was F and was likely to be if he continued to live. The learned judge was in my view well entitled to form the view that it was likely to go on increasing. It was, of course, an income which would necessarily attract a high rate of tax. But regard must be had to the possibility that over the years there might be some reduction in the liability to tax—a possibility which in one respect at least has become an actuality during the present year, and since the matter was before G the learned judge. In the circumstances I agree with HOLROYD PEARCE, L.J., that there is no sufficient ground for criticising the learned judge's estimate of what the average net income of the deceased was likely to be over the period which he took into consideration. Nor, having regard to what I have already said about the generosity which the deceased had always shown towards his wife and family, do I think that the learned judge can fairly be criticised for his H estimate that two-thirds of the net income should be regarded as available for their benefit. It is true that the unearned part of the income still remains available in the hands of the widow—subject to the depletion of capital consequent on the payment of death duties. But, as I have already said, there has been a total loss of the deceased's earned income. The capitalised value of what has thus been lost must, in my judgment, amount to a very substantial I figure. The sum awarded by the learned judge is no doubt a substantial one, but having regard to the considerations to which I have referred, I think it would have been difficult to criticise him if he had arrived at an even larger figure. I am certainly not disposed to reduce the sum awarded on any of the grounds put forward on behalf of the appellant. I accordingly agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

PEARSON, L.J.: I agree. The damages to be assessed under the Fatal Accidents Acts, 1846 to 1908, are to be proportioned to the injury resulting from the death to the beneficiaries, that is to say the deceased's widow and children, for whose benefit the action is brought. The word "injury" is interpreted as meaning pecuniary loss. As the learned judge has said, there are several possible methods of assessment, and one can be used to check another. For the purpose of checking the substantial accuracy of the figure of damages at which he has arrived by applying one of the methods, or at any rate for the purpose of seeing whether it falls within the reasonable range of figures, it will be useful to apply a different method which is closely related to the special features of this case.

There is in this case an integrated family with a high degree of solidarity. That is proved by the evidence generally and especially by the facts that: (i) the deceased and his wife had a joint bank account; (ii) the deceased in the year 1955 gave large blocks of shares to his wife and children; (iii) the death duties charged on the gifts inter vivos to the children, though legally payable by them, are being paid by the widow.

The first and fundamental question is: "By how much have the prospective resources of the Daniels family been depleted by the death of the deceased?" The answer is, in general terms, "By a very large amount". Any assessment arriving at a small figure of loss would be wrong. To make a detailed valuation without the assistance of an accountant would be a hazardous venture, but a simple calculation will give a sufficient outline. Taking the figures for the full year 1958 and the evidence which the learned judge accepted, and the increase of the dividend rate in 1959 as shown by the company's accounts, I assume that by 1960 the deceased's earned income would have been £7,250 gross and his investment income would have been £5,000 gross. The whole of that earned income, £7,250 gross, has been lost. That is the main and inescapable fact in this case. Also, about £18,000 has been or will be paid for death duties, and this sum may have been raised partly by using insurance moneys but presumably investments had to be realised to a considerable extent. The figure is uncertain, but I am allowing £1,000 gross for loss of investment income and therefore £4,000 gross for the remaining investment income. Then in computing taxation one has to treat the lost income (£7,250 earned and £1,000 unearned) as added to the remaining £4,000 and therefore taxed at the rate appropriate to the income above £4,000. I have taken income tax at 7s. 9d. in the pound, the existing surtax rates, and the earned income relief (applying to income tax only) as set out in the Finance Act, 1957, s. 12. There may be some further allowances and there are some annuities to be deducted from the £4,000, which would therefore affect to some extent the appropriate rates for the lost income. The resulting figure of the net value of the lost income for 1960 is not less than £2,700. The year 1960 is taken because Mr. Johnson, who gave evidence, was making his estimates for the time when he was giving evidence, which was in July, 1960. For later years of the thirteen-year period there should be on the average rising figures of net loss. The evidence and the findings show the probability of a general rising trend in the turnover and profits of the companies and their distributions both in the form of dividend payments and in the form of salary and fees to the chairman and managing director. I should, however, have thought the learned judge's estimate of £200 as the average annual increase in the net income throughout the thirteen-year period to be excessive but for the important factor of the reduction of surtax rates on earned income.

It was not contended in argument that the 1961 Budget proposals should be wholly ignored in the assessment. If fully taken into account, they might increase the figure of net loss per annum from Jan. 1, 1963, onwards for an unknown duration by as much as or more than £1,000. On the other hand, if one merely allows for a reasonable expectation in 1960 that there would before long be some alleviation of the very high surtax rates then prevailing, it is still an important factor and strikingly illustrated by the 1961 Budget proposals.

On the other side there should be some deductions or set-offs or credits allowed. Money that would have been spent on the deceased has been saved. From the

A much reduced income probably less is being subscribed to charities. The widow has acquired title to the remaining investments, and, though as a matter of practical reality she is very little better off financially by reason of this transfer of title, probably some small allowance should be made under this head. Also the widow was nominated in the deceased's will to be a director of the principal company, and she has been earning an income in that capacity, and the oppor-
B tunity of doing so came by reason of the death of the deceased and perhaps some allowance should be made under this head, though that may be doubtful.

After bringing in all these factors, I would still estimate the average annual net loss to the beneficiaries over the thirteen-year period as not less than £1,500 per annum, which, when multiplied by the multiplier 9.9, which is not disputed, gives approximately the figure arrived at by the learned judge.

C Accordingly, I would dismiss the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Greenwoods (for the defendant); Field, Roscoe & Co., agents for Little & Bloxham, Stroud (for the plaintiff).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

D

SYKES v. DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC PROSECUTIONS.

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Lord Denning, Lord Goddard, Lord Morton of Henryton, Lord Morris of Borth-y-Gest and Lord Guest), April 26, 27, May 1, 2, 3, June 23, 1961.]

E Criminal Law—Misprision of felony—Whether offence exists—Whether active concealment essential ingredient of offence.

Certain persons got into the weapon armoury at a United States Air Force Station in Norfolk, stole some firearms and ammunition, and took them to Manchester to arrange for their sale, the suggestion being that they were going to the I.R.A. The appellant played some part as a contact man, and F he was charged, inter alia, with misprision of felony. He was convicted and sentenced to five years' imprisonment. His appeal against conviction was dismissed, but on appeal against sentence, this was reduced. He was granted leave to appeal to the House of Lords on the following points: (i) whether there was such an offence as misprision of felony; (ii) whether active concealment was an essential ingredient of the offence.

G Held: (i) there was and always had been an offence of misprision of felony and it was not obsolete.

(ii) active concealment was not an essential ingredient of the offence.

Dictum of LORD WESTBURY in Williams v. Bayley ((1866), L.R. 1 H.L. at p. 220) disapproved.

Observations by LORD DENNING on the essential ingredients of mis-
H prision of felony (see p. 41, letter H, to p. 42, letter D, post).

Per LORD GODDARD: where it is thought possible and proper to charge a person as an accessory, it is preferable to do so rather than have recourse to the offence of misprision (see p. 46, letter B, post).

QUAERE whether concealment of knowledge that an offence is contemplated is indictable (see p. 42, letter I, to p. 43, letter B, and p. 44, letters G and H, I post).

Appeal dismissed.

[As to misprision of felony, see 10 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 293, para. 549; p. 315, para. 574; p. 632, para. 1201; and for a case on the subject, see 15 DIGEST (Repl.) 849, 8160.]

Cases referred to:

Bowman v. Secular Society, Ltd., [1917] A.C. 406; 86 L.J. Ch. 568; 117 L.T. 161; 15 Digest (Repl.) 880, 8489.

M'Daniel's Case, (1755), 19 State Tr. 745; Fost. 121, 364 (168 E.R. 60); 14 Digest (Repl.) 105, 684. A

R. v. Aberg, [1948] 1 All E.R. 601; [1948] 2 K.B. 173; 112 J.P. 206; 32 Cr. App. Rep. 144; 14 Digest (Repl.) 338, 3308.

R. v. Burgess, (1885), 16 Q.B.D. 141; 55 L.J.M.C. 97; 53 L.T. 918; 50 J.P. 520; 14 Digest (Repl.) 240, 2069.

R. v. Chapple, (1840), 9 C. & P. 355; 173 E.R. 866; 14 Digest (Repl.) 109, 747. B

R. v. Crimmins, [1959] V.L.R. 270.

R. v. Jones, [1948] 2 All E.R. 964; [1949] 1 K.B. 194; 113 J.P. 18; 33 Cr. App. Rep. 33; 14 Digest (Repl.) 116, 762.

R. v. Levy, [1912] 1 K.B. 158; 81 L.J.K.B. 264; 106 L.T. 192; 76 J.P. 123; 7 Cr. App. Rep. 61; 14 Digest (Repl.) 109, 750. C

R. v. Manley, [1932] All E.R. Rep. 565; [1933] 1 K.B. 529; 102 L.J.K.B. 323; 148 L.T. 335; 97 J.P. 6; 24 Cr. App. Rep. 25; 15 Digest (Repl.) 913, 8783.

R. v. Vreones, [1891] 1 Q.B. 360; 60 L.J.M.C. 62; 64 L.T. 389; 55 J.P. 536; 15 Digest (Repl.) 842, 8058.

R. v. Wilde (Dec. 14, 1959), Leeds Assizes, [1960] Crim. L.R. 116. D

Roberts' Case, (1569), 3 Coke's Institutes 139.

Williams v. Bayley, (1866), L.R. 1 H.L. 200; 35 L.J.Ch. 717; 14 L.T. 802; 30 J.P. 500; 15 Digest (Repl.) 848, 8160.

Appeal.

Appeal by Basil Landon Sykes from an order of the Court of Criminal Appeal (HILBERY, STEVENSON and VEALE, JJ.), dated Jan. 23, 1961, by leave of that court (LORD PARKER, C.J., WINN and WIDGERY, JJ.), dated Feb. 13, 1961, and reported sub nom. R. v. Sykes, [1961] 1 All E.R. 702. On Jan. 23, 1961, the appellant's appeal against his conviction at Manchester Crown Court (SIR BASIL NIELD, Q.C., sitting with a jury) on May 9, 1960, of inter alia, misprision of felony, was dismissed. On Feb. 13, 1961, his sentence of five years' imprisonment was reduced. The facts are set out in the opinion of LORD DENNING. E F

E. Clarke, Q.C., and J. Hugill for the appellant.

The Solicitor-General (Sir Jocelyn Simon, Q.C.), and W. D. T. Hodgson, Q.C., for the Crown.

Their Lordships took time for consideration.

June 23. The following opinions were read. G

LORD DENNING: My Lords, this case raises the question whether there is today such an offence as misprision of felony. Counsel for the appellant says that there has never been such an offence known to our law; or, if there has, he says it has ceased to be an offence by becoming obsolete. Counsel for the Crown says that there always has been such an offence, and the present case is a good example of its continuing usefulness. The facts giving rise to the question were as follows: About Mar. 18, 1960, thieves got into the weapon armoury at a United States Air Force station in Norfolk. They stole one hundred pistols, four sub-machine guns and about 1960 rounds of ammunition. They hired a taxi and took the stolen goods to Manchester. They took them into the house of a man named Kenny. A day or two later, a man named Whittle brought a van to Kenny's house and took the "stuff" to the house of a man named Black. On Mar. 23, 1960, the appellant comes into the story. We do not know how he came to know about the guns and ammunition, but we know that he went up to an Irishman named Kerwin who was a waiter in a Manchester club and asked him: "Have you any contacts with the I.R.A.?" Kerwin said: "I don't want to talk about it in the club." They talked about it later; and they went to a hotel where they met two men. One of them was Kenny (the man who first received the guns in Manchester) and the other was a man named Tucker (who has not appeared H I

A in the story before). Kenny said they had one hundred revolvers, some sub-machine guns and ammunition for sale. Kerwin led them to think that he had contacts with the I.R.A. and would have to go to London to see them. But, instead of going to London, he went to the police and acted under their instructions. On Mar. 27, 1960, Kerwin (prompted thereto by the police) told the appellant that he had arranged to dispose of the guns, but he needed a sample to convince B the organisation that the guns were there. Kerwin that night asked the appellant what he expected to gain financially and he said: "Half of what Tucker gets for his share". On Mar. 20, 1960, Kenny took a sample of one of the pistols and gave it to Kerwin (who gave it to the police). Later the police disguised themselves as would-be purchasers of the guns. They were taken to Black's house and shown the goods. Whereupon the police officers disclosed their identity, and arrested C Kenny, Whittle and Black. They took possession of the stolen property. Afterwards they arrested Tucker and the appellant. In the early morning of Mar. 29, 1960, at the police station, the superintendent said to the appellant:

> "I have reason to believe that you were the man who first got into touch with an Irishman and asked him to contact the I.R.A. so that they could buy the guns and that you have been actively helping Kenny and Tucker D in arranging for the sale of these guns during the past week."

The appellant said: "Look, Inspector, that can't be possible. I don't know this man Kenny and I haven't seen Tucker for four months." All five men were taken before the magistrates. Kenny, Tucker, Whittle and Black were charged with receiving the goods, knowing them to have been stolen. The appellant E was charged as being accessory after the fact. After the evidence was taken, counsel for the appellant urged strongly that he ought not to be committed for trial on the charge of being accessory; there was no evidence that he had taken any active steps to conceal the felony or had done any act for the purpose of assisting the others to escape conviction. He relied on R. v. Jones (1). But the magistrates committed all five men for trial.

F When counsel was instructed to draft the indictment, he was so impressed by the argument which had been urged before the magistrates that he did not put in a count charging the appellant with being an accessory after the fact but charged him with misprision of felony. The indictment against the five men was as follows: First count: Kenny, Tucker and the appellant were charged with receiving stolen goods, knowing them to have been stolen. Second count: G Tucker and the appellant were charged with misprision of felony. Third count: Black and Whittle were charged with receiving. Fourth count: Kenny, Tucker and the appellant were charged with attempted sale of firearms, contrary to s. 17 (1) of the Firearms Act, 1937.

On May 9, 1960, when the case was called on, counsel for the appellant moved to quash counts 1 and 2 against the appellant on the ground that there was no evidence to warrant them. The judge (SIR BASIL NIELD, Q.C.) upheld this H contention so far as regards count 1 for receiving—there was clearly no evidence of his having possession of the goods—but disallowed it on count 2. So the charge of misprision of felony remained. On arraignment, Black pleaded guilty to receiving. The rest pleaded not guilty and were put in charge of the jury. After the evidence for the prosecution had been called, Kenny, Tucker and Whittle withdrew their pleas of not guilty and pleaded guilty to certain of the charges I against them, including, be it noted, a plea of guilty by Tucker to misprision of felony. So, at that point, all except the appellant had pleaded guilty, and the case went on against the appellant alone. He gave evidence and the judge summed-up. The jury found him guilty of misprision of felony but not guilty of attempted sale of firearms. On May 26, 1960, the judge sentenced Kenny to seven years for receiving (and two years concurrent for attempted sale of firearms), Tucker to five years for misprision of felony (and two years concurrent for attempted sale of firearms), Black and Whittle each to fifteen months for receiving and the appellant to five years for misprision of felony. A

(1) [1948] 2 All E.R. 964; [1949] 1 K.B. 194.

Kenny and Tucker applied for leave to appeal against their sentences but their applications were refused. The appellant applied for leave to appeal against conviction and sentence. On Jan. 23, 1961, the Court of Criminal Appeal refused him leave to appeal against conviction but granted leave to appeal against sentence. On Feb. 13, 1961, the Court of Criminal Appeal set aside the sentence on the appellant of five years and substituted such a period of imprisonment as would allow him to be discharged on the next day, Feb. 14, 1961. It transpired, however, that the appellant did not need leave to appeal against conviction because he had a right of appeal on a point of law. So the court treated his application as if it was a final appeal against conviction which had been dismissed; and they gave him leave to appeal to this House limited to the following points: (i) Whether there is such an offence as misprision of felony. (ii) Whether active concealment is an essential ingredient of the offence. B C

The question whether there is such an offence as misprision of felony is of great importance, and we were privileged to have the results of much research placed before us by counsel on both sides. Most lawyers know, roughly speaking, what "misprision of felony" means. It means that a man knows that a felony has been committed and neglects to disclose it. But many laymen are perplexed by the word "misprision". What does it mean? Whence its derivation? LORD COKE (2) attempted to fit it in with present notions when he said that "Misprisio comneth of the French word mespris, which properly signifieth neglect or contempt"; but the authors of the OXFORD ENGLISH DICTIONARY, who included SIR FREDERICK POLLOCK, in a very learned article say that the word "misprision" is derived from the old French word "mesprendre" which means to act wrongly; and in early times it meant simply a wrong action or omission. This is borne out by the old law books, where it is used almost as synonymous with misdemeanour, that is to say, something less than felony which did not carry the death penalty. One of the earliest records of its use is in the YEAR BOOK in 1484 (2 Richard III case 22 pp. 9 et seq.), where a man called Mundy had falsified a writ. It was a felony and, if charged as such, would carry the death penalty; but for mercy's sake, and may be for convenience also, the judges said he could be indicted for a misprision. "It was allowed it was felony and so included misprision, etc." As a result of this case, it was held that every treason or felony included a misprision. The King used to take advantage of this rule in cases of treason, so that, if the man did not deserve the death penalty, he was indicted only with "misprision of treason". Now concealment of treason was itself treason. If anyone knew that another was guilty or in any way incriminated in treason, he was bound at once to go to the King or to anyone in his immediate circle and tell him all that happened; see BRACTON, DE LEGIBUS, Book III, fol. 118, 119. If he did not do so, he could be indicted either for treason which carried the death penalty, or misprision of treason which did not. But this alternative was taken away in 1555. By the statute of 1555 (1 & 2 Phil. & Mar. c. 10), s. 8, it was enacted that "conceylement or keping secrett of any highe treason be demed and taken onely misprision of treason . . .". From this time forward the phrase "misprision of treason" was taken to denote only the concealment or keeping secret of treason. And by a natural sequence "misprision of felony" denoted only the concealment or keeping secret of felony. D E F G H I

So much for the meaning of the phrase. But now comes the question: Has it ever been an offence known to the law? My Lords, it has been an offence for the last seven hundred years or more, not always under the name "misprision of felony", but still an offence. Ever since the days of hue and cry, it has been the duty of a man who knows that a felony has been committed to report it to the proper authority so that steps can be taken to apprehend the felon and

(2) In 3 COKE'S INSTITUTES, p. 36.

A bring him to justice. In the thirteenth century, it was his duty " to raise hue and cry ", that is to say, he had to report it to the sheriff of the county or his officer or to the constable of the town; whereupon it was the duty of that officer to levy hue and cry, that is, to shout aloud calling on all able-bodied men over the age of fifteen to pursue the offender and arrest him; and it was their duty to join in the pursuit. The duty on the officer to levy hue and cry and on the citizens B to join in pursuit was reinforced by various statutes, and particularly by the Statute of Westminster, the First (1275), 3 Ed. I, c. 9. Under that statute, if the officer failed to levy hue and cry when he should have done so, he was liable to imprisonment for a year and to a fine. If a citizen failed to join in pursuit, he was liable to a fine. This statute was re-enacted as recently as 1887 when, in s. 8 (1) of the Sheriffs Act, 1887, it was laid down that

C

> " Every person in a county shall be ready and apparelled at the command of the sheriff and at the cry of the country to arrest a felon . . ."

Although these statutes dealt with the duty of the officers and of citizens to join in pursuit, there was no statute dealing with the duty of the man, who knew of the felony, to report it. This duty rested solely on the common law. D There are several cases in the Rolls of the Justices in Eyre where a man was present where a felony was committed, or in the house at the time, or found the dead body of a man who was slain. If he did nothing—did not " raise the hue and cry or do anything "—he was guilty of an offence and liable to be fined. The case which is usually cited in this regard is a case in 1315 which was noted by FITZHERBERT in his GRAND ABRIDGMENT, TITLE CORONE ET PLEZ DEL CORONE, para. 395; but it can be found much more fully reported now in the E SELDEN SOCIETY, vol. 24 p. 152, where ORMESBY, J., said:

> " It is the law of the land that such as be present when such a felony as this is committed shall raise hue and cry and give their aid towards arresting the felons. Wherefore you will make fine with the King."

The other case on the point is also noted by FITZHERBERT in his GRAND ABRIDGE- F MENT, TITLE CONSPYRACIE, para. 5. It was a case in the year 1457 where a man, who had been present at a killing, reported it to a guardian of the peace. On this account he was charged with conspiracy. The judges rejected the charge; and PRISOT, the Chief Justice of the Common Pleas said: " He was bound by the law to do what he did." SIR WILLIAM STAUNDFORD summarised these cases in this way:

G

> " If anyone happens to be present, when another is killed, or when a felony is committed, and did not come there in the company of the felons, nor was part of their confederacy, but nevertheless did not intervene, or disturb the felons, or raise hue and cry, he is not on that account to be held a principal or accessory, for it is not a felony in him but only an offence for which he can be fined like trespass ":

H

see STAUNDFORD, PLEES DEL CORONE, c. 44, p. 40E. In those early cases, the accused man was present at the killing and so knew of it. But any other proof of knowledge would suffice. In 1550, there was a case where the man was not present but knew of the felony, and was held to be under duty to report it. This was the case: I. S. was robbed of his goods. After the robbery, he pursued the felon I and retook his goods. But he let the felon go. All the judges at Serjeant's Inn agreed that he was not to be held to be an accessory but he was guilty of " un concealment "; see MOORE K.B., p. 8. It was said to be " le duty de chescun home sur son allegiance de discoverer felonies."

This offence—concealing or failing to report a felony—does not seem to have acquired a name for itself until 1557 when STAUNDFORD gave it one. At the time, he wrote, there had recently been enacted the statute of 1555 dealing with misprision of treason, which was the " concealing or keeping secret of any high treason ". STAUNDFORD seems to have seen here a parallel with the common law offence of concealment of felony. So he, by analogy with the statute, used the words "misprision of felony" to denote the concealment or keeping secret of felony. He gave a separate chapter to Misprisions (c. 38, p. 37C) and started off with these words:

> "Misprision est properment quant ascun sciet ou conust, que un auter ad fait treason ou felony, & il ne voille luy discoverer al roy, ou son counsele, ou a ascun magistrat, eins conceala son offence, ceo est misprision . . ."

which may be translated as follows:—

> "Misprision: this is properly when anyone learns or knows, that another has committed treason or felony, and he does not choose to denounce him to the King, or his Council, or to any magistrate, but conceals the offence; this is misprision . . ."

My Lords, it was suggested that STAUNDFORD in this passage made a clerical mistake. "Ou" should be "et"; or, in the translation "or" should be "and". I cannot subscribe to this for a moment. There is internal evidence from the book itself which shows it was no mistake. But, apart from this, it was, as I have said, always an offence for a man to conceal or keep secret a felony of which he knew. Actual presence at the felony or actual finding of the body was proof positive of knowledge. But other proof of knowledge would suffice, as in the case of the man who retook stolen goods from the thief. All that STAUNDFORD did was to state the principle disclosed by the cases. Let no one mistake the high standing of SIR WILLIAM STAUNDFORD. He was a judge of the Commons Pleas from Michaelmas, 1554, till his death on Aug. 28, 1558. Foss tells us (3) that he was a great and learned lawyer and he distinguished himself as the author of a highly esteemed TREATISE ON THE PLEAS OF THE CROWN, which is of great authority. The first edition of it appeared in 1557 during his lifetime and it has been repeatedly followed by subsequent writers. They have often taken his exact words and acknowledged him as the source of what they say. On this very subject of misprision of felony, you will find him quoted verbatim in 1579 in RASTELL'S "LES TERMES DE LA LEY"; in 1583, in CROMPTON'S edition of FITZHERBERT'S JUSTICES OF THE PEACE (FITZHERBERT himself had died in 1538 so his own edition did not mention it); in 1607 in COWELL'S "THE INTERPRETER OF WORDS AND TERMS"; and in 1609 in PULTON'S "DE PACE REGIS ET REGNI". It was quite apparent to the lawyers of that time that STAUNDFORD derived his principle from the "hue and cry" cases; for both CROMPTON in his FITZHERBERT (p. 44), LAMBARD in his EIRENARCHA (1614), p. 289, and DALTON in his COUNTRY JUSTICE (1619), p. 284, refer to the "hue and cry" cases, and say that a man who is present at a felony and does not raise hue and cry or do anything is guilty of misprision of felony; and they cite the case in 1315 from FITZHERBERT, PLEAS OF THE CROWN, 395.

My Lords, if STAUNDFORD stood alone, it would suffice. But, in 1628, LORD COKE in his 3rd INSTITUTE gave the great imprint of his authority to it. He had evidently studied STAUNDFORD'S book with great care—indeed, he pays special tribute to him (at p. 138)—and, dealing with misprisions, he says (at p. 139):

> "Now are we to speak of concealement or not discovery of felony. As in case of high treason, whether the treason be by the common law, or statute, the concealment of it is misprision of treason. So in case of felony, whether the felony be by the common law, or by statute, the concealement of it is misprision of felony . . . And as the concealment of high treason is higher by many degrees then the concealment of felony, so the punishment for the concealment of the greater is heavier then of the lesser, and yet the concealment of felonies in sherifs, or bailifs of liberties is more severely

(3) FOSS, JUDGES OF ENGLAND, Vol. V, p. 391.

A punished then in others, viz. by imprisonment by one year, and ransome at the will of the King. [This is clearly a reference to the Statute of Westminster, 1275, c. 9, and shows that COKE too had in mind the "hue and cry" cases.] From which punishment if any will save himself he must follow the advice of BRACTON, to discover it to the King, or to some judge or magistrate, that for administration of justice supplieth his place, with all B speed that he can . . . And this is intended of a concealment, or not discovery [that is, non-disclosure] of his meer knowledge: for if in case of high treason, he that knoweth it, before it be done, and assenteth to it, is particeps criminis, and guilty of treason: and in case of felony, he that receiveth the thief, and assenteth to it, is accessory."

But great as is the authority of LORD COKE, greater still is the authority C of the great Chief Justice, SIR MATTHEW HALE, on such a subject as this. Writing about the year 1670, he said in his PLEAS OF THE CROWN, Vol. 1 (p. 374):

"By what hath been said touching misprision of treason we may easily collect what is the crime of misprision of felony, namely, that it is the concealing of a felony which a man knows, but never consented to, for if he consented, he is either principal or accessary in the felony, and conse- D quently guilty of misprision of felony and more."

Now what SIR MATTHEW HALE there said has ever since been regarded as a correct statement of the law of England. In 1755, it was so treated by FOSTER, J. (himself no mean authority), who quoted it in M'Daniel's Case (4); and a few years later SIR WILLIAM BLACKSTONE took it verbatim into the fourth E book of his COMMENTARIES, borrowing the rest from LORD COKE (p. 121):

"Misprision of felony is also the concealment of a felony which a man knows, but never assented to; for, if he assented, this makes him either principal, or accessory. And the punishment of this, in a public officer, by the statute Westm. 1. 3 Edw. I. c. 9. is imprisonment for a year and a day; in a common person, imprisonment for a less discretionary time; and, F in both, fine and ransom at the king's pleasure . . ."

Every author of any note from that day to this has followed these great names, and has said there is an offence of misprision of felony and described it in much the same terms. What need we of any further authority? If STAUNDFORD, COKE, HALE and BLACKSTONE all say there is such an offence as misprision of felony, are we to say the contrary? Counsel for the appellant G invited your Lordships to do so. He said there are no precedents, no recorded cases where any man has been ever indicted for misprision of felony, not from the time that STAUNDFORD wrote in 1557 till the year 1938. He said that STAUNDFORD made a mistake, and all the authors copied from him like automata and fell into error with him. The mere repetition of the cantilena of lawyers cannot, he said, make law. But I would say in answer that there are precedents. H There are all the "hue and cry" cases before STAUNDFORD wrote. And since he wrote there are records to carry us down to date.

In 1813, THOMPSON, B., (5) in his charge to the grand jury at York, drew their attention to the offence of misprision and thus invited them to find a true bill for it. In 1826, JOSEPH CHITTY (6) gives a precedent of an indictment for misprision of felony which he says "was settled by a very able crown lawyer". I This must have been an actual case. The precedent, after setting out the offence by P.P., the original offender, proceeds as follows:—

". . . did conceal, keep secret, and neglect to discover the said felony so committed by the said P.P. as aforesaid, and the name, person, and usual place of resort of the said P.P. did utterly refrain and forbear to disclose and make known . . ."

(4) (1755), 19 State Tr. at p. 805. (5) (1813), 31 State Tr. at p. 969.
(6) In CRIMINAL LAW (2nd Edn.), Vol. 2, p. 232.

In 1852, PARKE, B., when he went to the Home Circuit, addressed the Grand Jury at Lewes in these words (7): A

> "in the western division particularly a great many felonies were committed of which the parties who were the sufferers by them gave no information to the authorities or the police. He therefore felt himself called upon to say publicly, that it should be known that this proceeding, which was known to the law by the name of 'misprision of felony', was a very serious offence, and subjected the persons who were convicted of it to imprisonment for a year. The law with regard to this matter had certainly fallen into desuetude, but it was very necessary that it should be known it still existed, and during the last twenty years he had himself been called upon to make use of it in the county of Durham, and he had sentenced two persons to a year's imprisonment for having wilfully withheld information relating to an act of felony that had been committed." B C

We do not know whether any prosecutions for misprision of felony followed on the words of PARKE, B., and we have to pass over close on one hundred years before we find records of other prosecutions for misprision of felony. And then we find a series of them. Seven or eight were drawn to the attention of your Lordships. I would only mention the case of Mrs. Casserley tried by HUMPHREYS, J., at the Central Criminal Court in May, 1938 (8), the case of Thomas Prothero tried by HILBERY, J., at Salop Assizes in June, 1949, and the case of Chapman, Wood and Hyde tried by DEVLIN, J., at Hampshire Assizes in July, 1952. Each of those learned judges accepted pleas of guilty to charges of misprision of felony and passed sentence on them. D E

In the light of this history, it is plain that there is and always has been an offence of misprision of felony and that it is not obsolete. It is true that until recently it has been rarely invoked, but that is no ground for denying its existence.

This disposes of the first point on which leave to appeal was granted. There remains the second point whether active concealment is an essential ingredient of the offence. Now the ingredients of the offence can best be seen by comparing it with offences of like degree which have other ingredients. F

First: Accessory after the fact. The classic definition of an accessory after the fact is when a person, knowing a felony to have been committed, receives, relieves, comforts, or assists the felon; see 1 HALE, PLEAS OF THE CROWN 618; 4 BLACKSTONE'S COMMENTARIES 37. These are all active acts of assistance from which it can be inferred that he assented to the felon going free, in contrast to misprision which consists of concealment only, from which no inference of assent need be drawn. It might be thought that the acts of assistance given by the appellant in the present case would be such as to make him an accessory after the fact. But it has been said that, to make a man an accessory, the assistance must be given to the felon personally, in order to prevent or hinder him from being apprehended or tried or suffering punishment; see 2 HAWKINS, PLEAS OF THE CROWN ch. 29, s. 26, and 4 STEPHEN'S COMMENTARIES ON THE LAWS OF ENGLAND (21st Edn.), ch. 3, R. v. Chapple (9), R. v. Levy (10); so that, if the assistance was not given the felon personally, but only indirectly by persuading witnesses not to give evidence against him (see Roberts' Case (11)); or if the acts of assistance were done, not to hinder the arrest of the felon, but with another motive, such as to avoid arrest himself (see R. v. Jones (12)), or to make money for himself without regard to what happened to the felon (as in the present case), he would not be guilty as an accessory after the fact. It was these limitations on the offence of being an accessory that led to the appellant being charged with misprision of felony. G H I

(7) (Mar. 18, 1852), "The Times".
(8) R. v. Casserley, (May 28, 1938), "The Times". (9) (1840), 9 C. & P. 355.
(10) [1912] 1 K.B. 158. (11) (1569), 3 COKE'S INSTITUTES, p. 139.
(12) [1948] 2 All E.R. 964; [1949] 1 K.B. 194.

A Second: Compounding a felony. This is the old offence of theft-bote, now made of general application to all felonies and probably also to misdemeanours. LORD COKE says that > "This offence is more then misprision of felony, for that is not a concealment of his bare knowledge only; but theft-bote is when the owner not onely knowes of the felony, but taketh of the thief his goods again, or amends for the same to favour or maintain him, that is, not to prosecute him, to the intent he may escape . . ."

B

see 3rd INSTITUTE, p. 134. The offence of compounding a felony in short is an agreement not to prosecute a felon in consideration of the return of the goods or other reward; see 4 BLACKSTONE'S COMMENTARIES, p. 133, R. v. Burgess (13); whereas in misprision there need be no benefit. This distinction was overlooked by LORD WESTBURY in Williams v. Bayley (14). He seems to have thought that for "misprision of felony" the man must not only have concealed his knowledge of the felony but further converted it into a source of emolument to himself. That is essential in compounding a felony, but not in misprision of felony. LORD WESTBURY'S dictum has been frequently cited as, for instance, in R. v. Aberg (15); but it is not correct and should no longer be relied on.

C

D

Third: Interfering with the course of justice. It is an offence at common law to interfere with the course of justice, such as persuading witnesses not to give evidence (Roberts' Case (16)); or fabricating evidence (R. v. Vreones (17)); or making a false accusation of crime to the police (R. v. Manley (18)). But this offence requires something active to be done to pervert the course of justice.

E

Fourth: Obstructing the police. It is an offence by statute wilfully to obstruct any constable or peace officer when in the execution of his duty. This offence is not confined to physical obstruction. If a policeman was investigating a crime, and someone wilfully misled him by false information, he might well be guilty of this offence. But it is one thing to obstruct a policeman. It is another thing to refuse to help him. Take the case in Australia where a man, who was shot and wounded in an affray, refused to disclose to the police the name of the person who had shot him. It would seem that he was engaged in gang warfare, for he said that he would "cop it sweet" if he did disclose the name. He said he would attend to the matter himself, that is, take his own revenge. No civilised community can tolerate such behaviour. But his offence is not obstructing the police. It is misprision of felony: see R. v. Crimmins (19).

F

G

It comes to this, therefore, that these other offences require something active to be done to conceal the crime; whereas misprision requires nothing active. The failure or refusal to disclose the felony is enough. This disposes of the second point on which leave to appeal was granted.

This review of the authorities shows that the essential ingredients of misprision of felony are—

H

1. Knowledge. The accused man must know that a felony has been committed by someone else. His knowledge must be proved in the way in which the prosecution have been accustomed in other crimes when knowledge is an ingredient, such as receiving, accessory after the fact, compounding a felony, and so forth. That is to say, there must be evidence that a reasonable man in his place, with such facts and information before him as the accused had, would have known that a felony had been committed. From such evidence the jury may infer that the accused man himself had knowledge of it. He need not know the difference between felony and misdemeanour—many a lawyer has to look in the books for the purpose—but he must at least know that a serious offence has been committed: or, as the commissioners of 1840 put it, an offence of an

I

(13) (1885), 16 Q.B.D. 141.
(14) (1866), L.R. 1 H.L. at p. 220.
(15) [1948] 1 All E.R. at p. 602; [1948] 2 K.B. at p. 176.
(16) (1569), 3 COKE'S INSTITUTES, p. 139.
(17) [1891] 1 Q.B. 360.
(18) [1932] All E.R. Rep. 565; [1933] 1 K.B. 529.
(19) [1959] V.L.R. 270.

"aggravated complexion"; for, after all, that is still, broadly speaking, the difference between a felony and misdemeanour. Felonies are the serious offences. Misdemeanours are the less serious. If he knows that a serious offence has been committed—and a lawyer on turning up the books sees it is a felony—that will suffice. This requirement that it must be a serious offence disposes of many of the supposed absurdities, such as boys stealing apples, which many laymen would rank as a misdemeanour and no one would think he was bound to report to the police. It means that misprision comprehends an offence which is of so serious a character that an ordinary law-abiding citizen would realise he ought to report it to the police.

2. Concealment. The accused man must have "concealed or kept secret" his knowledge. He need not have done anything active; but it is his duty by law to disclose to proper authority all material facts known to him relative to the offence. It is not sufficient to tell the police that a felony has been committed. He must tell the name of the man who did it, if he knows it; the place, and so forth. All material facts known to him; see R. v. Crimmins (20). If he fails or refuses to perform this duty when there is a reasonable opportunity available to him to do so, then he is guilty of misprision. He can perform this duty by reporting to the police or a magistrate or anyone else in lawful authority. Failure to do so is a misprision of felony.

Misprision of felony is itself a misdemeanour and is punishable by fine and imprisonment. Whatever limitations may have existed in olden days on the period of imprisonment that might be imposed, the only limitation now is that it must not be an inordinately heavy sentence.

My Lords, it was said that this offence is out of date. I do not think so. The arm of the law would be too short if it was powerless to reach those who are "contact" men for thieves or assist them to gather in the fruits of their crime; or those who indulge in gang warfare and refuse to help in its suppression. There is no other offence of which such persons are guilty save that of misprision of felony. I am not dismayed by the suggestion that the offence of misprision is impossibly wide; for I think it is subject to just limitations. Non-disclosure may be due to a claim of right made in good faith. For instance, if a lawyer is told by his client that he has committed a felony, it would be no misprision in the lawyer not to report it to the police, for he might in good faith claim that he was under a duty to keep it confidential. Likewise with doctor and patient, and clergyman and parishioner. There are other relationships which may give rise to a claim in good faith that it is in the public interest not to disclose it. For instance, if an employer discovers that his servant has been stealing from the till, he might well be justified in giving him another chance rather than reporting him to the police. Likewise with the master of a college and a student. But close family or personal ties will not suffice where the offence is of so serious a character that it ought to be reported. In 1315, it was held that it was the duty of a brother to raise hue and cry against his brother and he was fined for not doing so; see 24 SELDEN SOCIETY, pp. 144, 145: and in 1938 a mistress was found guilty of misprision for shielding her lover (Mrs. Casserley's case (21)). The judges have not been called on further to define the just limitations to misprision, but I do not doubt their ability to do so, if called on.

My Lords, there was some discussion before us whether a man was bound to disclose a contemplated felony which comes to his knowledge, such as a planned raid on a bank. There is a striking passage in LAMBARD'S EIRENARCHA (1614), p. 289, which says that failure to do so is misprision of felony. So does DALTON'S COUNTRY JUSTICE (1619), p. 211, and 2 HAWKINS, PLEAS OF THE CROWN, ch. 29, s. 23. These are weighty authorities and the Commissioners who reported on the Criminal Law in 1843 were clearly in favour of it. They said:

(20) [1959] V.L.R. 270.

(21) (May 28, 1938), "The Times".

A "The necessity for making such disclosures extends, perhaps, with greater force, to the knowledge of a meditated crime, the perpetration of which may, by means of such a disclosure, be prevented, than it does to the knowledge of one already committed."

This is good sense and may well be good law. I would, therefore, reserve this point which does not arise in the present case.

B I ought to mention one other matter. Counsel for the appellant sought to raise a point of misdirection on which leave to appeal was not granted. He said that, once leave to appeal was given, the appellant in this House can open up all grounds available to the court below. He is not limited to the point on which leave was granted. Counsel for the Crown denied this. He said that the appellant was limited to the point of general public importance but the respondent was not. I do not think it necessary to resolve this question today because there is no substance in the point which counsel for the appellant sought to raise. He suggested that the judge had misdirected the jury in drawing their attention to the fact that Kenny had pleaded guilty to receiving. I see no misdirection in the judge telling the jury what they very well knew—Kenny had pleaded guilty in their presence—for the judge had already warned them that the pleas of guilty should not be allowed to prejudice the appellant.

C

D

I would dismiss the appeal.

LORD GODDARD: My Lords, the appellant was convicted at Manchester Crown Court of the misdemeanour known as misprision of felony. His appeal to the Court of Criminal Appeal was dismissed, and he applied for and obtained a certificate that a point of law of general public importance was involved and was given leave to appeal to this House limited to two points: (i) Whether there is such an offence as misprision of felony, and (ii) Whether active concealment is an essential ingredient of the offence. Before this House, counsel for the appellant contended that there never was known to the law such an offence but that, if there ever had been, it had disappeared by obsolescence and should no longer be indictable. On the question whether there ever was such an offence, counsel with immense industry had brought to your Lordships' notice a very large number of authorities, consisting of extracts from institutional writers on the criminal law, and cases decided not only in England but in other jurisdictions where the English common law prevails, and the result is, as it appears to me, to show that for centuries there has been communis opinio among all the writers and such of the judges who have had to consider the matter that there is such an offence and no trace of it ever having been doubted until the present case.

E

F

G

The first book that was discussed in argument was an edition of STAUNDFORD'S PLEES DEL CORONE, published in 1607 some years after the author's death. He was a judge of the Common Pleas from 1554 to 1558, and seems to have been a fairly prolific writer on the law. He describes misprision as (22)

H

"properly when anyone knows or understands, that another has committed treason or felony, and will not disclose it to the King, or his Council, or to any magistrate, and so conceals the offence . . .", and then he quotes a passage from BRACTON which is wide enough to cover misprision both of treason and felony. No one doubts that misprision of treason was and is a crime and it was specially the subject of a statute 1 & 2 Phil. & Mar. c. 10. Counsel for the appellant contended that STAUNDFORD was mistaken in treating misprision of felony as distinct from treason as a crime and that this mistake has continued and misled all the subsequent writers on the subject. As I understood the argument, it was that when the writer refers to treason or felony the or is a misprint or mistake for and. If so, it is remarkable that it is repeated three times in the article and has misled, to name only a few, COKE,

I

(22) c. 38, p. 37c.

HALE and BLACKSTONE, all of whom name misprision of felony as a misdemeanour while at the same time they deal with misprision of treason as quite a separate offence. I cannot think that either STAUNDFORD or the editor of his work were under any misapprehension on this matter. It is stated to be an offence by FITZHERBERT who was a judge of the Common Pleas from 1522 to 1538. He was the author of THE NATURA BREVIUM, and has always been regarded as a writer of the highest authority. It is in his book entitled L'OFFICE ET AUTORITÉ DE JUSTICES DE PEACE, that he deals with this offence. An English edition of this book according to DR. ROUND was first published in 1538 and frequently republished with additions by RICHARD CROMPTON, a Bencher of the Middle Temple, and it may well be that some part of the article on misprision was added by the editor, as he quotes STAUNDFORD in support. That there seem to have been at least six editions of this work, the last in 1617, shows the respect in which it was held. The offence was discussed in detail by DALTON in his COUNTRY JUSTICE, first published, again according to DR. ROUND, in 1618, and held in such high repute that it was constantly republished, the last edition being dated 1742. It may, indeed, be described as the eighteenth century "STONE". Then the offence is described and discussed in detail by COKE in his 3rd INSTITUTE (c.lxv, p. 139) and at even greater length by SIR MATTHEW HALE (23), who became a judge of the Common Pleas in 1654 and was afterwards Lord Chief Justice of the King's Bench from 1671 to 1676. His works on the PLEAS OF THE CROWN have always been regarded as of the highest authority and are still cited at the present day. BLACKSTONE deals with the matter (24), quite shortly defining the offence as the concealment of a felony which a man knows but never assented to; for if he assented this makes him either principal or accessory. Before parting with the writers of the eighteenth century, and there are several others, all to the same effect, it is worth noticing M'Daniel's Case (25). All the judges had considered at Serjeant's Inn the effect of a special verdict returned by a jury at the Newgate Sessions and FOSTER, J., who afterwards delivered the judgment, quoted as an authority (26):

> "LORD HALE saith (1 Hale 374) 'Misprision of felony is concealing a felony which a man knoweth, but never consented to; for if he consented, he is either principal or accessary'."

It appears to me, therefore, to be beyond question that at least by the middle of the eighteenth century it was firmly established that misprision of felony was an offence. But I would add that it is not so clear whether the concealment of knowledge that an offence was contemplated is indictable. This, indeed, is stated by LAMBARD, DALTON and HAWKINS as included in the offence of misprision but not by any other authority. One can well understand the opinion that it ought to be. It arises out of the recognition that it is the duty of every citizen to assist in the detection and suppression of crime, and that prevention is better than cure. The offence may be said to be in the same category as refusing to aid in arresting a suspect when called on by an officer of the law or refusing to comply with the sheriff's call on the posse comitatus or failing to take part in the hue and cry, but to hold that there was a positive duty to inform the executive that a crime was or might be contemplated might in practice cause many difficulties and as, except for the observations of the three writers to whom I have referred, there is otherwise no authority on the point as at present advised, I hesitate to hold that it is established there is such a duty.

But it is contended that the offence is obsolete or fallen in desuetude. On this subject we have the guidance of LORD SUMNER in Bowman v. Secular Society, Ltd. (27), where he said:

---

(23) In 1 PLEAS OF THE CROWN, c. xxviii, p. 371 et seq.
(24) In 4 COMMENTARIES, Ch. 9, p. 121.
(25) (1755), 19 State Tr. 745.
(26) (1755), 19 State Tr. at p. 805.
(27) [1917] A.C. at p. 454.

A "If [a] maxim expresses a positive rule of law, once established, though long ago, time cannot abolish it nor disfavour make it obsolete."

This in no way detracts from the wisdom of BACON who, in his essay on JUDICATURE, observes:

"let penal laws, if they have been sleepers of long, or if they be grown B unfit for the present time, be by wise judges confined in the execution," which seems to me to mean that they should be sparingly enforced. But this law has not been sleeping for a long time. So far I have traced it to the end of the eighteenth century. No doubt it was seldom prosecuted in the nineteenth century, but we have been referred to a report of a charge to the Grand Jury at York by THOMPSON, B., in 1813 (28), from which it appears that, in his opinion, misprision C of felony was indictable as a misdemeanour, and even more striking is it that JOSEPH CHITTY, whose pre-eminence as a pleader both in civil and criminal matters and as an author on many branches of the law is well known, in his second edition of CRIMINAL LAW (29) sets out one for this offence with a note that it was settled by a very able Crown lawyer. CHITTY'S works were essentially working books for practitioners, and it is most unlikely that he would have D included a precedent for this offence if by this time, 1826, it was regarded as obsolete. Then we were supplied with a report of a charge given to the Grand Jury of Sussex in 1852 by PARKE, B., one of the greatest Victorian judges, in which he said (30) it should be known that failure to give information as to felonies to the authorities, known to the law as misprision of felony, was a very serious offence. That law, he said, had certainly fallen into desuetude, E but it was very necessary it should be known that it still existed and that, during the previous twenty years, he had been called on to make use of it. In 1866, LORD WESTBURY referred to misprision of felony in his speech in Williams v. Bayley (31), though he added a dictum with regard to the constituents of the offence that the concealment must be for the benefit of the person concealing the matter. It seems that his Lordship was momentarily confusing F misprision with compounding a felony, which was what the case was concerned with and, in my opinion, there is no authority for that dictum and it matters not what induces the concealment. This was the view of the Supreme Court of Victoria, whose careful and interesting judgment on this subject in R. v. Crimmins (32) was delivered as recently as February, 1959. The court emphatically affirmed the existence of the offence at the present day. Finally, it is to be ob- G served that SIR FITZJAMES STEPHEN in 1877 described the offence in his DIGEST OF CRIMINAL LAW (33). Though, in my opinion, the offence should be sparingly prosecuted, I am by no means prepared to say that it has no use in our criminal law at the present day; it may well be used when there is technical difficulty in framing a charge of being an accessory after the fact to a felony, and counsel who had acted for the prosecution told us that was the reason for using it H in the instant case. Moreover, it is almost a commonplace in these days to find the police appealing for persons whom they think must be able to throw light on some serious crime to come forward and give their assistance. And there have been instances quite recently in wounding cases arising out of gang warfare of refusing to assist the police as to the identity of the attackers, whether from fear of reprisals or from a mistaken sense of loyalty. It is very easy to I poke ridicule at the offence and say that it obliges people to inform against a boy stealing an apple. The law is nowadays administered with dignity and common sense. And if it is said it obliges a father to inform against his son, or vice versa, I would answer that, in the case of a really heinous crime, be it so.

In my opinion, therefore, misprision of felony is today an indictable misdemeanour at common law, and a person is guilty of the crime if, knowing

(28) See 31 State Tr. at p. 969.
(29) Vol. 2, p. 232.
(30) See "The Times", Mar. 18, 1852.
(31) (1866), L.R. 1 H.L. at p. 220.
(32) [1959] V.L.R. 270.
(33) In art. 157, p. 93.

that a felony has been committed, he conceals his knowledge from those responsible for the preservation of the peace, be they constables or justices, within a reasonable time and having a reasonable opportunity for so doing. What is a reasonable time and opportunity is a question of fact for a jury and also whether the knowledge that he has is so definite that it ought to be disclosed. A man is neither bound nor would he be wise to disclose rumours or mere gossip, but, if facts are within his knowledge that would materially assist in the detection and arrest of a felon, he must disclose them as it is a duty he owes to the state. The gist of the offence is concealment which may be passive, that is mere non-disclosure, or active in destroying or hiding evidence, though in the latter case it would probably often amount to being an accessory after the fact, and I would add that, where it is thought possible and proper to charge a person as an accessory, it is preferable to do so rather than have recourse to the offence of misprision. I would also add that it matters not what induces the concealment and that the dictum of LORD WESTBURY referred to above should be regarded as incorrect.

My Lords, I would dismiss the appeal.

LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON: My Lords, in my opinion, (i) there is such an offence as misprision of felony, and (ii) active concealment is not an essential ingredient of that offence. I gratefully adopt the following passage in the judgment of the Supreme Court of Victoria (SIR EDMUND HERRING, C.J., O'BRYAN and DEAN, JJ.) in R. v. Crimmins (34):

> "In our opinion . . . the citizen's duty to disclose . . . any treason or felony, of which he has knowledge, remains the same and is still as binding upon him as it was in the early days of the common law. And no doubt cases will arise, from time to time, when the public interest will be best served by the citizen, who fails in this duty, being prosecuted for misprision of felony. There is certainly no justification for the view that such a prosecution is no longer available to the Crown. The question then is: what are the constituent elements of the crime? We think they are really determined by what we have already said. The offence lies in the failure to perform the duty to disclose . . . And so it matters not what induced the citizen concerned not to do his duty."

I refrain from dealing with the earlier authorities on this important matter, as they have been fully discussed in the speeches of my noble and learned friends, LORD DENNING and LORD GODDARD. As to the recent authorities, although I agree with the last sentence in the passage which I have quoted from the judgment in R. v. Crimmins (34), I have much sympathy with the view recently expressed by SLADE, J., when summing-up to the jury in R. v. Wilde at Leeds autumn assizes on Dec. 14, 1959. That case is shortly reported in the CRIMINAL LAW REVIEW, 1960, p. 116, and a transcript was provided for your Lordships' use. The learned judge introduced a limitation in putting to the jury the question whether the accused men had failed in their duty to disclose certain thefts by a woman employee. He put the question thus (35):

> "Has the prosecution proved beyond reasonable doubt . . . that the nature and extent of her thefts, as known to the defendants, was such that a reasonable man would consider it his duty to inform . . . the police?"

And he added: "I put that in to eliminate the case of the small boy and the windfalls." Earlier, the learned judge had said:

> "Counsel . . . urged upon me not to regard as a sufficiently serious offence to require reporting to the police if you saw, for example, a fifteen years old boy picking up a couple of windfalls in your garden and you knew that in fact he had stolen them. In law it is as much a felony as the most serious

(34) [1959] V.L.R. at p. 272. (35) See [1960] Crim. L.R. at p. 118.

A bank robbery. I have endeavoured, because I prefer to err, if at all, in favour of the accused, to draft a question to embody that limitation."

My Lords, I think the learned judge erred in law in importing that limitation into the offence of misprision of felony; but his words may well be regarded as a valuable indication of the type of case in which a prosecution for that offence is appropriate.

B

I would dismiss the appeal.

LORD MORRIS OF BORTH-Y-GEST: My Lords, it was contended on behalf of the appellant that no such offence as misprision of felony has existed in English criminal law and that the manifold references to its supposed existence have been based on mistaken repetitions of error or misapprehension which was C contained in STAUNDFORD'S PLEES DEL CORONE. Alternatively, it was contended that, if this common law misdemeanour was ever known to the law, it has now become obsolete so that today no such offence exists. I have had the privilege of reading in advance the speeches which have been delivered by my noble and learned friends, LORD DENNING and LORD GODDARD, and I concur with the view that for centuries misprision of felony has been recognised as an offence. D I find no convincing justification of the suggestion that STAUNDFORD made a misstatement or a mistake. Furthermore, the words of COKE and of HALE and of BLACKSTONE are as clear as their authority is massive. Not only have they declared that there is such an offence, but they have shown that it consists in the concealment of a felony of which a man knows though he has not assented to it. The authorities do not support the view that some active concealment E must be proved. If there is knowledge that a felony has been committed, then the mere failure and omission to report and disclose what is actually known is an offence. The suggestion contained at one point in the speech of LORD WESTBURY in Williams v. Bayley (36) that the concealment must be of advantage or a source of profit is not founded on authority. The question whether any offence is committed if there is a failure to disclose knowledge that some felony is being F planned and projected does not now call for decision. It may well be that long periods passed during which there were no recorded convictions for this offence, but this does not warrant an assumption that, in some way or by some process, the law became changed. The references in M'Daniel's Case (37), in the charge of THOMPSON, B., (38) in 1813 and in the charge of PARKE, B., (39) in 1852, demonstrate that judges regarded the offence as existing at those dates and G several examples of convictions of the offence within this century have been cited. Situations and circumstances can be postulated in which it can be urged that it would seem to run counter to the fitness of things to acknowledge that the offence has been committed. On the other hand, situations and circumstances can also be contemplated in which a failure to disclose knowledge would be condemned as being outrageous. The fact that prosecutions have been, and H doubtless will continue to be, infrequent demonstrates that the law is the handmaid of reason.

I would dismiss the appeal.

LORD GUEST: My Lords, the Court of Criminal Appeal granted leave to appeal to the House of Lords limited to the following points: (i) Whether I there is such an offence as misprision of felony: (ii) Whether active concealment is an essential ingredient of that offence.

On the first question, I agree with the opinion expressed by my noble and learned friend, LORD GODDARD, that the answer to this question must be "Yes" for the reasons given by him.

On the second question, I also agree with your Lordships who have preceded me that the answer is "No". Reference has already been made to the numerous

(36) (1866), L.R. 1 H.L. at p. 220.
(37) (1755), 19 State Tr. 745.
(38) (1813), 31 State Tr. at p. 969.
(39) See "The Times", Mar. 18, 1852.

institutional writers who have defined this offence, and I cannot find in these writers any statement that active steps of concealment are required to constitute the offence. STAUNDFORD'S PLEES DEL CORONE (1607), p. 37c: A

> "Misprision is properly when anyone knows or understands, that another has committed treason or felony, and will not disclose it to the King, or his Council, or to any magistrate, and so conceals the offence; this is misprision, which offence BRACTON has put amongst the offences of treason, because it seemed to him, that concealments sometimes, were closer to treason, than to a misprision, and on that account these are his words:—" B

He then quotes from BRACTON the passage already cited. The writers who follow in describing misprision of felony refer to the failure to disclose the commission of a felony as an offence of omission. If more active steps were required to constitute the offence of misprision of felony, this would equiparate the offence to that of being accessory after the fact which is an entirely distinct offence. SIR BASIL NIELD, in his summing-up to the jury, incorporated in his definition of misprision of felony the conception of deliberate concealment which would suggest that the concealment must be wilful. There is no, in my opinion, sufficient justification in the authorities for limiting the offence in this way. The offence consists in a mere omission to disclose a felony. C D

SIR BASIL NIELD also directed the jury that the concealment must be for gain or reward to the misprisor. I have no doubt that this direction was derived from an expression of an obiter dictum of LORD WESTBURY in Williams v. Bayley (40), where he said:

> "If men were permitted to trade upon the knowledge of a crime, and to convert their privity to that crime into an occasion of advantage, no doubt a great legal and a great moral offence would be committed. And that is what, I apprehend, the old rule of law intended to convey when it embodied the principle under words which have now somewhat passed into desuetude, namely, 'misprision of felony.' That was a case when a man, instead of performing his public duty, and giving information to the public authorities of a crime that he was aware of, concealed his knowledge, and, farther, converted it into a source of emolument to himself." E F

There is, in my opinion, no warrant for this limitation and the direction which was, of course, favourable to the accused did not correctly express the law.

I would for these reasons refuse the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Church, Adams, Tatham & Co. (for the appellant); Director of Public Prosecutions.

[Reported by G. A. KIDNER, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

---

(40) (1866), L.R. 1 H.L. at p. 220.

A

MITCHELL AND ANOTHER (INSPECTORS OF TAXES) v. ROSS.

MITCHELL AND ANOTHER (INSPECTORS OF TAXES) v. HIRTENSTEIN.

MITCHELL AND ANOTHER (INSPECTORS OF TAXES) v. MARSHALL.

B

TAYLOR-GOOBY (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. TARNESBY.

TAYLOR-GOOBY AND ANOTHER (INSPECTORS OF TAXES) v. DREW.

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Viscount Simonds, Lord Radcliffe, Lord Tucker, Lord Cohen and Lord Guest), May 11, 12, 15, July 6, 1961.]

C

Income Tax—Deduction in computing profits—Expenses—Medical specialist in private practice—Holder of part-time appointments as consultant—Profits of office assessable under Sch. E—Expenses not deductible under Sch. E—Whether deductible as expenses of profession under Sch. D—Income Tax Act, 1952 (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2 c. 10), s. 122 (Sch. D, para. 1, proviso), s. 156 (Sch. E, para. 2).

D

A consultant radiologist held an appointment as a part-time consultant under the National Health Service and had also private patients. He was assessed to income tax under Sch. E (Income Tax Act, 1952, s. 156) in respect of the profits or gains arising from his part-time appointment and under Sch. D (Income Tax Act, 1952, s. 122) in respect of the profits or gains arising from his private practice. It was conceded that the profits from the part-time appointment were those of a public office properly assessable under Sch. E. It was found as a fact that the holding of the part-time appointment was a necessary part of the exercise of the taxpayer's profession. The question arose whether expenses incurred in earning the profits and gains assessable under Sch. E were, in so far as they were not allowable under that Schedule, deductible for the purpose of the assessment under Sch. D.

E

F

Held: expenses incurred in relation to the office taxable under Sch. E and disallowed under that Schedule were not allowable as expenses of earning the profits of the profession taxable under Sch. D, since the two Schedules were mutually exclusive; and although the holding of the part-time appointment had been found to be a necessary part of the exercise of the profession, yet the consequence was merely that the taxpayer had two distinct taxable sources of income, not that expenses of the office could be regarded as deductible expenses in computing for tax purposes the profits of the profession.

G

Fry v. Salisbury House Estate, Ltd. ([1930] All E.R. Rep. 538) applied.

Hughes v. Bank of New Zealand ([1938] 1 All E.R. 778) distinguished.

Decision of the COURT OF APPEAL ([1960] 2 All E.R. 218) reversed.

H

[As to the position of consultants and specialists in relation to the hospital authority, see 26 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 19, 20, para. 27.

As to what constitutes an office within Sch. E, s. 156 of the Income Tax Act, 1952, as amended by s. 10 of the Finance Act, 1956, see 20 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 306, para. 563; and as to expenses incurred for the purposes of a profession, see ibid., 166-170, paras. 286-292; and for cases on the subjects, see 28 DIGEST (Repl.) 222 et seq., 955 et seq.; 87 et seq., 329 et seq.

For the Income Tax Act, 1952, s. 122 and s. 156, see 31 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 112, 149.]

I

Cases referred to:

Fry v. Salisbury House Estate, Ltd., Jones v. City of London Real Property Co., Ltd., [1930] All E.R. Rep. 538; [1930] A.C. 432; 99 L.J.K.B. 403; 143 L.T. 77; 15 Tax Cas. 266; 28 Digest (Repl.) 33, 148.

BIBL. LONDIN UNIV

Hughes v. Bank of New Zealand, [1938] 1 All E.R. 778; [1938] A.C. 366; 107 L.J.K.B. 306; 158 L.T. 463; 21 Tax Cas. 472; 28 Digest (Repl.) 264, 1174. A

Appeals.

Consolidated appeals by the Crown and cross-appeals by the taxpayers from orders of the Court of Appeal (LORD EVERSHED, M.R., PEARCE and HARMAN, L.JJ.), dated Mar. 24, 1960, and reported [1960] 2 All E.R. 218, affirming in part and reversing in part orders of UPJOHN, J., dated July 21, 1959, and reported [1959] 3 All E.R. 341, on Cases Stated by the Commissioners for the Special Purposes of the Income Tax Acts under the Income Tax Act, 1952, s. 64. The first taxpayer, Dr. Harold Leslie Ross, who for the material years held a part-time appointment as a consultant radiologist to the Birmingham Regional Hospital Board, appealed to the Special Commissioners of Income Tax against assessments to income tax as follows: for 1951-52 under Sch. E £3,024; for 1952-53 under Sch. E £3,276 and under Sch. D £1,500; for 1953-54 under Sch. E £3,385 and under Sch. D £1,000; and for 1954-55 under Sch. D £1,000. The second taxpayer, Dr. Arnost Hirtenstein, held a part-time appointment as a consultant ophthalmologist to the Birmingham Regional Hospital Board and also undertook certain lecture work to nurses. The third taxpayer, Dr. Alfred Gordon Marshall, held a part-time appointment as consultant pathologist to the Birmingham Regional Hospital Board. The fourth taxpayer, Dr. Herman Peter Tarnesby, held two part-time appointments as a psychiatrist, one with the North West Metropolitan Regional Hospital Board and one as clinical assistant in the Department of Psychological Medicine of the West London Hospital, a teaching hospital. He also undertook work as a locum tenens in respect of national health appointments. The fifth taxpayer, Mr. Charles Edwin Drew, held three appointments as a consultant thoracic surgeon: (i) with the Westminster Hospital, a teaching hospital; (ii) with the South West Metropolitan Regional Hospital Board; and (iii) as chief assistant at the Brompton Hospital for Diseases of the Chest. He also undertook certain locum-tenens work in respect of national health appointments and also lectured to medical students. All the taxpayers had private patients. All the taxpayers' cases raised similar questions of principle.

The Attorney-General (Sir Reginald Manningham-Buller, Q.C.), F. N. Bucher, Q.C., E. Blanshard Stamp and A. S. Orr for the Crown.

Heyworth Talbot, Q.C., and J. L. Creese for the taxpayers.

Their Lordships took time for consideration.

July 16. The following opinions were read.

VISCOUNT SIMONDS: My Lords, these consolidated appeals and cross-appeals raise a question of general importance to medical specialists who hold appointments as part-time consultants under the National Health Service and also have private patients. The appeals relate to assessments to income tax of five such specialists who held part-time appointments, respectively as consultant radiologist, ophthalmologist, pathologist, psychiatrist and thoracic surgeon and also engaged in private practice. I will consider the case of Dr. Harold Leslie Ross, a consultant radiologist to the Birmingham Regional Hospital Board. The other cases stand or fall with his. Dr. Ross, having been assessed to income tax under the Income Tax Act, 1952, Sch. E, in respect of the profits and gains arising from his part-time appointment and under Sch. D in respect of the profits and gains arising from his private practice, appealed against the assessments to the Special Commissioners on two grounds. He claimed, in the first place, that he should be assessed in respect of the whole of his profits and gains under Sch. D, and, in the second place, that, if this claim was not upheld, he was entitled in the computation of his liability under Sch. D to deduct the expenses incurred in the exercise of his appointment to the extent that they were

A not allowed under Sch. E. The first of these two claims was not maintained before this House, learned counsel conceding that an appointment under the National Health Service to such a post as that held by Dr. Ross fell within Sch. E and that an assessment to tax must accordingly be made under that Schedule. In my opinion, the concession was rightly made and the opposite view was not arguable. I may add here that some subsidiary questions were B raised as to the category into which the fees earned by so-called domiciliary visits and "locum-tenens" services fell. But these matters also are no longer in issue.

The single question, therefore, that remains is whether expenses incurred in earning the profits and gains which are assessable under Sch. E are, so far as they are not allowed in that assessment, deductible for the purpose of the C assessment under Sch. D. The Special Commissioners held that they are, UPJOHN, J., on Case Stated that they are not, and the Court of Appeal on appeal from him that they are. My Lords, in my opinion, UPJOHN, J., was right, and I can state my reasons shortly.

I regard it as fundamental and well-settled law that the Schedules to the Income Tax Acts are mutually exclusive and that the specific Schedules A, D B, C and E, and the rules which respectively regulate them, afford a complete code for each class of income, dealing with allowances, deductions and exemptions relating to them respectively. Accordingly, when it is conceded, as it has to be conceded, that Dr. Ross was assessable under Sch. E and also Sch. D, I cannot look further than the Rules under Sch. E to determine his liability under that Schedule and the Rules under Sch. D to determine his liability under that E Schedule. It was found by the Special Commissioners, and much importance was attached to the finding, that > "at all material times Dr. Ross exercised the profession of consultant radiologist, his part-time hospital appointments being a necessary part of the exercise of that profession and merely incidental thereto, notwithstanding F that a great deal of his time was thereby taken up."

But this means no more than that it was necessary, if he was to carry on his profession, that he should accept a post, in respect of which he would be assessable under Sch. E. He would, therefore, have two taxable sources of income, but that fact lends no support to the view that he can deduct expenses incurred G in respect of income assessed under one Schedule from income assessed under another. It appears to me, if I may say so with the greatest respect to the Court of Appeal, that they have given undue weight to the undoubted fact that Dr. Ross carried on the profession of a radiologist whether he was exercising his appointment or seeing private patients, but ignored the fact that, for income tax purposes, he was, no less undoubtedly, not engaged in a single activity. H He may be called a consultant radiologist and so he is, but his activities (and that is what matters) are for tax purposes those of a radiologist holding an employment and a radiologist engaging in private practice. In respect of the former, the amount that he can deduct from his emoluments for tax purposes is governed by r. 7 in Sch. 9 to the Income Tax Act, 1952; in respect of the latter, s. 137 of the same Act, which is expressed in negative terms, affords no I grounds for the claim that expenses incurred in earning profits or gains under another Schedule can be brought into account. In my opinion, the Court of Appeal were in error in thinking that, in order to reach this conclusion, some gloss must be put on the words of the Act. On the contrary, without writing into the Act words that are not there (and, if they were there, might be difficult to harmonise with the scheme of taxation under the several Schedules), I do not see how the claim of Dr. Ross can be sustained. Support is given to this view by a consideration of s. 18 of the Finance Act, 1922. That section, by sub-s. (1), provided that such profits or gains arising or accruing to any person from an office, employment or pension as were, under the Income Tax Act, 1918, chargeable to income tax under Sch. D (other than as therein mentioned) should cease to be chargeable under that Schedule and should be chargeable to tax under Sch. E, and that the Rules applicable to that Schedule should apply accordingly subject to the provisions of that Act, and, by sub-s. (7), that income tax in respect of profits or gains which would, but for the provisions of that section, have been chargeable under Sch. D for the year 1922-23, might be charged for that year either under Sch. D or under Sch. E, but the tax should in all cases be computed in accordance with the provisions and Rules applicable to Sch. E, as amended by that Act. I find this provision quite inconsistent with the view that any other rules than those applicable to Sch. E can be applied to an assessment under that Schedule.

My Lords, I have said that the conclusion to which I have come in the present case accords with well-settled law. I need refer only to Fry v. Salisbury House Estate, Ltd., Jones v. City of London Real Property Co., Ltd. (1). It is a familiar case which I can state very shortly. The respondent company, being the owner of a block of buildings which was let out as unfurnished offices to tenants, was assessed to tax under Sch. A. It provided certain services, such as heating and cleaning, at an additional charge, and admitted its liability to assessment under Sch. D in respect of its profits from these services. The Crown, however, claimed, in making the assessment under Sch. D, to include the rents of the offices as part of the receipts of the trade, making allowance for tax assessed under Sch. A. It was held that the rents were profits arising from the ownership of land in respect of which the assessment under Sch. A was exhaustive, that they, therefore, could not be included in the assessment under Sch. D as trade receipts of the company. I will cite a single passage from the speech of LORD ATKIN (2):

> "I think that this case should be decided in favour of the respondents on the simple ground that annual income derived from the ownership of lands, tenements, and hereditaments can only be assessed under Sch. A and in accordance with the rules of that Schedule. [The italics are mine.] In my opinion it makes no difference that the income so derived forms part of the annual profits of a trading concern. For the purpose of assessing such profits for the purpose of Sch. D the income so derived is not to be brought into account. The option of the revenue authorities to assess under whichever schedule they prefer in my opinion does not exist and is inconsistent with the provisions of the Income Tax Acts throughout their history."

Here, my Lords, is conclusive authority for the proposition that the scheme of the Income Tax Acts demands that each source of profit should be assessed under the appropriate schedule and in accordance with the rules applicable to that schedule alone.

It was, however, urged by the respondents that the authority of Fry v. Salisbury House Estate, Ltd. (1) had been qualified by a later decision of this House in Hughes v. Bank of New Zealand (3). This view, which found favour with the Court of Appeal, cannot, in my opinion, be supported. It may be noted that LORD ATKIN himself, and also LORD MACMILLAN who took part in the earlier case heard the later case also. The leading, indeed the only, speech was delivered by LORD THANKERTON, the other noble and learned Lords concurring. But neither in the argument of counsel as reported nor in the speech of LORD THANKERTON was any mention made of the Salisbury House case (1). I can only suppose that this was because it did not occur to anyone that any encroachment was being made on the broad principle laid down in that case. In fact, I do not think that there was, and that UPJOHN, J., was right when, after stating the decision in Hughes' case (3) he said (4):

(1) [1930] All E.R. Rep. 538; 15 Tax Cas. 266.
(2) [1930] All E.R. Rep. at p. 551; 15 Tax Cas. at p. 318.
(3) [1938] 1 All E.R. 778; 21 Tax Cas. 472. (4) [1959] 3 All E.R. at p. 349.

A "That seems to me a very different case and does not lay down any principle which assists me in this case."

In that case, the Bank of New Zealand, which was registered and resident in New Zealand, carried on banking business at a branch in London. It was assessed to tax on the profits arising from its trade exercised in London under Case I of Sch. D to the Act of 1918 for the financial year 1928-29 in the sum of B £94,448. It possessed as part of the assets of its London branch certain five per cent. war loan and other stocks and securities which had been purchased out of the floating capital of the London branch and other moneys obtained in New Zealand, to borrow which it had expended £41,262. The interest on the war loan and other stocks amounted to £78,556 for the period in question. Two questions arose and were answered. In the first place, it was held that the C interest on the stocks in question being exempt from tax under s. 46 of the Income Tax Act, 1918, or as the case might be, did not become taxable by being included in trading profits assessable under Case I of Sch. D. Secondly, it was held that the bank was entitled for the purpose of assessment to deduct from its profits its proper trading expenses including therein the sum of £41,262 being the expenses particularly attributable to the earning of the sum of D £78,556 of interest notwithstanding that the latter sum was exempt from taxation. It was presumably the second holding on which the respondents relied. But it appears to me that the analogy—for it is no more—fails in this, that in Hughes' case (5) the disbursements and expenses in question were found to be disbursements and expenses laid out for the purpose of the trade which was the subject-matter of taxation under Sch. D. That was not so in the present E case. If it were so, all the disbursements and expenses of Dr. Ross laid out for the purposes of his office could be deducted in computing his Sch. D profits and not merely the part of those expenses disallowed in computing his Sch. E profits. This conclusion would be at direct variance with the provisions of s. 137 of the Act of 1952, for, ex hypothesi, they were not exclusively laid out or expended for the purpose of the profession the profits of which were taxable under F Sch. D. I cannot accept the contention that Hughes' case (5) in any way qualifies the principle laid down in the Salisbury House case (6).

Finally, it was urged that great administrative difficulties arise from a division of expenses incurred in the course of engaging in private practice and carrying out the duties of an appointment. That may be so, though it is a commonplace that the allowance of expenses can seldom be a matter of scientific precision. G But, be the difficulties great or small, the language of the Act is, in my opinion, too plain to allow them to prevail.

The appeals must in each case be allowed and the cross-appeals dismissed and the orders of UPJOHN, J., restored. The respondents must pay the Crown's costs here and below.

H LORD RADCLIFFE: My Lords, these appeals, though far-reaching in their consequences, have come down to a very short point. If a professional man holds an appointment that is a public office or employment of profit or is otherwise an office or employment, tax in respect of which is chargeable under Sch. E to the Income Tax Act, 1952, and the holding of that employment is found to be a necessary part of the exercise of his profession and merely incidental I thereto, is he entitled to set against any receipts of his profession taxed under Sch. D such expenses incurred in respect of this Sch. E appointment as are not allowable under the rule of that Schedule that governs the deduction of expenses?

It has taken some time for the case to come down to this point. Before the Special Commissioners, the High Court and the Court of Appeal, it was much in debate whether the appointments now in question, part-time appointments under the National Health Service, constituted public offices or offices at all within the meaning of Sch. E and, apart from that, whether fees in respect of certain special activities arising out of the appointments, domiciliary visits and locum-tenens work, were attributable to those offices. The Special Commissioners, by a process of reasoning that I cannot follow and in reliance on two judicial decisions which were, I think, irrelevant, decided that the appointments under the National Health Service were offices within the meaning of Sch. E, but, nevertheless, thought themselves bound to hold that the profits and gains arising therefrom should be assessed as part of the professional earnings under Case II of Sch. D. The respondents have not sought to argue that this could be an admissible result. The appeals came before UPJOHN, J., in the High Court. In his judgment, with which I may say that I entirely agree, he held that the appointments were public offices; that the respondents were, accordingly, assessable in respect of the profits arising therefrom under Sch. E, not Sch. D; and that the expenses attendant on the exercise of the office must be deducted under the Rules applicable to Sch. E, but not under any rule found in any other Schedule. The Court of Appeal agreed with the Special Commissioners and UPJOHN, J., that these appointments were offices, and agreed with the learned judge that the profits of these offices must be charged under Sch. E. They held, however, that outgoings incurred in respect of the offices ought to be treated as allowable deductions in computing professional earnings under Sch. D to the extent that they were not allowed as deductions under Sch. E. I am afraid that I have rather paraphrased their order in stating it as I have, but I think that I have given the substance of its meaning. One, but not the only one, of my difficulties in looking at the matter in this way is that I do not see why it is only the balance of unallowed deductions that is thus thrown on Sch. D; but perhaps a judgment phrased in such a form does something to obscure the inescapable fact that Sch. D and Sch. E each contains its own independent rule about the allowance of expenses in the assessment of profits and that it is insuperably difficult to see how one item of profit can be subject at one and the same time to the inconsistent rules of both Schedules. On the appeal before this House, the respondents did not contend that the appointments were not offices or that a Sch. E assessment in respect of them was not correct or that there was any material difference between the various kinds of fee or remuneration that were received in respect of the appointments. The argument was, therefore, confined to this question, whether the judgments of the Court of Appeal were correct in holding that Sch. D receipts could have set against them some expenses that were incurred in obtaining Sch. E earnings. I appreciate, of course, that such a way of stating the problem does not do justice to the subtler conception which the respondents would have us accept. They want to say that, on the basis of the facts found in these cases, all the expenses of the "profession", including what I may call the Sch. E branch, are ultimately Sch. D expenses, and it is of no particular importance that some of them have already been taken account of in arriving at the assessable figure of Sch. E profits.

(5) [1938] 1 All E.R. 778; 21 Tax Cas. 472.
(6) [1930] All E.R. Rep. 538; 15 Tax Cas. 266.

My Lords, in my opinion, this conception is untenable. I think that it is contrary to what the Income Tax Act itself requires and I think it inconsistent with those rules about the structure of the taxing system and its necessary implications which we conveniently associate with the speeches made in this House in Fry v. Salisbury House Estate, Ltd., Jones v. City of London Real Property Co., Ltd. (7). I do not mean, of course, that those rules originated with that decision, but they are there recognised and expressed in what I have always thought to be conclusive form. Generally speaking, the five Schedules of taxable categories are distinguished from each other by distinctions as to the nature of the source from which the chargeable profit arises. The source may be property in the ordinary sense such as land, securities, copyright, office, or it may be an activity sufficiently coherent, trade or profession, for example, to be

(7) [1930] All E.R. Rep. 538; 15 Tax Cas. 266.

A regarded as itself the stock on which profits grow. That is not an exhaustive account, but it is, I think, a sufficient general introduction. Before you can assess a profit to tax, you must be sure that you have properly identified its source or other description according to the correct Schedule; but, once you have done that, it is obligatory that it should be charged, if at all, under that Schedule and strictly in accordance with the Rules that are there laid down for B assessments under it. It is a necessary consequence of this conception that the sources of profit in the different Schedules are mutually exclusive. This is what VISCOUNT DUNEDIN said in the Salisbury House case (8), when he accepted the proposition that > "when income is dealt with in the proper schedule the same income cannot be dealt with again under another schedule."

C

Also it is what LORD ATKIN said (9):

> ". . . the dominance of each Schedule, A, B, C, and E, over its own subject-matter is confirmed by reference to the sections and rules which respectively regulate them in the Act of 1842. They afford a complete code for each class of income dealing with allowances and exemptions, with the D mode of assessment and with the officials whose duty it is to make the assessments."

I do not see how anyone can doubt these propositions today; but, if they are accepted, they seem to me to rule out the idea that, though the respondents' appointments were offices and so chargeable under Sch. E, they could also form a part or a branch of the "profession" that is the subject of charge under E Sch. D. And yet that is the whole case. The profession, for this purpose, is a coherent series of activities of a particular character giving rise to assessable profits; it is not an abstract description in a dictionary. If the activities relating to the employment in the office are excluded, as they must be because they belong to Sch. E, the profession the profits of which are assessable under F Sch. D must consist only of the remaining activities. And, if that is so, the Rules of Sch. D (see s. 137 (a) of the Income Tax Act, 1952) prohibit the deduction in that assessment of any expenses incurred in relation to the activities of the office, since such expenses are not "wholly and exclusively laid out . . . for the purposes of the . . . profession . . ."

I am bound to say, therefore, that, in my opinion, the Court of Appeal's G judgment is wrong. I do not want, of course, to make any detailed criticisms of individual judgments; but, out of respect for what has been said, I ought to state briefly my view on the two main considerations that were, I think, responsible for the shape that those judgments took. There is, first, what has been called the commissioners' special finding that the hospital appointments were a necessary part of the exercise of the respondents' profession and merely H incidental thereto. The "necessity" here referred to is a practical necessity. Actually, I do not think that there is anything really special about this finding. So far as I can see, the proposition that the respondents wish to maintain would be just the same if there had been a finding to the effect that Dr. Ross, for example, carried on the profession of a consultant radiologist and that it was a reasonable and proper incident of that profession to hold a part-time appointment under the National Health Service. However that may be, I regard the I finding as irrelevant to the decision of the case, once it is accepted that the scheme of the tax code necessitates mutual exclusiveness between "profession" and "office" and the assessment of their profits by different sets of rules.

Then there is the decision of this House in Hughes v. Bank of New Zealand (10), which was evidently thought to amount to some qualification of what I will call the Salisbury House principle (11) and to an instance of a case in which the expenses of earning income under one Schedule (Sch. C) were treated as an allowable deduction in assessing the profits of a trade under Sch. D. The Bank of New Zealand situation (12) was certainly rather a complicated one, and it did not take Parliament long to introduce a new rule which nullified the effect of the decision. But I do not think that there is any ground for supposing that that decision was intended to introduce an exception from the Salisbury House principle (11), nor was the subject approached in that way. Again, I think that it is a misunderstanding of the case to describe it as one in which the expenses of earning income chargeable under one Schedule were allowed as a deduction in an assessment of income chargeable under another. There are no such things as the expenses of earning income chargeable under Sch. C. The Bank of New Zealand was assessed on the profits of their trade as bankers in London, which means their trade of dealing in money. Part of their trading stock, money, which they employed in London was obtained elsewhere, and the cost of obtaining it, primarily interest charges, was an unavoidable deduction in assessing the London profits. That was the strength of their case. It is true that a very small part of the interest on loans received in London which was tax free would have been chargeable direct under Sch. C, but no one seems to have attached any importance to that aspect of the matter. Nor was it, I think, important. The deductions that were claimed were not the expenses of obtaining the tax-free income but the expenses of obtaining the stock-in-trade that went into the investments that produced the income; and that is a different matter. The whole question in the Bank of New Zealand case (12) was whether anyone could see a way of eliminating from the deduction ex facie allowed by the Act a sector of the expenses of obtaining money because that money, when obtained, was put into investments that did not yield taxable income. No one could, until Parliament altered the law. The decision does not offer any useful analogy with the cases now before us, in which the argument for the Crown does not involve the putting of an unauthorised gloss on the statutory provisions, as the Court of Appeal seem to have thought, but the asking of the plain question why the words of s. 137 regulating deductions in the making of Sch. D assessments should not be given their full effect.

(8) [1930] All E.R. Rep. at p. 545; 15 Tax Cas. at p. 308.
(9) [1930] All E.R. Rep. at p. 552; 15 Tax Cas. at p. 319.
(10) [1938] 1 All E.R. 778; 21 Tax Cas. 472.

My Lords, I do not think that I need pursue the question further. I agree that these appeals must be allowed. I dare say that the respondents will feel that, in being told that the law is against them on this point, they are hardly used, and I am sorry for that. I doubt, however, whether it is possible for us in our present capacity to be sure whether their grievance is more directly with the law than with their employers, the National Health Service. I will only say with regard to some of the sympathetic observations that fell from the Master of the Rolls (LORD EVERSHED) in the Court of Appeal that I think that it might be a mistake to approach questions of this sort with the unqualified assumption that the law is anomalous if the Sch. D rule as to expenses is not in all cases available to Sch. E assessees. There may be real differences between the situations covered by the respective Schedules which justify a difference in formulas, even if the Sch. E rule is thought to be unduly restricted or too restrictively applied.

LORD TUCKER: My Lords, I agree that these appeals should be allowed for the reasons which have been stated by my noble and learned friends.

LORD COHEN: My Lords, while I agree with the Master of the Rolls (LORD EVERSHED) that the stricter standard of deductions permitted by the Rules applicable to Sch. E to the Income Tax Act, 1952, as compared with that permitted by the Rules applicable to Sch. D may operate harshly on the (11) [1930] All E.R. Rep. 538; 15 Tax Cas. 266.

(12) [1938] 1 All E.R. 778; 21 Tax Cas. 472.

A holders of offices the income from which is taxable under Sch. E and that Parliament might well consider whether and how far the considerable distinction between the two Schedules in the matter of permitted deductions is justified, I am unable to accept the construction of Income Tax Acts which the Court of Appeal have adopted in order to mitigate the hardship on the respondents to this appeal. In my opinion, the appeals must be allowed. I agree with the B reasons given by your Lordships for this conclusion and have but little to add.

It is not now disputed that each of the respondents is the holder of an office and that the profits or gains derived from that office are taxable under Sch. E. The respondents have been allowed such deductions as are permissible under r. 7 of Sch. 9 to the Income Tax Act, 1952, or the corresponding Rule applicable to Sch. E under the Act of 1918, but the deductions thus allowed are less by a C substantial amount than the respondents would have been allowed had the whole of their income from carrying on the profession of consultant been taxed under Sch. D. They, therefore, sought to deduct the disallowed balance from the income of their private practice which it was agreed was taxable under Sch. D, relying on the finding of the commissioners that (to cite the finding in the case of Dr. Ross) he

D "exercised the profession of consultant radiologist, his part-time hospital appointments being a necessary part of the exercise of that profession and merely incidental thereto, notwithstanding that a great deal of his time was thereby taken up."

UPJOHN, J., rejected this claim, but the Court of Appeal allowed it, relying on the E finding of the commissioners which I have cited and, in particular, on that part of it which I have italicised. They relied on the provisions of s. 137 of the Act of 1952 and said, in effect, that, since it was found that the part-time hospital appointment was a necessary part of the profession, it followed that any expenses incurred in connexion therewith and not allowed under Sch. E must be deducted from the receipts which must be brought into account in assessing the liability F under Sch. D. This conclusion seems to me to ignore the proviso to s. 122 (1), which directs that profits or gains arising from any office or employment shall (with certain exceptions irrelevant to the decision of this appeal) not be chargeable to tax under Sch. D. I agree with UPJOHN, J. (13), that "Once the conclusion is reached that the national health appointment is the holding and exercise of an office . . . the expenses attendant thereon G must be deducted under the Rules applicable to Sch. E and . . . under no other Schedule."

This conclusion seems to me to follow from the decision of this House in Fry v. Salisbury House Estate, Ltd., Jones v. City of London Real Property Co., Ltd. (14). Like UPJOHN, J., I will content myself with one citation from the speech of LORD ATKIN (15):

H "Believing as I do that the specific Schedules A, B, C, and E, and the rules thereunder contain definite codes applying exclusively to their respective defined subject-matters I find no ground for assessing the taxpayer under Sch. D for any property or gains which are the subject-matter of the other specific schedules."

I It is true that, in the present case, your Lordships are concerned, not with what property or gains shall be brought into tax, but with what deductions ought to be allowed, but the same principle seems to me to be applicable and to conclude the present case. The respondents relied on the decision of this House in Hughes v. Bank of New Zealand (16), but I agree with your Lordships and with UPJOHN, J., that this decision affords no assistance to the respondents. In that case, there was only one indivisible trade taxable under Sch. D. In the present case, the proviso to s. 122 (1) requires the excision of the part-time appointment from Sch. D and its taxation under Sch. E, with the consequence that the only deductions permissible in respect of the income from the office taxed under Sch. E are those allowed by the Rules applicable to Sch. E.

(13) [1959] 3 All E.R. at p. 349. (14) [1930] All E.R. Rep. 538; 15 Tax Cas. 266.
(15) [1930] All E.R. Rep. at p. 552; 15 Tax Cas. at p. 320.
(16) [1938] 1 All E.R. 778; 21 Tax Cas. 472.

I would allow the appeals.

LORD GUEST: My Lords, I agree that these appeals should be allowed for the reasons which have been stated by my noble and learned friends.

Appeals allowed; Cross-appeals dismissed.

Solicitors: Solicitor of Inland Revenue (for the Crown); Hempsons (for the taxpayers).

[Reported by G. A. KIDNER, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

R. v. FLYNN.

[COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL (Slade, Ashworth, Paull, Salmon and Howard, JJ.), June 23, 1961.]

Criminal Law—Evidence—Character of accused—Imputation from nature of defence and accused's evidence as to character of prosecution witness—Discretion—Whether cross-examination of accused as to previous convictions should be allowed—Criminal Evidence Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 36), s. 1, proviso (f) (ii).

Where the very nature of the defence to a criminal charge necessarily involves an imputation against a prosecution witness, the trial judge should, in general, exercise his discretion under s. 1 (f) (ii) of the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898*, in favour of the accused, and evidence as to his character or criminal record should be excluded (see p. 63, letter F, post).

The appellant was charged with robbing a Major X of a sum of money. His defence at his trial was, in accordance with a written statement that he had made to the police on his arrest, that Major X had made indecent suggestions to him which he had repulsed and that the major had given him the money as "hush money". He had added a paragraph to his statement to the effect that the major had indecently assaulted him. Counsel for the appellant cross-examined Major X suggesting that he had made homosexual advances to the appellant and the appellant gave evidence-in-chief to that effect. He was then cross-examined on the facts and persisted in his allegations against the major. Counsel for the prosecution asked, in the absence of the jury, for leave to cross-examine the appellant as to character under s. 1 (f) (ii) of the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898. In ruling on this submission, the recorder said "... I think as soon as [counsel] puts the accused into the witness box to tell that story on oath that entitles the prosecution to say, 'Right—you say the prosecutor is a man of bad habits, therefore the jury should be told the character you are'. In those circumstances ... this evidence is admissible, and the previous convictions can be put to the [appellant]". The appellant was then cross-examined about his previous convictions. He was convicted. On appeal, Held: although the evidence of previous convictions was admissible, its admission in the present case involved an exercise of discretion that was wrong in principle for the reason stated at letter E, above, and the conviction would be quashed.

R. v. Cook ([1959] 2 All E.R. 97) applied.

Appeal allowed.

---

* Section 1, proviso (f) (ii), is set out at p. 60, letter H, post.

A [As to cross-examination of defendant as to character, see 10 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 449-451, para. 828, especially note (e) and Supplement; and for cases on the subject, see 14 DIGEST (Repl.) 511-513, 4942, 4949, 4950, 4959, 4961, and 515, 4987, 4989, and 3rd DIGEST Supp.

For the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, s. 1, proviso (f) (ii), see 9 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 614.]

B Cases referred to:

R. v. Brown, (1960), 44 Cr. App. Rep. 181; 124 J.P. 391; 3rd Digest Supp.

R. v. Cook, [1959] 2 All E.R. 97; [1959] 2 Q.B. 340; 123 J.P. 271; 43 Cr. App. Rep. 138; [1959] 2 W.L.R. 616; 3rd Digest Supp.

R. v. Hudson, [1912] 2 K.B. 464; 81 L.J.K.B. 861; 107 L.T. 31; 76 J.P. 421; 7 Cr. App. Rep. 256; 14 Digest (Repl.) 512, 4961.

C R. v. Jenkins, (1945), 114 L.J.K.B. 425; 173 L.T. 311; 110 J.P. 86; 31 Cr. App. Rep. 1; 14 Digest (Repl.) 512, 4950.

R. v. Turner, [1944] 1 All E.R. 599; [1944] K.B. 463; 114 L.J.K.B. 45; 171 L.T. 246; 30 Cr. App. Rep. 9; 14 Digest (Repl.) 516, 5003.

Stirland v. Public Prosecutions Director, [1944] 2 All E.R. 13; [1944] A.C. 315; 113 L.J.K.B. 394; 171 L.T. 78; 109 J.P. 1; sub nom. R. v. Stirland, 30 Cr. App. Rep. 40; 14 Digest (Repl.) 511, 4949.

D

Appeal.

This was an appeal by Brian Michael Flynn against his conviction on Apr. 8, 1961, at Folkestone Borough Quarter Sessions before the recorder and a jury of robbing a Major X of £1 18s. He was sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment. The recorder granted on Apr. 25, 1961, a certificate for appeal and the case came before the court (ASHWORTH, SALMON and ELWES, JJ.) on June 12, 1961, when the matter was adjourned for hearing before a Full Court of five judges. The ground of appeal was whether the recorder was right in allowing counsel for the prosecution to cross-examine the appellant about his previous convictions in the presence of the jury and before they reached their verdict. The facts appear in the judgment of the court. The cases enumerated below were cited in argument in addition to those in the judgment*.

E

F

M. C. Parker for the appellant.

B. R. Clapham for the Crown.

SLADE, J., delivered the following judgment of the court: This appellant, Brian Michael Flynn, was convicted at Folkestone Borough Quarter Sessions of robbing a Major X of £1 18s. in money and was sentenced by the recorder to imprisonment for twelve months. He now appeals, by certificate from the learned recorder, against his conviction.

G

The only ground of appeal is whether the learned recorder was right in allowing counsel for the prosecution to cross-examine the appellant about his previous convictions, in the presence of the jury and before they reached their verdict.

H The material facts are these: The complainant was a retired army major of sixty-six years of age. He gave evidence that at about 4.30 p.m. on Friday, Mar. 3, 1961, he was urinating in a public lavatory when someone came in. He did no more than glance at him, but was conscious that this person was wearing something blue, a pullover of some kind. He had no conversation with this person and he left about fifteen seconds afterwards. As he walked along he became conscious of somebody behind him in a blue pullover whom he later picked out at an identification parade as the appellant. This man ordered him "in a menacing kind of way" to "keep on walking", and eventually directed him to a seat, where he told him he was a part-time police officer and a plain clothes officer, that he had been watching him all day, and had been in the navy and had been to a party and was "tight", and said: "Give me £3". The major, according to his evidence, showed the stranger his wallet, which was empty, and was then made to turn out his pockets and hand over £1 18s., being put in fear of the appellant, and the appellant went away "like a flash of lightning", and the complainant, having got home and told his wife, reported the matter to the police within about half an hour. The complainant concluded his evidence-in-chief by saying that this same man, about a fortnight before, had made him hand over £2, also in a public lavatory, and he said he now realised what a great mistake on his part it was not to have reported that matter to the police.

I

* I.e., R. v. Clark, [1955] 3 All E.R. 29; R. v. Flynn, (1957), 42 Cr. App. Rep. 15; R. v. Cunningham, [1958] 3 All E.R. 711.

The appellant, having been arrested, first told the police that he had an alibi, and then made a statement on Sunday, Mar. 5, that is two days after the incident, under caution, which he signed, and that statement was to the effect that the money which he had received from the major, which was 30s. and not 38s., was not received in the public streets of Folkestone but in a public lavatory. He said he went down to the lavatory and that the major, who was there, not only made indecent overtures to him which he, the appellant, repulsed, but also indecently assaulted the appellant by putting his hand over the appellant's private parts, and that the complainant then left the lavatory handing him 30s. with the words: "Don't go and say anything to anyone about it", in other words, voluntarily paid him 30s. as hush money. A little later he added an additional paragraph to the statement saying, amongst other things, that the complainant was a stranger to him, and he said then: "I forgot to say when he spoke to me up at the lavatory on the Leas the man touched my privates".

The appellant's defence at the trial was in accordance with his written statement, and it became obvious, firstly, that the duty on the prosecution was to prove (i) that the major handed over the 38s. or 30s., as the case may be, and (ii) he did so only because he was induced to do so by fear. The whole case for the appellant in accordance with his statement was that the money, 30s., was handed over without any request from the appellant, who had repulsed the overtures, but to keep his mouth shut. That was the defence which counsel, who represented him at the trial, was instructed to put forward. Of course, when the major had told his story in evidence-in-chief in the witness-box it was the duty of counsel for the appellant to put to him in cross-examination the version of how the money, whether 38s. or 30s., came to be handed over, the version given by the appellant how that money came to be handed over at all, and the court is satisfied that every single question which may be said to have been an attack on the appellant was in fact a question which was necessarily put for the proper conduct of the appellant's defence.

The Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, s. 1, provides:

> "Every person charged with an offence . . . shall be a competent witness for the defence at every stage of the proceedings . . . Provided as follows . . . (f) A person charged and called as a witness in pursuance of this Act shall not be asked, and if asked shall not be required to answer, any question tending to show that he has committed or been convicted of or been charged with any offence other than that wherewith he is then charged, or is of bad character, unless . . . (ii) he has personally or by his advocate asked questions of the witnesses for the prosecution with a view to establish his own good character, or has given evidence of his good character [and now I come to the material words] or the nature or conduct of the defence [and I emphasise the words "the nature or conduct of the defence"] is such as to involve imputations on the character of the prosecutor or the witnesses for the prosecution . . ."

The questions that were necessarily put in cross-examination of Major X by counsel for the appellant suggested to Major X that his version was completely false and that the true story was the one contained in the statement of the appellant; that involved putting to Major X (i) that he had made indecent overtures to him, and (ii) that he had even committed an indecent assault on him, and that

A of course was an imputation on the character of Major X. That having been done, counsel for the Crown asked to make a submission, very properly, in the absence of the jury, and the jury retired for the learned recorder to consider whether counsel for the Crown's application should be granted. The application was that he should be allowed to cross-examine the appellant as to his character and previous convictions because he came within the words of s. 1 proviso (f) (ii) B of the Act of 1898, or would do in view of his imputations on the character of the prosecutor, namely, Major X. The learned recorder listened to the authorities (1), and, having heard the authorities on discretion, he held that the cross-examination was admissible.

In due course the jury returned, and questions were put, and it was elicited in cross-examination that the appellant had three findings of guilt and three con- C victions for assault occasioning actual bodily harm and wilful damage, and one can imagine the highly prejudicial effect that would have on a person accused of robbery.

In due course the learned recorder summed up, and quite rightly told the jury not to allow the fact of the convictions to influence them. The jury retired, and they convicted the appellant, and the recorder sentenced him to twelve months' D imprisonment.

The recorder was then asked to give a certificate for appeal under the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, and he did so. The certificate, I am afraid, is not very enlightening because all it says is: "It is a fit case for appeal against conviction on a ground of appeal which involves questions of mixed law and fact". The notice of appeal in this case is no more enlightening, but the grounds on which E this appeal has been conducted are two—first, and this is a pure question of law, that the evidence of the prisoner's past character was inadmissible; and, second, if, contrary to that contention, it should be held that it was in law admissible, the learned recorder either failed to exercise his discretion at all in allowing it to be admitted or exercised his discretion wrongly having regard to the whole of the facts of the case.

F So far as the point of law is concerned, this court is unanimously of opinion that it is bound by this court's previous decisions, namely, R. v. Cook (2), in which case five judges sat to consider the matter, and a later case which followed that decision in the year 1960, R. v. Brown (3). In R. v. Cook (2), after considering the conflicting authorities, R. v. Hudson (4) and R. v. Jenkins (5) on the one hand and R. v. Turner (6) and Stirland v. Public Prosecutions Director (7) on the other, G DEVLIN, J., delivering the judgment of the Court of Criminal Appeal of five judges, said this (8):

> "In our opinion the difficulties created by s. 1, proviso (f) (ii) are, as a general rule, best dealt with in accordance with the principle in R. v. Hudson (4), as applied in R. v. Jenkins (5). The attempt to give the words a limited H construction had led to decisions which it is difficult to reconcile; now that it is clearly established that the trial judge has a discretion and that he must exercise it so as to secure that the defence is not unfairly prejudiced, there is nothing to be gained by seeking to strain the words of s. 1, proviso (f) (ii) in favour of the defence. We think, therefore, that the words should be given

---

I (1) I.e., quoted in ARCHBOLD'S CRIMINAL PLEADING, EVIDENCE AND PRACTICE (34th Edn.), para. 1319 and 7th Cumulative Supp. to para. 1319—R. v. Cunningham, [1958] 3 All E.R. 711; R. v. Cook, [1959] 2 All E.R. 97; Stirland v. Public Prosecutions Director, [1944] 2 All E.R. 13; R. v. Jenkins, (1945), 31 Cr. App. Rep. 1.

(2) [1959] 2 All E.R. 97; [1959] 2 Q.B. 340. (3) (1960), 44 Cr. App. Rep. 181.

(4) [1912] 2 K.B. 464; 7 Cr. App. Rep. 256.

(5) (1945), 114 L.J.K.B. 425; 31 Cr. App. Rep. 1.

(6) [1944] 1 All E.R. 599; [1944] K.B. 463.

(7) [1944] 2 All E.R. 13; [1944] A.C. 315.

(8) [1959] 2 All E.R. at p. 101; [1959] 2 Q.B. at pp. 347, 348.

their natural and ordinary meaning and that the trial judge should in his discretion do what is necessary in the circumstances to protect the prisoner from an application of s. 1, proviso (f) (ii) that would be too severe . . . It is well settled that this court will not interfere with the exercise of a discretion by the judge below unless he has erred in principle or there is no material on which he could properly have arrived at his decision . . ."

That decision, followed by the decision in R. v. Brown (9) is binding on this court and any re-consideration of the question of law must be left to the House of Lords.

In the result, therefore, this court holds that the learned recorder was perfectly right in ruling that evidence of previous convictions and of the previous bad character of the appellant was legally admissible. Having come to that conclusion, he had to decide which way he should exercise his discretion, whether in the circumstances of the case he should allow the questions to be put or not. It is true that various authorities were cited to the learned recorder (10) in the absence of the jury, and that in these it was mentioned that the judge had a discretion; and indeed it has for years been the law, as the recorder well knew, that if such evidence was legally admissible he had a discretion to exclude it if he thought fit. The question was not whether he knew that he had a discretion but whether before allowing the evidence to be admitted he brought his mind to bear on the question whether, although legally admissible, it was desirable having regard to the paramount consideration of having a fair trial that it should be admitted. One could hardly imagine more prejudicial evidence than the three convictions of the accused. Several cases were cited in which the existence of the discretion was made clear, and counsel for the appellant, replying to counsel for the Crown's submission, said:

"If those matters are an integral part of the defence, as so often in a case of rape they are, in my submission the court ought to exercise its discretion on the basis of not permitting questions to be put as to the character of the defendant."

Then there came the learned recorder's decision on the legal submissions, and he said this:

"I have considered this matter; and I may say I started to consider it long before the question was raised, because I realised there was an imputation being made against the prosecutor here that he had been guilty of a criminal offence. Giving it the best consideration I can, I think the defence submission is quite wrong . . ."

The defence had made two submissions, one, as I have said, that the evidence was not legally admissible, and secondly that if legally admissible the recorder should exercise his discretion in favour of the accused. To say that the submission was quite wrong was wholly inapplicable to the exercise of discretion. A little later on he said:

"I think as soon as he puts the accused into the witness-box to tell that story on oath [that is, the story outlined in the statement] that entitles the prosecution to say: 'Right—you say the prosecutor is a man of bad habits, therefore the jury should be told the character you are'. In those circumstances, in my view anyhow, this evidence is admissible, and the previous convictions can be put to the accused."

"Entitles" is not normally the word to use for the exercise of a discretion; and I emphasise the words "In those circumstances", not, be it observed, "this evidence is admissible and in the exercise of my discretion, having applied my mind to the circumstances of this particular case, I propose to allow the convictions to be put". This court agrees that the evidence is admissible, but

(9) (1960), 44 Cr. App. Rep. 181.

(10) See footnote (1), ante p. 61.

A the words are—" this evidence is admissible . . . and the previous convictions can be put to the accused ". In the summing-up the learned recorder said this:

> " In this case [counsel for the appellant] has told you it is somewhat unusual that you should know so much about the accused person as you do. The only reason you were entitled to know that is because, when you were out of the court, I held the view, rightly or wrongly,—and if I am wrong in exercising my discretion it will be put right in a much higher hierarchy of the law—and I have ruled there was such an attack on the character of the prosecutor here in the suggestions made in the accused's statement that you were entitled to judge the prosecutor's character and measure it up against the character of the person who is accusing him, that is the prisoner; so you had the opportunity of hearing the sort of young man he is. Do not let those things influence you into finding him guilty."

B

C

This court has considerable doubt whether the learned recorder did address his mind to the question of discretion at the only material time, that is to say, at the close of the submission of the evidence to the jury before the questions were put to the appellant. Assuming, however, that he did exercise his discretion at that time, this court is of opinion that he exercised his discretion wrongly in principle. This court is mindful of the remarks which I have already read of DEVLIN, J., in delivering the judgment of five judges of the Court of Criminal Appeal in R. v. Cook (11) and, indeed, it is a truism to say that any appellate court is slow to interfere with the exercise of a discretion by a judge unless they feel satisfied either that he exercised it on broad principles or has failed to give weight to matters which he should have had in mind when exercising the discretion. I have already emphasised that s. 1, proviso (f) (ii) of the Act of 1898 refers to both the nature and conduct of the defence. The exercise of a discretion must depend entirely on the facts of the particular case in which it falls to be exercised, but where, as in the present case, the very nature of the defence necessarily involves an imputation against a prosecution witness or witnesses, the discretion should, in the opinion of this court, be as a general rule exercised in favour of the accused, that is to say, the evidence as to his character or criminal record should be excluded. If it were otherwise, it comes to this, that the Act of 1898, the very Act which gave the charter, so to speak, to an accused person to give evidence on oath in the witness-box, would be a mere trap because he would be unable to put forward any defence, no matter how true, which involved an imputation on the character of the prosecutor or any of his witnesses, without running the risk if he had the misfortune of having a record, of his previous convictions being brought up in court while being tried on a wholly different matter. This court is of opinion that the discretion should have been exercised in favour of refusing the cross-examination as to previous convictions.

D

E

F

G

Finally, counsel for the Crown has suggested that this is a case in which the court should apply the proviso to s. 4 (1) of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907. That would involve this court saying that without any reference to previous convictions a jury properly directed would without doubt have come to the conclusion that this appellant was guilty. The court is unable to take that view. In the circumstances, the appeal will be allowed and the conviction will be quashed and the accused discharged.

H

Appeal allowed. Conviction quashed.

Solicitors: Registrar, Court of Criminal Appeal (for the appellant); N. K. Cooper, Maidstone (for the Crown).

[Reported by N. P. METCALFE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

---

(11) [1959] 2 All E.R. at p. 101; [1959] 2 Q.B. at p. 347.

A

PRACTICE DIRECTION.

CHANCERY DIVISION.

Solicitor—Withdrawal—Application for order where no notice of change given —Appeal to Court of Appeal pending—Practice—R.S.C., Ord. 7, r. 4 (1). B

Where a solicitor who has ceased to act for a party in a pending appeal wishes to apply under R.S.C., Ord. 7, r. 4 (1), for an order to that effect, the application should be made by motion, supported by affidavit. The papers should be lodged with the "proper officer" as defined in R.S.C., Ord. 58, r. 5 (5). The "proper officer" will be, in relation to appeals of the nature specified in para. (a) to para. (e) inclusive of that rule*, the officers respectively indicated in those paragraphs. In reference to all other appeals, including county court appeals, the "proper officer" will be the officer indicated in para. (f) of that rule, viz., the Chief Chancery Registrar. The proper officer, on being satisfied that the application should be granted, will pass the papers to the President of the court concerned to be initialled, whereupon the order may be drawn up without being bespoken by the solicitor. C D

This Practice Direction relates only to pending appeals to the Court of Appeal, and not to any proceedings subsequent to the hearing of an appeal by the Court of Appeal.

Specimens of the forms appropriate for use under this Practice Direction are available for reference in the room of the Appeal and Cause Clerks, Room 136, at the Royal Courts of Justice, Strand, London, W.C.2. E

By the direction of the Master of the Rolls.

J. B. H. WYMAN,
Chief Registrar,
Chancery Division.

July 5, 1961.

---

* By R.S.C., Ord. 58, r. 5 (5) (a)-(e), the proper officer is, in relation to appeals in cases specified between parentheses: the Admiralty Registrar (Admiralty cases), the Chief Bankruptcy Registrar (bankruptcy cases), the Senior Registrar of the Principal Probate Registry (probate cases and matrimonial causes proceeding in London), the Registrar of a District Registry (matrimonial causes proceeding in the District Registry), the Queen's Remembrancer (revenue cases).

A

BERRY v. BRITISH TRANSPORT COMMISSION.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Ormerod, Devlin and Danckwerts, L.JJ.), February 22, 23, 24, June 23, 1961.]

Malicious Prosecution—Damage necessary to support action—Costs of defence and appeal—Actual costs less lump sum costs awarded by quarter sessions —Whether sufficient to support an action.

B

The plaintiff was convicted by a magistrates' court on a charge brought by the defendants of contravening s. 22 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1868, by pulling the communication cord on a train without reasonable and sufficient cause; but her appeal to quarter sessions against conviction was allowed and she was awarded fifteen guineas costs under s. 5 (1) of the Summary Jurisdiction (Appeals) Act, 1933*. She brought an action against the defendants for damages for malicious prosecution, alleging as special damage the difference between the aggregate of the actual costs of her defence at the magistrates' court and of her appeal and the fifteen guineas costs awarded to her, the amount of the difference being £64 2s. On a preliminary point of law, that the statement of claim disclosed no damage which the plaintiff was entitled to claim in law, and thus disclosed no cause of action,

C

D

Held: the costs awarded by the recorder in the case should not be regarded as compensating the plaintiff; accordingly the special damage alleged was sufficient in law for the purposes of a cause of action for malicious prosecution, and the statement of claim disclosed such a cause of action (p. 69, letter B, p. 78, letter H, and p. 82, letter E, post).

E

Quartz Hill Gold Mining Co. v. Eyre ((1883), 11 Q.B.D. 674) considered.

Per DEVLIN, L.J.: the rule of the law of damages that if costs were awarded in hostile civil litigation nothing beyond the taxed amount could be recovered by the successful party from the unsuccessful party rested on the presumption that the award of costs (as between party and party) gave compensation for the cost of the litigation so far as the law allowed, and the reason for the rule was that the law could not permit the question of the amount of costs to be litigated a second time between the same parties in new proceedings (see p. 71, letters A and H, post); it was however a fiction that costs taxed between party and party were the same as costs reasonably incurred and the law should recognise that an assessment of damage and a taxation of party and party costs were two different things (see p. 72, letters F and C, post). The rule should not be extended to criminal cases, because the principles governing the award of costs in civil and criminal cases were not the same; for in criminal cases a successful defendant had no prima facie entitlement to an award of costs, as the prosecution was brought in the public interest (see p. 75, letters G and D, post), and an award of costs need not be directed to quantifying the damage and indemnifying the accused according to a conventional measure (see p. 76, letter F, p. 77, letter B, post).

F

G

H

Barnett v. Eccles Corpn. ([1900] 2 Q.B. 104) and dictum of PHILLIMORE, L.J., in Wiffen v. Bailey and Romford Urban Council ([1915] 1 K.B. at p. 610) considered and explained.

I

Decision of DIPLOCK, J. ([1960] 3 All E.R. 322) reversed on one point.

[As to what damage must be proved to support an action for malicious prosecution, see 25 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 360, para. 702; and for cases on the subject, see 33 DIGEST 506-508, 498-531.

For the Regulation of Railways Act, 1868, s. 22, see 19 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 793.]

---

* The terms of s. 5 (1) are printed at p. 68, letter G, post.

Cases referred to: A

Agius v. Great Western Colliery Co., [1899] 1 Q.B. 413; 68 L.J.Q.B. 312; 80 L.T. 140; 17 Digest (Repl.) 137, 412.

Barnett v. Eccles Corpn., [1900] 2 Q.B. 104; affd. C.A., [1900] 2 Q.B. 423; 69 L.J.Q.B. 834; 83 L.T. 66; 64 J.P. 692; 33 Digest 14, 44.

Bater and Birkenhead Corpn., Re, [1893] 2 Q.B. 77; 62 L.J.M.C. 107; 69 L.T. 220; sub nom. Bater v. Birkenhead Corpn., 58 J.P. 7; 25 Digest 109, 331. B

Baxendale v. Bennett, (1878), 3 Q.B.D. 525; 47 L.J.Q.B. 624; 40 L.T. 23; 43 J.P. 204; 36 Digest (Repl.) 36, 175.

Becker v. Purchase, [1950] 2 All E.R. 837; 114 J.P. 550; 2nd Digest Supp.

Campbell (Donald) & Co., Ltd. v. Pollak, [1927] All E.R. Rep. 1; [1927] A.C. 732; 96 L.J.K.B. 1132; 137 L.T. 656; Digest (Practice) 788, 3503. C

Cockburn v. Edwards, (1881), 18 Ch.D. 449; 51 L.J.Ch. 46; 45 L.T. 500; Digest (Practice) 899, 4399.

Cotterell v. Jones, (1851), 11 C.B. 713; 21 L.J.C.P. 2; 138 E.R. 655; 33 Digest 507, 505.

Doe v. Filliter, (1844), 13 M. & W. 47; 13 L.J.Ex. 275; 3 L.T.O.S. 184; 153 E.R. 20; 17 Digest (Repl.) 143, 452. D

Gould v. Barratt, (1838), 2 Mood. & R. 171; 174 E.R. 252; 33 Digest 516, 602.

Grace v. Morgan, (1836), 2 Bing. N.C. 534; 5 L.J.C.P. 180; 132 E.R. 208; 33 Digest 515, 601.

Hathaway v. Barrow, (1807), 1 Camp. 151; 170 E.R. 909; 33 Digest 515, 597.

Loton v. Devereux, (1832), 3 B. & Ad. 343; 1 L.J.K.B. 103; 110 E.R. 129; 17 Digest (Repl.) 144, 457. E

Pritchett v. Boevey, (1833), 1 Cr. & M. 775; 149 E.R. 612; 3 Tyr. 949; 2 L.J.Ex. 251; 17 Digest (Repl.) 144, 460.

Quartz Hill Gold Mining Co. v. Eyre, (1883), 11 Q.B.D. 674; 52 L.J.Q.B. 488; 49 L.T. 249; 33 Digest 468, 21.

R. v. Whitchurch, (1881), 7 Q.B.D. 534; 36 Digest (Repl.) 340, 818.

Rayson v. South London Tramway Co., [1893] 2 Q.B. 304; 62 L.J.Q.B. 593; 69 L.T. 491; 58 J.P. 20; 33 Digest 470, 36. F

Ritter v. Godfrey, [1918-19] All E.R. Rep. 714; [1920] 2 K.B. 47; 89 L.J.K.B. 467; 122 L.T. 396; Digest (Practice) 891, 4326.

Sandback v. Thomas, (1816), 1 Stark. 306; 171 E.R. 481; 33 Digest 516, 604.

Savile v. Roberts, (1698), 1 Ld. Raym. 374 (91 E.R. 1147); Carth. 416; 1 Salk. 13 (91 E.R. 14); 3 Salk. 16; 5 Mod. Rep. 394; 12 Mod. Rep. 208; Holt, K.B. 150, 193; sub nom. Roberts v. Savill, 5 Mod. Rep. 405; Holt, K.B. 8; 33 Digest 507, 510. G

Smith v. Buller, (1875), L.R. 19 Eq. 473; 45 L.J.Ch. 69; 31 L.T. 873; Digest (Practice) 948, 4882.

Solway Prince, The, (1914), 31 T.L.R. 56; 17 Digest (Repl.) 145, 468.

Walshaw v. Brighouse Corpn., [1899] 2 Q.B. 286; 68 L.J.Q.B. 828; 81 L.T. 2; 25 Digest 113, 367. H

Wiffen v. Bailey and Romford Urban Council, [1914] 2 K.B. 5; affd. C.A., [1915] 1 K.B. 600; 84 L.J.K.B. 688; 112 L.T. 274; 79 J.P. 145; 33 Digest 470, 37.

Wren v. Weild, (1869), L.R. 4 Q.B. 730; 38 L.J.Q.B. 327; 20 L.T. 1007; 34 J.P. 21; 32 Digest 208, 2585. I

Appeal.

The plaintiff brought an action for damages for malicious prosecution against the defendants in respect of proceedings brought against her in a magistrates' court for unlawfully pulling the communication cord of a train, contrary to s. 22 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1868. On July 29, 1960, her action was dismissed by DIPLOCK, J., on the hearing of a preliminary issue ([1960] 3 All E.R. 322), on the ground that her claim disclosed no cause of action in

A that there was no such damage as would support an action for malicious prosecution. The plaintiff appealed to the Court of Appeal.

The plaintiff appeared in person.

Neil Lawson, Q.C., and P. M. O'Connor, Q.C., for the defendants.

R. F. G. Ormrod, Q.C., and T. K. Homer appeared as amici curiae.

B Cur. adv. vult.

June 23. The following judgments were read.

ORMEROD, L.J.: This appeal is against a decision of DIPLOCK, J., given on July 29, 1960, and arises in these circumstances. The plaintiff, Miss Pamela Berry, on Jan. 4, 1959, was travelling on a train between Brighton and Lancing. In the course of her journey she had occasion to pull the communication cord C for reasons which seemed to her reasonable and sufficient, and in consequence the train was stopped. The defendants, in pursuance of s. 22 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1868, issued a summons against the plaintiff in the Brighton Magistrates' Court and on Feb. 13, 1959, the plaintiff appeared at that court and pleaded not guilty, but was fined and ordered to pay the sum of 20s. and 27s. for costs. On July 6, 1959, the plaintiff appealed against that conviction to the D recorder of the county borough of Brighton and the appeal was allowed and the prosecution wholly determined in favour of the plaintiff, and she received costs, amounting to the sum of fifteen guineas, awarded to her against the defendants by the learned recorder. The plaintiff in consequence on Oct. 26, 1959, issued a writ against the defendants claiming damages for malicious prosecution, and the statement of claim setting out the facts as I have recited them was delivered E on Nov. 7, 1959, and amended and redelivered on Mar. 3, 1960. It is to be noted that the only particulars of special damage given in the statement of claim were the special damages relating to costs and they were calculated on the basis of the amount actually expended by the plaintiff in her defence both at the magistrates' court and before the learned recorder at quarter sessions, credit being given for the amount of costs awarded to her at quarter sessions. F By para. 4, however, of the statement of claim the plaintiff alleges that by reason of the premises she had been injured in reputation and has been held up to ridicule and has suffered pain in mind and has been put to expense in defending herself against the said charge and has suffered loss and damage., The defence was delivered on Dec. 2, 1959, and the only paragraph which is relevant in this appeal is para. 5, included by amendment, which is as follows:

G "The defendants will contend that the statement of claim discloses no damage of which the plaintiff is entitled to complain in law and in the premises the statement of claim discloses no cause of action."

The matter came before Master HARWOOD in chambers on Mar. 3, 1960, when he made an order as to particulars and in para. 7 of the order provided as H follows:

"that the point of law raised by the defendants in para. 5 of their amended defence be set down for hearing as a preliminary issue between the plaintiff and defendants and set down in the special paper list within seven days and disposed of before the trial of issues of fact in this action."

I In consequence of that order the matter came before DIPLOCK, J., on July 29, 1960. The question then to be determined was whether the statement of claim was demurrable or whether it disclosed any cause of action, and two questions fell to be considered. The first question was whether in the circumstances the plaintiff had suffered damage in the injury to her reputation and fair fame, and, secondly, whether she had been put to expense with regard to costs having regard to the fact that the learned recorder had awarded to her the sum of fifteen guineas costs. The learned judge came to the conclusion that the plaintiff's claim disclosed no cause of damage under either head. It is against this decision that this appeal has come to us, and I should say at this stage that it was the intention of the plaintiff, as, no doubt for proper reasons, she was unable to obtain legal assistance, to appear in person to argue this appeal. As the appeal involved complicated questions of law, Mr. Roger Ormrod and Mr. Homer kindly consented to appear in the case as amici curiae and to argue it on the plaintiff's behalf. I think I am reflecting the views of the other members of the court as well as myself when I say how much we are indebted to them for the very great assistance which they have given to the court during the appeal. It would have been extremely difficult for this court to decide these complicated questions had the case not been properly argued as it has been.

I have had the advantage of reading the judgments about to be delivered by my brethren. I agree with the views which they have expressed as to the damage sustained by the plaintiff in incurring costs in her defence both before the magistrates and before the learned recorder. This question has been discussed exhaustively by DEVLIN, L.J., in his judgment, and it is perhaps unnecessary for me to say anything further. As we are differing from the learned judge, however, on this part of the case, I would like to express shortly my reasons for so doing.

DIPLOCK, J., in his judgment discussed at some length the position in the event of an award of costs in a civil action, and he cited the well-known passage from the judgment of BOWEN, L.J., in Quartz Hill Gold Mining Co. v. Eyre (1). There can, I think, be no doubt that costs incurred in excess of the sum allowed on taxation cannot be recovered as damages. As BOWEN, L.J. (1), said in the passage cited by DIPLOCK, J.:

> "If the judge refuses to give him costs, it is because he does not deserve them: if he deserves them, he will get them in the original action . . ."

Considerable doubt has been expressed from time to time as to the reality of that view, but it is well established and in any event it is not for this court to disturb it. The learned judge said (2):

> "I do not think that any distinction is to be drawn in law between civil and criminal cases which are tried summarily."

He then goes on to deal with the various provisions whereby in certain cases courts exercising criminal jurisdiction are enabled to award costs. It is with this part of the learned judge's view that I find myself unable to agree. Costs in this case of the sum of fifteen guineas were awarded to the plaintiff by the learned recorder by reason of s. 5 (1) of the Summary Jurisdiction (Appeals) Act, 1933, which is as follows:

> "On any appeal to which this Act applies a court of quarter sessions may, in the exercise of their power to award costs—(i) where they allow the appeal, direct that there shall be included in any costs to be paid by the respondent to the appellant the costs properly incurred by the appellant in the proceedings before the court of summary jurisdiction, or such fixed sum as the court of quarter sessions may consider reasonable in respect of the costs so incurred by him; (ii) in any case, in lieu of directing a taxation of costs, fix the sum to be paid by way of costs by either party to the appeal; and in fixing, for the purposes of this subsection, the amount of any costs to be paid by a party to an appeal shall have regard to his means."

It would seem that the real distinction between the two types of cases is that in a civil action it has been well established that, although the judge has a discretion as to costs, it is a discretion that must be exercised judicially, and in consequence a successful litigant can only be refused an order for costs if there is a good reason for it. This is not the case when costs are awarded in a criminal prosecution. It is provided, for instance, by the section which I have

(1) (1883), 11 Q.B.D. at p. 690. (2) [1960] 3 All E.R. at p. 330.

A set out that "such fixed sum as the court of quarter sessions may consider reasonable in respect of the costs so incurred" may be awarded. It may well be that the costs awarded may have no relation to those incurred, and indeed it is provided that in fixing the amount of any costs to be paid by a party to an appeal under sub-s. (1) (ii) of the above section regard shall be had to his means. The effect of this appears to be that an award of costs in a case of this kind is B not intended by the legislature necessarily to compensate a successful appellant. It is certainly not the practice of the courts that this should be so. It follows, I think, that in the circumstances costs of the nature awarded in this case cannot be treated as similar to costs awarded in a civil action, and if this be so then it cannot be said that the plaintiff has not pleaded that she has suffered special damage so as to bring her within the requirements in an action of this C nature laid down by HOLT, C.J., in Savile v. Roberts (3) and in numerous other reports.

It follows, therefore, that in my judgment the statement of claim is not demurrable and I would allow the appeal on this ground. This opinion is, I believe, shared by my brethren. It is not necessary, therefore, to discuss the other question, namely, whether there has been any damage to the fair fame of D the plaintiff, and I refrain from doing so beyond stating the opinion that as at present advised I would be inclined to uphold the view expressed by the learned judge. But the question involves the reconciliation of conflicting authorities, and in the circumstances it appears unnecessary to come to a decision on it.

DEVLIN, L.J.: In this appeal we have to consider two difficult points of E law which DIPLOCK, J., decided against the plaintiff in demurrer proceedings. The plaintiff, who has appeared before us in person, has naturally been unable to give us any assistance in the argument. I should like, therefore, to express my indebtedness to Mr. Ormrod and Mr. Homer who have performed a public service by attending before us as amici curiae at our invitation in order to present the argument which, as counsel for the plaintiff before DIPLOCK, J., they F presented to him. I am grateful to them not only because they have saved us labour but also because the points of law that arise are of general importance and it would have been most unsatisfactory if we had had to give a decision on them without hearing full argument from both sides. At the end of the argument I find myself in agreement with DIPLOCK, J., on one point and not on the other.

G The claim is for malicious prosecution and therefore cannot be sustained without proof of damage under one of the three heads enumerated by HOLT, C.J., in Savile v. Roberts (3). The plaintiff was prosecuted by the defendants, the British Transport Commission, for a breach of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1868, s. 22, and was convicted and fined at petty sessions. She appealed to quarter sessions, where the conviction was quashed by the recorder of Brighton. H In her statement of claim she alleges as special damage that she was put to expense in defending herself against the charge. The particulars of special damage as amended are as follows: Costs of defence at magistrates' court £10 10s. Costs of appeal £69 7s., totalling £79 17s., for which credit is given: "Less costs paid pursuant to the order of the learned recorder £15 15s.", and that leaves a balance of £64 2s. The defendants allege that this sum of £64 2s. I is not recoverable because it is too remote in law.

This allegation is based on an old rule which is stated in MAYNE ON DAMAGES (11th Edn.), at p. 119, in the following terms:

> "It was regarded as a general principle that the right to costs must always be considered as finally settled in the court where the question to which that right was accessory was determined; so that, if any costs were awarded, nothing beyond the sum taxed according to the rules of the court could be recovered; or if costs were expressly withheld in the particular case, none would be recoverable by suit in any other court." A

(3) (1698), 1 Ld. Raym. 374.

This principle is part of the general law of damage and is not specifically related to actions for malicious prosecution. It has, however, frequently been applied in this form of action, and counsel for the defendants has particularly relied on Quartz Hill Gold Mining Co. v. Eyre (4). That was a case in which the defendant presented a petition to wind-up the plaintiff company. It was never served on the company and the defendant gave notice that he was withdrawing it, but the company nevertheless appeared to ask for its dismissal. It was dismissed by a vice-chancellor without costs (5); I have no doubt that DANCKWERTS, L.J., was right when he said in the course of the argument, after looking at the report of the case in the Weekly Notes, that the reason why the plaintiff company was given no costs was because their appearance was considered to be unnecessary. The company brought an action for malicious prosecution and the damage they alleged was the expenditure of costs incurred in opposing the petition which they estimated at £30. The Court of Appeal held that the damage was not recoverable. BRETT, M.R., said (6): B C

"The theory is that the costs which the losing party is bound to pay, are all that were necessarily incurred by the successful party in the litigation, and that it is right to compel him to pay those costs because they have been caused by his unjust litigation; but that those which are called 'extra costs', not being necessarily incurred by the successful party in order to maintain his case, are not incurred by reason of the unjust litigation." D

BOWEN, L.J., said (7): E

"The bringing of an ordinary action does not as a natural or necessary consequence involve any injury to a man's property, for this reason, that the only costs which the law recognises, and for which it will compensate him, are the costs properly incurred in the action itself. For those the successful defendant will have been already compensated, so far as the law chooses to compensate him. If the judge refuses to give him costs, it is because he does not deserve them: if he deserves them, he will get them in the original action: if he does not deserve them, he ought not to get them in a subsequent action." F

The rule is not easy to apply with justice because it embodies a presumption, which the law finds it convenient and maybe necessary to make; but which it has to, and does in other contexts, admit not to be in accordance with fact. Rule 28 (2) of the Supreme Court Costs Rules, 1959, provides that the ordinary basis on which costs shall be taxed is the party and party basis; and that on a taxation on that basis there shall be allowed all such costs G

"as were necessary or proper for the attainment of justice or for enforcing or defending the rights of the party whose costs are being taxed." H

Other bases are provided for special cases. Rule 29 (1) provides that where costs are payable to a solicitor by his own client all costs shall be allowed "except in so far as they are of an unreasonable amount or have been unreasonably incurred". Another similar and perhaps wider basis is under r. 31, where costs are payable to a trustee out of the trust fund. The difference between these standards and that laid down for a party and party taxation puts one in mind roughly of the difference between expenditure under Sch. E and expenditure under Sch. D in income tax law—the difference between what is necessary and what is reasonable. Reasonableness is, of course, the ordinary test that is applied in a damages claim and which would be applied here if the items of expenditure claimed were not incurred in litigation. I

(4) (1883), 11 Q.B.D. 674.
(5) See [1882] W.N. p. 27.
(6) (1883), 11 Q.B.D. at p. 682.
(7) (1883), 11 Q.B.D. at p. 690.

A The reason for the rule is not that the costs incurred in excess of the party and party allowance are deemed to be unreasonable; it is that what is presumed to be the same question cannot be gone into twice. The rule appears to have been first laid down by SIR JAMES MANSFIELD, C.J., in Hathaway v. Barrow (8) where he put it on the ground that

B "... it would be incongruous to allow a person one sum as costs in one court, and a different sum for the same costs in another court."

If in the earlier case there has been no adjudication on costs (as distinct from an adjudication that there shall be no order as to costs), a party may recover all his costs assessed on the reasonable, and not on the necessary, basis. If a party has failed to apply for costs which he would have got if he had asked for them, a C subsequent claim for damages may be defeated; but that would be because in such a case his loss would be held to be due to his own fault or omission. In any case in which the legal process does not permit an adjudication, the rule does not apply. This appears from a number of cases such as Pritchett v. Boevey (9), Doe v. Filliter (10) and Walshaw v. Brighouse Corpn. (11). In the second of these cases ROLFE, B., said (12):

D "Where, indeed, there has been no taxation, then, ex necessitate, the jury must say what is to be an indemnity."

In this connexion it is worth citing Re Bater and Birkenhead Corpn. (13), because two of the judges who decided it in the Court of Appeal were LORD ESHER, M.R., and BOWEN, L.J. In this case the aggrieved party was left without costs, not because the court had refused to award them as in Quartz Hill Gold Mining Co. E v. Eyre (14), but because the court had no power to award them; and he claimed reimbursement of all the costs reasonably incurred by him in attending before the magistrate. It was put against him that, although the magistrate had no power to deal with costs, that did not give another tribunal power over the costs of the magisterial inquiry. But the claim succeeded, LORD ESHER saying (15):

F "An endeavour is made to avoid this conclusion by giving these expenses a legal name and calling them costs; but they are not the less expenses which the man has had to pay ..."

It follows that if, as the result of a breach of contract (see Agius v. Great Western Colliery Co. (16)) or a tort (see The Solway Prince (17)), a person brings unsuccessfully an action against a third party or loses an action brought by a third G party, he may recover against the wrongdoer who has broken his contract or committed the tort the costs of the suit; and he will get all the costs which he has reasonably expended. The wrongdoer may not argue that the plaintiff is entitled only to party and party costs, notwithstanding that that is all he could or would have got from the third party if he had been successful.

Thus the reason for the rule is that the law cannot permit a double adjudication H on the same point. It would be a rational rule and in accordance with the ordinary principle as to res judicata if in truth it were the same point. But it is not. It may be that, when the rule was first laid down by SIR JAMES MANSFIELD, C.J., in 1807 (18), the two standards of assessment were not so far apart as they are now. By 1844 the distinction had begun to appear in practice if not in theory. In Doe v. Filliter (19) POLLOCK, C.B., said:

I "The taxed costs are a fair indemnity; and if they are not so, the rules which govern taxation ought to be altered."

---

(8) (1807), 1 Camp. at p. 152.
(9) (1833), 1 Cr. & M. 775.
(10) (1844), 13 M. & W. 47.
(11) [1899] 2 Q.B. 286.
(12) (1844), 13 M. & W. at p. 52.
(13) [1893] 2 Q.B. 77.
(14) (1883), 11 Q.B.D. 674.
(15) [1893] 2 Q.B. at p. 79.
(16) [1899] 1 Q.B. 413.
(17) (1914), 31 T.L.R. 56.
(18) In Hathaway v. Barrow, (1807), 1 Camp. at p. 152.
(19) (1844), 13 M. & W. at p. 51.

ALDERSON, B., said (20):

> "The taxed costs are intended to be a full indemnity to the plaintiff for his expenses in getting back the land. That is the principle; whether it be fully carried out in practice is another matter . . . If the taxed costs are not a full indemnity, they ought to be made so."

But this advice has not been taken and the rules which govern taxation have not been altered. In 1869 BLACKBURN, J., in Wren v. Weild (21), said that it was "artificial" to say that the party aggrieved had an adequate remedy in his judgment for costs. In Barnett v. Eccles Corpn. (22), BIGHAM, J., said:

> "The law does not recognise the difference between the sum which it gives as costs, that is, costs taxed as between party and party, and the larger sum which in practice a litigant has to pay . . ."

I find it difficult to see why the law should not now recognise one standard of costs as between litigants and another when those costs form a legitimate item of damage in a separate cause of action flowing from a different and additional wrong. Limitation of liability is a principle that is now well recognised. In the case of damage done by a ship it has been in force for the last two centuries in this country, and for longer in others, and the basis of it is simply that it is not in the public interest that shipowners should be deterred from seafaring by the prospect that they might be crippled by awards of heavy damages. The stringent standards that prevail in a taxation of party and party costs can be justified on the same sort of ground; see, e.g., Smith v. Buller (23) per MALINS, V.-C. It helps to keep down extravagance in litigation and that is a benefit to all those who have to resort to the law. But the last person who ought to be able to share in that benefit is the man who ex hypothesi is abusing the legal process for his own malicious ends. In cases of malicious process SIR JAMES MANSFIELD'S rule (24) has not always been applied. LORD ELLENBOROUGH refused to apply it in 1816 (Sandback v. Thomas (25)) and LORD ABINGER in 1838 (Gould v. Barratt (26)). But the other view has prevailed, though TINDAL, C.J., indicated in Grace v. Morgan (27) that his opinion might have been different if the matter had been res integra.

If the matter were res integra, I should for myself prefer to see the abandonment of the fiction that taxed costs are the same as costs reasonably incurred and its replacement by a statement of principle that the law for reasons which it considers to be in the public interest requires a litigant to exercise a greater austerity than it exacts in the ordinary way, and which it will not relax unless the litigant can show some additional ground for reimbursement over and above the bare fact that he has been successful. Without a restatement of that sort, there is undoubtedly a practical need for the rule in civil cases. Otherwise, every successful plaintiff might bring a second action against the same defendant in order to recover from him as damages resulting from his original wrongdoing the costs that he had failed to obtain on taxation; this was unsuccessfully attempted by the plaintiff in Cockburn v. Edwards (28). Or as LORD TENTERDEN, C.J., said in Loton v. Devereux (29):

> ". . . actions would frequently be brought for costs after the court had refused to allow them."

The rule is thus essential to the administration of justice in civil suits and will continue to be so until the time comes, if it ever does, when the law either allows to a successful litigant all the costs he has reasonably incurred or recognises openly that an assessment of damage and a taxation of costs as between party and party are two different things.

(20) (1844), 13 M. & W. at pp. 51, 52.
(21) (1869), L.R. 4 Q.B. at p. 736.
(22) [1900] 2 Q.B. at p. 109.
(23) (1875), L.R. 19 Eq. at p. 475.
(24) In Hathaway v. Barrow, (1807), 1 Camp. at p. 152.
(25) (1816), 1 Stark. 306.
(26) (1838), 2 Mood. & R. 171.
(27) (1836), 2 Bing. N.C. at p. 537.
(28) (1881), 18 Ch.D. 449.
(29) (1832), 3 B. & Ad. at p. 345.

A I have inquired into the reason for the rule, not because I think it open to us to reject it, but because we are asked to extend it. The question is whether it should be extended to costs in criminal cases as well as costs in civil cases. It is therefore necessary for us to consider the principle behind the rule in order to see whether it is equally applicable to criminal costs; and we are entitled also to have regard to its utility and value and to ask ourselves whether, if extended to B criminal cases, it could be applied with no greater injustice and no higher degree of unreality than in civil cases.

In inviting us to extend it counsel for the defendants has submitted that the principles which govern the award of civil and criminal costs are fundamentally the same. All awards of costs, whether civil or criminal, are made under statutory powers. In civil cases the general power is now contained in the Supreme C Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, s. 50 (1), which provides that, subject to rules of court,

> "the costs . . . shall be in the discretion of the court or judge, and the court or judge shall have full power to determine by whom and to what extent the costs are to be paid."

D In criminal cases there are separate groups of statutes applicable to summary offences and indictable offences respectively.

The Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, s. 18, gave the justices a discretion to award as between prosecutor and defendant ". . . such costs as to such justice or justices shall seem just and reasonable . . ." and required them to specify the sum awarded, if any, in the order for conviction or acquittal. A similar power E was given to quarter sessions on appeal from the justices in the Quarter Sessions Act, 1849, s. 5, and is now contained in the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, s. 31, as amended by the Summary Jurisdiction (Appeals) Act, 1933. This was the provision under which the recorder of Brighton made his award in this case. Section 5 (1) of the Act of 1933 is as follows:

F

> "On any appeal to which this Act applies a court of quarter sessions may, in the exercise of their power to award costs—(i) where they allow the appeal, direct that there shall be included in any costs to be paid by the respondent to the appellant the costs properly incurred by the appellant in the proceedings before the court of summary jurisdiction, or such fixed sum as the court of quarter sessions may consider reasonable in respect of the costs so incurred by him; (ii) in any case, in lieu of directing a taxation of costs, fix the sum G to be paid by way of costs by either party to the appeal; and in fixing, for the purposes of this subsection, the amount of any costs to be paid by a party to an appeal shall have regard to his means."

It will be observed that, whereas petty sessions are obliged to fix a sum, quarter sessions may either fix a sum or make an order for taxation.

H In indictable offences the power to award costs was not given until much later. The Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1908, contained a very restricted power to allow costs to the defence, and this was amplified first in the Criminal Justice Act, 1948, and now in the Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1952. It is still only in rare cases that costs can be awarded against a prosecutor, but there is a general power in s. 1 (1) of the Act of 1952 given to the court, if the accused is acquitted, I to order the payment out of local funds of the costs of the defence.

Thus in both classes of cases, civil and criminal, there is a general discretionary power to award costs. The words used differ in the case of each statute but the effect is the same. Counsel for the defendants, in reliance on this, argued that the basis for the rule that "extra costs" are not recoverable is that in the matter of costs the discretion of the court is interposed between the wrongdoer and the consequences of his act. In this respect, he submits, there is no good ground for distinguishing in the application of the rule between civil and criminal costs.

In my judgment this argument puts too much weight on the language of the statutes which control the award of costs, both civil and criminal, and too little on the differences in the way in which those statutes are construed and administered. In practice the exercise of the discretion is much more restricted in civil cases than it is in criminal. In civil cases a successful party may not without good reason be deprived of any part of his costs. If he does not get his costs, it means either that it was not necessary for him to incur them or that there has been some fault or misconduct for which he is responsible. It is thus possible to say that in a civil case, as BOWEN, L.J., said in Quartz Hill Gold Mining Co. v. Eyre (30), a successful party gets all the compensation which in the eyes of the law he deserves. This cannot be said in a criminal case, for there the exercise of the discretion is entirely unfettered.

A few citations will serve to show the nature of the distinction. In civil cases the locus classicus is Donald Campbell & Co., Ltd. v. Pollak (31). The House of Lords approved the dictum of LORD STERNDALE, M.R., in Ritter v. Godfrey (32) where he said (33):

> ". . . there is such a settled practice of the courts that in the absence of special circumstances a successful litigant should receive his costs that it is necessary to show some ground for exercising a discretion by refusing an order which would give them to him. The discretion must be judicially exercised and, therefore, there must be some grounds for its exercise, for a discretion exercised on no grounds cannot be judicial."

VISCOUNT CAVE, L.C., in Donald Campbell & Co., Ltd. v. Pollak (31), said that he would prefer to say that (34)

> " a successful defendant . . . has . . . in the absence of special circumstances, a reasonable expectation of obtaining an order for the payment of his costs by the plaintiff."

But he (34) and their Lordships who agreed with him, and LORD ATKINSON expressly (35), approved the dictum of LORD STERNDALE (36); and it is this principle which has recently been embodied in the new Supreme Court Costs Rules, 1959. Rule 3 (2) provides:

> " If the court in the exercise of its discretion sees fit to make any order as to the costs of or incidental to any proceedings, the court shall, subject to these rules, order the costs to follow the event, except when it appears to the court that in the circumstances of the case some other order should be made as to the whole or any part of the costs."

Rule 7 deals specifically with costs arising from misconduct or neglect.

In criminal cases it is so generally accepted that a successful defendant has no prima facie entitlement to or expectation of an award of costs in his favour that there is little or no authority on the point. There must be innumerable defendants who have succeeded without costs, but I have never heard of one who has claimed that he is prima facie entitled to them. In Becker v. Purchase (37) the Divisional Court emphasised that a defendant was not entitled, as of right, to costs whenever the justices allowed his appeal or dismissed an information against him; if they gave no reason, the court could not interfere with the exercise of their discretion. A statement as to how the discretion should be exercised under the Act of 1952 if the accused was acquitted has been made by LORD PARKER, C.J., in the Court of Criminal Appeal (38), which says substantially the same thing. In saying that the mere fact of an acquittal did not carry with it the " expectation " that the discretion would be exercised in favour of the acquitted person, LORD PARKER,

(30) (1883), 11 Q.B.D. at p. 690. (31) [1927] All E.R. Rep. 1; [1927] A.C. 732.
(32) [1918-19] All E.R. Rep. 714; [1920] 2 K.B. 42.
(33) [1918-19] All E.R. Rep. at p. 721; [1920] 2 K.B. at p. 52.
(34) [1927] All E.R. Rep. at p. 41; [1927] A.C. at p. 811.
(35) [1927] All E.R. Rep. at p. 42; [1927] A.C. at p. 814.
(36) In Ritter v. Godfrey, [1918-19] All E.R. Rep. at p. 721; [1920] 2 K.B. at p. 52.
(37) [1950] 2 All E.R. 837. (38) Practice Direction, [1959] 3 All E.R. 471.

A C.J., doubtless had in mind the use of the word "expectation" by VISCOUNT CAVE, L.C., in Donald Campbell & Co., Ltd. v. Pollak (39).

This difference is not simply a difference in practice. It is a difference in the substance of the law. The court has no power of its own motion to declare how the discretion conferred by a statute shall be exercised or to lay down rules about it. It derives its power from the statute itself according to the con-
B struction which it puts on it—"construction" being a word that embraces not only the interpretation of the words used but also the ascertainment of the true intent of the statute, considered in relation to the branch of the law with which it is dealing. What the court says is implicit in a statute is just as much a part of the law as the interpretation which the court puts on the text. It is the intent of every statute which confers a discretionary power that the power
C should be used justly. It does not follow that a principle on which it is just to make an award of civil costs will be equally just when applied to an award of criminal costs; and that is how the distinction arises. I do not propose to examine all the relevant differences that may be made for this purpose between a civil action and a criminal proceeding. But in relation to an award of costs against the party who initiates the proceedings there is one difference that is
D obvious. A plaintiff brings an action for his own ends and to benefit himself; it is therefore just that if he loses he should pay the costs. A prosecutor brings proceedings in the public interest, and so should be treated more tenderly.

It is for this reason that I cannot agree with the submission of counsel for the defendants that we ought not to have regard to case law. He says that the law is less developed in relation to criminal costs than it is to civil; that we may expect
E authority to amplify the criminal law and that in due course principles will be laid down, which I take it we are invited to anticipate will be the same as in civil cases. I think that we must have regard to the law as it is. There is already quite sufficient authority to show that judicial discretion in the award of criminal costs is not the same thing as it is in civil. There is also some little difference in the text of the statutes. One may note in the section applicable in this case,
F which I have already quoted, the requirement about "means" which introduces a very different notion from those usually governing civil awards. I do not lay too much stress on the express provision in this particular section, because I do not think that the exercise of the discretion in any criminal case would be faulted if it were shown that the court had had regard to the means of the parties. My conclusion is that we are not logically compelled to extend the rule
G that we are considering to costs in criminal cases, and in my judgment there is good reason why we should not do so.

The rule embodies, as I have said, a presumption; and presumptions of law ought to be used only where their use is strictly necessary for the ends of justice. They are inherently undesirable—in the sense that "Estoppels are odious, and the doctrine should never be applied without a necessity for it"; per BRAMWELL,
H L.J., in Baxendale v. Bennett (40)—because they prevent the court from ascertaining the truth, which should be the prime object of a judicial investigation, and because, if they are allowed to multiply to excess, the law will become divorced from reality and will live among fantasies of its own. It may be that, whatever its utility, the rule in its application in civil costs is now too well settled to be disturbed. Certainly it cannot be disturbed in this court. But I have
I given my reasons for thinking that this presumption is not sufficiently valuable to justify its extension, and I am unwilling to extend it when not compelled to do so by authority or in logic.

Moreover, its usefulness, such as it is, is confined to civil cases. Its effect is to set up an artificial or conventional measure of damage when the loss consists of expenditure on litigation. This conventional measure avoids the danger which

(39) [1927] All E.R. Rep. at p. 41; [1927] A.C. at p. 811.
(40) (1878), 3 Q.B.D. at p. 529.

TINDAL, C.J., remarked (41), that a party might otherwise in every sort of case bring a second set of proceedings against the same opponent for his extra costs. But that is not a danger that can arise in relation to criminal costs except in the one case of malicious prosecution. The conventional measure is also useful as one way, though not in my opinion the best way, of keeping down the costs of litigation. I have suggested already that the last person who ought to be allowed to claim the benefit of a rule designed for the comfort of litigants generally is the man who is abusing the legal process for his own malicious ends. Yet, if the presumption is extended to criminal costs, that is the only practical effect that it will have; for malicious prosecution or an action of the same sort is the only action in which a claim for damages that includes criminal costs can be made.

Furthermore, if the presumption is extended to criminal costs, there can be no assurance that the aggrieved party will obtain even such redress as is given by the conventional measure, for the accused has no expectation, let alone a right, to any order for costs at all. If I am right in thinking that a main reason why a prosecutor is in this respect treated more tenderly than a plaintiff is because the prosecutor is taken to be acting in the public interest, it would be a grave injustice for a man, who is maliciously bringing a prosecution in which he does not believe, to obtain by a rule of law the benefit of a principle which assumes his good faith. The rule would then operate not simply to limit his liability, but to relieve him of all liability for the loss caused by his malicious act. It is said that in such circumstances a successful defendant could ask for an award for his taxed costs and might expect to get them in full. That may be a satisfactory answer if the malice appears on the face of the prosecution, but not if it does not; a court cannot try an action for malicious prosecution on an application for costs.

These considerations to my mind destroy the force of the argument of counsel for the defendants that, alike in criminal and in civil cases, a judicial discretion is interposed between the wrongful act and the damage it causes. To be effective as an interposition, there must be a sort of res judicata, a decision in the first case in which costs are awarded on the very point that is in issue in the second case, i.e., the quantification of the damage. In a civil case the judicial discretion is directed to quantifying the damage according to the conventional measure. In a criminal case, it is not: and the decision contained in a criminal award need not represent a decision on quantification at all.

I wish that I could conclude my judgment at this point and say that for the reasons which I have given the rule ought not to be extended to costs in criminal cases. But included in the scanty authority which has to be considered on this point there is a decision of this court in which the rule has been applied to a case which is at least quasi-criminal in character. It may be that that case—Barnett v. Eccles Corpn. (42), with which I shall deal in detail later—prevents me from holding that the conventional measure is not applicable at all to criminal costs. If so, I should hold that it is applicable only in a case in which an order is made for taxed costs or their equivalent, i.e., for a full indemnity according to the conventional measure.

It must be remembered that what we have to consider in this case is a pure point of law. The statement of claim reveals that the whole of the damage alleged consists of a bill of costs in respect of which an award has been made. From this fact alone, if the costs were civil costs, it can be said as a matter of law that the damage claimed is too remote; to the extent that it has not been satisfied by the award, it consists of "extra costs" which are irrecoverable. Is it possible to make the same statement of law about criminal costs? In my judgment it is not.

The statement involves two propositions: first, that an award of costs means that the party is thereby indemnified against all the costs that he has properly incurred in the proceedings; and, secondly, if he is so indemnified, that he can (41) Grace v. Morgan, (1836), 2 Bing. N.C. at p. 537. (42) [1900] 2 Q.B. 423.

A claim nothing extra as damages. The second proposition, i.e., the application of the conventional measure, I am now assuming to be true in relation to criminal as well as to civil costs. The first proposition is true in relation to civil costs but not in relation to criminal costs. It is true in relation to civil costs because an award of costs in a civil case must as a matter of law include all costs actually incurred subject to taxation, i.e., taxed costs, or a sum equivalent thereto, less B any costs improperly incurred and so deducted because of fault or misconduct or some other good cause. It is the duty of the judge to exercise his discretion so as to achieve that end. If he exercises it with any other object in view, his award can be challenged; so, unless it is challenged, the award can be taken, whether it is for taxed costs or for nil, as the legal indemnity. But the proposition is not true in relation to criminal costs because there a judge is under no duty to make C an award that amounts to a complete indemnity in law for costs properly incurred. He may do so, as when he awards taxed costs. But if he does do so, it must be proved as a matter of fact; it cannot be assumed from the mere fact that an award has been made.

In stating the law in relation to civil costs, I have taken it that the award of a fixed sum would be as conclusive as an order for costs to be taxed. Mr. Ormrod D does not accept this. The power to award a fixed sum is now contained in the Supreme Court Costs Rules, 1959, r. 9 (4) (b), but no case of a civil action has been cited in which the rule that an award of costs is a complete indemnity has been considered in relation to such an award. If that rule is limited to an order for taxed costs or for no costs at all, the plaintiff must succeed on this point, since it does not appear from the statement of claim (and was not the fact) that E there was an order for taxed costs or that the fifteen guineas paid were recovered on taxation. But in my opinion a sum fixed in a civil suit must be fixed with the object of providing an indemnity for all costs properly incurred and if it were fixed with some other object it could be challenged. In a criminal case, since there is no prima facie right to any costs at all, a fixed sum need only represent—and in my experience generally does represent—an amount considered by the F court to be a reasonable contribution towards costs properly incurred.

Counsel for the defendants have both agreed that the order for fifteen guineas in this case was unappealable but that, if it had been a civil suit and the judge had awarded fifteen guineas without inquiry and without any apparent reason, his order would have been appealable. Their argument is that, if it is what the court "chooses" to give (to use the word that BOWEN, L.J., uses in the passage G I have quoted from Quartz Hill Gold Mining Co. v. Eyre (43)), the defendant must accept it as compensation. I do not think that by the word "choose" BOWEN, L.J., had in mind the arbitrary or unregulated exercise of the power; he was speaking of a civil case in which, as he said, the defendant would get what he deserved and he must have been well aware of the settled practice to which LORD STERNDALE, M.R., later referred (44).

H Counsel for the defendants has also argued that the plaintiff could have asked for taxed costs and that, if she failed to do so, she cannot recover them from the defendants. The court so held in Cotterell v. Jones (45). But in that case the plaintiff was by law entitled to an award of costs if he asked for it, and JERVIS, C.J., said (46) that the court was bound to take notice of that. In the ordinary case the question whether a plaintiff has done what is reasonable in I minimising his damage is one of fact and not of law. If the defendants want to raise it, they must do so at the trial and not on demurrer.

There are two cases to be considered in which the rule as to extra costs has been applied to criminal or quasi-criminal proceedings. In Barnett v. Eccles Corpn. (47), the plaintiff was the occupier of premises in a borough of which the

(43) (1883), 11 Q.B.D. at p. 690.
(44) In Ritter v. Godfrey, [1918-19] All E.R. Rep. at p. 721; [1920] 2 K.B. at p. 52.
(45) (1851), 11 C.B. 713. (46) (1851), 11 C.B. at p. 728.
(47) [1900] 2 Q.B. 104, 423.

defendants were the local authority. They served him with a notice under the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 94, requiring him to abate a nuisance; and they then made a complaint to the justices under s. 95. When such a complaint is made, the court has power under s. 96 to make an order on the occupier requiring him to comply with the notice; and it has an additional power by its order to impose a penalty not exceeding £5. Proceedings for non-compliance with an abatement notice have been held to be a " criminal cause or matter " within the Judicature Acts; R. v. Whitchurch (48). The justices made an order requiring the plaintiff to comply with the notice; but apparently they did not impose any penalty. The plaintiff's expenses in defending himself were claimed to be £50 16s. 8d. He appealed to quarter sessions who dismissed the appeal but stated a case for the Divisional Court, where the plaintiff was successful. The Divisional Court ordered that the plaintiff should have his taxed costs of the appeal both to the Divisional Court and to quarter sessions, but they apparently made no order about the costs before the justices. The plaintiff then claimed from Eccles Corporation his costs before the justices and the extra costs of the appeals, making his claim under s. 308 of the Act of 1875 which provided that, where any person sustained any damage by reason of the exercise of the powers granted by the Act, " full compensation " should be made. On a Special Case stated by an arbitrator under s. 308, it was held both by the Divisional Court and by the Court of Appeal that the plaintiff had received full compensation.

In Wiffen v. Bailey and Romford Urban Council (49), the plaintiff was also an occupier who was served with a notice under s. 95 of the Public Health Act, 1875. But on complaint being made by the local authority, the justices dismissed the complaint and awarded the plaintiff five guineas costs. The plaintiff brought an action for malicious prosecution against the local authority and included as an item of special damage £5 15s. as extra costs. HORRIDGE, J., dealt with the point very shortly, saying that Barnett v. Eccles Corpn. (50) was clear authority that extra costs were not recoverable. This was not a case tried on demurrer and it may well have appeared from the evidence or have been conceded that the five guineas fixed by the magistrates was equivalent to the costs recoverable on taxation; as I have pointed out, the magistrates cannot make an order for taxation but are obliged to fix a sum. On this hypothesis I think that HORRIDGE, J., was right in regarding Barnett v. Eccles Corpn. (50) as indistinguishable; otherwise, I think, with respect, that he was not. The case went to the Court of Appeal where the point was not argued. PHILLIMORE, L.J. (51), agreed with the conclusion of HORRIDGE, J., and counsel for the defendants relies on this as an obiter dictum, but he agrees that on this point Wiffen v. Bailey and Romford Urban Council (49) is not a decision binding on us.

In the present case the sum of fifteen guineas fixed by the recorder amounts to about one-fifth of the costs claimed. It does not, therefore, seem likely that it was fixed by him as a sum which in his view fairly represented all the costs allowable on taxation. If it appears at the trial that it was so fixed, it may be that the defence will succeed on this point on the authority of Barnett v. Eccles Corpn. (50). I express no view on that at this stage; it is enough to say that the point fails on demurrer.

Having reached this conclusion, I hold that the statement of claim does disclose a good cause of action. It is therefore unnecessary for me to consider in detail the other point on which the plaintiff has relied. I think that the point fails. If the test is whether a charge that the plaintiff pulled the communication cord without sufficient cause is capable of bringing her into ridicule, I should hold that that was a point that could not properly be decided on demurrer. If the test is whether the charge is necessarily and naturally defamatory of the plaintiff, I agree with DIPLOCK, J., that it is not. This latter test appears to be

(48) (1881), 7 Q.B.D. 534.
(49) [1914] 2 K.B. 5; [1915] 1 K.B. 600.
(50) [1900] 2 Q.B. 104, 423.
(51) [1915] 1 K.B. at p. 610.

A quite a modern introduction into the law of malicious prosecution and not a very satisfactory one; but here again I agree with DIPLOCK, J., that it is clearly laid down as the correct test by this court in Wiffen v. Bailey and Romford Urban Council (52), an authority by which we are bound.

DANCKWERTS, L.J.: Section 22 of the Regulation of Railways Act, B 1868, requires every railway company to provide and maintain in good working order, in every train worked by it which carries passengers more than twenty miles without stopping, such efficient means of communication between the passengers and the servants of the company in charge of the train as the Board of Trade may approve. The section in the final sentence provides:

> "Any passenger who makes use of the said means of communication C without reasonable and sufficient cause shall be liable for each offence to a penalty not exceeding £5."

No doubt countless passengers have been deterred from pulling the neat and attractive chain which normally represents this means of communication in modern railway carriages by the warning " Penalty for improper use £5 ". But on Jan. 4, 1959, Miss Betty Pamela Berry, the plaintiff, in a train between D Brighton and Lancing pulled the cord. She did this for a reason which appeared to her to be not only reasonable but urgent, and, if the particulars of the statement of claim delivered in this action are true, it would appear that there was both reasonable and sufficient cause for her act. None the less, she was prosecuted by the British Transport Commission, the defendants, at Brighton, and when the case came before the magistrates on Feb. 13, 1959, she was convicted E and fined 20s. and ordered to pay 27s. for costs. The plaintiff appealed against the conviction, and on July 6, 1959, when before the recorder the defendants pursued the prosecution and attempted to sustain the conviction, the appeal was allowed and the plaintiff was awarded the sum of £15 15s. costs.

Having regard to the character of her opponent, it might be thought that the plaintiff would have been wise to have left the matter there. But on Oct. 26, F 1959, she began this action against the defendants for malicious prosecution. Her statement of claim discloses that the expenses to which she was put in respect of the hearing before the magistrates and the appeal before the recorder (after giving credit for the sum of £15 15s. which has been duly paid) amounted to the sum of £64 2s.; and the particulars of the statement of claim delivered on Jan. 6, 1960, contain allegations which suggest that the defendants ought not to G have launched the prosecution.

In para. 5 of the amended defence the defendants have taken the objection that > " the statement of claim discloses no damage of which the plaintiff is entitled to complain in law and in the premises the statement of claim discloses no cause of action."

H

This point of law was directed to be heard as a preliminary issue between the parties. For this purpose, of course, all the allegations in the statement of claim must be taken to be true, and this includes the allegations in the particulars, which are part of the statement of claim. The issue was tried by DIPLOCK, J., and on July 29, 1960, he decided that the plaintiff's statement of claim disclosed I no cause of action, and the action was dismissed.

The action of malicious prosecution (which lies for wrongful and malicious civil proceedings as well as criminal proceedings) was an action on the case and consequently damage is essential to support it. The necessary conditions for the maintenance of the action were set forth by HOLT, C.J., in Savile v. Roberts (53) in 1698, which is noteworthy (amongst other things) for being the subject of ten different reports as well as several variants in the spelling of the plaintiff's name. The principal report is in 1 Lord Raymond, at p. 374, but this report has to be supplemented from some of the others. In the report in 1 Salkeld at p. 15, HOLT, C.J., is reported as observing

(52) [1914] 2 K.B. 5; [1915] 1 K.B. 600. (53) (1698), 1 Ld. Raym. 374.

> ". . . though the action lies, yet it is not to be favoured; . . . it shall lie on the plaintiff's side to prove on express rancour and malice."

Various reasons have been suggested for the unfriendly view of the action taken by the courts in the seventeenth century.

The conditions necessary for the maintenance of the action are given by HOLT, C.J., as follows (54):

> " 1. The damage to a man's fame, as if the matter whereof he is accused be scandalous . . . 2. The second sort of damages, which would support such an action, are such as are done to the person; as where a man is put in danger to lose his life, or limb, or liberty . . . 3. The third sort of damages, which will support such an action, is damage to a man's property, as where he is forced to expend his money in necessary charges, to acquit himself of the crime of which he is accused . . ."

HOLT C.J., adds (55):

> " The common law has made provision, to hinder malicious and frivolous and vexatious suits, that every plaintiff should find pledges, who were amerced, if the claim was false; which judgment the court heretofore always gave, and then a writ issued to the coroners, and they affeered them according to the proportion of the vexation . . . But that method became disused, and then to supply it, the statutes gave costs to the defendants . . . But there was no amercement upon indictments, and the party had not any remedy to reimburse himself but by action."

It is accepted that by " scandalous " HOLT, C.J., meant slanderous, and it has been suggested that a slander which is actionable per se without proof of special damage is the standard to apply.

It would appear that the action in the time of HOLT, C.J., was in the early stages of its evolution, and what would appear to be sensible or desirable in the seventeenth century is not necessarily reasonable in 1961. In the course of the treatment of the subject in the cases which have been decided in more modern times, there appear to me to have been introduced a number of developments which, with all respect, I do not think ought to have been allowed to occur. For instance, it seems to me to be quite unreasonable that the court should be asked to consider whether a charge in the relevant criminal proceedings could be made without any injury to " the fair fame " and whether the charge " necessarily and naturally " conveys an imputation on the plaintiff, per BUCKLEY, L.J., in Wiffen v. Bailey and Romford Urban Council (56). In my view, reason demands that the standard should be whether a reasonable man, hearing of the proceedings brought against the plaintiff, would form the view that they were a damaging reflection on the " fair fame " of the plaintiff. The other standard seems to me to be unreasonably exacting. Again the theory that taxed costs are a sufficient compensation for a successful defendant, at any rate in a civil action, seems to me an unreal or perhaps even a cynical view, which ought not to have any place in the conditions of an action for malicious prosecution. Every lawyer, and many laymen, to their cost, know that costs taxed as between party and party, and even in some cases as between solicitor and client, leave a successful party bitterly lamenting the burden of expenses which he is left to bear.

As regards the costs of a civil action, the rule that taxed costs must be treated as the maximum which a litigant can claim for recovery must be treated, for the purposes of this court, as established by Quartz Hill Gold Mining Co. v. Eyre (57). But I am not satisfied that the matter is concluded in respect of the expenses to which a successful litigant is put in defending himself or herself in the course of (54) (1698), 1 Ld. Raym. at p. 378.

(55) (1698), 1 Ld. Raym. at p. 380.
(56) [1915] 1 K.B. at p. 608.
(57) (1883), 11 Q.B.D. 674.

A criminal proceedings. In the time of HOLT, C.J., costs could not be obtained in criminal cases, and this was the reason given by him for the allowance of the action for malicious prosecution in such cases. It has been contended that, by reason of the ability of the courts to award costs under modern statutes, this is no longer true, and the rule as to civil proceedings should be applied also to criminal proceedings.

B The position as regards costs in civil proceedings seems to date back to the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1890, s. 5, and the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, s. 50, and is now regulated by the Supreme Court Costs Rules, 1959. In the result the court is given a judicial discretion, and, in practice, the costs are taxed, and as a result the costs so ascertained are treated as the maximum proper costs which the party deserves to receive; anything C beyond that is treated as something not recognised by the law. Consequently, if a successful party is, in an exercise of the judicial discretion in any particular case, refused costs, that also is an end of the matter. Likewise, if the successful party failed to ask for costs.

The position of costs in criminal matters is not the same. Under s. 18 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, in cases where the justices dismissed the D information or complaint, it was lawful for them, in their discretion, in and by their order of dismissal, to award and order that the prosecutor or complainant respectively should pay to the defendant such costs as to the justices seemed just or reasonable. The amount of the costs had to be fixed by the justices at the time of the hearing.

Under the Quarter Sessions Act, 1849, s. 5, on any appeal to any court of E quarter sessions the court before whom the same should be brought might, if it thought fit, order and direct the party or parties against whom the same should be decided to pay to the other party or parties such costs and charges as might to such court appear just and reasonable. Under s. 31 (vii) of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, quarter sessions may make such order as to costs to be paid by either party as they think just. There seems to have been a dual power F in this respect under s. 5 of the Act of 1849, and s. 31 of the Act of 1879. The s. 31 which was operative under the Act of 1879 after 1933 was in fact substituted for the original s. 31 by the Summary Jurisdiction (Appeals) Act, 1933.

A further provision was contained in s. 5 (1) of the last mentioned Act which provided as follows:

> "On any appeal to which this Act applies a court of quarter sessions may, G in the exercise of their power to award costs—(i) where they allow the appeal, direct that there shall be included in any costs to be paid by the respondent to the appellant the costs properly incurred by the appellant in the proceedings before the court of summary jurisdiction, or such fixed sum as the court of quarter sessions may consider reasonable in respect of the costs so incurred by him; (ii) in any case, in lieu of directing a taxation of costs, fix H the sum to be paid by way of costs by either party to the appeal; and in fixing, for the purposes of this subsection, the amount of any costs to be paid by a party to an appeal shall have regard to his means."

This last provision, of course, involves, to the extent to which it is applied, an abandonment of any attempt to compensate the victim for his expenses. And I in the exercise of their powers the decision of the court of quarter sessions cannot, it seems, be questioned by a higher court, if they refrain from giving any reasons for the result which they reach.

Under s. 1 of the Costs in Criminal Cases Act, 1952, a court of assize or quarter sessions is empowered, if the accused is acquitted, to order the payment out of local funds of the costs of the defence; and the costs so payable out of local funds are to be such sums as appear to the court reasonably sufficient to compensate the accused for the expenses properly incurred in carrying on the defence. Section 2 of the Act provides that, where any person is acquitted on indictment

(in the cases mentioned in the section), the court of assizes or quarter sessions before which he is acquitted may order the prosecutor to pay the whole or any part of the costs incurred in or about the defence, including any proceedings before the examining justices. A

It appears, therefore, that the provisions relating to costs in criminal cases differ from the rules which apply in the case of civil actions. But in the administration of the law the practice seems to differ even more strikingly. In a civil action, the successful party is almost always awarded costs. A successful party can only be deprived of his costs by the exercise of a judicial discretion and for good reason. In criminal cases, in practice a person who is acquitted is not necessarily, or, indeed it would appear, usually awarded any costs; and, even if a sum is awarded for costs, it appears to be no real compensation for the expenses to which the party has been put, and even sometimes to be a mere nominal amount. B C

In these circumstances, even if the rule be established beyond recall that the extra costs over and above the amount recovered as taxed costs in a civil action do not constitute expenses sufficient to support an action for malicious prosecution, it would, in my view, be quite wrong to extend the rule to expenses incurred and not recovered in criminal proceedings. Moreover, there does not appear to be any decision which stands in the way of this result. It is true that in Wiffen v. Bailey and Romford Urban Council (58) the sum of five guineas which was awarded on the dismissal of the criminal proceedings was less than the amount of the expenses incurred in the course of the defence, but this question was not argued in the Court of Appeal. My conclusion, therefore, is that expenses incurred by the plaintiff in the course of her defence in the court of summary jurisdiction and before the recorder, over and above the sum of fifteen guineas awarded to her, are sufficient to support an action for malicious prosecution, and this appeal should be allowed. D E

It is not really necessary to go into the two other possible grounds for supporting the action, viz., whether the proceedings in which the plaintiff became involved were damaging to her "fair fame", or whether criminal proceedings which do not involve imprisonment and can only involve a fine are sufficient to support the action. It is exceedingly difficult to reconcile satisfactorily the decisions of the Court of Appeal in Wiffen v. Bailey and Romford Urban Council (58) and Rayson v. South London Tramway Co. (59), on these matters, and I prefer to say no more on these subjects. F

I must pay a tribute to the industry of counsel in this case. They appear to have presented to the court all the relevant cases, and to have pursued the matter with the most thorough research. Like my brother members of the court, I have been greatly assisted by their labours. G

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: M. H. B. Gilmour (for the defendants).

[Reported by F. A. Amies, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

---

(58) [1915] 1 K.B. 600. (59) [1893] 2 Q.B. 304.

A

Re ROYAL VICTORIA PAVILION, RAMSGATE. WHELAN v. F.T.S. (GREAT BRITAIN), LTD.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Pennycuick, J.), June 19, 29, 1961.]

Covenant—Running with land—Sale of theatre and cinema properties—Covenant to "procure" that theatre retained by vendors should not be open save for certain performances—Vendors' interest in retained theatre a leasehold interest—Successors in title not mentioned in covenant—Whether covenant personal or binding land—Whether contrary intention excluding Law of Property Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5 c. 20), s. 79.

B

In July, 1952, Thanet Theatrical Enterprises, Ltd. was entitled to the residue of a term of years, due to expire on Mar. 25, 1969, in Royal Victoria Pavilion, Ramsgate. By a conveyance dated July 7, 1952, Thanet Theatrical Enterprises, Ltd., conveyed and assigned four other properties in Ramsgate to the defendant company. Clause 4 contained covenants expressed as being made by the purchasers for themselves and their successors in title. Clause 5 of the conveyance provided—"The vendors hereby covenant with the purchasers that they the vendors will procure that until Mar. 25, 1969, the premises known as the Royal Pavilion at Ramsgate shall not (a) Be open to the public between Sept. 30 in each year and the succeeding Whit Saturday . . . except for entertainment by living actors . . . (b) Be used at any other time for the entertainment of the public . . . by any other medium than living actors . . ." This restriction was registered as a land charge under class D (2). Clause 6 was a covenant by the vendors "with the purchasers" for the discharge of certain outgoings and liabilities. By assignment the pavilion became vested in the plaintiff. Thanet Theatrical Enterprises, Ltd. was wound up on June 5, 1957. The plaintiff applied to the court for a declaration that the covenants contained in cl. 5 of the conveyance dated July 7, 1952, were not binding on him as a successor in title of Thanet Theatrical Enterprises, Ltd. The defendant company still retained one of the four properties comprised in the conveyance of July 7, 1952.

C

D

E

F

Held: the covenant was not binding on the plaintiff because—

(i) the use of the word "procure" in cl. 5 denoted that the covenant was a personal covenant to ensure that the property would be used in accordance with the covenant, and the word "procure" was not appropriate to a covenant on behalf of a covenantor and his successors in title; moreover the introductory wording of the covenants in cl. 4 and cl. 6 showed by comparison that the covenant in cl. 5 was intended to be personal.

G

(ii) although the conveyance did not expressly exclude s. 79* of the Law of Property Act, 1925, yet a sufficient contrary intention was indicated to exclude that enactment, which accordingly did not render the covenant one made on behalf of the successors in title of Thanet Theatrical Enterprises, Ltd.

H

[As to the burden of tenant's covenants, see 23 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 644, para. 1360; and for cases on the subject, see 31 DIGEST (Repl.) 151, 152, 2892-2906.

For the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 62, s. 79, s. 84 (2), see 20 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 559, 600, 607.]

I

Cases referred to:

Broomfield v. Williams, [1897] 1 Ch. 602; 66 L.J.Ch. 305; 76 L.T. 243; 19 Digest 36, 183.

Gregg v. Richards, [1926] Ch. 521; 95 L.J.Ch. 209; 135 L.T. 75; Digest Supp.

Newton Abbot Co-operative Society, Ltd. v. Williamson & Treadgold, Ltd., [1952] 1 All E.R. 279; [1952] Ch. 286; 40 Digest (Repl.) 353, 2839.

---

* For s. 79 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, see p. 86, letter I, to p. 87, letter B, post.

Adjourned Summons.

This was an application by originating summons dated Mar. 20, 1961, by the plaintiff, Frank Ronald Whelan, who was a leaseholder of the Royal Victoria Pavilion, Ramsgate, for a declaration (i) that the covenants contained in cl. 5 of a conveyance dated July 7, 1952, made between Thanet Theatrical Enterprises, Ltd., and Predominant Film Transport, Ltd., were not binding on him or other the leaseholder for the time being of the property or (ii) alternatively, pursuant to s. 84 (2) of the Law of Property Act, 1925, that the nature and extent of the restrictions (if any) imposed by the covenants contained in cl. 5 of the conveyance might be declared and whether they were now enforceable and, if so, by whom, and (iii) that the entry of the restrictions in the Land Charges Registry might be cancelled. The defendant was F.T.S. (Great Britain), Ltd., which claimed to be entitled to the benefit of the covenants contained in cl. 5 of the conveyance. The facts appear in the judgment.

D. A. Thomas for the plaintiff.

P. R. Oliver for the defendant company.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 29. PENNYCUICK, J.: This originating summons raises a question on the effect of a covenant contained in a conveyance dated July 7, 1952, whereby Thanet Theatrical Enterprises, Ltd. conveyed certain properties to the defendant company by its then name of Predominant Film Transport, Ltd. The summons was heard on affidavit evidence, and there is no dispute as to the facts.

By a lease dated Sept. 26, 1936, Ramsgate Corporation demised a property known as the Royal Victoria Pavilion at Ramsgate to Harry Edward Bawn for twenty-one years from Mar. 25, 1934. By an assignment dated Sept. 28, 1936, Mr. Bawn assigned the lease to Balexcro Theatres, Ltd. By a lease dated Apr. 7, 1947, Ramsgate Corporation demised the pavilion to Balexcro Theatres, Ltd., for a further fourteen years from Mar. 25, 1955. On Aug. 28, 1950, Balexcro Theatres, Ltd., changed its name to Thanet Theatrical Enterprises, Ltd.; I will hereafter refer to that company as " Thanet Theatrical ".

The position then at the date of the conveyance dated July 7, 1952, was that Thanet Theatrical had a lease of the pavilion with an unexpired term of seventeen years, i.e., due to expire on Mar. 25, 1969. By a conveyance dated July 7, 1952, Thanet Theatrical conveyed and assigned four other properties in Ramsgate to the defendant company; these were the King's Theatre and the Ramsgate Picture House, which were freehold, the Palace Theatre and Sangers Hotel and Restaurant which were leasehold. The conveyance, after recital of the vendors' seizure of the various properties, proceeds as follows:

> " (7) The vendors have for some time past carried on upon the freehold premises described in the first and second schedules hereto the businesses of theatres and cinematograph theatres and upon the leasehold premises described in the third schedule and Part II of the fourth schedule hereto the business of a theatre and cinema and upon the leasehold premises described in Part I of the fourth schedule hereto the business of a licensed hotel or inn.
>
> " (8) The vendors have agreed with the purchasers for the sale to the purchasers of the said freehold and leasehold premises and the goodwill of the businesses hereinbefore referred to together with the movable plant and equipment hereinafter referred to at the price of £41,500."

The operative part of the conveyance contains first a conveyance of the freehold properties and next an assignment of the leasehold properties; then there is the assignment of the goodwill of the businesses of theatres, cinematograph theatres and a licensed hotel or inn,

> ". . . together with . . . the benefit of and subject to all subsisting contracts and engagements . . . in connexion with the said businesses . . ."

A The next three clauses of the conveyance I will read in full:

"(4) The purchasers for themselves and their successors and assigns hereby covenant with the vendors: (a) that the purchasers will observe and perform the terms and conditions affecting the property described in the second schedule hereto relative to building set out in a conveyance dated Oct. 31, 1919, more particularly referred to in the third schedule hereto and B will keep the vendors indemnified from and against all actions proceedings costs charges claims demands and expenses whatsoever in respect of any breach thereof (b) that the purchasers will duly pay satisfy discharge and fulfil all the liabilities of the vendors and their nominees subsisting at the date hereof in relation to the forward contracts and engagements of the vendors taken over by the purchasers and will indemnify the vendors and any nominee C of the vendors who may be personally liable thereunder from and against all actions proceedings costs charges claims demands and expenses whatsoever in respect of any breach thereof arising after the date hereof (c) that the purchasers will henceforth during the continuance of the terms created by the first and second leases pay the rents thereby reserved and perform and observe the covenants on the lessees part contained therein and will D at all times hereafter keep the vendors indemnified against all proceedings costs claims and expenses whatsoever in respect of the said rents and covenants or in anywise relating thereto.

"5. The vendors hereby covenant with the purchasers that they the vendors will procure that until Mar. 25, 1969, the premises known as the Royal Pavilion at Ramsgate shall not (a) Be open to the public between E Sept. 30 in each year and the succeeding Whit Saturday (both days inclusive) except for entertainment by living actors or performers for one performance in each calendar month save with the express written consent of the purchasers which consent may be given or withheld at their sole discretion. (b) Be used at any other time for the entertainment of the public (whether or not for profit) by any other medium than living actors or performers F and without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing any entertainment by means of cinematograph or other mechanical means of reproduction including rediffusion by television of cinematograph films (as distinct from mechanical entertainment available to 'live' theatres in substitution for 'live' shows) shall be deemed to be specifically precluded.

"6. The vendors hereby covenant with the purchasers that the vendors G will pay satisfy and discharge all the debts outgoings obligations and liabilities of whatsoever nature of the vendors (including all capital expenditure) in respect of the said businesses licences contracts or otherwise subsisting at accrued due on or apportionable to the period up to the date hereof and will indemnify the purchasers against all actions proceedings costs claims and demands in respect thereof."

H It is on the covenant contained in cl. 5 of the conveyance that the present issue arises. The restriction in cl. 5 was registered as a land charge under class D (2). By an assignment dated Jan. 9, 1953, the pavilion was assigned by Thanet Theatrical to Ramsgate Pavilion, Ltd. Thanet Theatrical was wound up on June 5, 1957. Finally by an assignment dated June 12, 1959, the pavilion was assigned by Ramsgate Pavilion, Ltd. to Mr. Frank Ronald Whelan, the plaintiff I in this action. Of the four properties comprised in the conveyance dated July 7, 1952, the defendant company still retains the King's Theatre, which lies one hundred and seventy-five yards to the west of the pavilion. The question raised by the originating summons is in these terms: the plaintiff seeks

"(1) A declaration that the said covenants [that is the covenants in cl. 5 of the conveyance] are not binding upon the plaintiff or other the leaseholder for the time being of the said property. (2) Alternatively, pursuant to s. 84 (2) of the Law of Property Act, 1925, that the nature and extent of the restrictions (if any) imposed by the covenants contained in cl. 5 of the said conveyance may be declared and whether the same are now enforceable and, if so, by whom. (3) That the entry of the said restrictions in the Land Charges Registry may be cancelled."

In order to answer the question raised by the summons it is necessary in the first place to determine the construction of cl. 5 of the conveyance. By this clause Thanet Theatrical covenants to procure that during a term corresponding to the residue of its leasehold interest, the use of the pavilion shall be restricted as therein mentioned. The word "procure" is defined in the OXFORD ENGLISH DICTIONARY as meaning "obtain by care or effort", and can be more simply paraphrased as "see to it". The obligation undertaken by Thanet Theatrical is to see to it that a certain state of affairs prevails during the specified term. It seems to me that a covenant so expressed is naturally to be regarded as of a purely personal character. The tenant of property is in a position to ensure that during his tenancy the property is not to be used in a specified manner either by himself or by persons claiming under him, whether as licensees underlessees or assignees, and the word "procure" is appropriate to denote a personal obligation so to ensure. So here, the covenant regarded as purely a personal covenant would have been perfectly sensible and workable had Thanet Theatrical remained in existence. On the other hand, it seems to me that a covenant so expressed is not naturally to be regarded as a covenant on behalf of the covenantor and his successors in title so as to run with the land. The causative verb "procure" is not appropriate where successors in title are themselves to be bound. The covenantor under a covenant intended to run with the land would not sensibly be expressed as procuring his successors to abstain from doing whatever is covenanted not to be done.

The view that the covenant in cl. 5 is intended to be of a purely personal character derives much support from the clauses which immediately precede and follow it. Clause 4, which as regards sub-para. (a) and sub-para. (c) at any rate, is plainly intended to run with the land, is introduced by the apt words

"The purchasers for themselves and their successors and assigns hereby covenant with the vendors . . ."

Clause 6, which is plainly intended as a purely personal covenant is introduced only by the words "The vendors hereby covenant with the purchasers . . ." It would be strange draftsmanship to interpose between these two covenants a covenant intended to run with the land, and yet only introduced by the words "The vendors hereby covenant with the purchasers . . ."

It is important in construing the covenant in cl. 5 to bear in mind that the period covered by it is only seventeen years. A restriction for so short a period can readily be achieved by a purely personal obligation, unlike a restriction in perpetuity which can only be fully effective if it runs with the land.

Counsel for the defendant company points out that the covenant, though positive in form, may yet be negative in substance. This is so, and I imagine that here the covenant in cl. 5 would be regarded as negative to this extent, that it imports an obligation on Thanet Theatrical itself not to do any of the prohibited acts but I do not think Thanet Theatrical's positive obligation to procure can, as regards persons claiming under it, be translated into a negative obligation on those parties if on the natural construction of the covenant they are not bound by it at all.

Counsel further relies on s. 79 of the Law of Property Act, 1925. That section is in these terms:

"(1) A covenant relating to any land of a covenantor or capable of being bound by him, shall, unless a contrary intention is expressed, be deemed to be made by the covenantor on behalf of himself his successors in title and the persons deriving title under him or them, and, subject as aforesaid,

A shall have effect as if such successors and other persons were expressed. This subsection extends to a covenant to do some act relating to the land, notwithstanding that the subject-matter may not be in existence when the covenant is made.

"(2) For the purposes of this section in connexion with covenants restrictive of the user of land 'successors in title' shall be deemed to include B the owners and occupiers for the time being of such land.

"(3) This section applies only to covenants made after the commencement of this Act."

Here it is contended that no contrary intention is expressed in the conveyance dated July 7, 1952, and that therefore the covenant in cl. 5 must be deemed to be made by Thanet Theatrical on behalf of itself and its successors in title. C If the words "unless a contrary intention is expressed" in s. 79 mean: "unless the instrument contains express provision to the contrary," this contention would be unanswerable, but it seems to me that the words "unless a contrary intention is expressed" mean rather: "unless an indication to the contrary is to be found in the instrument", and that such an indication may be sufficiently contained in the wording and context of the instrument even though the instru- D ment contains no provision expressly excluding successors in title from its operation. It can hardly be the intention of the section that a covenant, which on its natural construction is manifestly intended to be personal only, must be construed as running with the land merely because the contrary is not expressly provided.

There appears to be no authority in point under s. 79 itself, but some support E for the view which I have expressed is to be found in the judgment of the Court of Appeal in two cases concerned with similar words in s. 6 (4) of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, now reproduced in s. 62 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, namely Broomfield v. Williams (1), and Gregg v. Richards (2). So here, although the conveyance contains no express provision to the effect that it is not made on behalf of successors in title, it does, as it seems to me, contain sufficient F indication to this effect.

The views which I have indicated are sufficient to dispose of this summons in favour of the plaintiff. I must, however, mention shortly one contention advanced by counsel for the plaintiff, namely that the covenant in cl. 5 is for the protection of the defendant company's business and not for the protection of the properties comprised in the conveyance viewed as land, and that for this G reason the burden of the covenant is incapable of running with the pavilion. On the view which I have taken this point does not arise, since Thanet Theatrical's successors in title are not bound on the proper construction of the covenant. If the point did arise it would, in my judgment, be covered by the decision of UPJOHN, J., in Newton Abbot Co-operative Society, Ltd. v. Williamson & Treadgold, Ltd. (3) and this contention would fail.

H I propose, accordingly, to make a declaration in terms of para. 1 of the originating summons, and a direction in the terms of para. 3 of the originating summons.

Declaration accordingly.

Solicitors: Isadore Goldman & Son (for the plaintiff); Joynson-Hicks & Co. (for the defendant company).

[Reported by JENIFER SANDELL, Barrister-at-Law.]

---

(1) [1897] 1 Ch. 602. (2) [1926] Ch. 521.
(3) [1952] 1 All E.R. 279; [1952] Ch. 286.

R. v. QUINN. R. v. BLOOM.

A

[COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL (Ashworth, Paull and Howard, JJ.), June 19, 20, 21, 22, 30, 1961.]

Criminal Law—Disorderly house—Definition—Indecent performances and exhibitions—Offence of keeping a disorderly house by giving such performances—Whether essential that persons viewing such performances should participate in acts of indecency—Whether common nuisance an essential element of offence.

B

Criminal Law—Evidence—Film—Reconstruction of crime.

A disorderly house, for the purposes of a charge of the common law offence of keeping a disorderly house in a case where the essence of the charge is the taking place of indecent performances or exhibitions, may be defined as follows, viz.—a house conducted contrary to law and good order in that matters are performed or exhibited of such a character that their performance or exhibition in a place of common resort (a) amounts to an outrage of public decency or (b) tends to corrupt or deprave, or (c) is otherwise calculated to injure the public interest so as to call for condemnation and punishment (see p. 91, letters H and I, post). The alternatives (a), (b) and (c) in this definition are not mutually exclusive (see p. 92, letter A, post).

C

D

Dictum of VISCOUNT SIMONDS in Shaw v. Director of Public Prosecutions ([1961] 2 All E.R. at p. 452) applied.

A jury should be warned that in applying the definition they should approach the matter as ordinary reasonable citizens, putting aside as far as possible any prejudices that they may have, but each juror's decision is his own subjective decision, so that in effect the morality of the jury determines the guilt or innocence of the accused (see p. 92, letters E to H, post).

E

Dictum of LORD HODSON in Shaw v. Director of Public Prosecutions ([1961] 2 All E.R. at p. 468) applied.

Two club proprietors were indicted, each for keeping a disorderly house, the substance of the charge in each case arising out of matters alleged to have occurred in the course of " strip-tease " performances at the club before members of the club. There was evidence of police officers, who saw the acts at both premises, which showed that the indecency involved was serious and, in some respects, revolting. It was sought on behalf of the defence in one case to put in evidence a film showing what certain of the performers actually did in the course of their acts, and to support this by evidence that the performances in the film were identical with the performances on the occasions complained of. This film was taken three months after the events complained of and the evidence was not admitted at the trial. In the summing-up at one trial the jury were directed to consider whether what had been portrayed was, among other adjectives, " obscene ", but no reference was made to the definition of that adjective now contained in s. 1 (1) of the Obscene Publications Act, 1959. The accused were convicted at London Sessions before the chairman and a jury, the conviction of one accused being at a re-trial (the jury at the first trial having disagreed) before the same chairman. On appeal against conviction,

F

G

H

Held: (i) (a) the fact that persons resorting to the premises were mere spectators and committed no acts of indecency did not prevent the premises constituting in law a disorderly house (see p. 91, letter D, post).

I

(b) while a disorderly house might in some instances amount to a common nuisance, the latter element was not a necessary ingredient of the offence in question (see p. 91, letter E, post).

R. v. Rice and Wilton ((1866), L.R. 1 C.C.R. 21) followed.

(ii) the film was an alleged reconstruction of the alleged crimes and evidence by its exhibition was properly rejected as inadmissible, for it was not the best evidence (see p. 93, letter A, post).

A Per CURIAM: (a) if a direction in a summing-up uses the adjective "obscene" it is in general desirable to mention the definition of "obscene" contained in s. 1 (1) of the Obscene Publications Act, 1959; and there is danger in multiplying offensive adjectives (see p. 93, letter H, and p. 94, letter D, post).

(b) the re-trial of the accused who was tried twice should have taken place B before a deputy chairman, not before the chairman who had presided at the first trial (see p. 90, letter D, post).

Appeals dismissed.

[As to disorderly houses, see 10 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 671, para. 1285 and SUPPLEMENT; ibid. 673, note (u); and for cases on the subject, see 15 C DIGEST (Repl.) 902, 8702, 904, 905, 8709, 8714, 8722, 8723, 907-909, 8727-8752.]

Cases referred to:

R. v. Berg, Britt, Carré & Lummies, (1927), 20 Cr. App. Rep. 38; 15 Digest (Repl.) 902, 8702.

R. v. Higginson, (1762), 2 Burr. 1232; 97 E.R. 806; 15 Digest (Repl.) 902, 8704.

D R. v. Rice and Wilton, (1866), L.R. 1 C.C.R. 21; 35 L.J.M.C. 93; 13 L.T. 678; 10 Cox C.C. 155; 15 Digest (Repl.) 903, 8707.

Shaw v. Director of Public Prosecutions, [1961] 2 All E.R. 446; [1961] 2 W.L.R. 897.

Appeals.

These were two appeals based on similar points of law. The appellant, E Geoffrey Anthony Quinn, appealed against his conviction and the appellant, Samuel Bloom, appealed against his conviction and sentence. Each case had been tried independently at the County of London Sessions before the chairman and a jury, and both appellants were convicted of keeping a disorderly house and fined. Bloom's case was first tried in January, 1961, when he was charged that on divers days between May 8, 1960, and June 12, 1960, at No. 13, Mason's F Yard, S.W.1, he unlawfully kept a disorderly house there. On Jan. 16, 1961, the jury disagreed and the chairman discharged them without taking a verdict. The case was re-tried on Feb. 9 and 10, 1961, on the same indictment and the jury returned a verdict of guilty. The chairman sentenced Bloom by fining him £2,500 and ordering him to pay 100 guineas costs. Quinn was tried on Apr. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 1961, the charge being that he unlawfully kept a dis- G orderly house at the Raymond Revuebar Club, W.1, on divers days between Aug. 31, 1960, and Sept. 16, 1960. His counsel had submitted after calling evidence that the indictment should be quashed on the grounds that the particulars in it were not sufficient to give reasonable information as to the nature of the charge. The chairman ruled against him holding that the indictment in its then form alleged clearly that the offence was keeping a disorderly house unlaw- H fully at those premises. The trial then proceeded and the jury convicted Quinn of the offence charged and the chairman imposed a fine of £5,000 on him and ordered him to pay 500 guineas costs. After Quinn's conviction his counsel obtained a certificate from the chairman that the case was a fit case for appeal under s. 3 (b) of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, on two grounds—(i) whether the chairman's direction as to what constituted a disorderly house was good in law*, I and (ii) whether the chairman was right in holding that a film of the alleged acts made three months after the matters the subject of the indictment was inadmissible in evidence. Bloom's main grounds of appeal against conviction were (a) that the chairman wrongly exercised his discretion in re-trying the case himself when there were three deputy chairmen available; (b) that the chairman misdirected himself in law in holding that the evidence presented by the prosecution amounted to the offence charged in the indictment. He also appealed against his sentence on the ground that it was excessive. A

* The chairman's direction to the jury on what was meant by a disorderly house is set out at p. 93, letter I, to p. 94, letter A, post.

The statutes and authorities named below* were cited in argument in addition to those quoted in the judgment.

E. Clarke, Q.C., and Leonard Lewis for the appellant Quinn.
Christmas Humphreys, Q.C., and J. C. G. Burge for the appellant Bloom.
Sebag Shaw for the Crown. B

Cur. adv. vult.

June 30. ASHWORTH, J., read the following judgment of the court: In each of these two appeals the appellant appealed to this court against his conviction and the appellant Bloom also appealed against the penalty imposed on him. C

At the end of the hearing this court intimated that each appeal was dismissed, and that the court would give its reasons later. Each case was tried at the County of London Sessions before the learned chairman, and in each case the charge was the same, namely, that the appellants unlawfully kept a disorderly house. Bloom's case was first heard in January, 1961, when the jury were unable to reach agreement, and was then re-heard in February, 1961. Both D trials took place before the chairman, and this court confirms the opinion, expressed during the hearing of the appeal, that it would have been better if the re-trial had taken place before one of the deputy chairmen. Quinn's case was heard in April, 1961, and after his conviction counsel obtained from the chairman a certificate that the case was a fit case for an appeal on two grounds:—First, whether the chairman's direction as to what constituted a disorderly house was E good in law and, secondly, whether he was right in holding that a film of the alleged acts made three months after the matters the subject of the indictment was admissible in evidence. Quinn's appeal was heard first, and was followed by Bloom's appeal before any decision was given.

In each case the prosecution arose out of matters alleged to have occurred in the course of performances which took place at premises where the respective F appellants carried on business as proprietors of clubs. These performances were what has come to be known as "strip-tease" performances, and it was not disputed that in some of the scenes actresses appeared either completely nude or practically so. In Quinn's case it was alleged that in six and possibly eight out of seventeen acts constituting the programme matters occurred which far exceeded the limits which the law permits in performances of this sort: in Bloom's G case the acts complained of related to five out of a programme comprising fourteen acts. Short descriptions of the matters complained of are to be found in the summing-up in each case, and it is unnecessary to set them out in detail. It is sufficient to say that if the evidence of the police officers was reliable the indecency involved was beyond question serious and, indeed, in some respects revolting. H

Much of the argument before this court was directed to the question of what is meant by a "disorderly house". In so far as the expression has been used

---

* Revised Statutes of Canada (1927) Criminal Code, c. 36, 229 (Disorderly houses); Licensing Act, 1953, s. 13.

HAWKINS' PLEAS OF THE CROWN (8th Edn., 1824), Vol. 1, p. 717; CHITTY'S PRACTICAL TREATISE ON CRIMINAL LAW (2nd Edn., 1826), Vol. 2, p. 38; Vol. 3, p. 673; PEARCE AND MESTON, LAW OF NUISANCES (1926), pp. 217 et seq.; STEPHEN'S DIGEST OF THE CRIMINAL LAW (9th Edn., 1950), p. 179, art. 235, p. 181, art. 238; PHIPSON ON EVIDENCE (9th Edn., 1952), ch. 22, p. 285; RUSSELL ON CRIME (11th Edn.), Vol. 2, p. 1650 (Bacon's definition), p. 1651; 10 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 671, para. 1285; 678, para. 1299; ARCHBOLD'S CRIMINAL PLEADING, EVIDENCE AND PRACTICE (34th Edn.), para. 3581. I

R. v. Grey, (1864), 4 F. & F. 73; R. v. Hicklin, (1868), L.R. 3 Q.B. 360; 11 Cox, C.C. 19; R. v. Saunders & Hitchcock, (1875), 1 Q.B.D. 15; 13 Cox, C.C. 116; R. v. Four Chinamen, (1906), B.C.R. 216; R. v. Manley, [1933] 1 K.B. 529; 24 Cr. App. Rep. 25; R. v. Newland, [1953] 2 All E.R. 1067; R. v. Martin Secker Warburg, Ltd., [1954] 2 All E.R. 683.

A in Acts of Parliament no statutory definition has been provided. Thus, the Disorderly Houses Act, 1751, s. 2 (so far as relevant) provides,

> ". . . Any house, room, garden, or other place kept for public dancing, music, or other public entertainment of the like kind, in the cities of London and Westminster, or within twenty miles thereof, without a licence . . . shall be deemed a disorderly house or place . . ."

B Section 5 of the same Act refers to a " bawdy-house, gaming-house, or any other disorderly house ", but provides no definition.

The offence of keeping a disorderly house is an offence at common law, but in none of the reported cases to which our attention was called does there appear a comprehensive definition or statement of what the prosecution has to prove C in order to establish the charge. In some cases a prosecution has been successful as a result of proving that persons resorting to the alleged disorderly house were themselves taking part in illegal practices: see, for example, R. v. Higginson (1) (" fighting of cocks, boxing, playing at cudgels and misbehaving themselves "), and R. v. Berg, Britt, Carré & Lummies (2) (" lewd and immoral persons assembled for the purpose of unnatural practices "). It was argued in Quinn's appeal that D the misbehaviour or illegality on the part of persons resorting to the premises was an essential element in the offence of keeping a disorderly house and that as the members of Quinn's club and their guests were respectable persons who were merely spectators at the performances and committed no indecency themselves, the premises could not in law be regarded as a disorderly house. We are quite unable to take so restricted a view of the meaning of the expression E " disorderly house ".

A further argument on behalf of Quinn was that unless the alleged disorderly house amounted also to a common nuisance, the charge must fail. Although the report of R. v. Rice and Wilton (3) is exceedingly short, the decision itself is contrary to this argument, and counsel for Quinn did not press it. In our opinion, while a disorderly house may in some instances amount to a common F nuisance, the latter element is not an essential ingredient in the offence of keeping a disorderly house, and it is unnecessary to consider the question of common nuisances further.

It is convenient at this stage to refer to the recent decision of the House of Lords in Shaw v. Director of Public Prosecutions (4). Their Lordships' speeches were not delivered until May 4, 1961, after both the appellants had been tried and convicted, so that the learned chairman did not have the advantage afforded G to us of considering those speeches. In that case the material charge was not that of keeping a disorderly house but of conspiring to corrupt public morals, but in our opinion much of the reasoning of the majority is equally applicable to the present appeals. In reliance partly on the decision in Shaw v. Director of Public Prosecutions (4) counsel for the Crown submitted a proposition which H deserves to be recorded, particularly as both counsel for Quinn and counsel for Bloom were content to accept it as a correct statement of principle:

> " A disorderly house is a house conducted contrary to law and good order in that matters are performed or exhibited of such a character that their performance or exhibition in a place of common resort (a) amounts to an outrage of public decency or (b) tends to corrupt or deprave or (c) is otherwise calculated to injure the public interest so as to call for condemnation I and punishment."

Subject to two comments, we are of opinion that this statement of principle is correct in law. In the first place in the two appeals now before us the whole essence of the charge against the appellants was that indecent performances had taken place, and it was in relation to such a disorderly house that counsel

(1) (1762), 2 Burr. 1232.
(2) (1927), 20 Cr. App. Rep. 38.
(3) (1866), L.R. 1 C.C.R. 21.
(4) [1961] 2 All E.R. 446.

for the Crown's statement of principle was put forward. A charge of keeping a disorderly house may be preferred on some ground other than indecent performances and, in our opinion, the statement of principle must be regarded as limited to cases in which indecent performances or exhibitions are alleged.

Secondly, the statement contains three phrases expressed as alternatives which, for convenience, we have lettered (a), (b) and (c). In our view, these phrases should not be regarded as mutually exclusive; on the contrary, a case may well fall within all three. In this connexion we refer to the following passage in the speech of VISCOUNT SIMONDS (5):

> "It matters little what label is given to the offending act. To one of your Lordships it may appear an affront to public decency, to another, considering that it may succeed in its obvious intention of provoking libidinous desires, it will seem a corruption of public morals. Yet others may deem it aptly described as the creation of a public mischief or the undermining of moral conduct . . . When LORD MANSFIELD, speaking long after the Star Chamber had been abolished, said (6) that the Court of King's Bench was the custos morum of the people and had the superintendency of offences contra bonos mores, he was asserting, as I now assert, that there is in that court a residual power, where no statute has yet intervened to supersede the common law, to superintend those offences which are prejudicial to the public welfare."

Counsel on behalf of Bloom strenuously contended that charges of this sort must be considered objectively and not subjectively. As we understood it, his argument was that a juror should be directed to put on one side his own personal feelings on the matter and approach it objectively. If the word "subjective" and "objective" are introduced into the discussion at all (which for our part we deprecate as they so often lead to confusion), we think that any juror's view must be subjective to him, though he should be warned (as these jurors were) that he must approach the matter as an ordinary reasonable citizen putting on one side as far as possible any particular prejudice he may have. Once again we quote from Shaw v. Director of Public Prosecutions (7), in which each member of the majority referred to juries, and where LORD HODSON said (8):

> "Since a criminal indictment is followed by the verdict of a jury, it is true that the function of custos morum is, in criminal cases, ultimately performed by the jury by whom on a proper direction each case will be decided. This, I think, is consonant with the course of the development of our law . . . In the field of public morals, it will thus be the morality of the man in the jury box that will determine the fate of the accused but this should hardly disturb the equanimity of anyone brought up in the traditions of our common law."

Before we deal with the summing-up in either case, we should dispose of the second question raised in Quinn's certificate of appeal, which relates to the admissibility in evidence of a film taken three months after the events complained of. There were no doubt cogent reasons why the film could not be taken at an earlier date, but they do not in the least affect the question of admissibility. Counsel for Quinn's first application at the trial was that the jury should be allowed to see the film at the appellant's premises, but the chairman rightly rejected this suggestion, and counsel for Quinn then applied that the film should be exhibited within the precincts of the court. The film was intended to portray what three of the performers actually did in the course of their acts, and evidence was apparently available to the effect that the performances shown in the film were identical with the performances on the occasions complained of. The chairman rejected the evidence on the ground that it was inadmissible, and we

(5) [1961] 2 All E.R. at p. 452.
(6) In R. v. Delaval, (1763), 3 Burr. at p. 1438.
(7) [1961] 2 All E.R. 446.
(8) [1961] 2 All E.R. at p. 468.

A agree with this. The film was in essence a reconstruction of the alleged crime and, quite apart from the interval of three months, we think that evidence of this type is inadmissible.

It is, of course, true that demonstrations are frequently given by witnesses in the witness-box to show what was done at the material time. For example, the way in which a blow was struck is often demonstrated, but such demonstra-
B tions usually take place in the witness-box, take place in the presence of the jury, and are intended to illustrate one act. In our view, such demonstrations are altogether different in character from a reconstruction of an entire scene, a reconstruction which has been brought into existence in private for the purpose of constituting evidence at a trial. It is obvious that to allow such a reconstruction would be introducing a method of proof which would be most unsatis-
C factory for the reason that it would be almost impossible to analyse motion by motion those slight differences which may in the totality result in a scene of quite a different character than that performed on the night in question. Indeed, in this case, it was admitted that some of the movements in the film (for instance, that of a snake used in one scene) could not be said with any certainty to be the same movements as were made at the material time. In our judgment, this
D objection goes not only to weight, as was argued, but to admissibility: it is not the best evidence.

The learned chairman's summing-up in each case was subjected to considerable criticism. In fairness to him it should be mentioned that no complaint was or, indeed, could be made either as to his direction on the burden of proof or as to his summary of the relevant evidence. The complaints related to his direction
E on the main issue, namely, what is meant in law by keeping a disorderly house.

In Bloom's case there are two passages, one at the start and the other at the end of the summing-up, where the learned chairman was in effect giving a general direction on law. In the first passage he said:

> "If you come to the conclusion on the facts . . . that what was being portrayed here was obscene, lewd, disgusting, lascivious, and so on, then F that conduct would amount to a public mischief, that is to say, conduct against ordinary decent public ethics. If that were so, it would be a public mischief . . ."

In the later passage he said:

> "Now you have got to make up your minds, as ordinary common-sense
G people, what was going on. Was it lewd, obscene, something which would disgust you as ordinary reasonable citizens? Because if it was then that would be bawdy conduct and . . . that would be a disorderly house."

It is true that in the course of this summing-up the definition of "obscene" now incorporated in the Obscene Publications Act, 1959, s. 1 (1) (having a tendency to deprave and corrupt) was not brought to the notice of the jury, although H the word itself was used several times. But while in our view as a general rule it is desirable to mention the definition, if the word "obscene" is used, the omission on this occasion was not in our view of any great consequence. In our view, the effect of the passages which we have cited was to present the issue to the jury in a form consistent with the principles to which we have already referred, and we see no reason to suppose that the jury failed to understand their
I task.

In Quinn's case the learned chairman used slightly different language in directing the jury what is meant by a disorderly house. At the start he said:

> "There is a great variety of disorderly houses, but so far as this case is concerned if you come to the conclusion that this place, this club, consisted of premises upon which there were performed acts of a lewd, disgusting, depraving and debauching nature, that would constitute a disorderly house, because those sort of things going on on premises of that sort would be against public policy, against the common law which is the etiquette of this country. Here the prosecution go further, because they say that not only was this performance disgusting, lewd and lascivious, but it was also obscene. For a performance to be obscene means something which tends to corrupt or deprave . . ." A

In this passage he was drawing a distinction between the phrases which we have lettered (a) and (b) in counsel for the Crown's statement of principle (9), and in our view the earlier part of this passage is consistent with the phrase lettered (a) and possibly with the phrase (c). In any event, we are of opinion that in this passage the issue was presented to the jury with sufficient clearness for them to appreciate what the charge involved. But having drawn this distinction at the start of his summing-up, the learned chairman used the word " obscene " on a number of occasions, and then concluded by saying: B C

" Are you driven to the conclusion that what was taking place night after night in that club was a filthy, obscene, lewd, disgusting, corrupting and depraving show? If it was, then you ought to convict. If there is any reasonable doubt about it, then he ought to be acquitted."

In this passage the learned chairman, in contrast with the earlier passage, made obscenity an essential element and to that extent may be said to have been confusing. But in our view if it was confusing at all, it was confusing in the appellant's favour as the issue left at the end of the summing-up involved a finding of obscenity if the appellant was to be convicted. We venture to emphasise the danger of multiplying offensive adjectives, the result of which may be to expose the summing-up to criticism which it does not really deserve. In our view, as in Bloom's case, the substance of the summing-up was correct, and we can see no reason to set aside the conviction of Quinn. D E

There remains Bloom's appeal against sentence. He was fined £2,500 and ordered to pay 100 guineas costs, the chairman saying to him: " You went into this with your eyes open, I am quite satisfied ". So are we. The brochure issued by Bloom speaks for itself: " We guarantee to members and their guests the spiciest evening of their lives ". It is true that the offending scenes were cut out as soon as the police complained; but in our view the penalty imposed was amply justified, not least as a deterrent to others who may be minded to exploit what is said to be a current craze for strip-tease. F

[Counsel for Quinn then addressed the court and asked leave to appeal to the House of Lords under s. 1 of the Administration of Justice Act, 1960.] G

ASHWORTH, J.: This court has most carefully considered the application for leave to appeal to the House of Lords, but is unable to certify that a point of law of general public importance is involved in the decision. Accordingly, leave to appeal is refused.

Appeals dismissed.

Solicitors: Stanley S. Levene (for the appellant Quinn); Kingsley Napley & Co. (for the appellant Bloom); Solicitor, Metropolitan Police (for the Crown).

[Reported by N. P. METCALFE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

(9) See p. 91, letters H and I, ante.

A

MAXFIELD v. LLEWELLYN AND OTHERS.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Ormerod, Upjohn and Davies, L.JJ.), June 14, 15, 1961.]

Tort—Joint tortfeasors—Contribution—Assessment in absence of party possibly liable for contributory negligence—Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935 (25 & 26 Geo. 5 c. 30), s. 6 (2).

B

Where a court finds that several defendants are liable as joint tortfeasors in damages to the plaintiff, and a defendant so found liable applies for contribution, it is the duty of the court, under the Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935, s. 6 (2)*, to make an assessment of the contribution which each defendant found liable should make according to his share of blameworthiness; and in making this assessment the court assesses the damage as between those who have been found liable for it, regardless of the possible liability for contributory negligence of a person not a party to the action who has not been found liable.

C

[As to contribution between joint tortfeasors, see 11 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 315, para. 511.

D

For the Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935, s. 6, see 25 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 359.]

Appeal.

A post office van was parked on a country road at a bend in such a position that a cattle truck travelling along the road was forced largely onto its wrong side of the road while rounding the bend. On the bend the truck collided with a motor cycle, which was travelling in the opposite direction and on its correct side of the road. As a result of the collision both the driver of the motor cycle and his pillion passenger died. In an action by the pillion passenger's widow and personal representative, under the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934, and the Fatal Accidents Acts, 1846 to 1959, against both those responsible for the driving of the cattle truck (the third and fourth defendants) and those responsible for the parking of the post office van (the first defendant being the person in charge of the van and the second defendant being Her Majesty's Postmaster-General) STABLE, J., on June 23, 1960, at Shrewsbury, assessed the widow's damages at £7,538 15s., held that those responsible for the parking of the post office van were not guilty of negligence and that the negligent driving of the cattle truck was a cause of the accident, and, accordingly, gave judgment for the plaintiff against the third and fourth defendants for £7,538 15s., and for the first and second defendants against the plaintiff, and rejected the third and fourth defendants' claim, under the Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935, s. 6 (2)*, for contribution against the first and second defendants. Neither the deceased motor cycle driver, nor his personal representatives, were parties to the action, but there was some evidence which suggested that the motor cycle driver might have been going too fast, and so have been partly responsible for the accident.

E

F

G

H

The third and fourth defendants now appealed both against the quantum of damages awarded, and against the finding of STABLE, J., that the first and second defendants were not liable in negligence, and against his consequent refusal of contribution against them. The case is reported solely on the point, taken by counsel for the first and second defendants, whether, even if those defendants were liable in damages for negligence to the plaintiff, s. 6 (2) of the Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935*, empowered the court to order contribution against them in an action to which one person (namely the motor cyclist or his representatives) whose negligence contributed or might have contributed to the accident, was not a party.

I

---

* Section 6 (2) is printed at p. 96, letter F, post.

G. K. Mynett, Q.C., and P. H. Layton for the third and fourth defendants, responsible for the driving of the cattle truck. A

A. E. James, Q.C., and J. R. Arthur for the plaintiff.

M. A. B. King-Hamilton, Q.C., and F. W. I. Barnes for the first and second defendants, responsible for the parking of the post office van.

ORMEROD, L.J., stated the facts, held that the damages awarded, B although large, were not so wholly erroneous as to justify alteration by an appellate court, and further held that in the particular circumstances of this case those responsible for the post office van should have taken precautions to lessen the danger of collision between passing vehicles, and that their negligent failure to do so was a cause of the accident. HIS LORDSHIP then continued: A point, which is made by counsel for those responsible for the post office van C and with which I think that I should deal, is that, if there is blame on those in charge of the van, then although it is the duty of a court to apportion the blame between the parties, yet there cannot be apportionment unless all the parties are before the court or, at any rate, unless the action of all parties is considered. That would mean not only that we would have to consider the position of the person in charge of the van and the driver of the cattle truck but that we would D have to consider also the evidence relating to the driver of the motor cycle and the amount of negligence, if any, for which he should be held to be responsible, and that unless that is done we cannot, according to counsel's submission, attempt to assess the respective responsibilities of the other defendants. It must be borne in mind that the driver of the motor cycle is not before the court; he was killed, but in any event his personal representatives are not E before the court; they were not parties to the action, and in those circumstances neither the driver nor anybody on his behalf has had any opportunity of dealing with the evidence from his point of view and putting forward any arguments which could properly be urged so far as his negligence was concerned, or, indeed, of calling any available evidence which might be of assistance to him. The section of the Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935, to F which counsel for those defendants responsible for the van draws attention, is s. 6 (2) and the part of the section to which he refers is this:

> "In any proceedings for contribution under this section the amount of the contribution recoverable from any person shall be such as may be found by the court to be just and equitable having regard to the extent of that person's responsibility for the damage . . ." G

Counsel emphasises the words "having regard to the extent of that person's responsibility for the damage". In counsel's submission the whole of the circumstances must be considered, the liability of anybody who could possibly be liable must be taken into account, and then and only then can a proper assessment be made. I should say here that this submission of counsel on H behalf of those defendants responsible for the van, interesting as it was, was not received with any very great sympathy by the various members of this court, and, indeed, it does appear, if the submission is right, to be a construction of the section which would give rise to very many anomalies. That does not mean that the construction must necessarily be put aside but it cannot be the proper construction of this section. It appears to me that the court must have I regard to a person's responsibility for the damage having regard to the parties who are before the court and whose share of the damage can be taken into account, who have had the opportunity of putting arguments for and against their share of blame and generally of being heard in the action. In those circumstances for my part I would reject counsel's interesting submission and say that it is the duty of the court on finding more than one defendant liable to make an assessment of the contribution which each defendant should make according to his share of blameworthiness.

A We have had to consider the whole of the facts in this case and, having considered those facts, I have come to the conclusion, disregarding entirely any negligence of which the driver of the motor cycle may have been guilty, that the greater blame lies on the driver of the cattle truck and I would therefore apportion the blame as to two-thirds to the driver of the cattle truck and one-third to the second defendant, H.M. Postmaster-General, and the defendant Llewellyn, B who was in charge of the post office van. The effect of that is this. I would dismiss the appeal so far as it related to quantum of damages and leave the damages as they are, but I would allow the appeal so far as the third and fourth defendants are concerned on the issue of contribution and would say that Llewellyn and H.M. Postmaster-General, the first and second defendants, should be liable to the extent of one-third of the damage.

C

UPJOHN, L.J.: I agree with the judgment which has just been delivered and with the apportionment proposed. [HIS LORDSHIP then agreed with the reasons of ORMEROD, L.J., for rejecting the appeal against the quantum of damages, agreed that those responsible for the post office van should, in the circumstances of this case, have taken precautions, gave examples of pre- D cautions which they might have taken, agreed that their negligent failure to take precautions was a cause of the accident, and that as between the van and the truck the van was one-third responsible for the accident. HIS LORDSHIP continued:] On the argument under s. 6 of the Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935, it seems to me that if the argument of counsel for those defendants responsible for the van is correct, the section would be E unworkable. If each pair of defendants was to be found one-third responsible, it would mean that in the absence of the motor cyclist or his representatives, the two pairs of defendants could only recover from each other one-third and then it would be left to chance which of the defendants the plaintiff chose to proceed against who would be responsible for the remaining third attributable to the motor cycle. That makes the section virtually unworkable. Furthermore, F it would involve this, that the court would have to make an assessment of the liability of the driver of the motor cycle, he or his representatives not being present or parties to the action and having no opportunity through his representatives to give any explanation of the accident. It seems fundamentally contrary to the ideas of justice as administered in these courts that this court should have to assess liability for an alleged negligence which has never been alleged against G the party responsible, Furthermore, on looking at the whole section it seems to me clear that what the court has to do is to assess the damage as between those who have been found liable for it and if somebody has not been found liable, surely then he must be excluded from the computation. It seems to me in this case, therefore, that we have to consider first who are found to be liable and we have then to make some apportionment as may be "just and equitable having H regard to the extent of that person's responsibility for the damage". That must mean as between the two of them. That is, I think, reinforced by a consideration of sub-s. (1) because it is quite plain that unless some statute of limitation has run, even now the first and second defendants could bring an action, if they thought it was worth while, asking for contribution against the personal representatives of the deceased motor cyclist. That I think is quite plain from s. 6 I (1) (a), (1) and that seems to me how the section was intended to work.

I therefore agree with the order which has been proposed by ORMEROD, L.J.

DAVIES, L.J., considered the facts, agreed that those responsible for the van should have taken precautions and that their share of responsibility for the accident, as between them and those responsible for the truck, was one-third, and continued: So far as concerns the argument under the Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935, I do not wish to add anything at all save to say this, that I think that when ORMEROD, L.J., referred to the "anomalies" which would be likely to arise if the argument of counsel for those defendants responsible for the van was correct, my Lord was using a very euphemistic expression.

(1) Section 6 (1) (a) provides that judgment against one joint tortfeasor shall not bar action against the other joint tortfeasors; s. 6 (1) (b) provides for damages where more than one action is brought in respect of the same damage; and s. 6 (1) (c) provides that one joint tortfeasor may recover contribution against another.

[HIS LORDSHIP then considered the quantum of damages awarded, and agreed that the appeal as to that should be dismissed.]

Third and fourth defendants' appeal as to contribution allowed: first and second defendants declared liable for one-third of the damages: appeal as to quantum of damages dismissed.

Solicitors: T. J. Robinson & Son, agents for E. H. Grove & Co., Halesowen, Worcs. (for the third and fourth defendants); Evan Davies & Co., agents for Crampton, Pym & Lewis, Oswestry (for the plaintiff); Solicitor for the Post Office (for the first and second defendants).

[Reported by HENRY SUMMERFIELD, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

IVEAGH (EARL) AND OTHERS v. MINISTER OF HOUSING AND LOCAL GOVERNMENT AND ANOTHER.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION (Megaw, J.), June 22, 23, 30, 1961.]

Town and Country Planning—Building preservation order—Special architectural or historic interest—Whether architectural or historic interest of neighbouring buildings may be taken into account —Whether effect of demolition and replacement of building subject to the order on collation of buildings of which it was one relevant—Town and Country Planning Act, 1947 (10 & 11 Geo. 6 c. 51), s. 29 (1).

In considering whether a particular building is of "special architectural or historic interest" within s. 29 (1)* of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, for the purposes of deciding whether to make a building preservation order, the particular building is not required to be viewed in isolation, but the architectural or historic interest of a number of related buildings, e.g., the buildings forming a terrace or square, may be a factor proper to be taken into account in determining the question as regards any one of their number (see p. 103, letters H and I, and p. 104, letter A, post).

The effect of the destruction of particular buildings on the area surrounding them cannot of itself create in those buildings special architectural interest within the meaning of s. 29 (1) (see p. 105, letter H, post); but where a building derives architectural interest from, or contributes architectural interest to, neighbouring buildings, any adverse effect, architecturally, which the demolition and replacement of the building may produce on the area including the neighbouring buildings is of evidential value in concluding whether the building itself is of special architectural interest, or (probably) of special historic interest, and is therefore a factor which can be taken into account in considering the question of special architectural or historic interest under s. 29 (1) (see p. 106, letters B and F, post).

Observations on the need for the reasons for confirming a local planning authority's order to be so stated as to indicate whether the minister had considered questions of construction and principle involved and to show with reasonable precision what view he had taken thereon (see p. 106, letter I, post).

---

* Section 29 (1) is printed at p. 100, letter B, post.

A [For the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, s. 29 (1), see 25 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 534; and for the Town and Country Planning Act, 1959, s. 31, see 39 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 1203.]

Motion.

This was an application by originating notice of motion, made pursuant to s. 31 of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1959, for an order quashing the County of London (Nos. 11 and 12, St. James's Square, Westminster) Building Preservation Order, 1959, made by London County Council, the second respondent, on July 27, 1959, and confirmed by the Minister of Housing and Local Government, the first respondent, on Oct. 14, 1960, and for an order that the costs of the application be paid by the respondents to the applicants. The application was made on the following grounds: (i) The building preservation order was not within the powers of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, in that Nos. 11 and 12, St. James's Square (hereafter referred to as "the buildings") had no special architectural or historic interest within s. 29 of the Act of 1947; the minister had not found that the buildings had special architectural or historic interest in themselves; the minister wrongfully took into consideration whether buildings other than the buildings in question should be preserved and wrongfully took into consideration the effect that the demolition of the buildings would have on other buildings not subject to the preservation order; the reasons given by the minister for differing from the views and not accepting the recommendations of the inspector appointed to hear objections to the order were not matters which could properly be considered under s. 29 of the Act of 1947, in deciding whether the buildings had special architectural or historic interest. (ii) The applicants had been substantially prejudiced by failure to comply with the relevant requirements of the Act of 1947 in that the objection made on behalf of the applicants to the confirmation of the preservation order on the grounds that the buildings had no special architectural or historic interest were not considered by the minister in the manner required by law.

The facts and the relevant provisions of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, are set out in the judgment.

J. R. Willis, Q.C., W. J. Glover and J. C. Taylor for the applicants.

J. R. Cumming-Bruce for the first respondent, the minister.

J. S. Daniel, Q.C., and A. J. Butcher for the second respondent, the London County Council.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 30. MEGAW, J., read the following judgment: The applicants, who are the trustees of the Right Honourable Edward Cecil, Earl of Iveagh, K.G., deceased, are the owners of 11 and 12, St. James's Square, in the city of Westminster. These two buildings form part of the western half of the north side of St. James's Square. The north side of the square is pierced centrally by Duke of York Street. The part of the north side of the square running west from Duke of York Street presents an unbroken façade, beginning at Duke of York Street end with Nos. 9 and 10, which, together, are well known as Chatham House, continuing with Nos. 11 and 12, the buildings here in question, and ending, in the north-west corner of the square, with No. 13.

By a notice dated Aug. 27, 1959, London County Council, who are, and hereafter are referred to as, the local planning authority and who are the second respondents to this application, notified the applicants that it had submitted to the Minister of Housing and Local Government, the first respondent, for confirmation, an order making provision for the preservation of 11 and 12, St. James's Square, in accordance with s. 29 of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947. I shall refer to that Act as "the Act". The statement of the grounds for confirmation of the order by the minister, accompanying the notice, was in the following terms:

"No. 11 St. James's Square, built in 1735-36, and later refaced, shares a uniform frontage with Nos. 9 and 10 (for which a building preservation order has been made) and the front, although now altered, is essentially that designed circa 1775 by the brothers Adam. No. 12 St. James's Square is said to have been built by Thomas Cubitt in 1836-37. Both houses retain internally some of their original features, and their demolition or alteration would be most detrimental to the preservation of the character of St. James's Square."

The relevant portions of s. 29 of the Act are as follows:

"(1) If it appear to a local planning authority that it is expedient to make provision for the preservation of any building of special architectural or historic interest in their area, they may for that purpose make an order (in this Act referred to as a 'building preservation order') restricting the demolition, alteration or extension of the building . . .

"(2) Provision may be made by a building preservation order—(a) for requiring the consent of the local planning authority to be obtained for the execution of works of any description specified in the order . . .

"(3) A building preservation order shall not take effect until it is confirmed by the minister, and the minister may confirm any such order either without modification or subject to such modifications as he considers expedient: Provided that no such order shall be made by the local planning authority, or confirmed by the minister, unless he or they is or are satisfied that the execution of the works specified in the order would seriously affect the character of the building."

"Building" is defined (if "definition" is the right word) in s. 119 (1) of the Act as including "any structure or erection and any part of a building as so defined . . ." No suggestion has been made on this application that there was any irregularity in the inclusion of Nos. 11 and 12 together in one single preservation order.

The effect of para. 1 of the preservation order was that the applicants, as owners of the property, would be debarred, without the consent of the local planning authority from demolishing the buildings or doing any works therein which would affect the structure or any architectural detail of any part of the exterior or of the interior of the buildings. The applicants, who consider the buildings to be unsuitable in present-day conditions, desire to demolish both buildings and to replace them by more up-to-date and convenient office buildings, which they are satisfied, on the advice of a distinguished architect, they could do in a suitable and seemly manner.

As appears from s. 29 (3) of the Act, the preservation order required confirmation by the minister. The applicants, as they were entitled to do, made objection to the order by letter to the minister dated Sept. 23, 1959. In accordance with the procedure laid down in the Town and Country Planning (Building Preservation Order) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948 No. 1766), the minister appointed Mr. M. B. Tetlow to hold a public local inquiry and to report to the minister. The inquiry was held on Jan. 26, 1960, and submissions were made and evidence tendered on behalf of the applicants and the local planning authority, including the evidence of distinguished architects on one side and the other.

On Feb. 1, 1960, Mr. Tetlow submitted his report to the minister. By that report, Mr. Tetlow recommended that the order should not be confirmed. In view of the questions which now arise, I should mention that the applicants, at the inquiry, made submissions as to the construction of s. 29 (1) of the Act. The inspector, Mr. Tetlow, said in his report that he did not consider himself competent to advise on the merits of those submissions, which no doubt raised substantially the same questions of law as those which I shall have to consider hereafter.

The minister, by letter dated Oct. 14, 1960, sent on his authority, notified the applicants that, differing from the recommendation of his inspector, he had decided

A to confirm the building preservation order. The letter is to be treated as the statement of the minister's reasons for his decision, in accordance with the requirements of s. 12 of the Tribunals and Inquiries Act, 1958. The important part of the letter, for present purposes, is the third paragraph from the end, in which the minister's reasons and conclusions are set out. I propose to read it, and in so doing I shall break it up into its component sentences, giving a number B to each sentence for ease of reference hereafter:

First sentence: "The minister has taken note of the inspector's views and recommendation, but he has come to a different conclusion, for the following reasons."

Second sentence: "The buildings are situated in the least spoilt corner of one of the most famous of the historic squares in central London and C form part of a continuous frontage presenting the general appearance of the square as it existed in the late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries."

Third sentence: "The minister considers that the character of this part of the square should be preserved if at all possible, and that it would be seriously impaired by the destruction of Nos. 11 and 12."

D Fourth sentence: "He is satisfied that in their context these buildings possess a considerable degree of special architectural and historic interest, and he has accordingly decided to confirm the building preservation order."

It is to be noted that the minister's letter nowhere mentioned the submission of law by the applicants which had been referred to in the inspector's report.

E The applicants now, by notice of motion, move this court to quash the minister's decision, under s. 31 (1) (a), (3) (d) and (5) (b) of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1959. It is unnecessary to read the notice of motion (1). The essence of the applicant's contentions is that, taking the minister's reasons by themselves, or read in the light of the inspector's report and the local planning authority's contentions, the minister has exceeded his powers, because it can be shown that F he has taken into account, as reasons for arriving at his decision to confirm the preservation order, matters which he was not entitled to take into account.

First, it is said that, in arriving at his conclusion that 11 and 12, St. James's Square have special architectural interest, the minister has not considered merely the architectural interest, if any, of these buildings themselves; but that he has either based his decision on, or has at least taken into account as a relevant G factor, the architectural interest of the square as a whole, or of the north-west corner of the square, or of other buildings in the north-west corner of the square. That, it is said, he was not entitled to do. The same consideration is urged by the applicants as regards the minister's decision that 11 and 12, St. James's Square have "special historic interest", with, here, the additional factor put forward by the applicants that the local planning authority did not base its case H on "special historic interest" and that there was no suggestion in the inspector's report, or in the evidence tendered to the inspector, of any special historic interest —unless mere age, in one case going back only to 1836—can be regarded as of itself giving rise to "special historic interest".

Secondly, the applicants attack the minister's reasons because, they assert, these reasons show that one factor which at least contributed to his decision that I Nos. 11 and 12 have "special architectural or historic interest" was that their disappearance would "seriously impair the character of this part of square"— that is, presumably, the north-west part of the square. The applicants say that this is a matter which is wholly irrelevant to a decision under s. 29 (1) of the Act in relation to the special architectural or historic interest of the two buildings here in question.

Before I consider these two grounds, there are certain preliminary observations which I should make, which are of general relevance to the determination of the issues raised. The first observation is that I am in no way concerned with questions of weight of evidence or merits. It is certainly not for me to review the evidence which was before the inspector or the minister in order to consider whether I should reach the same or a different conclusion as to the special architectural or historic merit of the two buildings. It is no part of my task to consider whether it is or is not desirable that they should be preserved. The court is entitled to interfere with the minister's decision if, and only if, the minister has exceeded his powers (which is what is suggested in this case) or has seriously prejudiced the applicants by failing to comply with statutory or quasi-statutory requirements in reaching his decision.

(1) See p. 99, letters B to F, ante, for the terms of the notice of motion.

Next, I should mention that counsel for the applicants sought to call my attention to provisions relating to compensation (2) where such an order is made. He sought to rely on the hardship which he said might arise, as one of the grounds for a submission that I should construe s. 29 (1), as he put it, " strictly "; that is to say, with a bias towards giving it a narrower, rather than a wider, scope. Counsel for the minister, on the other hand, submitted that I ought to give a " benevolent " construction to the section. In my judgment, no question of a strict or of a benevolent construction arises here. The subsection falls to be construed in accordance with the ordinary and natural meaning of the words, which are not susceptible of either strictness or benevolence.

Further, I do not think that any help is to be derived, on the questions of law which arise, from consideration of any such matters as the fact that in 1955 the local planning authority was prepared to give planning consent to the demolition of these buildings, but that it has now changed its view; or the fact that no preservation order has been made in respect of 13, St. James's Square; or the provisions of s. 30 of the Act (3), and the fact that Nos. 11 and 12 were treated as " Grade 3 ", or Supplementary List, buildings (3), in the sense explained by Mr. Bell in his affidavit on behalf of the minister. I shall not, therefore, say more about these matters.

The last preliminary observation which I would make is this: two things are in my view clear. First, the onus is on the applicants to show that the minister did exceed his powers. Secondly, if it should appear, from the terms of the letter conveying the minister's decision and his reasons, that the minister applied a test which was wrong in law, or took into account matters which in law he ought not to have taken into account, then it would be established that the minister had exceeded his powers and the decision should be quashed.

I now come back to the applicant's first ground of attack on the minister's decision, which I have already stated (4). It is clear, and I do not think that it is disputed, that the minister, in arriving at his decision, took into account something more than the mere architectural interest of Nos. 11 and 12, viewed by themselves, in arriving at his conclusion that these buildings had " special architectural interest ". If his conclusion had been that these two buildings, in themselves and by themselves, had special architectural merit, the conclusion would not have been open to challenge. However, when the minister's conclusion is expressed in the fourth sentence of the paragraph of his letter which I have already read, the words used are:

> " He is satisfied that in their context these buildings possess a considerable degree of special architectural and historic interest . . ."

(The emphasis on " in their context " is mine.) The words " in their context "

(2) See s. 29 (2) (c) of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947.

(3) Section 30 of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1947, provides that lists of buildings of special architectural or historic interest shall be compiled or approved by the minister. In compiling a statutory list under s. 30, a provisional list is first drawn up dividing the buildings into three grades. Buildings classified in grade 3 are not included in the statutory list but in a supplementary list and are not therefore subject to s. 30 (6) which prohibits the execution of certain works on buildings included in a statutory list.

(4) See p. 101, letter F, ante.

A must, I think, be interpreted as meaning that the minister was not viewing the buildings, Nos. 11 and 12, merely in relation to their own architectural interest as buildings viewed in isolation. He was viewing them "in their context"; which must, I think, here mean "in relation to their surroundings"; in relation, that is, to the other buildings in the unbroken façade of the north-west part of St. James's Square. The "context" relates back (I shall have to consider B later whether it relates back exclusively) to the second sentence of the paragraph, which I shall read again:

> "The buildings are situated in the least spoilt corner of one of the most famous of the historic squares in central London and form part of a continuous frontage presenting the general appearance of the square as it existed in the late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries."

C

If the minister had disregarded this "context", it cannot be assumed that he would have arrived at the same conclusion. He does not dissent from the views of his inspector, who appears to have taken the view that, considered by themselves, neither of these two buildings was of special architectural interest; though it is fair to say that there is some indication in the inspector's report that D he took the criterion of architectural merit, rather than architectural interest, as specified by s. 29 (1). Therefore, if the minister was wrong to take account of the "context"—the other buildings—as a factor contributing to the special architectural interest of 11 and 12, St. James's Square, the decision to confirm the preservation order would be based, in part at least, on the wrong test, in law, or on the taking into account of matters not properly to be taken into account; and E the decision would fall to be quashed.

Counsel for the applicants contends that the buildings which are the subject-matter of the preservation order, Nos. 11 and 12, must be looked at alone and by themselves. That, he says, is the fair and proper construction of s. 29 (1) of the Act, reinforced by the provisions of s. 29 (3), with its reference to "the character of the building". "The character", he says, must be the individual character F which it itself possesses by virtue of its own qualities. The minister must consider only whether these buildings themselves, viewed in isolation, have architectural or historic interest which can in his opinion properly be described as "special", by which is meant "outstanding". If, viewed by themselves, they do not have such interest, they cannot acquire it by association with, or in the context of, other buildings or in the general character of the locality.

G I do not think that that argument is right. In my view the architectural interest of a building, in many cases, cannot be divorced from its surroundings, whether they be the surroundings of topography or of other adjacent buildings. An architect who ignored these factors would, I should have thought, have been a bad architect. I am far from saying that in every case a building becomes of architectural interest, or of special architectural interest, because of its relation-H ship or propinquity to other buildings which are of architectural interest or of special architectural interest. I am, however, of opinion that, in considering the architectural interest of a particular building, it would be wrong to say that its architectural interest can in no circumstances be affected, and increased, by reason of neighbouring buildings. Thus, for example, if one considers a terrace of houses of architectural interest, it might well be that one of these houses, if it I were to be artificially considered as though it were standing alone in isolation, would not be considered by the viewer to be of "special architectural interest". Where, however, that self-same house is viewed by the same viewer as it really is—that is, as a part of a terrace—the viewer might reasonably hold the opinion that the house, in that context (to use the minister's word), is of "special architectural interest".

It follows that I hold that this first ground of attack on the minister's decision fails. He has not applied a test which is necessarily wrong, nor has he taken into account a factor which he could not properly take into account, in his conclusion that in the context of the continuous frontage of the north-west part of St. James's Square, the buildings, Nos. 11 and 12, are of special architectural interest. A

The same considerations, in my opinion, apply as regards the minister's conclusion that Nos. 11 and 12 are of "special historic interest". The minister was entitled to have regard to the historic interest—if he thought it had historic interest—of St. James's Square as a whole, as a ground for attaching special historic interest to these two houses, which might not otherwise have had any, or special, historic interest. Even if, however, I should be wrong in that view, and different considerations should apply, as regards historic interest by association, from those considerations which, in my judgment, apply as regards architectural interest by association, it would not provide a ground for quashing the preservation order. The minister has given two grounds: special architectural interest and special historic interest. They are alternative grounds under s. 29 (1). If one is bad, but the other is good, the order stands. B C

I now come to the second ground of attack on the minister's decision. The applicants refer to the third sentence of the paragraph containing the minister's reasons. I read it again.

> "The minister considers that the character of this part of the square should be preserved if at all possible, and that it would be seriously impaired by the destruction of Nos. 11 and 12." D

Then follows the fourth sentence giving the minister's conclusions, and beginning—"He is satisfied that in their context these buildings possess a considerable degree of special architectural and historic interest". The applicants say that this shows that in reaching his decision the minister took into account, as a relevant factor, the serious impairment of the character of the north-west part of the square which he visualised would follow if these two buildings were to be destroyed. E

The applicants say that this is a factor which is not relevant, and which could not properly be taken into account by the minister in arriving at his conclusion as to the special architectural or historic interest of these two buildings, with which alone he was properly concerned. It was, they say, simply and exclusively the reasons given in this sentence which led the minister to differ from his inspector, who had expressed the view in his report that he would expect a competent architect to be capable of designing a substitute for Nos. 11 and 12 which would fit in with the picture presented by the buildings in the north-west part of the square. No other reason is given in the minister's decision, according to the applicants, which does not fit in with the inspector's conclusions. Hence, it must be assumed that this reason, given in the third sentence, was a determinant factor in moving the minister to arrive at the conclusion at which he did arrive. It was an irrelevant factor, because the special architectural interest of the two buildings cannot be determined by reference to what would be the effect on neighbouring property, or on a particular area, if they were to be demolished. Counsel for the applicants submits that that has nothing to do with the special architectural interest of these two buildings. Parliament could readily have provided, if it had been so minded, that the effect on a neighbouring area is a relevant factor. It has not, so the argument runs, done so, since the words of s. 29 (1) are not capable of being read as bringing into consideration anything other than the architectural interest possessed (it may be "in the context") by the buildings themselves. F G H I

The same argument applied as regards special historic interest, but I shall deal with it first separately as regards special architectural interest.

Counsel for the minister conceded, as I understand it, that the preservation order could not be supported, in respect of a building which did not have special architectural interest, merely because the preservation of the building was desirable in order to preserve the architectural, or other, character of the neighbourhood. That is to say, the reason given in the third sentence of the paragraph

A would not be enough to justify confirmation of the order. Counsel went on to contend, however, that the content of the third sentence was not, and should not be construed as being, a factor which affected the minister's decision. It was, he submitted, a perfectly true and valid statement. Just as a building may derive architectural interest from its surroundings, so a building may contribute architectural interest to its surroundings. Thus, the destruction of a building B may result in the lessening of the architectural interest in the area in which it stood. The minister, according to the construction put forward by counsel for the minister, not unnaturally referred to that fact; but he did not found his decision on it, in whole or in part. That construction, he submitted, was shown to be right by the words in the following, fourth, sentence "in their context"; because those words show that the minister, when he expressed his conclusion, was C referring back to what he had said in the second sentence.

Counsel for the local planning authority while prepared, if necessary, as an alternative argument to adopt the submission of counsel for the minister that the third sentence did not form part of the minister's reasons for confirming the preservation order, put forward as his primary submission on this part of the case, that the minister, in the circumstances, was properly entitled to take into account, D and did take into account, the matter referred to in the third sentence—the consequential serious impairment of this part of the square. Consider, he said, this group of buildings which has one unbroken façade, though with considerable variations as between the individual buildings in it. If, when two buildings are removed from that group, it is found that the group as a whole has a substantially less architectural interest than it possessed when the two buildings formed E part of it, the necessary conclusion is that what has been lost—namely, a degree of architectural interest—has been lost because it was formerly constituted by the two houses as a part of the group.

I do not regard this question as by any means easy or free from doubt, particularly as to the interpretation of the letter giving the minister's reasons. On balance, although for reasons which I shall give, it does not affect my ultimate F decision, I do not accept the submission of counsel for the minister as to the meaning and effect of the minister's letter. In my view, the minister, in arriving at the conclusion which he expressed in the fourth sentence, was founding himself, in part, on the factor to which he had referred in the immediately preceding sentence. I do not regard the words "in their context" in the fourth sentence as sufficiently clear or precise to warrant their being treated as an indication that G the minister was ignoring the factor to which he had immediately previously referred: namely, that the character of the north-west part of St. James's Square, or of St. James's Square as a whole, would be seriously impaired by the destruction of Nos. 11 and 12. I take the view that, on the true construction of the letter, the minister did have that matter in mind as one factor in arriving at his decision.

H I accept the view that, if the minister's decision had been founded wholly on the effect which the destruction of these two buildings would have had on the north-west part of the square, or of the square as a whole, the decision could not have stood. This factor cannot create a special architectural interest in the buildings, where no architectural interest in them otherwise exists. On the other hand, if there be otherwise an architectural interest in the buildings themselves I (including their "context"), any adverse effect, architecturally, which the demolition and replacement of those buildings might be expected to produce on the area in which they had stood—on the collation of buildings of which they once formed part—constitutes, in my judgment, some evidence which can properly be taken into account as to the degree of architectural interest which these buildings themselves possess. For that which will be lost will be lost by reason of the disappearance of these buildings. What will be lost is architectural interest. Therefore it is a fair conclusion that the amount of the loss which will follow is at least some evidence of the measure of the architectural interest which the buildings themselves, in their context, now possess. A

When the minister, in the third sentence of the paragraph setting out his reasons, says: "the character of this part of the square . . . would be seriously impaired", I construe his words as including impairment in respect of architectural interest. Accordingly, in my opinion, the sentence in question does not indicate that the minister applied a wrong test or took into account a matter which he could not properly take into account. In that sentence he refers to a factor which was of some evidential value in arriving at a conclusion whether these two buildings were of special architectural interest. B

I take the same view as regards historic interest, though with more hesitation; more hesitation, because it may be said that there was before the minister no evidence of historic interest in relation to these two buildings themselves, and that a mere impairment of the general historic interest of the square as a whole, to which the minister referred, could not be a proper factor in leading to the conclusion that the buildings in question had a special historic interest. Again, however, if the conclusion as to special architectural interest cannot be successfully challenged, that fact is sufficient to support the preservation order. C

On that view of the matter, then, this attack also on the minister's decision fails. It is not for this court to consider the weight which ought to have been attached to that part of the evidence or to speculate whether or not the minister gave undue weight to it. Once the position is reached that it was a matter properly to be taken into consideration, then the minister's decision cannot be successfully attacked merely because he did take it into consideration, as in my view he must be assumed to have done. D

The two grounds of attack on the minister's decision in this case therefore fail: the first because the minister was not wrong in principle when, in considering the question of special architectural or historic interest of these buildings, he did so in the context of neighbouring buildings; and the second, because the effect of the demolition of these buildings on the character of the square, or part of the square, could properly be considered by the minister as being relevant to the degree of architectural, and probably also the degree of historic, interest of these buildings themselves. E F

There is one aspect of the case which, because of its general importance, I ought to mention. No one should, of course, underestimate the difficulties of expressing reasons for arriving at a conclusion which must often be largely a matter of opinion, perhaps a matter of aesthetic taste or sense of historical values. But in this particular case it was not merely a matter of opinion or taste or sense of historical value. The applicants had indicated in the inquiry before the inspector questions of principle as to the true construction of s. 29 (1) of the Act: that is, as to the matters which could properly as a matter of law be taken into account in arriving at a conclusion as to the special architectural or historic interest of these two buildings. I think that it was apparent what the general nature of these questions was. If it was not apparent, there was sufficient indication in the inspector's report to have enabled the minister readily to ascertain what the questions of principle were. G H

In these circumstances, it would have been desirable, and fairly to be expected, that the minister's letter, giving reasons for his decision, should indicate that he had directed his mind specifically towards those questions of construction and principle, and should show with reasonable precision what view he had taken on these matters in arriving at his decision; and that it should not leave scope for serious argument whether he had or had not taken into account such matters as the effect of the demolition on the character of a neighbouring area. Bearing in mind the argument put forward in this court on behalf of the minister, that the sentence in the minister's letter which immediately preceded his statement of his conclusion should not be taken as being one of the reasons for that conclusion, and bearing in mind the legitimate scope of argument as to the I

A meaning and effect of other parts of the same paragraph, I hardly think that this statement of the minister's reasons can be regarded as having achieved the desirable standard of clarity and precision.

The reasons are given in pursuance of a statutory duty imposed by s. 12 of the Tribunals and Inquiries Act, 1958, in order that an aggrieved party may know, and, if necessary, a court may decide, whether the minister's decision has or has B not been reached as a result of the application of correct principles of law and correct construction of the relevant enactment. The onus is on the applicant to show, if he can, that the principle applied or the construction adopted is wrong. If the reasons are not clearly stated, so as to show with precision what principle has been applied or what construction has been adopted (at least where it is known that there is an issue on these matters), the purpose of Parlia- C ment in enacting s. 12 of the Tribunals and Inquiries Act, 1958, may be thwarted, and an aggrieved party—possibly with much at stake—may in effect be fighting with one hand tied behind his back, because the onus is on him to show an error of principle. Difficulty of interpretation or obscurity of the stated reasons may effectively conceal or disguise an error of principle.

In the result I have found my task in this case difficult: not so much in the D construction of s. 29 (1) of the Act as in the interpretation of the minister's stated reasons. Nevertheless, for the reasons which I sought to indicate the applicants have failed to establish to my satisfaction in this case that the minister has applied a wrong principle or has acted in excess of his powers in reaching his decision.

The application to quash the preservation order accordingly must be dismissed. E Motion dismissed.

[Counsel for the local planning authority said that in this type of case it was the practice to order the unsuccessful applicant to pay only one set of costs, and in the circumstances of this case counsel asked that the authority should have their costs. Counsel for the minister submitted that where it was unnecessary for both the minister and the local planning authority to be represented at the F hearing (5), the costs were in practice awarded to the minister.

HIS LORDSHIP said that he would have thought, where there was no conflict of interest, that the minister and the local planning authority could be represented by the same counsel. In the circumstances of the present case HIS LORDSHIP would order the applicants to pay the costs of the local planning authority and would make no order as to costs in respect to the minister.]

Solicitors: Travers Smith, Braithwaite & Co. (for the applicants); Solicitor, Ministry of Housing and Local Government (for the first respondent); Solicitor, London County Council (for the second respondent).

[Reported by WENDY SHOCKETT, Barrister-at-Law.]

---

(5) Under R.S.C., Ord. 55B, r. 74 (1) (iii), a notice of motion taken out under s. 31 of the Town and Country Planning Act, 1959, must be served on both the minister and the authority directly concerned.

CURRAN v. WILLIAM NEILL & SON (ST. HELENS), LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Holroyd Pearce, Willmer and Pearson, L.JJ.), June 1, 2, 5, 6, 1961.]

Building—Building regulations—Scaffolding—Gutter under construction—Part of permanent building—Hook holding support of gutter defective—Latent defect—Accident not foreseeable—Working place—No guard-rail—Absence of guard-rail not cause of accident—Whether gutter a "gangway"—Whether work could "safely be done" (reg. 5)—Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948 No. 1145), regs. 3 (2), 5, 7 (1) (4), 8 (1), 12 (2), 24 (1).

The plaintiff was employed by the defendants, a firm of steel erectors, in constructing a gutter between two of the twelve bays in the roof of a factory building. The gutter consisted of ten-feet lengths each of which had an overlay intended to be bolted to the adjoining length. Owing to a demarcation dispute between the workmen, the lengths were merely put in position and not bolted together, but were secured by hook bolts which were bolted to steel straps which ran laterally across the gap between the two bays, three such straps supporting each length. The plaintiff walked along a length of guttering, which had been fixed to the lateral straps, in order to lay the next length into its place. A hook bolt broke, and the length of gutter pivoted, causing the plaintiff to fall twenty-three feet to the ground, and he was injured. The bolt was defective, but its breaking could not have been foreseen, and the court found that the defendants were not negligent. The plaintiff claimed damages for breach of statutory duty seeking to rely on the Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948, regs. 5, 7, 8, 12 and 24*.

Held: the plaintiff could not recover damages by reason of any breach of statutory duty under the Regulations of 1948 for the following reasons—

(i) although the defendants were in breach of reg. 24 (1), because the gutter was a working place from which a person was liable to fall more than six feet six inches and no guard-rail had been provided, yet, on the facts, the breach, viz., the absence of a guard-rail, did not cause the accident.

(ii) the test whether work could "safely be done" within reg. 5 was whether, on all the facts known or which ought to have been known, the doing of the work involved foreseeable risk; in the present case the doing of the work from the gutter did not involve such risk and there was, therefore, no breach of reg. 5 in that scaffolds were not provided.

(iii) (a) (per HOLROYD PEARCE and PEARSON, L.JJ.), the duty imposed on employers by regs. 7, 8, and 12 (2) was absolute and was not a duty which had to be performed merely within the limits of knowledge and foresight; but the defendants were not in breach of reg. 7, reg. 8 or reg. 12 (2) because the gutter, although not disqualified by its permanence from being a working platform or gangway within reg. 3 and thus a scaffold, was not, in the normal sense of words, a "working platform or gangway" within the definition of scaffold in reg. 3 (2), and, accordingly, neither reg. 7 nor reg. 8 (which related only to scaffolds) nor reg. 12 (2) (which applies also to "working platforms, gangways or runs") applied to the gutter.

(b) (per WILLMER, L.J.), the term "scaffold" in reg. 3 (2), reg. 7 and reg. 8 did not extend to structures that were not temporary and thus these regulations did not extend to the gutter in the present case, and, though reg. 12 (2) extended to structures that were not temporary, yet it also did not extend to the gutter because the gutter was not a "gangway" within reg. 12 (2).

Appeal dismissed.

---

* The relevant terms of these regulations are printed respectively at pp. 111, 112, 110, post.

A [As to the statutory obligations concerning scaffolds and working places, etc., see 17 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 126, para. 206.

For the Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948, regs. 3, 5, 7, 8, 12 and 24, see 8 HALSBURY'S STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS 211, 213, 215, 220.]

Cases referred to:

B Bath v. British Transport Commission, [1954] 2 All E.R. 542; [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1013; 24 Digest (Repl.) 1063, 257.

Bonnington Castings, Ltd. v. Wardlaw, [1956] 1 All E.R. 615; [1956] A.C. 613; [1956] 2 W.L.R. 707; 3rd Digest Supp.

Burns v. Joseph Terry & Sons, Ltd., [1950] 2 All E.R. 987; [1951] 1 K.B. 454; 114 J.P. 613; 24 Digest (Repl.) 1056, 222.

C Hamilton v. National Coal Board, [1960] 1 All E.R. 76; [1960] A.C. 633; 124 J.P. 141; [1960] 2 W.L.R. 313.

Smith v. Cammell Laird & Co., Ltd., [1939] 4 All E.R. 381; [1940] A.C. 242; 109 L.J.K.B. 134; 163 L.T. 9; 104 J.P. 51; 24 Digest (Repl.) 1087, 396.

Tasmania (Ship Owners & Freight Owners) v. Smith, etc., City of Corinth (Owners), The Tasmania, (1890), 15 App. Cas. 223; 63 L.T. 1; 6 Asp. M.L.C. 517; 41 Digest 708, 5446.

D Appeal.

This was an appeal by the plaintiff from an order of ARTHIAN DAVIES, J., dated May 10, 1960, dismissing the plaintiff's action for personal injury caused by the defendants' alleged negligence and breach of statutory duty. The learned judge found that there was no negligence on the part of the defendants, that there E was a breach of reg. 24 (1) of the Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948, but that that breach did not cause the accident. The plaintiff appealed only on the ground of breach of statutory duty and asked the Court of Appeal for leave to amend the statement of claim to enable him to rely on regs. 7 (1) (4), 8 (1) and 12 (2) of the Regulations of 1948.

F. W. Beney, Q.C., and P. Curtis for the plaintiff.

F R. H. Forrest, Q.C., and R. Murray for the defendants.

June 6. The following judgments were read.

HOLROYD PEARCE, L.J.: The plaintiff appeals from an order of ARTHIAN DAVIES, J., who dismissed his claim for damages for common law negligence and breach of statutory duty. There is hardly any dispute on the facts. G The plaintiff, while at work, fell twenty-three feet on to a concrete floor and was badly injured. He was an experienced steel erector, thirty-eight years of age, employed by the defendants, and it is not suggested that he was in any way at fault. The accident was due to the failure of a defective hook bolt bought from an independent supplier whom the plaintiff, no doubt for good reasons, has not sued. The defendants were sub-contractors for steelwork on a factory that was H being erected. Work was in progress on a large shop one hundred feet long, with twelve bays. The framework had been put up, but the roofing had not been put on, nor had the windows been put in. Each bay was to have a gently sloping roof of corrugated iron on one side of the ridge and a steeply sloping row of windows on the other. There were eleven valley gutters between the bays, and the workmen had completed the majority of them. The valleys were constructed thus. The I purlin at the eave of the roof which had windows was two feet three inches away from the purlin at the eave of the adjoining bay. To bridge this gap of two feet three inches, hook bolts were suspended from the eave purlins on either side of it. The hook bolts were bolted to steel straps which ran laterally across the gap at intervals. On these straps were laid ten-feet lengths of guttering, weighing 2½ cwt. each, three straps supporting each length. The lengths were roughly U-shaped troughs with one six-inch vertical side and one seven-inch sloping side, and the flat bottom of the trough was nineteen inches wide. Each length of gutter had an overlay destined to be bolted to the adjoining length to prevent leakage of water between the lengths. But at this time the lengths were merely fitted in position and not bolted together by the overlay, since there was a trade demarcation dispute whether plumbers or steel erectors were entitled to bolt them together. Thus the heavy guttering depended on the hooks attached to the purlins to keep it in position. If they broke, the guttering would fall to the ground twenty-three feet below. The hook bolt which caused this accident was made of mild steel, with a hook end. It was said that the hook should have been turned when hot, but that it was in fact turned when cold. Whatever the cause, the hook bolt was faulty and failed to bear the strain.

The plaintiff, with another erector Holmes and a foreman Plevin, was putting the gutter in position. They had already fixed the hooks and attached to them the transverse steel straps. A crane hoisted the first length of gutter to its position on the steel straps. When that was laid, the crane deposited the second length of gutter on it. Two of the men then carried the second length. The third man went along a catwalk on the inside of the unglazed windows and put rollers across the purlins as supports on which the others could rest the gutter while placing it correctly. One of the men stood in front straddling the purlins and let down the length of gutter in its exact position when the roller was withdrawn. They put down seven lengths, taking turns as to the various tasks. In dealing with the eighth, Plevin went along the catwalk. The plaintiff walked along the guttering already laid, with his hands behind him, holding the front end of the eighth length of gutter. Holmes took the rear end and walked along the gutter holding it in front of him. As the plaintiff trod on the nearest end of the seventh length, one bolt snapped beneath him, the other bolt could not take the strain, and the supporting strap gave way. The seventh length of gutter pivoted on the central strap and let the plaintiff down. The plaintiff and both lengths of gutter crashed on to the floor.

The plaintiff claimed in negligence, but the judge found that the defendants could not foresee the failure of the bolt and that there was no negligence at common law. Against that finding there is no appeal. The plaintiff also claimed, unsuccessfully, that the accident had been caused by the defendants' breaches of various building regulations, and he contends in this court that he should have succeeded.

The judge held that there had been a breach of the Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948, reg. 24 (1), of which the relevant words are,

> ". . . every side of a working platform or working place, being a side thereof from which a person is liable to fall a distance of more than six feet six inches, shall be provided with a suitable guard-rail or guard-rails of adequate strength, to a height of at least three feet above the platform or place and above any raised standing place on the platform . . ."

He held that the gutter from which the men were working was a working place and that the failure to provide a guard-rail was therefore a breach of reg. 24 (1). But he held that that breach was not the cause of the accident, since a guard-rail would not have prevented it. He said this:

> "The plaintiff said in his evidence that if a guard-rail had been there he might have had a chance to grip it and let go the gutter when he felt himself go. He tried to grip the purlins just about his ankle. It is difficult to see how if, as he went down, he failed to grip the purlins, he had any chance at all of grasping something three feet above, allowing for the time lag in human reaction. One would imagine that by that time he would be well below and out of reach of such a guard-rail. I do not think it is possible to say that if there had been a guard-rail here it might have prevented the accident, or rather that the absence of a guard-rail was the cause of this accident. It has been said that the court ought not to be astute to find that an accident was due to some other cause. With very great regret, therefore,

A I have come to the conclusion that the plaintiff has failed to make out his case."

I share the same view and feel the same regret. I agree that one should not be astute to find that the breach did not cause the accident; but that only means that one approaches with benevolence and sympathy the argument put forward by the plaintiff. That approach may well have an influence in a matter that B depends, as this does, not on cold logic, but on imaginative reconstruction of events. Nevertheless there is an onus on the plaintiff to show that his injury was caused by the breach of regulation (see Bonnington Castings, Ltd. v. Wardlaw (1)). However benevolently one approaches the plaintiff's argument that he could have succeeded in grasping a guard-rail though he failed to grasp the two parallel purlins beside him, I, like the learned judge, am unable to accept it. C When the plaintiff started to fall he had both hands heavily weighted behind him, and I cannot believe that his reactions could be quick enough to enable him as he fell to let go the length of gutter and raise his hands to reach any rail above the purlins.

The other regulations relied on were reg. 5 and reg. 27 (2). Regulation 5 provides:

D "Suitable and sufficient scaffolds shall be provided for all work that cannot safely be done on or from the ground or from part of the building, or from part of a permanent structure or from a ladder or other available means of support, and sufficient safe means of access shall so far as is reasonably practicable be provided to every place at which any person has at any time to work." E

It was argued that the work here in question could not safely be done from the gutter and that therefore a scaffold should have been provided. The judge held that it was not impossible to fix a scaffold, although it might have been "extremely expensive" to do so and "quite out of ordinary practice". He held that the work could safely be done from the gutter, which in his view was part of the build- F ing. Therefore there was no obligation to erect scaffolding. He rejected the argument that the test whether work can be safely done is objective and that work cannot be safely done if, though safe on any reasonable prognosis, it turns out to be unsafe through some unforeseeable occurrence. I agree with the learned judge. In deciding the question whether machinery is dangerous under s. 14 of the Factories Act, 1937, the question is whether on all the facts which were G known or ought to be known it could be said to involve any foreseeable risks (see Burns v. Joseph Terry & Sons, Ltd. (2)). So too, in deciding whether work can be safely done, one must judge by what is known or ought to be known and what could be foreseen, not by that which cannot be known or foreseen.

Regulation 27 (2) does not help the plaintiff. It deals with the provision of guard-rails (and toe-boards); but the judge held in regard to reg. 24 (1) that the H provision of guard-rails could not have prevented the accident.

The main strength of the plaintiff's argument on this appeal depends on regulations that were not relied on in the court below. Counsel for the plaintiff asks leave to amend in order that he may now rely on them; and he gave notice of his intention to do so by letter two months before the appeal came on for hearing. He concedes that if the defendants would have called other evidence at the trial I had the amendment been originally pleaded, it is now too late for us to give leave to amend (see Tasmania (Ship Owners & Freight Owners) v. Smith, etc., City of Corinth (Owners), The Tasmania (3)). He contends that no other evidence could or would have been led by the defendants and that the court has before it all the relevant facts. In such circumstances, he urges that it would be wrong for this court to deprive the plaintiff of the judgment to which, on incontrovertible

(1) [1956] 1 All E.R. 615; [1956] A.C. 613.
(2) [1950] 2 All E.R. 987; [1951] 1 K.B. 454.
(3) (1890), 15 App. Cas. 223; 6 Asp. M.L.C. 517.

facts, he is entitled, merely because at first instance he relied on the wrong regulations and omitted to rely on the right ones. A

To decide that difficult question one has to consider the case now sought to be advanced. The amendment desired is:

> "Further or alternatively the said working platform was also a gangway and constituted a scaffold and such defects of the hook bolt were defects of construction, quality, condition and material, contrary to regs. 7 (1), 7 (4), 8 (1) and 12 (2) of the said regulations." B

The argument before us proceeds, not on the basis adopted in the court below, that a scaffold should have been provided, but on the basis that the gutter from which the plaintiff worked was itself a "scaffold" within the meaning of the regulations. By the definition in reg. 3 (2), C

> "'Scaffold' means any temporary structure on or from which persons perform work in connexion with an operation to which these regulations apply, and any temporary structure which enables persons to obtain access to or which enables materials to be taken to any place at which such work is performed, and includes any working platform, gangway, run, ladder or step-ladder (other than an independent ladder or step-ladder which does not form part of such a structure) together with any guard-rail, toe-board or other safeguards and all fixings, but does not include a lifting appliance or a structure used merely to support such an appliance or to support other machinery or plant." D

Regulation 7 (1) provides: E

> "Every scaffold and every part thereof shall be of good construction, of suitable and sound material and of adequate strength for the purpose for which it is used."

Regulation 7 (4) provides:

> "Metal parts used for scaffolds shall be of suitable quality and be in good condition and free from corrosion or other patent defect likely to affect their strength materially." F

Regulation 8 (1) provides:

> "No defective material or part which cannot be satisfactorily repaired shall be used for a scaffold . . ."

G

Regulation 12 (2) provides:

> "All structures and appliances used as supports for scaffolds, working platforms, gangways or runs shall be of sound construction, have a firm footing or be firmly supported, and shall where necessary be sufficiently and properly strutted or braced to ensure stability."

H

Thus, reg. 7 and reg. 8 apply only to scaffolds, and their application to this gutter depends on whether it comes within the definition of "scaffold" in reg. 3 (2). Regulation 12 (2), however, applies not only to scaffolds but also to working platforms, gangways or runs. In respect of all three regulations there is the further question whether the duty on the defendants is an objective absolute duty to provide hook bolts of sound construction, quality, condition and material, or whether it is a subjective duty which has to be performed only within the limits of knowledge and foresight. If the latter, the plaintiff is in the same difficulty as that in which he was in relying on reg. 5, since the dangerous defect in the present case was latent and unforeseeable. I

In construing the regulations one starts with the assumption that all three must be intended to have a similar intention in this respect, since there is no logical reason why the quality of the employer's responsibility should vary in respect of his duties under one or other of them. If his duty under them is not

A absolute, the regulations are more or less a particularisation of his duty at common law. It is not impossible that the regulations are so intended, since many regulations do no more. Nevertheless the impression created by the particularity of the regulations and by the iteration of the word "shall" is rather that of an absolute obligation than a duty to be performed by a person within the limits of personal knowledge and prescience. It is true that the words "free from corro-
B sion or other patent defect" tend in the contrary direction. Yet in my judgment the three regulations were intended to impose an absolute obligation in respect of the matters to which they refer. According to their literal meaning, the obligation is broken when the material of the scaffold or other things is unsound or faulty. I can find no justification for implying words that limit the breach to cases where the defect should have been known to the employer. This view is
C confirmed by Hamilton v. National Coal Board (4), in which similar words, with regard to maintenance under the Mines and Quarries Act, 1954, were held to impose an absolute obligation. VISCOUNT SIMONDS referred to Smith v. Cammell Laird & Co., Ltd. (5), where the obligation to maintain under reg. 11 (b) of the Shipbuilding Regulations, 1931, was held to impose an absolute obligation. He continued (6):

D

> "The word 'absolute' in this connexion has become part of the dictionary of the law. Sometimes the word 'continuing' is substituted for it. Either word means that, in effect, the employer warrants that the machine or other equipment which he is obliged to maintain will never be out of order."

In my judgment, the obligation under the three regulations in question is absolute;
E and since the failure of the hook shows that it was not of suitable or sound construction there would be a breach of duty if any of those regulations applied to the gutter in the present case.

The question whether these regulations apply at all to the gutter is more formidable. This gutter was an incomplete part of the building, but it was certainly not temporary, since it was intended to remain in the building when completed.
F It was not a scaffold in the ordinary meaning of the word, but that meaning was extended by reg. 3 (2). The extension, however, would relate only to temporary structures were it not for the words "and includes any working platform, gangway, run, ladder or step-ladder (other than an independent ladder or step-ladder which does not form part of such a structure)". The wording of the regulation is not easy to construe, and there are two possible views as to its
G proper construction. The first view is this. The general intention of the definition appears to be directed to temporary structures, and the words "and includes any working platform, gangway, run, ladder or step-ladder" intend to refer only to such working platforms (etc.) as are temporary. Admittedly the words would then be otiose, since temporary working platforms (etc.) have been already covered by the earlier part of the definition, viz.,

H

> "any temporary structure on or from which persons perform work . . . and any temporary structure which enables persons to obtain access . . ."

But the otiose words, it is said, are inserted ex abundanti cautela, and the words in brackets, "(other than an independent ladder or step-ladder which does not form part of such a structure)", by referring back to a temporary structure show that the whole of the definition is concerned with such structures. This view
I would make the whole definition more or less accord with the natural meaning of "scaffold". It may be argued that it derives some support from reg. 5, but it clearly does produce an inconsistency with reg. 22 and reg. 26.

The second possible view is this. Although the definition in general concerns itself with temporary structures, it deliberately includes something else. The words "and includes any working platform, gangway . . ." mean what they say,

(4) [1960] 1 All E.R. 76; [1960] A.C. 633.
(5) [1939] 4 All E.R. 381; [1940] A.C. 242.
(6) [1960] 1 All E.R. at p. 78; [1960] A.C. at p. 639.

and include working platforms, gangways, etc., whether temporary or permanent. That construction would give meaning to the words which would otherwise be otiose. Regulation 22 shows that the words "a working platform" cover something which is part of the permanent fixed equipment of a building. The relevant words of reg. 22 are:

> "Every working platform . . . shall be—(a) closely boarded . . . Provided that . . . (ii) requirement (a) of this regulation shall not apply to a platform which is part of the permanent fixed equipment of a building . . ."

Regulation 26 in similar fashion makes it clear that the words "gangway or run" cover a gangway or run which is part of the permanent fixed equipment of a building. This construction would seem to indicate that the regulations are deliberately including in the definition of "scaffold" (which would otherwise mean only temporary structures) all working platforms, gangways or runs that are part of the permanent equipment of a building, so that scaffolding precautions may apply to them. It may well have been thought that there was no reason why a workman doing a task within the regulations on a permanent working platform or gangway should have less protection than those who were working on a temporary working platform or gangway.

I prefer this latter construction to the former, since it seems to me to be more in accord with general rules of construction and also tends to a more coherent policy in the rules. The permanence of the gutter, therefore, does not disqualify it from being a working platform or gangway; but before the plaintiff can succeed he must show that the gutter was within the normal sense of the words "a working platform or gangway".

This was a growing gutter which at the time of the accident had become about seventy feet long. It was a trough nineteen inches broad. Though it was itself being used by the workmen to pass over as they extended it length by length, it was not, in my judgment, a working platform. Indeed if it had been, its use would have constituted a breach of reg. 22, since a working platform used for the deposit of material must be at least thirty-four inches wide. If it was a working platform used as a footing only, it must be at least twenty-five inches wide. Nor, in my judgment, was it a gangway. There was no evidence that it was intended to be used as such in the future. It was simply a rainwater gutter which was part of a building. Counsel for the plaintiff argues attractively that it was being used as a gangway by the men; but something that is used as a gangway may not in fact be a gangway. It is true that two men would have passed over the seventh length for instance (had it been secure) three times going and three times returning, as they constructed and lengthened the rest of the gutter by adding the three remaining lengths. They would later have passed along it once or twice as they bolted the overlays. But that does not in itself make a gutter into a gangway, even in the context of the Regulations of 1948. SOMERVELL, L.J., in Bath v. British Transport Commission (7) said:

> "Where words are, as the words of s. 25 (3) are, perfectly familiar, all one can do is to say whether or not one regards them as apt to cover or describe the circumstances in question in any particular case. I cannot myself regard this dry dock into which the deceased fell as an opening in a floor."

Similarly, though I have every sympathy with the plaintiff, I cannot regard this gutter as a gangway.

For these reasons, even if the plaintiff was allowed to amend he could not succeed. An amendment would have a very strong claim on our discretion, even at this late stage, if it could be shown that on the evidence the plaintiff was clearly entitled to succeed under a regulation on which he had omitted to rely. But in this case an amendment would serve no purpose. I would therefore refuse the amendment and dismiss the appeal.

---

(7) [1954] 2 All E.R. at p. 543.

A WILLMER, L.J.: I have reached the same conclusion, although in doing so I have not followed quite the same path as my brethren have followed.

The plaintiff's case, as it was pleaded, and as it was presented in the court below, was that there was no scaffold in circumstances when there ought to have been. Evidence was given that there was no scaffolding. Proceeding on the basis that no scaffolding was provided, the learned judge nevertheless decided that there B was no breach of reg. 5 of the Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948, because he found on the evidence that the work could safely be done from the gutters already laid. In reaching this conclusion he considered, and rejected, an argument put forward on behalf of the plaintiff that the fact of the accident happening proved that in the event the work could not safely be done from the gutters, notwithstanding what anybody may reasonably have thought. Taking C the view, as he did, that reg. 5 did not apply, he further held that there was no breach of reg. 97 in failing to supply safety nets. On this part of the case it is sufficient for me to say that I wholly agree with the reasoning and conclusions of the learned judge.

The learned judge did, however, find that the defendants were in breach of reg. 24 (1). For he held that the gutter from which the plaintiff fell was a working D place, which should have been provided with suitable guard-rails of adequate strength. No cross-notice has been given by the defendants, and the contrary has not been argued before us. But the learned judge, having found the defendants in breach of reg. 24 (1), came to the conclusion, for reasons with which I wholly agree, that this was not a cause of the accident. Beyond expressing my agreement I do not find it necessary to say anything further on this aspect of the E case.

The greater part of the argument on this appeal has arisen from the attempt made on behalf of the plaintiff to set up an entirely new case. So far from there being no scaffolding when there ought to have been, it is now contended that the gutter on which the plaintiff was working was itself a scaffold. It is alleged, however, that it was not a suitable or sufficient scaffold, and in particular breaches F are alleged of regs. 7 (1) and (4), reg. 8 (1) and reg. 12 (2). In order to set up this case, leave is sought to amend the statement of claim, so as to allege breaches of these regulations. It is objected on behalf of the defendants that to allow such an amendment at the present stage would be an injustice to them. For it is claimed that, had the case against them been so framed at the trial, they might have desired to adduce further evidence. I am not persuaded that this is so. This is a G case in which there was no material issue of fact. The question is whether, having regard to the known facts, the regulations in question on their true construction have any application. If I thought that on the known facts it was clear that there had been a breach of any or all of the regulations now in question, I should be disposed, even at this stage, to allow the amendment, subject of course to proper safeguards with regard to the costs thrown away. But, for reasons which I will H attempt to state as briefly as possible, I am far from satisfied that any such clear breach of the relevant regulations has been shown.

I entertain no doubt that the gutter on which the plaintiff was working was part of the permanent structure of the building. Nor do I think that it was any the less so because the process of bolting the several lengths of gutter together had not been completed. By reg. 3 (2) a scaffold is defined as meaning a " tem- I porary structure ". I do not think, for my part, that the subsequent words, whereby a scaffold is made to include " any working platform, gangway, run, ladder or step-ladder ", have the effect of extending the meaning of " scaffold " to anything other than temporary structures. It seems to me that their effect is merely to show that a temporary structure, in order to be a scaffold, may take one of several forms. That this is the true construction of the definition in reg. 3 (2) is, I think, made abundantly clear by the wording of reg. 5, which requires that scaffolds must be provided for work that cannot safely be done from part of the building or from part of a permanent structure. This, as it seems to me, would be a nonsensical requirement if the part of the building could itself be held to amount to a scaffold. With all respect to what HOLROYD PEARCE, L.J., has said, I do not think that reg. 22 and reg. 26 militate against this view. Those regulations deal respectively with working platforms and gangways. They do not deal specifically with scaffolds. For reasons which will presently appear, I think that there may well be working platforms and gangways which are not scaffolds. I do not think, therefore, that consideration of reg. 22 and reg. 26 helps in determining what is a scaffold. In these circumstances, I am not satisfied that the gutter on which the plaintiff was working, being itself a part of the permanent structure of the building, can be held to be a scaffold within the definition clause. This being so, there can be no question of any breach of reg. 7 or reg. 8, since those regulations apply only to the construction of scaffolds and the material used in connexion therewith.

I have felt rather more difficulty with regard to reg. 12 (2). This regulation applies in terms not only to scaffolds, but also to working platforms, gangways or runs. It is true that working platforms, gangways and runs are among the things included in the definition of " scaffold " in reg. 3 (2). I have already said that in that context the words relate, in my view, only to working platforms, gangways and runs which have the quality of being temporary structures so as to amount to scaffolds. The addition of these words in reg. 12 (2) would, therefore, be unnecessary, unless they are intended to embrace working platforms, gangways and runs which are not scaffolds. I think it is difficult to resist the conclusion that under reg. 12 (2) there can be working platforms, gangways and runs which are other than temporary structures, and I see no reason why something which is part of the permanent structure of the building may not be a working platform or gangway within the meaning of that regulation. If this gutter can properly be held to be a working platform or gangway within reg. 12 (2), there could, I think, be no doubt that the defendants were in breach of their obligations. For it is clear, having regard to the defective hook bolt, that the gutter was not of sound construction; nor was it firmly supported.

The question which arises is, therefore, whether this gutter can fairly be said to constitute a working platform or a gangway, notwithstanding that it was not such a working platform or gangway as would amount to a scaffold. It has not been seriously argued that it was a run, and I do not, therefore, pause to consider what may be the precise meaning of that word. The regulations contain no separate definition of " working platform " or " gangway ". In the absence of any definition, I think that the question whether part of a building constitutes a working platform or a gangway must be decided as a matter of common sense. It seems to me that there is more to be said for this gutter amounting to a gangway than a working platform. The word " gangway " suggests a place where men may pass and re-pass in the course of their work, whereas a working platform suggests something more static. The former is no doubt more apt to describe this gutter than the latter. There was, however, no evidence to show that this gutter was intended to be used as a passage, though one may speculate that from time to time it might be used as a matter of convenience by men engaged on painting or repairing the roof. But I do not think that this is sufficient to make the gutter a gangway in the ordinary, accepted sense of that word. Viewing the question as a matter of common sense, I think that this was a gutter and nothing but a gutter, and I find it impossible to say that it amounted to a gangway, so as to be caught by reg. 12 (2).

In these circumstances I am not persuaded that the proposed amendment of the statement of claim sets up any clear case of breach of any of the regulations on the part of the defendants. I agree, therefore, that the amendment should not be allowed; and it follows that in my judgment the appeal should be dismissed.

PEARSON, L.J.: I agree with the conclusions and in general I agree with the judgments which have been delivered, but I have to give my reasons for

A agreeing with HOLROYD PEARCE, L.J., on the point of construction on which there is disagreement, viz., as to the effect of the definition of "scaffold" in reg. 3 (2) of the Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948. The first part of that definition can conveniently be divided into three divisions. First there are the words

B "any temporary structure on or from which persons perform work in connexion with an operation to which these regulations apply . . ."

Those words cover any working platform which is or forms part of a temporary structure. Secondly, there are the words

C "and any temporary structure which enables persons to obtain access to or which enables materials to be taken to any place at which such work is performed . . ."

Those words cover any gangway or run which is or forms part of a temporary structure. Thirdly, there are the words "and includes any working platform, gangway, run . . ." According to the ordinary principles of construction, those words ought to add something to what has gone before, and ought to bear their D natural and ordinary meaning in their setting in the Regulations of 1948, and ought not to have any forced or artificial meaning ascribed to them. Accordingly, in my opinion, they apply to any working platform, gangway or run, whether or not it is or forms part of a temporary structure, but do not go beyond a working platform, gangway or run as ordinarily understood in relation to building operations. It would be wrong to say that because workmen are standing on a E part of a building to do some building work, therefore, necessarily that part of the building is a working platform. Similarly, it would be wrong to say that, because workmen are going themselves and transporting materials to the working place by a certain route across parts of a building, therefore that route is necessarily a gangway or run.

F In my view, the latter part of the definition of "scaffold" in reg. 3 (2) does not give any clear illumination of the earlier part; and reg. 5 does not imply that a permanent structure from which work can be done is not a scaffold. The regulations concerning scaffolds do primarily have in mind temporary structures, but not so as to exclude in all cases permanent structures. The second proviso in reg. 22 and the second proviso in reg. 26 (1), show that for the purposes of those G regulations a working platform or gangway or run may be part of the permanent fixed equipment of a building. Those provisos refer to something which is permanent and which is also a specific piece of equipment rather than a part of a building which may sometimes be used as a working place or as a route to a working place. I see no reason why the words "working platform, gangway or run" should not have the same ambit in the definition of "scaffold" in reg. 3 (2) H as they have in reg. 22 and reg. 26. In my view the word "scaffold" in reg. 7 includes any working platform, gangway or run; and if the piece of guttering and its straps and hook bolt were or formed part of a working platform, gangway or run, there would be an infringement of reg. 7 (1) and (4).

There is also reg. 12 (2). It is remarkable that although "scaffold" has been defined in reg. 3 (2) as including any working platform, gangway or run, reg. 12 I (2) refers to "scaffolds, working platforms, gangways or runs". Manifestly there is inexact drafting somewhere. In my opinion, in reg. 12 (2) the words "working platforms, gangways or runs" were inserted by way of abundant caution and should be rejected as surplusage. However, the same question of fact in any case arises, viz., whether the piece of guttering constituted or formed part of a working platform, gangway or run. It is far from obvious, and there is no evidence or finding, that it did, and accordingly in my view there is no adequate basis for holding that it did.

The plaintiff would not be entitled to succeed if the amendment were allowed, and therefore the amendment should not be allowed, I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed. Leave to appeal to the House of Lords refused.

Solicitors: W. H. Thompson (for the plaintiff); Geoffrey Coombs & Co., agents for Laces & Co., Liverpool (for the defendants).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

KINGSTON-UPON-HULL CORPORATION v. CLAYTON (VALUATION OFFICER).

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Lord Reid, Lord Tucker, Lord Keith of Avonholm, Lord Hodson and Lord Guest), June 13, 14, July 13, 1961.]

Rates—Rateable occupation—Art gallery—Trust of gallery for enjoyment by the public in perpetuity—Gallery vested in local authority—Whether the trusts allowed any potentiality of beneficial occupation by the local authority.

The appellant corporation held a hereditament described as an art gallery and premises on trusts declared by deed, namely, "Upon trust to permit the same to be used and enjoyed by the citizens of the said city . . . and the public generally as an art gallery for the exhibition of works of art in perpetuity". The galleries were open to the public free of charge during certain hours in the day-time, organised parties being permitted to enter in the evenings by arrangement and facilities being provided for meetings, lectures and conducted visits. The remainder of the building was used as offices, storerooms, etc., normally appropriate to the use of a building as an art gallery. There were no bye-laws or written regulations in respect of the galleries but the attendants were orally instructed to take care of the works of art and ensure due decorum on the part of the public. On the question of rateability,

Held: the trust deed did not confer such rights of user on the public as exhausted all possibility of value to the appellant corporation, who were de facto in beneficial occupation of the art gallery, and, therefore, the hereditament should not be entered in the rating valuation list as "exempt".

Lambeth Overseers v. London County Council ([1897] A.C. 625) explained and distinguished.

Hare v. Putney Overseers ((1881), 7 Q.B.D. 223) and Burnell v. Downham Market U.D.C. ([1952] 1 All E.R. 601) considered.

Decision of the COURT OF APPEAL (sub nom. Clayton (Valuation Officer) v. Kingston-upon-Hull Corpn.) ([1960] 3 All E.R. 840) affirmed.

[As to occupation for the use of the public, see 32 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 21, para. 25; and for cases on the subject, see 36 DIGEST (Repl.) 351-354, 12-25.]

Cases referred to:

Burnell v. Downham Market U.D.C., [1952] 1 All E.R. 601; [1952] 2 Q.B. 55; 116 J.P. 168; 36 Digest (Repl.) 352, 17.

Carnegie Dunfermline Trustees v. Dunfermline Assessor, 1909 S.C. 678; 46 Sc. L.R. 451; 1 S.L.T. 286; 38 Digest (Repl.) 684, 1021.

Hare v. Putney Overseers, (1881), 7 Q.B.D. 223; 50 L.J.M.C. 81; 45 L.T. 339; 46 J.P. 100; 38 Digest (Repl.) 480, 38.

Lambeth Overseers v. London County Council, [1895] 2 Q.B. 511; revsd. C.A. [1896] 2 Q.B. 25; affd. H.L., [1897] A.C. 625; 66 L.J.Q.B. 806; 76 L.T. 795; sub nom. St. Mary, Lambeth (Churchwardens & Overseers) v. London County Council, 61 J.P. 580; 36 Digest (Repl.) 351, 13.

A London County Council v. Erith Parish (Churchwardens, etc.) & Dartford Union Assessment Committee, etc., [1893] A.C. 562; 63 L.J.M.C. 9; 69 L.T. 725; 57 J.P. 821; 38 Digest (Repl.) 481, 47.

Soane's Museum (Sir John) Trustees v. St. Giles-in-the-Fields and St. George's Bloomsbury Joint Vestry, (1900), 83 L.T. 248; Ryde & K. Rat. App. 235; 38 Digest (Repl.) 492, 115.

B Appeal.

Appeal by Kingston-upon-Hull Corporation from an order of the Court of Appeal (LORD EVERSHED, M.R., HARMAN and DONOVAN, L.JJ.), dated Nov. 10, 1960, and reported sub nom. Clayton (Valuation Officer) v. Kingston-upon-Hull Corpn., [1960] 3 All E.R. 840, allowing an appeal by the respondent valuation officer by way of Case Stated against a decision by the Lands Tribunal C (ERSKINE SIMES, Esq., Q.C.), given on Sept. 21, 1959, and reported (1959), 5 R.R.C. 309. The appellant corporation were the owners of a hereditament described as the Ferens Art Gallery and premises, Queen Victoria Square, Kingston-upon-Hull, assessed at £4,700 gross value, £3,913 rateable value in the valuation list for Kingston-upon-Hull City. The hereditament was the subject of a trust deed requiring the corporation to permit it to be used and D enjoyed by the citizens of the city and the public generally as an art gallery in perpetuity. The Lands Tribunal held that the hereditament was not in rateable occupation. The facts are set out in the opinion of LORD TUCKER below.

Peter Rawlinson, Q.C., and J. P. Harris for the appellant corporation.

E W. L. Roots, Q.C., and J. R. Phillips for the respondent valuation officer.

Their Lordships took time for consideration.

July 13. The following opinions were read.

LORD REID: My Lords, I have had an opportunity of reading the speech about to be delivered by my noble and learned friend, LORD TUCKER. I agree F with it and cannot usefully add anything. I would, therefore, dismiss this appeal.

LORD TUCKER: My Lords, this is an appeal from a decision of the Court of Appeal reversing by a majority a decision of the Lands Tribunal which had directed that a hereditament shown in the valuation list for the rating area of Kingston-upon-Hull Borough as "The Ferens Art Gallery and premises, Queen G Victoria Square" should be entered in the said list as "exempt".

The hereditament in question stands on a site which was conveyed to the appellants by The Right Honourable Thomas Robinson Ferens by indenture of Dec. 9, 1919, on and subject to trusts contained in a deed of the same date and made between the same parties. The deed required the corporation to erect on the site out of funds provided by Mr. Ferens a suitable building and, by cl. 5 thereof, H directed:

> "The corporation shall hold the said piece of land conveyed by and comprised in the principal indenture and the said building or buildings (all of which are hereinafter included in the expression 'The Art Gallery') Upon trust to permit the same to be used and enjoyed by the citizens of the said city and county of Kingston-upon-Hull and the public generally as an I art gallery for the exhibition of works of art in perpetuity."

The building and art gallery was, after some delay, completed in 1928. It is not necessary to describe the building in detail. There are galleries on two floors, two offices for the curator, a café, and storage rooms for works of art and their restoration in the basement. The galleries are open to the public free of charge from 10.0 a.m. to 6.0 p.m. on weekdays and from 2.30 p.m. to 4.30 p.m. on Sundays. Organised parties are permitted to enter after 6.0 p.m. by arrangement and facilities are provided for meetings, lectures and conducted visits. The staff consists of a director, an assistant director, three attendants, a boiler attendant, a joiner and a waitress. There are no bye-laws or written regulations in respect of the galleries, but the attendants are orally instructed to take care of the works of art and ensure due decorum on the part of the public. The hereditament was entered in the valuation list as exempt until it was entered in the first new valuation list made under the Local Government Act, 1948, at gross value £4,700 and rateable value £3,913. On Feb. 12, 1957, the corporation made a proposal that the hereditament should be entered as exempt. Objection was lodged by the respondent and, on appeal, the local valuation court allowed the appeal and directed that the hereditament be entered as exempt. The Lands Tribunal, on Sept. 21, 1959, upheld the decision of the local valuation court, but its decision was reversed by a majority in the Court of Appeal on Nov. 10, 1960.

Counsel for the appellants on appeal to this House rested his case fairly and squarely on two authorities, one binding on your Lordships and one a recent decision of the Court of Appeal. He did not seek to contend that, if he could not bring this case within the four corners of these decisions, he could succeed. The first of the two authorities is the decision of this House in Lambeth Overseers v. London County Council (1) (generally referred to as the Brockwell Park case), but, as that case followed and was said to be indistinguishable from an earlier case of Hare v. Putney Overseers (2) (generally referred to as the Putney Bridge case), it will be convenient to refer to the latter case first. It was a decision on a Case Stated by the Surrey justices on the hearing of a summons and complaint against the Fulham Bridge Co. for non-payment of certain rates in respect of Putney Bridge which had been duly made before June 25, 1880, for periods beyond June 26, and which at that date and since had remained undischarged and for which the Bridge Co., who were at all material times up to and including June 25 in occupation of the bridge, had been assessed. On June 26 the bridge was thrown open to the public free of tolls and possession taken under the provisions of the Metropolis Toll Bridges Act, 1877, by the Metropolitan Board of Works who had thereafter remained in control thereof. The Bridge Co. contended that, under s. 16 of the Poor Rate Assessment and Collection Act, 1869, they were not liable for the proportion of rates subsequent to the date of transfer to the board. In order to make good this contention, it was necessary for them to satisfy the court that, as from June 26, the board were the occupiers of the bridge. If the board's possession and control did not constitute beneficial occupation for rating purposes, the Bridge Co. remained liable for the whole period of the rates. By s. 16 of the Metropolis Toll Bridges Act, 1877, it was provided that, after the board had obtained absolute control of any bridge, tolls and charges should no longer be levied thereon and the bridge should be open free to the public. The Court of Appeal held that there was no rateable occupation by the board and, accordingly, the decision of the justices that a distress warrant should issue against the Bridge Co. for the whole of the rates was correct. BRAMWELL, L.J., thought (3) there was no beneficial occupation by the board. BRETT, L.J., said (4):

> "They are no more occupiers of the bridge than the owner of a street is the occupier of a street after it has been dedicated to the public."

COTTON, L.J., said (5):

> "They are possessed of it as owners for the benefit of the public, and if the case turned upon it I should say that they were not occupiers, but owners only as custodians for the public. There is certainly no beneficial occupation of the bridge. The property is by Act of Parliament kept and appropriated to a special and particular purpose, and as long as that lasts it is impossible to say that any profit may be derived from it—that it could

(1) [1897] A.C. 625. (2) (1881), 7 Q.B.D. 223. (3) (1881), 7 Q.B.D. at p. 232.
(4) (1881), 7 Q.B.D. at p. 233. (5) (1881), 7 Q.B.D. at p. 237.

A ever be possibly let for any sum to anyone, taking into consideration the use to which, by Act of Parliament, it must be applied, and the necessity of keeping it useful for that purpose. It is impossible, therefore, to say that it has any potentiality of a beneficial occupation."

There were two features of this case which distinguished it from some others. It concerned a highway and the free and unrestricted user by the public was B derived from an Act of Parliament. The words "dedicated to the public", which are to be found in some later cases in contexts in which they appear somewhat out of place, are appropriate and lead to results which are understandable in connexion with a bridge or highway.

Turning now to the Brockwell Park case, a Divisional Court consisting of POLLOCK, B., and WRIGHT, J. (6), held that the London County Council were C rateable in respect of land acquired and held by them for the use of the public under the London Council (General Powers) Act, 1890. The hereditaments in question, known as Brockwell Park, were acquired by the council pursuant to s. 4 of the above-mentioned Act, which conferred on them power to purchase the land and provided that, after acquisition, they should hold the same as a park, and should lay out, maintain and preserve the same for the perpetual use D thereof by the public for exercise and recreation, and exercise all necessary powers for the maintenance and preservation of the same as a park. The land so acquired was laid out and opened to the public at large as a park and recreation ground during the day-time, but at night-time the gates were locked and the public not admitted. Bye-laws were made for the proper conduct of the public and making it an offence for any person to remain in the park after closing time E if previously requested to leave. Lawn tennis grounds and cricket pitches were laid out and maintained for use by the public. It is not stated whether any charge was made for their use. There were certain buildings on the land to which it is not necessary to refer in detail as they were held to be ancillary and incidental to the use of the land as a park and recreation ground. The Court of Appeal (7) reversed the decision of the Divisional Court, A. L. SMITH, L.J., saying that there F was no finding that the county council, considered as the hypothetical tenant, would have been willing to pay a clear rent over and above the probable average annual cost of the repairs, insurance and other expenses, if any, necessary to maintain the property in a state to command such rent as required by the Parochial Assessment Act, 1836, and that, consequently, there was no beneficial occupation. It was also a material element that the county council were under G no statutory duty to provide the amenities which this park afforded. It is to be observed that it was not contended by counsel or held in either of the judgments that the council were not in fact in occupation; the only issue was whether their occupation was in law beneficial. When the case reached this House (8), counsel for the respondents relied on the absence of beneficial occupation, but further submitted that there was in fact no occupation at all. He said "the county coun- H cil are caretakers at night, and the public in occupation by day". The appeal was dismissed. LORD HALSBURY, L.C., said (9):

"I do not think there is here a rateable occupation by anybody. The 'public' is not a rateable occupier; and I think that one sentence disposes of the case . . . I think the Putney Bridge case (10) was rightly decided, and I think it is strictly in point in this case."

I He went on to express his agreement with the decision of the Court of Appeal to the effect that the nature of the occupation was such that it could not be regarded in law as beneficial. LORD HERSCHELL (11) agreed that there was no beneficial occupation, it being well settled that, in considering what rent a tenant might reasonably be expected to pay, regard must be had to any restrictions the legislature has imposed on the user of the hereditaments and that, in

(6) [1895] 2 Q.B. 511. (7) [1896] 2 Q.B. 25. (8) [1897] A.C. 625.
(9) [1897] A.C. at p. 629. (10) (1881), 7 Q.B.D. 223. (11) [1897] A.C. at p. 631.

considering the county council as possible hypothetical tenants, the case was distinguishable from London County Council v. Erith Parish (Churchwardens, etc.) & Dartford Union Assessment Committee, etc. (12), where the council had a statutory duty to dispose of the sewage and, consequently, had to be taken into account as possible tenants. He went on, however, to say that he was not satisfied that the council were occupiers of the park for rating purposes. He considered the case indistinguishable from the Putney Bridge case (13), and said (14): "They [the county council] seem to me to be merely custodians or trustees to hold it and manage it for the use of the public".

My Lords, this case, which is binding on your Lordships, has given rise to considerable difficulty and speculations as to its precise ratio decidendi, and, although the word "dedication" does not appear in the speeches, the reliance on the Putney Bridge case (13) as decisive has given rise to the view that, for rating purposes, the consequences which follow the dedication of a highway necessarily result where land or buildings are acquired for the purpose of free and unrestricted user by the public in perpetuity. Moreover, it is not easy to determine whether the basic decision was that no one was in occupation or, as it has sometimes been stated, that the public were in occupation, or whether any distinction was intended between the words "rateable occupation" and "beneficial occupation". I confess I find it difficult to understand how it could be held that the county council were not de facto in occupation, and I incline to the view expressed by CHANNELL, J., in Trustees of Sir John Soane's Museum v. St. Giles-in-the-Fields and St. George's Bloomsbury Joint Vestry (15), where he said:

> "I think that there is nothing in the Act of Parliament . . . which renders the property incapable of beneficial occupation, and I understand that that was the principal ground on which the Brockwell Park case (16) proceeded. There the public have the right to wander over the park and to exhaust any possibility of value to the occupying tenant. Consequently he would not give any rent for it."

I pass to the recent case of Burnell v. Downham Market U.D.C. (17). Here the Brockwell Park decision (16) was applied to the case of a seven-acre field which was purchased by public subscription and conveyed to an urban district council

> "upon trust for the perpetual use thereof by the public for the purposes of exercise and recreation pursuant to the provisions of the Open Spaces Act, 1906."

It was held, following and applying the Brockwell Park case (16), that, judged solely by the legal effect of the statutory restrictions imposed on the field by the Act of 1906, the real occupiers were the public, and the sole interest of the local authority was as custodians and trustees for the public, and, consequently, the local authority was not in rateable occupation. A submission that the Brockwell Park case (16) was distinguishable, on the ground that the Act there in question imposed a duty on the council to hold the park for the perpetual use by the public for exercise and recreation, whereas in the Downham Market case (17) the trusts created were not statutory, but arose out of and only out of the deed of the parties to it, was rejected, the Court of Appeal finding themselves unable to follow the decision of the Court of Session in Carnegie Dunfermline Trustees v. Dunfermline Assessor (18).

My Lords, it will be seen from the above that a principle derived from the case of a bridge which was treated as analogous to a street, and in respect of which there was a statutory duty imposed on the owners, has now been extended to a public park voluntarily conveyed to a local authority on trust to be dealt with under the Open Spaces Act, 1906. The present appeal seeks to extend it still further to an art gallery conveyed to a local authority for the use of the public

(12) [1893] A.C. 562. (13) (1881), 7 Q.B.D. 223. (14) [1897] A.C. at p. 632.
(15) (1900), 83 L.T. at p. 251. (16) [1897] A.C. 625.
(17) [1952] 1 All E.R. 601; [1952] 2 Q.B. 55. (18) 1909 S.C. 678.

A under trusts imposed by the deed of conveyance without reference to any statutory provisions. Assuming that the extensions up to and including the Downham Market case (19) were justified in law, as to which I do not find it necessary to express a concluded opinion, I think that the majority of the Court of Appeal arrived at the right conclusion after a careful examination of the provisions of the trust deed in the present case in deciding that it did not confer such rights of user B on the public as to exhaust any possibility of value to the appellants who were de facto in occupation of the gallery. In this connexion, I would respectfully adopt the language of HARMAN, L.J., in the Court of Appeal as follows (20):

> "As I have already said, I cannot think that this can be treated as an unoccupied building. It is in fact actively used and occupied every day of the week. It is vested in possession in the corporation, who are therefore C prima facie the occupiers—see RYDE ON RATING (10th Edn.) at p. 20 and cases there cited. Unless therefore they occupy merely as custodians, or in other words unless the rights of the public are such as to exclude all possibility of beneficial occupation by the trustees, then the occupation on the part of the owners will be treated as beneficial for rating purposes. The answer to this last question must rest on the document of trust. The trusts are D declared with a remarkable lack of particularity: '. . . to permit the same [i.e., the building] to be used and enjoyed by the citizens of . . . Hull and the public generally as an art gallery for the exhibition of works of art in perpetuity '. . . There is nothing in the trust about the public enjoying free and unrestricted access. The public is entitled to enjoy the property ' as an art gallery '. What does this mean? It must mean in my judgment that the E corporation are to conduct on the property an art gallery in the usual way of such resorts. I see no reason why the public should not be charged at any rate such a sum as will supplement the inadequate upkeep fund, even if not sums which will augment the fund for the purchase of works of art. I see no reason why the art gallery may not be closed, say on Thursdays, for the use of art students. Indeed I see no reason why the corporation should not let or F lend the gallery or specific parts of it for the exhibition of works of art on loan whether by some body like the Arts Council or by a wealthy patron or indeed an impresario wishing to make a profit."

For these reasons, I would dismiss this appeal.

My noble and learned friend, LORD KEITH OF AVONHOLM, who is unable to be present today, desires me to say that he agrees with the opinion which I have just G delivered.

LORD HODSON: My Lords, I agree.

LORD GUEST: My Lords, in Lambeth Overseers v. London County Council (the Brockwell Park case) (21), a public park dedicated by statute to the perpetual H use of the public for exercise and recreation, was held exempt from rating. The precise ratio of the decision has given rise to discussion. Both the Lord Chancellor (LORD HALSBURY) and LORD HERSCHELL seem to base their decision on the twin grounds that the London County Council were not occupiers of the park and that there was no beneficial occupation. But when their speeches are examined, I think it is reasonably clear that the real basis of the decision was that I there was no beneficial occupation because the park was dedicated for the perpetual use of the public and could not, therefore, be used for any profitable purpose. This is illustrated by the fact that the analogy given by the Lord Chancellor and LORD HERSCHELL is Hare v. Putney Overseers (the Putney Bridge case) (22), where the Metropolitan Board of Works were held not to be in beneficial occupation of Putney Bridge. It is also important to notice that BRAMWELL, L.J., in his

(19) [1952] 1 All E.R. 601; [1952] 2 Q.B. 55.
(20) [1960] 3 All E.R. at p. 845; [1961] 1 Q.B. at p. 360.
(21) [1896] 2 Q.B. 25; [1897] A.C. 625.
(22) (1881), 7 Q.B.D. 223.

judgment (23), referred to the case of sewers which at that date were held not to be rateable. Subsequently, in London County Council v. Erith Parish (Churchwardens, etc.) & Dartford Union Assessment Committee, etc. (24), they were held rateable.

The appellants sought to bring the present case of an art gallery within the ratio of the Brockwell Park case (25). There might be some analogy between a bridge and a public park. But, as subjects for rating purposes, an art gallery and a park are entirely dissimilar. Unless it can be shown that, wherever a subject, whether land or building, is dedicated in perpetuity for the use of the public either by statute or by deed, the subject is exempt from rating, this appeal must fail. As I have already indicated, the Brockwell Park case (25) cannot be taken as deciding this point favourably to the appellants. If the question of beneficial occupation is considered, it is plain that the art gallery is capable of beneficial occupation. The appellants are not bound to allow the public free and unrestricted access to the gallery, they can make a charge for admission, they can and do shut the gallery for certain hours, and they would, in my opinion, not be in breach of the deed of trust if they let or lent the gallery to other persons for the display of works of art provided the public were admitted. Whether a profit could be made from these uses is beside the point. The test for beneficial occupation is not whether a profit could be made, but whether the occupation is of value (London County Council v. Erith Parish (Churchwardens, etc.) (24)). So regarded, I have no doubt that the art gallery is capable of beneficial occupation. The matter could not, in my view, have been better expressed than in the judgment of HARMAN, L.J., when he said (26):

> "Unless therefore they occupy merely as custodians, or in other words unless the rights of the public are such as to exclude all possibility of beneficial occupation by the trustees, then the occupation on the part of the owners will be treated as beneficial for rating purposes."

I am entirely satisfied with the judgments of the majority of the Court of Appeal, and would dismiss the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Sharpe, Pritchard & Co. (for the appellant corporation); Solicitor of Inland Revenue (for the respondent valuation officer).

[Reported by G. A. KIDNER, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

(23) (1881), 7 Q.B.D. at p. 232. (24) [1893] A.C. 562. (25) [1897] A.C. 625.
(26) [1960] 3 All E.R. at p. 845; [1961] 1 Q.B. at p. 360.

A

R. v. BLAKE.

[COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL (Hilbery, Ashworth and Paull, JJ.), June 19, July 3, 1961.]

Criminal Law—Sentence—Consecutive sentences—Discretion to impose—Whether maximum sentences imposed on several convictions each for a separate like offence can be directed to run consecutively—Official Secrets Act, 1911 (1 & 2 Geo. 5 c. 28), s. 1 (1) (c)—Official Secrets Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5 c. 75), s. 8 (1).

B

Criminal Law—Sentence—Remission—Regard not had to the earning of remission when awarding sentence.

The applicant pleaded guilty to five counts of an indictment charging him in each count with a separate offence under s. 1 (1) (c)* of the Official Secrets Act, 1911. He was sentenced on each count to fourteen years' imprisonment, the maximum term under s. 8 (1)† of the Official Secrets Act, 1920. The sentences on counts 1 to 3 were directed to run consecutively, and those on counts 4 and 5 to run concurrently, so that the total term of imprisonment awarded was forty-two years. On application for leave to appeal against sentence,

C

D

Held: where each of several offences charged was separate and distinct, the trial judge had a discretion whether the sentences imposed on conviction should be consecutive or concurrent, and his discretion was not limited so as to prevent him awarding consecutive sentences which would be longer in the aggregate than the maximum permitted for any one of the offences taken by itself (see p. 126, letter F, post); in the circumstances the application would be dismissed.

E

Per CURIAM: in passing sentence a court should not have regard to the fact that the prisoner may earn remission by good conduct (see p. 127, letter B, post).

[As to punishment of offences in respect of official secrets, see 10 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 610, para. 1141.

F

As to the principles to be applied when imposing concurrent and consecutive sentences, see ibid., 492, para. 898; and for cases on the subject, see 14 DIGEST (Repl.) 550, 5362 and Supplement; 565, 5645.

For the Official Secrets Act, 1911, s. 1, see 5 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 971; and for the Official Secrets Act, 1920, s. 8 (1), see ibid., 1051.]

G

Case referred to:

R. v. Fuchs, "The Times", Mar. 2, 1950, p. 2.

Application.

This was an application by George Blake for leave to appeal against sentences of forty-two years' imprisonment imposed on him at the Central Criminal Court on May 3, 1961, by LORD PARKER, C.J. The applicant had pleaded guilty to five counts on an indictment, which alleged as follows—(count 1) that in November, 1951; (count 2) that between Sept. 1, 1953, and Apr. 13, 1955; (count 3) that between Apr. 14, 1955, and Apr. 3, 1959; (count 4) that between May 4, 1959, and June 14, 1959; and (count 5) between June 15, 1959, and Sept. 17, 1959, for a purpose prejudicial to the safety of the state the applicant had communicated to another person information which might have been directly or indirectly useful to an enemy, contrary to s. 1 (1) (c) of the Official Secrets

H

I

* Section 1 (1), so far as material, reads: "If any person for any purpose prejudicial to the safety . . . of the state . . . (c) obtains . . . or communicates to any other person . . . any sketch, plan, model, article, or note, or other document or information which is calculated to be or might be or is intended to be directly or indirectly useful to an enemy; he shall be guilty of felony . . ."

† Section 8 (1) reads: "Any person who is guilty of a felony under the principal Act [i.e., the Act of 1911] or this Act shall be liable to [imprisonment] for a term of not less than three years and not exceeding fourteen years."

Act, 1911. He was sentenced to fourteen years' imprisonment, the maximum on each count and the sentences on counts 1 to 3 were directed to run consecutively. The statutes, report and case cited below* were cited in argument in addition to those in the judgment. On June 19, 1961, the court intimated that it dismissed the application and would give its reason in writing at a later date.

J. N. Hutchinson, Q.C., and W. McL. Howard for the applicant.

The Attorney-General (Sir Reginald Manningham-Buller, Q.C.), and J. M. G. Griffith-Jones for the Crown.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 3. HILBERY, J., read the following judgment of the court: This was an application for leave to appeal against sentence, and the only ground put forward in the notice of application was that the sentence was too severe. The accused pleaded guilty at the Old Bailey to each of the five counts in an indictment charging him in each count with an offence under the Official Secrets Act, 1911. Each count alleged a specific and separate offence committed at some particular time during the period between 1951 and 1959. LORD PARKER, C.J., passed sentences of fourteen years on each of the first three counts and fourteen years on counts 4 and 5, making the first three sentences of fourteen years consecutive and the sentences on the last two counts concurrent with the sentences on the first three. The total sentence was, therefore, one of forty-two years. It is that sentence of which the applicant complains that it is too severe.

On his behalf it was expressly stated by counsel that his application for leave to appeal against that sentence was not based on any point of law, and the application did not, therefore, involve a question of law. His contention was that the sentence was wrong in principle and, furthermore, in the particular circumstances of this case, was manifestly excessive. In support of the argument that the sentence was wrong in principle his contention in the first place was that the Official Secrets Act, 1920, s. 8 (1), provided a maximum sentence of fourteen years for an offence against the Act such as was alleged in each of the counts in this indictment, and that to pass consecutive sentences of fourteen years was to evade the limit in the Act. The answer to this is that there is no settled principle that a judge may not pass consecutive sentences in respect of a number of offences for any one of which the maximum sentence is fourteen years where each offence charged in each count is separate and distinct. Whether the sentences shall be concurrent in such circumstances or consecutive is a matter for the judge to determine in the exercise of his discretion. This discretion is not limited so as to prevent the judge awarding consecutive sentences which will total more than the maximum permitted for any one of the offences taken by itself.

Counsel for the applicant pressed on us evidence given by the Home Office before the Royal Commission on Capital Punishment (1), which showed that where a life sentence is now passed it is usual for the Home Office, indeed he put it as high as the normal practice of the Home Office, in the exercise of the powers given to the Home Secretary under s. 27 (1) of the Prison Act, 1952, to release on licence any prisoner on whom is passed a sentence of life imprisonment after ten years, and that as that was so no court ought by making sentences consecutive to pass a sentence which would be longer than the one which he would in practice serve if sentenced to life imprisonment. One answer to this is that where, as in the case of non-capital murder, the statute (2) enacts that the

---

* Explosive Substances Act, 1883, s. 2, s. 3; Official Secrets Act, 1889, s. 2; Official Secrets Act, 1939; Homicide Act, 1957; JUSTICE—Report on Legal Penalties, 1959, p. 5, where at (b) it was stated that the purpose of fixing maxima was to put some limit on the judicial discretion; R. v. Morris, [1950] 2 All E.R. 965.

(1) Cmd. 8932, 1953. The Report covers the years 1949-53 and the paragraphs considered in argument were paras. 644-656, especially paras. 644, 646.

(2) I.e., Homicide Act, 1957, s. 9 (1).

A sentence shall be one of life imprisonment, this court passes that sentence giving the words of the statute their natural and ordinary meaning, and that sentence remains the sentence on the man, the Home Secretary having no power to alter it. The only power, under s. 27 of the Prison Act, 1952, which the Home Secretary has is power to release the prisoner on licence with power, however, to recall him at any time to serve the rest of his sentence. The sentence remains what it is, B one for life. Furthermore, this court in passing such a sentence has no regard to the possibilities of the exercise by the Home Secretary of his power to let a prisoner out on licence. It has been laid down by this court (3) that in passing sentence a court should not pay any regard to the fact that nowadays a prisoner serving his sentence by good conduct may earn remission so that he may in practice be confined to prison for a much shorter time than the length of sentence C passed on him, and there is no logical distinction between taking into consideration the possibility of remission for good conduct and the possibility of remission through the Home Secretary exercising his discretion to allow out on licence and so to shorten the period of a prisoner's confinement.

Counsel for the applicant also pressed on us R. v. Fuchs (4), but the circumstances in that case, so far as one can judge from the report, were entirely D different from those in the case we have under consideration. It is true that in that case LORD GODDARD, C.J., who was passing sentence, made it fourteen years on each count concurrent, himself remarking, however, that for a man of high education and ability punishment as such did not mean a great deal. It has been said, rightly, that in passing sentence a judge has to consider the offence and the offender, but he has also to consider the interest of society. E When this prisoner and his conduct and the particular circumstances of this case as they have been revealed to us are considered, R. v. Fuchs (5) is clearly not comparable to this one.

---

(3) I.e., in R. v. McGuire, R. v. Enos, (1956), 40 Cr. App. Rep. 92: a court should pass sentence which it thinks the gravity of the offence deserves and should not, in fixing the length of the sentence, take any question of remission of sentence into account.

F (4) Central Criminal Court, Mar. 1, 1950, before LORD GODDARD, C.J., reported in "The Times", Mar. 2, 1950, p. 2. Fuchs had pleaded guilty to four counts on an indictment under the Official Secrets Act, 1911—(i) that on a day in 1943 in Birmingham for a purpose prejudicial to the safety and interests of the state he communicated to a person unknown information relating to atomic research which was calculated to be, or might have been, or intended to be directly or indirectly useful to an enemy; (ii) on a day unknown between Dec. 31, 1943, and Aug. 1, 1944, he, being a British subject, G in New York City, U.S.A., committed a similar offence; (iii) that on a day in February, 1945, he, a British subject at Boston, Massachusetts, U.S.A., committed a similar offence; and (iv) on a day in 1947 in Berkshire committed a similar offence. LORD GODDARD, C.J., in passing sentence, said that Fuchs in 1933, when fleeing from political persecution in Germany, took advantage of the right and privilege of asylum always extended to persons persecuted in their own country for political opinions. He had betrayed the hospitality given to him with the grossest treachery. He was given British nationality in 1942 on account of his scientific ability and, regardless of his oath, H he started to betray secrets of vital importance for the purpose of furthering a political creed held in abhorrence by the vast majority of people in this country. By so doing he imperilled the right of asylum which this country had hitherto extended—he not only betrayed the products of his own brain for which this country paid him, enabling him to live in comfort in return for his promise of secrecy; but also he betrayed the secrets of other workers in this field of science both in this country and in the U.S.A. He might thereby have caused the gravest suspicion to fall on those who he had falsely I treated as friends and who were misled into trusting him. He might have imperilled the good relations between this country and the United States—he had done irreparable harm to both countries and did it merely for the purpose of furthering his political creed. His crime was only thinly differentiated from high treason. LORD GODDARD, C.J., concluded: "I have now to assess the penalty which it is right I should impose upon you . . . how can I be sure that a man of your mentality, as shown in the statement you have made, may not at any other minute allow some curious working in your mind to lead you further to betray secrets of the greatest possible value and importance to this country. The maximum sentence that Parliament has ordained is fourteen years and that is the sentence that I pass upon you."

(5) "The Times", Mar. 2, 1950, p. 2.

It was further argued that sentences totalling forty-two years could not be administered, in that no person is capable of serving so long a sentence or, indeed, any sentence in excess of twenty years. We are quite unable to accept the premise on which this argument is based, nor can we accept the further contention that there is no suitable prison where the applicant can serve his sentence. The age of the applicant and his capacity to serve the sentences imposed on him were doubtless considered by LORD PARKER, C.J., and we see no reason to interfere with his conclusion on these matters.

Disinclined as we are to act otherwise than in public, we thought it right, more especially as the second ground on which the application was based was that, in the particular circumstances of this case the sentence was manifestly excessive, to hear part of this application in camera, because there were matters included in the defendant's statement to which his counsel wished to allude but which we were satisfied it would be prejudicial to the interests of the state to have mentioned in public. This course could not in any way prejudice the accused. These matters could be put before this court just as well in closed as in open court, and it is this court and not the public that the applicant has to satisfy that the sentence passed on him should be reduced.

We listened very carefully to all that was said on behalf of the applicant. Amongst other things, it was pointed out that LORD PARKER, C.J., accepted, as we do, that Blake took no money for the traitorous services which he rendered, that when a prisoner in Communist hands the only books provided for him and his fellow-prisoners were the works of Karl Marx, Engels, Lenin and Stalin, and that so great was the boredom of captivity that he read them and other Russian literature devoted to disparaging the way of life of this country and the West and preaching salvation by Communism until at last he succumbed and decided to dedicate his life to the cause of Communism. When he returned to this country he did not, as one would have expected if he had a shred of honesty, resign from the service and pay of this country. So poisoning to him was the doctrine he had accepted that he decided to remain in the pay and service of this country and by every means in his power to betray it and by that method to help the cause which he had secretly espoused. From then onwards for nine years, not once, but on every occasion when he had it in his power to do harm to this country and his fellow citizens he did it by betraying secret information of great importance. In his own words, " There was not an official document of any importance to which I had access which was not passed to my Soviet contact ".

We repeat, because it accurately represents our view, the words of LORD PARKER, C.J., when he said: " Your case is one of the worst that can be envisaged in times of peace ".

It is of the highest importance, perhaps particularly at the present time, that such conduct should not only stand condemned, should not only be held by all ordinary men and women in utter abhorrence but also should receive when brought to justice the severest possible punishment. This sentence had a threefold purpose. It was intended to be punitive, it was designed and calculated to deter others, and it was meant to be a safeguard to this country.

Application dismissed.

Solicitors: Claude Hornby & Cox (for the applicant); Director of Public Prosecutions (for the Crown).

[Reported by N. P. METCALFE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

A

BROWN v. BULLOCK (INSPECTOR OF TAXES).

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Evershed, M.R., Harman and Donovan, L.JJ.), June 23, 26, 1961.]

Income Tax—Deduction in computing profits—"Expenses incurred wholly, exclusively and necessarily in the performance of . . . duties"—Bank manager—Subscription to club—Membership practically requisite for employment as manager—Income Tax Act, 1952 (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2 c. 10), Rules applicable to Sch. E, Sch. 9, r. 7.

B

On appointment to the branch in Pall Mall, Westminster, a bank manager was instructed to "foster local contacts and . . . join the club or clubs best suited for that purpose". Refusal to join a club would not be accepted without very good reason though it would not necessarily involve loss of the appointment, and club membership was virtually a condition or requisite of managerial appointment, which would be unlikely in the event of such refusal. The manager joined the Devonshire Club, and used it for returning hospitality received from bank customers and for lunching there to keep in touch with members, some of whom were bank customers. He also belonged to the Royal Automobile Club which entitled him to use its country club where he played golf. He was reimbursed by the bank for the whole subscription to the Devonshire Club and half of that to the Royal Automobile Club (the part not referable to the country club), the sums being treated as part of his emoluments for income tax purposes.

C

D

Held: the subscriptions were not deductible from the emoluments of the taxpayer's office for income tax purposes under Sch. E to the Income Tax Act, 1952, since the subscriptions were not paid in performing his duties as bank manager but as something that in the opinion of the taxpayer's employers it was desirable for their manager to do socially; the subscriptions were not, therefore, money expended "wholly, exclusively and necessarily in the performance of [his] duties" within r. 7 of Sch. 9 to the Act.

E

Decision of DANCKWERTS, J. ([1961] 1 All E.R. 206) affirmed.

F

[As to deductible expenses of an office or employment under Sch. E to the Income Tax Act, 1952, see 20 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 328, para. 602; and for cases on the subject, see 28 DIGEST (Repl.) 242-247, 1059-1099.

For the Income Tax Act, 1952, Sch. 9, r. 7 of the Rules applicable to Sch. E, see 31 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 524.]

G

Cases referred to:

Griffiths v. Mockler, [1953] 2 All E.R. 805; 35 Tax Cas. 135; [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1123; 28 Digest (Repl.) 245, 1082.

Lomax v. Newton, [1953] 2 All E.R. 801; 34 Tax Cas. 558; [1953] 1 W.L.R. 1123; 28 Digest (Repl.) 245, 1083.

Ricketts v. Colquhoun, [1926] A.C. 1; 95 L.J.K.B. 82; 134 L.T. 106; 90 J.P. 9; 10 Tax Cas. 118; 28 Digest (Repl.) 242, 1059.

H

Appeal.

The taxpayer appealed to the General Commissioners of Income Tax for St. James, Westminster, against an additional assessment of £27 to income tax under Sch. E to the Income Tax Act, 1952, made on him for 1954-55 in respect of his emoluments as manager of the Pall Mall branch of the Midland Bank, Ltd., in the city of Westminster. The sum of £27 represented that part of the total annual subscriptions in respect of the taxpayer's membership of the Royal Automobile Club and the Devonshire Club which was paid by the bank. It was not disputed that the £27 formed part of the emoluments of the taxpayer's office or employment. The sole question for decision was whether, in arriving at the amount of the emoluments to be assessed under Sch. E, a deduction of the £27 was allowable under r. 7 of Sch. 9 to the Income Tax Act, 1952. The commissioners held that the expenditure was not wholly, exclusively and necessarily made in the performance of the taxpayer's duties as bank manager as there was some element of personal benefit to the taxpayer, and they confirmed the additional assessment. The taxpayer appealed by way of Case Stated to the High Court.

I

On Nov. 15, 1960, DANCKWERTS, J., dismissed the taxpayer's appeal, reported [1961] 1 All E.R. 206, holding that the subscription to the Royal Automobile Club was partly for the taxpayer's enjoyment and so was not money expended "wholly, exclusively and necessarily in the performance of" his duties within Sch. 9, r. 7; and that when taking lunch and entertaining customers at the Devonshire Club the taxpayer was not acting in the performance of his duties as bank manager within r. 7. The taxpayer appealed to the Court of Appeal.

Hubert H. Monroe, Q.C., and M. P. Nolan for the taxpayer.
C. F. Fletcher-Cooke, Q.C., and A. S. Orr for the Crown.

LORD EVERSHED, M.R.: The question in this appeal calls for a decision on the application to the facts in question of para. 7 of Sch. 9 to the Income Tax Act, 1952. The words of the paragraph are:

> "If the holder of an office or employment of profit is necessarily obliged to incur and defray out of the emoluments thereof the expenses of travelling in the performance of the duties of the office or employment, or of keeping and maintaining a horse to enable him to perform the same, or otherwise to expend money wholly, exclusively and necessarily in the performance of the said duties, there may be deducted from the emoluments to be assessed the expenses so necessarily incurred and defrayed."

The appellant in this court, the taxpayer, was appointed in 1949 as manager of the branch of the Midland Bank, Ltd., in Pall Mall in Westminster. According to the findings of the General Commissioners, he was instructed (and I will now quote from para. 3 of the Case),

> "that he must foster local contacts and that he should join the club or clubs best suited for that purpose."

The Case goes on to say, it might be thought somewhat derogatorily of the powers of selection on the part of the clubs,

> "Membership of such clubs is in almost every case passed from the manager to the succeeding manager as a matter of course."

The paragraph proceeds:

> "If a prospective manager refused to join a club his refusal would not be accepted without very good reason but would not necessarily mean that he would lose the appointment. Club membership is virtually a condition or requisite of managerial appointment and it would be unlikely that a manager would be appointed who would refuse to join the appropriate club or clubs."

Later, the Case states that the taxpayer in fact used the Devonshire Club, which is one of the clubs with which we are concerned,

> "for returning hospitality received by him from customers of the bank. In addition he lunched there fairly frequently so that he might keep in touch with members of the club some of whom were customers of the bank. He used it rarely for any other purpose."

I shall say something on that last sentence presently because counsel for the taxpayer said that in truth there was no evidence that the taxpayer had used the club at all for any purpose other than those which I earlier read.

Finally it is stated in the Case:

> "The [taxpayer] was not a 'clubman' and would be resigning his membership of the Devonshire Club as soon as he retired but he hoped to retain membership of the Royal Automobile Club country club."

A That last sentence introduces two well known clubs. In fact, it seems that the taxpayer had been for some time, at any rate, before his appointment as manager of the Pall Mall branch of the Midland Bank, a member of the Royal Automobile Club, the membership which he enjoyed being one which entitled him also to use the country club. That was a matter of personal amenity to himself because the taxpayer is in fact one who enjoys a game of golf, and he made use of his member-
B ship of the Royal Automobile Club to play golf at the club's country course. His subscription in respect of the Royal Automobile Club was at all relevant dates twelve guineas. We were informed this morning that now in fact he has ceased to be a member of the club, save only a country member for which privilege the subscription is half, six guineas. The other club, the Devonshire Club in St. James's Street, is one of which the subscription at the relevant dates was £21
C per annum. It seems that the bank paid in fact the full amount of the Devonshire Club's subscription and half the Royal Automobile Club subscription (i.e., such part of the subscription as was not referable to the country club), and it is not in doubt in this court that those payments should be treated as part of the taxpayer's emoluments as manager on behalf of the Midland Bank.

The question is whether he can invoke the language of para. 7 of Sch. 9 to D the Act and treat the subscriptions as an expense necessarily incurred in the performance of his duties as bank manager. It is the words which I have emphasised in the last sentence on which the whole matter hangs. On the facts as found, is it true to say that the subscriptions (i.e., the annual subscription to the Devonshire Club and half the subscription to the Royal Automobile Club) were expenses necessarily incurred in the performance of the taxpayer's duties as bank manager?
E For the purposes of this appeal I think it unnecessary to make any distinction between the two clubs and I confine myself hereafter to the taxpayer's membership of the Devonshire Club. The General Commissioners who heard the case concluded that the taxpayer had not made good his claim for exemption. They said > "that although the [taxpayer] was necessarily obliged to incur the F expense of the club subscriptions such expenditure was not wholly exclusively and necessarily made in the performance of his duties as a bank manager."

On appeal to DANCKWERTS, J., the same conclusion was reached. The learned judge expressed some sympathy for the taxpayer in the circumstances, but felt the answer was inevitable and certainly not less so because of the decisions of G VAISEY, J., in two cases, Lomax v. Newton (1) and Griffiths v. Mockler (2). Those cases related, among other things, to mess subscriptions defrayed by military or territorial officers. The officers claimed that as officers they were, in the same way as the taxpayer here was, obliged for practical purposes to join the mess and that therefore the subscriptions fell within the ambit of the language I have read. The learned judge, VAISEY, J., in those cases rejected that view. He said that no doubt an officer would for practical purposes have to belong to a mess,
H but it could not be said of his mess membership that it was necessarily in performance of his duty as an officer.

Those cases of VAISEY, J., are not binding on us, but I see no ground for casting any doubt on their validity. As VAISEY, J., pointed out, the relevant language in the Schedule is of a somewhat rigid character. The adverb "necessarily" added to the phrase "performance of the duties" clearly narrows very
I much the scope of any expenditure which can fairly be deductible.

Counsel for the Crown indeed indicated that there was a distinction, a sharp distinction, on which he largely founded himself, between a Sch. D case and a Sch. E case. Under Sch. D, where "wholly and exclusively" are as in a Sch. E case required as characteristics, the word "necessarily" is absent, and in Sch. D the object of the expenditure is stated as being "for the purposes of" a man's work, whereas in Sch. E it must be " in the performance " of his work. I would myself prefer to express no view whether, if this were a Sch. D case, the taxpayer would be successful. But I would point once again to the distinction between the two Schedules, which I regard as somewhat regrettable, as something which tends to bring the law into a measure of disrepute, and to make the income tax obligations of the taxpayer a game of ingenuity divorced from principle or ethical or other common-sense considerations.

(1) [1953] 2 All E.R. 801; 34 Tax Cas. 558.
(2) [1953] 2 All E.R. 805; 35 Tax Cas. 135.

I confine myself in dealing with this case to the question whether the taxpayer's subscriptions fall fairly within the paragraph quoted, and like the learned judge I feel compelled as a matter of the ordinary sense of language to answer that question in the negative. It is not suggested—certainly the taxpayer, I am quite sure, would never suggest—that while he was in the Devonshire Club he felt it his duty to try to get business for the bank, to " tout " for customers. Nor, in my judgment, could he be said while exercising his rights and privileges as a member of the club in other respects to be performing his duties as manager. The phrase which is used in the Case, " to foster local contacts ", is a vague phrase, not capable of precise significance. No doubt it is like many such phrases, a useful formula so long as it has not to be further expounded. The natural intention on the part of the taxpayer's superior officers was no doubt that, if he belonged to clubs of this standing in this part of London, it gave him a certain status. It would be obvious that, if he was a member of these clubs, he was the sort of man who would be acceptable in that sort of social circle, and that no doubt would be useful to him and to the bank, because he would thereby meet people who, as a result of meeting him and liking him, might tend to have business relations with him or with the bank.

It seems to me that it is impossible, as it were, to cut up the uses a man may make of a club like the Devonshire Club, to say that on a particular occasion when he is having lunch with a particular person he is in fact using the club as bank manager, while on other occasions he is just having lunch because it is his lunch-time and he has nowhere else to go. The fact is that he acquires the status of a member of the Devonshire Club and he has the amenities of the club of which he may or may not take advantage as occasions may arise. If it were possible so to analyse the uses a man in the taxpayer's position might make of a club, the result would appear to be—as counsel for the taxpayer conceded—that failure to prove that he had never used the club except directly in connexion with the bank's business would be fatal to the claim for exemption—a result which would be impracticable in application as well as capricious in its consequences.

As Mr. Monroe pointed out at the end of his very forceful contentions on the taxpayer's behalf, the matter in the end falls within a very small compass. It is a question of applying the ordinary sense of a few simple English words. A man becomes, and I assume he applies to become, a member of a club because those who employ him say that they think their managers ought to be in that sort of social position. Having become a member of the club, he then is entitled to use the club's premises and any amenities that it has. But it seems to me that to the short question, " When he pays his subscription, is the sum paid necessarily incurred in the performance of his duties as a bank manager? " the answer is, " No ". What his employers may think it desirable for him to do, socially, is one thing. Performance of the duties of manager of their branch is something else. I cannot myself find any good ground for saying that the sense of the words I have quoted could be so applied as to produce the result for which the taxpayer contends. For those reasons I conclude that this appeal fails and must be dismissed.

HARMAN, L.J.: I confess to having found the arguments or some of the arguments addressed to us on this subject extremely distasteful. I think

A it better to say no more about it except that I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

DONOVAN, L.J.: Under r. 7 of the Rules applicable to Sch. E to the Income Tax Act, 1952, the taxpayer must show that any expense he wishes to be deducted in arriving at his assessable emoluments was inter alia necessarily B incurred in the performance of the duties of the office or employment. For the taxpayer here it is contended that the fact is proved by showing that the employer prescribed some duty for his own employee which involved the relevant expense. This contention in my view is not correct. The test is not whether the employer imposes the expense, but whether the duties do, in the sense that, irrespective of what the employer may prescribe, the duties cannot be performed without C incurring the particular outlay. This result follows in my opinion from the decision of the House of Lords in Ricketts v. Colquhoun (3).

Counsel for the taxpayer has conceded that, even if the Midland Bank did not request and expect the taxpayer to join a club like the Devonshire Club, he could still perform his duties as bank manager; and that, if the test is the strictly objective one which I have stated, he must fail. I think that is the test under the D Schedule and I therefore agree that this appeal must be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Preston & Naylor (for the taxpayer); Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

E

S. v. S. (O. otherwise P. (by her Guardian) intervening) B. Cited.

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Mr. Commissioner Latey, Q.C.), June 2, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 1961.]

F Divorce—Adultery—Insanity—Whether ignorance that act was wrong was a defence.

The wife petitioned for divorce on the ground of the husband's adultery with the intervener. The husband admitted the adultery. The intervener, however, was a mental patient and denied adultery and the medical evidence called on her behalf (which was accepted by the court) showed that she G "would not have known that promiscuous sexual intercourse was wrong".

Held: the wife would be granted a decree on the ground of the husband's adultery with the intervener, but the intervener would be dismissed from the suit since, being ignorant that her act was wrongful, she was not guilty of adultery.

M'Naghten's Case ((1843), 10 Cl. & Fin. 200), Swan v. Swan ([1953] 2 H All E.R. 854) and Palmer v. Palmer ([1954] 3 All E.R. 494) applied.

[As to insanity as a defence to a charge of adultery, see 12 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 237, para. 444, note (b); and for cases on the subject of insanity, see 27 DIGEST (Repl.) 374, 3085-3087.]

Cases referred to:

I Hanbury v. Hanbury, [1892] P. 222; 61 L.J.P. 115; affd. C.A., (1892), 8 T.L.R. 559; 27 Digest (Repl.) 374, 3086.

Long v. Long and Johnson, (1890), 15 P.D. 218; 60 L.J.P. 27; 27 Digest (Repl.) 312, 2600.

M'Naghten's Case, (1843), 10 Cl. & Fin. 200; 8 E.R. 718; sub nom. McNaughton's Case, 4 State Tr. N.S. 847; 14 Digest (Repl.) 60, 246.

Palmer v. Palmer, [1954] 3 All E.R. 494; [1955] P. 4; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 756; 3rd Digest Supp.

---

(3) [1926] A.C. 1; 10 Tax Cas. 118.

Swan v. Swan, [1953] 2 All E.R. 854; [1953] P. 258; 117 J.P. 519; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 591; 3rd Digest Supp. A Yarrow v. Yarrow, [1892] P. 92; 61 L.J.P. 69; 66 L.T. 383; 27 Digest (Repl.) 374, 3087.

Petition.

The wife petitioned for divorce on the ground of the husband's adultery with the intervener. The husband, by his answer, admitted the adultery alleged but pleaded that the wife connived at and by her misconduct conduced to the adultery; and the husband cross-prayed for a divorce on the ground of the wife's adultery with the party cited. The wife denied that she had connived at or conduced to the husband's adultery and both she and the party cited denied adultery. The intervener was a mental patient and denied adultery. At the hearing of the suit, the judge found that the husband had failed to establish his charge of adultery. The case is reported on the question whether or not the intervener had been guilty of adultery. B C

M. B. Smith for the wife.

H. M. Self for the husband.

L. I. Stranger-Jones for the Official Solicitor as guardian ad litem for the intervener. D

R. D. Ranking for the party cited.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 9. MR. COMMISSIONER LATEY, Q.C., in the course of his judgment said: Counsel for the intervener has submitted in a careful review of the law that in the circumstances of the present case the intervener cannot be found guilty of adultery. He accepts the definition of adultery (1) as E

> "willing sexual intercourse between a married person and one of the opposite sex whilst the marriage subsists", but he urges that the intervener, who was a single person, comes within the exceptional category of the second limb of the M'Naghten rules (2). Those rules were formulated by TINDAL, C.J., as follows (3): F

> "... to establish a defence on the ground of insanity, it must be clearly proved that, at the time of the committing of the act, the party accused was labouring under such a defect of reason, from disease of the mind, as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing; or, if he did know it, that he did not know he was doing what was wrong." G

Those rules as we are all aware have been applied ever since in the criminal courts and in recent years the Court of Appeal has decided that both propositions apply to a defence of insanity against charges of cruelty in the Divorce Division. I shall refer to those authorities later.

Counsel for the intervener submits that the second proposition or limb of the rules applies to the intervener in the present case. She is a spinster of mature age and as a mental patient, a schizophrenic, formerly under certification, she is represented by the Official Solicitor. She was admitted as a certified patient into a mental hospital in 1944 and was transferred to Banstead Mental Hospital in July, 1945, and she was there as a certified patient until May, 1959, when she was discharged as relieved and re-admitted as a voluntary patient. In November, 1960, she was re-classified as an informal patient under the Mental Health Act, 1959, and she still continues as such. In February, 1958, she ceased to be treated in a closed ward and was allowed a certain measure of freedom. The husband, then a porter at the hospital, took advantage of this and as a result she became pregnant. On medical advice the pregnancy was H I

(1) LATEY ON DIVORCE (14th Edn.), p. 74, para. 143. (2) (1843), 10 Cl. & Fin. 200. (3) (1843), 10 Cl. & Fin. at p. 210.

A officially terminated in June, 1958, and in his affidavit the deputy physician superintendent and consultant psychiatrist at Banstead Mental Hospital said:

> "In my opinion in the early months of 1958 the mental condition of the intervener was such as to preclude her from a full understanding of the nature and consequence of her actions. I am of the opinion that at the time she had sexual relations which eventually resulted in her pregnancy, B she would have known that she was in fact in the process of sexual intercourse, but she would have been incapable by reason of her mental illness of a full understanding of her actions; she would not have considered whether such conduct was unlawful or morally wrong. Her mental condition was such that she was incapable of exercising fully those aspects of judgment and understanding of the quality of her acts as a normal person C would. She would not have known that promiscuous sexual intercourse was wrong."

The court is not obliged to take the opinion of the psychiatrist as gospel, but in the present case I accept that opinion in full. Thus, the husband was convicted at Surrey Assizes in November, 1958, of having carnal knowledge of the intervener, as it was an offence under the Lunacy Act, 1890, s. 324.

D Counsel for the intervener submitted that in Swan v. Swan (4) the court decided that the first limb of the M'Naghten rules applied to cruelty in matrimonial cases just as much as in criminal courts. He also pointed out that the Court of Appeal in the later case of Palmer v. Palmer (5), decided that the second limb applied in the same way. He then submitted that equally the second limb was applicable in the circumstances concerning the intervener and could be E applied to the issue of adultery, just as much as to the issue of cruelty. He pointed out that in the older case of Hanbury v. Hanbury (6) Sir Charles Butt, P., instanced in his charge to the jury that both in cruelty and adultery it was for them to consider whether the accused person was capable of understanding the nature and consequences of his acts. The fact that in that particular case the jury held that the person concerned was capable of understanding F does not alter the legal principle that had they found otherwise it would have made a good defence. Counsel for the intervener also cited Long v. Long and Johnson (7), and Yarrow v. Yarrow (8). In the latter case the defence of insanity failed, but in the present case I accept the submission that the intervener did not know that her act was wrongful and, therefore, she was not guilty of adultery. I dismiss her from the suit.

G [The commissioner considered the facts and concluded:] I reject the husband's plea of connivance and conduct conducing to the adultery with the intervener, and as for connivance, it does not even arise in this case. Therefore, I find that the husband's case fails in regard both to his charges of adultery and to his pleas of connivance and conduct conducing. I find, as he has admitted, that he committed adultery with the intervener. I have already dismissed her H from the suit, and I pronounce a decree nisi of divorce in favour of the wife on the ground of the husband's adultery with the intervener.

Decree nisi.

Solicitors: W. H. Matthews & Co. (for the wife); J. I. Humphreys & Co. (for the husband); Official Solicitor (as guardian ad litem for the intervener); F. W. P. Lupton (for the party cited).

[Reported by A. T. Hoolahan, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

---

(4) [1953] 2 All E.R. 854; [1953] P. 258. (5) [1954] 3 All E.R. 494; [1955] P. 4.
(6) [1892] P. 222. (7) (1890), 15 P.D. 218. (8) [1892] P. 92.

Re SEALE'S MARRIAGE SETTLEMENT.

A

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Buckley, J.), March 7, June 22, 1961.]

Trust and Trustee—Variation of trusts by the court—Jurisdiction—English marriage settlement to be replaced by trust abroad—Husband and wife emigrated to Canada and became domiciled there—Approval sought for proposed arrangement involving appointment of Canadian trustee in place of English trustee and resettlement of trust funds on trusts of new Canadian settlement—Variation of Trusts Act, 1958 (6 & 7 Eliz. 2 c. 53), s. 1.

B

A marriage settlement was executed in England by a man and a woman who at the date of their marriage were living and domiciled in the United Kingdom, but who later emigrated to the Province of Quebec, Canada, where they were living and domiciled at the time of the present application. An English trustee company was trustee of the marriage settlement. The beneficial trusts were first a life interest for the wife, then protective trusts for the husband for life, then a power of appointment among children and issue of the marriage, with a trust in default of appointment for the children of the marriage at twenty-one. The husband and wife had three children, one of whom had attained twenty-one, the two others being still infants. The family intended to continue to live in Canada, and the children had been brought up as Canadians. An application was made to the court under s. 1 of the Variation of Trusts Act, 1958*, for the approval of an arrangement whereby, in effect, the settlement trusts would be replaced by similar trusts of a Canadian settlement and a Canadian trust corporation would become trustee and would hold the settled fund on the trusts of the Canadian settlement freed and discharged from the trusts of the original marriage settlement. The proposed new settlement, drafted by a Canadian lawyer, did not exactly replace the husband's protective life interest, as the law of Quebec did not recognise protective trusts, but the settlement would confer on the husband a life interest and it also included a clause (cl. 7†) preventing anticipation, assignment and seizure by creditors of the interests of all beneficiaries.

C

D

E

F

Held: (i) the court had jurisdiction under s. 1 of the Variation of Trusts Act, 1958, to approve an arrangement such as that proposed, which involved the substitution for an English settlement of a settlement to be administered by foreign law, since the enactment conferred jurisdiction to approve an arrangement which involved the revocation of all the trusts of an English settlement (see p. 139, letter G, post); moreover, although the court would be unwilling to appoint a foreign trustee of an English trust, more particularly if the trust property were to be taken out of the jurisdiction, that was not asked in the present case as the foreign trustee would be trustee of a foreign settlement governed by the law of the country where the trustee was (see p. 140, letter E, post).

G

H

Re Liddiard ((1880), 14 Ch.D. 310) considered.

(ii) it would be for the general advantage of the beneficiaries in the present case to approve the proposed arrangement and, accordingly, the court would approve the arrangement in principle, but the provisions of cl. 7 of the proposed Canadian settlement would be referred for further consideration with a view either to drafting a clause which would correspond more nearly with the protective trust imposed by the English settlement only on the husband's life interest than did the draft cl. 7, which apparently restricted also the interests of those who might ultimately become entitled to capital, or to satisfying the court that the proposed cl. 7

I

* The relevant terms of s. 1 are "(1) Where property . . . is held on trusts arising . . . under any . . . settlement . . . the court may if it thinks fit by order approve . . . any arrangement . . . varying or revoking all or any of the trusts . . ."

† The terms of cl. 7 are set out at p. 138, letter G, post.

A would really be advantageous to those interested in capital (see p. 140, letter G, and p. 139, letter I, to p. 140, letter B, post).

SEMBLE: if the application had been merely to vary the trusts of an English settlement, there would not be jurisdiction so to vary them that they would fall to be administered by some other law (see p. 139, letter F, post).

B [As to appointment of person residing outside jurisdiction as trustee, see 33 HALSBURY'S LAWS (2nd Edn.) 182, para. 321; and for cases on the subject, see 43 DIGEST 687, 1186-1192.

For the Variation of Trusts Act, 1958, s. 1, see 38 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 1130.]

Case referred to:

C Liddiard, Re, (1880), 14 Ch.D. 310; 49 L.J.Ch. 373; 42 L.T. 621; 43 Digest 687, 1192.

Adjourned Summons.

This was an application by originating summons dated Jan. 26, 1960, by Walter Murray, Mildred Margaret Boutflower Murray and Jill Elizabeth Murray who were beneficially interested under the trusts of a marriage settlement dated D Mar. 6, 1931, made between Mildred Margaret Boutflower Seale and Walter Murray and the Midland Bank Executor and Trustee Co., Ltd. The application was for an arrangement to be approved by the court pursuant to s. 1 of the Variation of Trusts Act, 1958, on behalf of the infant respondents and any unborn person who might become interested under the trusts and any person in respect of any discretionary interest of his under protective trusts which might E affect the life interest under the settlement of Walter Murray. The proposed terms of the arrangement were (a) that the Chartered Trust Co. (a Canadian corporation) might be appointed trustee of the settlement in place of the Midland Bank Executor and Trustee Co., Ltd., and (b) that as from such appointment and subject as thereinafter provided the trustees of the settlement might transfer the funds comprised in the settlement (or the proceeds of sale thereof) to the F trustees of a new settlement to be constituted for that purpose under the law of the Province of Quebec to be held on the trusts of the new settlement freed and discharged from the trusts of the existing settlement, provided that (i) the trustees of the new settlement should be the Chartered Trust Co. or such other person as might be agreed by the applicants; (ii) the new settlement should substantially be in the form of a draft settlement which had been prepared and G was exhibited to an affidavit in the proceedings. The respondents were Deborah Susan Murray and John Alexander Robert Murray, infants, both of whom were beneficially interested under the settlement, and the Midland Bank Executor and Trustee Co., Ltd., trustee of the settlement. The facts appear in the judgment.

J. W. Brunyate for the applicants.

H J. A. Brightman, Q.C., for the trustee.

P. G. Clough for the infant respondents.

BUCKLEY, J.: This is an application made under the Variation of Trusts Act, 1958, and the Trustee Act, 1925, in the matter of the marriage settlement of a lady and gentleman who at the date of their marriage in 1931 were living and domiciled in this country but who have since emigrated to the Province of I Quebec in Canada, where they are now living and have their domicil. They have three children, one of whom has attained twenty-one years of age and two of whom are still infants. The beneficial trusts of the settlement stated shortly are that the trust fund is held on trust for the wife during her life and after her death on protective trusts for the husband during the remainder of his life and after the death of the survivor of them in trust for those of the children and the remoter issue of the marriage as the husband and the wife jointly appoint and in default and subject to any such appointment for such of the children and issue of the marriage as the survivor of the husband and wife appoints by deed or will and in default and subject to any appointment on trust for the children of the marriage who being male attain the age of twenty-one or being female attain that age or marry if more than one in equal shares subject to the usual hotchpot provisions. One child has already attained twenty-one years of age so I need not consider anything beyond the trusts that I have mentioned. A

The evidence discloses that the present state of affairs gives rise to various practical difficulties and financial disadvantages for those interested under the settlement. The income which the wife derives under the settlement from some Canadian investments has for some years suffered double taxation. The fact that the trustee is English has prevented double taxation relief being available. The parties are advised that on the wife's death English death duties will be payable not only on settled property which may then be in England but also on Canadian investments, whereas English death duties would not be payable on Canadian investments if the settlement were Canadian. It is said that other disadvantages due to double taxation and exchange control restrictions may arise in the future so long as the settlement is English and that variations in exchange rates might make it unfortunate that some of the property is invested in England. It is said that it would be more convenient that the trustees should be in Canada so that the beneficiaries may have easy access to them. B C D

In those circumstances, a Canadian lawyer has been asked to prepare a draft of a settlement in terms appropriate to the law of Quebec bearing the closest possible similarity to the trusts of the original settlement. That has been done and such a draft is in evidence before me. The Quebec lawyer who prepared the draft deposes to the fact that before doing so he was supplied with a copy of the English settlement and that his instructions were so to draft the Canadian settlement that it would not alter the beneficial interests of the persons interested unless the law of Quebec should make such alterations necessary. He says that the draft carries out those instructions to the best of his ability and the settlement which he has prepared will not alter the beneficial interests except in the following respects. The law of Quebec does not recognise protective trusts and it has therefore been necessary to substitute a straightforward life interest in favour of the husband in reversion expectant on the death of his wife for the protected life interest which he is given by the English settlement; but the Canadian settlement contains a clause in the following terms: E F

> "7. That all and any sums received, paid or to be paid herein or hereunder, whether in capital or revenue, shall be and remain the private and separate property of the beneficiaries under this trust agreement and shall not fall into any community of property or be subject to any of the matrimonial rights of the consorts of such beneficiaries and shall not be liable for obligations of any such consorts or community. All sums received, paid or to be paid herein or hereunder are also intended as an alimentary pension for such beneficiaries and shall not be subject to seizure for payment of any debts of the said beneficiaries or their representatives. Any sums to be paid under this trust agreement to the husband shall not be capable of being anticipated or assigned without the consent of the party of the second part, trustee. The foregoing provisions are not intended to affect the right hereinabove granted to the party of the second part, trustee to hypothecate, pledge or otherwise affect voluntarily any of the trust assets, nor to affect the rights of the beneficiaries herein after delivery to them of their share in the trust assets of hypothecating, pledging or otherwise affecting voluntarily their said shares of such trust assets."

G H I

The Canadian lawyer says, with regard to that clause, that the interest of the husband as well as the interests of the other persons should be subject to the provisions of that clause which prevent, inter alia, seizure of such interests by creditors. He says the clause in question is usually included in settlements

A under the law of Quebec and that in his opinion it is desirable in the interests of the beneficiaries to include it in the Canadian settlement. The Canadian settlement is drawn on the footing that the Chartered Trust Co., which is a corporate body incorporated according to the law of the Province of Ontario, will become or be the trustee of the Canadian settlement and that company has accorded its consent in writing to be trustee of the English settlement and has indicated what B fees it will require to be paid in its capacity as trustee of the Canadian settlement. It is proposed by the originating summons that the court should approve the arrangement set out in the schedule to the summons which arrangement provides first of all that the Chartered Trust Co. be appointed trustee of the English settlement in place of the Midland Bank Executor and Trustee Co., Ltd., the present trustee of that settlement. The arrangement then provides that as from C such appointment and subject as thereinafter provided the trustees of the settlement may transfer the funds in the settlement or the proceeds of sale thereof to be held on the trusts of a new settlement to be constituted under the law of the Province of Quebec free and discharged from the trusts of the existing settlement and it provides that the new settlement shall be in substantially the form of the draft settlement which I have mentioned. The summons asks further that the D Chartered Trust Co. may be appointed trustee of the English settlement and that it shall then be authorised to treat the settled property as held by itself, not as trustee of the English settlement, but as trustee of the new Canadian settlement. The arrangement does suggest that the trustees of the English settlement may transfer the funds in the settlement to the trustees of the new settlement so the language there may require some alteration. The substance of the scheme is E clear. Under s. 1 of the Variation of Trusts Act, 1958, the court has jurisdiction where property is held on trust under any will or settlement or other disposition to approve on behalf of the various classes of persons mentioned in the section any arrangement varying or revoking all or any of the trusts or enlarging the powers of the trustees of managing or administering any of the property subject to the trust. So far as I am aware this is the first case in which that jurisdiction F has been invoked for the purpose of converting an English trust into a trust governed by some other system of law. If it were merely a question of varying the trusts, it seems to me that there might be difficulty in saying that this court could properly vary the trusts under the settlement by substituting trusts of a kind which would fall to be administered by some other law; but, having regard to the fact that the court can approve an arrangement which revokes all the G trusts of the settlement, it seems to be clear that the court must have jurisdiction to approve an arrangement which in effect does revoke all the trusts of the English settlement in the event of the trust property becoming subject to the trusts of a settlement which would be recognised and enforced in some other jurisdiction. It seems to me that I have jurisdiction to approve a scheme on the lines of the scheme I am asked to approve in the present case.

H The evidence establishes to my satisfaction that the husband and the wife intend to continue to live in Canada, that their children who are living in Canada and have been brought up as Canadians are likely to continue to live in Canada and that it will be for the general advantage of all the beneficiaries that the administrative difficulties and the difficulties of other kinds to which I have referred, which result from the fact that it is an English settlement and the I beneficiaries all reside in Canada, should be brought to an end; and I am satisfied that the arrangement is one of a kind which is sensible and advantageous for all concerned.

The only aspect about which I feel some doubt is whether it is right for me to approve the transfer of this fund into Canadian trusts which contain quite such stringent provisions against anticipation as are contained in cl. 7 of the draft Canadian settlement which I have read, because whereas under the English settlement any child or remoter issue of the husband and wife who became entitled to a vested interest in reversion in any part of the capital could assign or deal with that interest in any way in which he thought fit, it appears from cl. 7 of the Canadian draft as though by that clause he would be deprived of that right unless he obtained the consent of the trustees, and before I finally part with the matter I would like to be satisfied that that is a provision which, under Canadian law, will really be advantageous to persons who may ultimately become entitled to the capital of this trust or whether the clause may not be modified in some way which will maintain the comparison between the protective trust which is imposed on the husband by the English settlement without restricting the interests of the persons who may ultimately become entitled to capital.

I have been referred to a number of authorities, all decided long before the Variation of Trusts Act, 1958, was thought of, dealing with the question whether it is right, and if so in what circumstances, to appoint foreign trustees of an English trust. I find some comfort for the course I am proposing to adopt in a case dealt with by MALINS, V.-C.: Re Liddiard (1). That was a case under the will of an English testator and the residue of his estate was divisible among his children and issue, some of whom were infants. All of them were resident in Australia and an application was made to the court to appoint two persons as trustees who were resident in Australia and who would sell the English investments and invest the money in Australia. MALINS, V.-C., thought that was a proper order to make and he made it. The facts of that case were not unlike the present. It is easier for me to make the present order than it was for MALINS, V.-C., to make the order in Re Liddiard (1) because the trust in that case remained an English one. It was an English trust of which the trustees and all the assets were proposed to be situate outside the jurisdiction and it is, in general, the attitude of this court that, in the case of an English trust, the court is unwilling to appoint trustees in such a way that all the trustees will be out of the jurisdiction, more particularly if the property is likely to be taken out of the jurisdiction. In the present case I am asked to do something which will not result in that rather unsatisfactory state of affairs because if the arrangement is carried into effect the English trusts will cease to have any operative effect, because all the funds will become free from the trusts of that settlement and will be caught by the trusts of the Canadian settlement. The assets will, presumably, be transferred to Canada, the trustee will be in Canada and the proper court for enforcing the trust will be the competent court in Quebec, so there will not be that divorce of the assets and the trustees from the jurisdiction to enforce the trusts which would have resulted from what was done in Re Liddiard (1). I am therefore prepared in principle to approve the arrangement subject to further investigation about cl. 7 in the proposed Canadian settlement and I shall have to ask the parties to come back and mention the matter to me again when they have discussed it further with their Canadian advisers. Any order that I make will have to be postdated but I am prepared to appoint the Chartered Trust Co. trustee of the English settlement.

[The arrangement as approved by the court provided (apart from the variation (2) of cl. 7 which is not included in the following extract) as follows:

" The term of the said settlement shall be varied by adding thereto the following provision—

" The Chartered Trust Company as trustee of the settlement may withdraw from the settlement the funds comprised therein and re-settle such funds or the proceeds of sale thereof upon the trust of a new settlement to be constituted

(1) (1880), 14 Ch.D. 310.

(2) The draft of cl. 7 (see p. 138, letter G, ante) was modified, prior to approval of the minutes of the order on this application, by substituting for the words " Any sums to be paid under this trust agreement, in capital or revenue shall not be capable of being anticipated or assigned without the consent of the party of the second part trustee ", the words, " Any sums to be paid under this trust agreement to the husband shall not be capable of being anticipated or assigned without the consent of the party of the second part trustee."

A for that purpose under the law of the Province of Quebec to the intent that the same shall be held on the trust of the new settlement freed and discharged from the trusts of the existing settlement, such new settlement being a settlement of which the Chartered Trust Company shall be trustee and being in the form of a draft . . . [which was identified] . . . with the following alterations, namely . . . (ii) such alterations as may be requisite by reason of the fact that the Char-
B tered Trust Company and not the Midland Bank Executor & Trustee Company Limited will be the trustee of the original settlement at the date of the constitution of the new settlement."

The order contained an appointment by the court of the Chartered Trust Co. as new trustee of the original marriage settlement in substitution for the Midland Bank Executor and Trustee Co., Ltd.]

C Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Merrimans, agents for Barton, Thompson & Hitchens, Bournemouth (for all parties).

[Reported by JENIFER SANDELL, Barrister-at-Law.]

D

EDGWARE TRUST, LTD. v. LAWRENCE.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION (Diplock, J.), May 30, 31, June 1, 1961.]

Moneylender—Memorandum—Omitted terms—Reference therein to promissory note which contained the omitted words—Not permissible to look at promissory note unless copy thereof delivered or sent to borrower—Moneylenders Act,
E 1927 (17 & 18 Geo. 5 c. 21), s. 6 (2).

The memorandum of a moneylenders' contract, having referred to the promissory note given by the borrower in favour of the moneylenders, purported to set out the terms of a default clause in the promissory note. The terms of the default clause as printed in the promissory note were clear but as printed in the memorandum were unintelligible because certain
F words were omitted. Accordingly the court found that the memorandum did not therefore contain all the terms of the contract as required by s. 6 (2)* of the Moneylenders Act, 1927. The borrower was given a copy of the memorandum in accordance with the Act of 1927 but was not given a copy of the promissory note. In an action by the moneylenders on the promissory note the borrower relied on the failure to comply with s. 6 (2) of G the Act of 1927.

Held: where a memorandum did not itself contain all the terms of the moneylenders' contract but referred to another document it was not permissible to ascertain omitted terms by looking at the other document unless a copy of that document was left with the borrower; accordingly, in the present case, the promissory note could not be looked at to ascertain the H terms of the default clause and the defence under s. 6 (2) succeeded.

Dictum of DU PARCQ, L.J., in Mills Conduit Investments, Ltd. v. Tattersall ([1940] 1 All E.R. at p. 283) applied.

Dicta of GREER, L.J., in Reading Trust, Ltd. v. Spero ([1929] All E.R. Rep. at p. 411) considered.

[As to the necessity for a note or memorandum of a moneylenders' contract
I and as to the form of the note or memorandum, see 27 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 31-33, paras. 49, 50; and for cases on the subject, see DIGEST Supplements.

For the Moneylenders Act, 1927, s. 6, see 16 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 386.]

Cases referred to:

Dunn Trust, Ltd. v. Feetham, [1935] All E.R. Rep. 280; [1936] 1 K.B. 22; 105 L.J.K.B. 52; 154 L.T. 53; Digest Supp.

---

* For the relevant terms of s. 6, see footnote (1), p. 142, post.

Kent Trust, Ltd. v. Cohen, [1946] 2 All E.R. 273; [1946] K.B. 584; [1947] L.J.R. 106; 175 L.T. 129; 2nd Digest Supp. A

Mills Conduit Investments, Ltd. v. Tattersall, [1940] 1 All E.R. 281; 162 L.T. 381; 2nd Digest Supp.

Reading Trust, Ltd. v. Spero, [1929] All E.R. Rep. 405; [1930] 1 K.B. 492; 99 L.J.K.B. 186; 142 L.T. 361; Digest Supp.

Action. B

This was a claim by moneylenders, the plaintiffs, on three promissory notes signed by the defendant, for £2,000 with interest at sixty per cent. per annum on Dec. 3, 1958, for £900 at sixty per cent. per annum on May 4, 1959, and for £1,250 at sixty per cent. per annum on July 6, 1959. The defendant pleaded that the contracts were unenforceable on the ground that the plaintiffs were in breach of s. 6 of the Moneylenders Act, 1927, in failing to include in the notes or memoranda of the contracts all the terms of the contracts, in particular, the terms of a default clause and, by way of counterclaim, sought a declaration that the rate of interest charged was excessive and the transactions were harsh and unconscionable and asked for an order to re-open the three transactions sued on and also six earlier transactions. By their reply the plaintiffs denied that the interest charged on any of the contracts was excessive or that any of the transactions was harsh or unconscionable. This report deals solely with the defence raised under s. 6 of the Act of 1927. The terms of the promissory notes and of the memoranda thereof are set out in the judgment. The material provisions of s. 6 of the Moneylenders Act, 1927, are printed in footnote (1) infra. C D

M. A. B. King-Hamilton, Q.C., and A. L. Figgis for the plaintiffs. E
Desmond Ackner, Q.C., for the defendant.

DIPLOCK, J., stated the facts and continued: I deal first with the defence under s. 6 of the Moneylenders Act, 1927 (1). I find this point as difficult as it is unattractive. The promissory note was in the following terms—and they were all in the same form, so I will take the promissory note for £2,000 of Dec. 3, 1958: F

> " I, Terence Patrick Lawrence of [the address given] promise to pay the Edgware Trust, Ltd. at No. 35 South Audley Street, W.1 or at such other place as you may direct the sum of £2,000 together with interest at the rate of sixty per cent. per annum by nine consecutive monthly instalments of £100 each the first of such instalments commencing on Jan. 15, 1959 and the balance on the tenth month." G

Then comes an important default clause:

> " and in the event of default in payment of any instalment or part thereof then the Edgware Trust, Ltd. shall be at liberty at their option to demand payment of the whole of the balance with interest as aforesaid to the date of such demand thereupon the whole of the said balance with interest as aforesaid shall immediately become due and payable and such balance of the said sum and interest so remaining due as aforesaid and whether in respect of principal or interest shall bear simple interest on that sum at the rate of £60 per cent. per annum from the date of such demand until payment and until such demand to continue to pay the said monthly instalments and all moneys paid on account of the said advance and interest shall be applied firstly in payment of the interest due to that date and then to principal." H I

(1) Section 6 of the Moneylenders Act, 1927, provides, so far as is material, as follows: " (1) No contract for the repayment by a borrower of money lent to him . . . by a moneylender after the commencement of this Act or for the payment by him of interest on money so lent . . . shall be enforceable, unless a note or memorandum in writing of the contract be made and signed personally by the borrower, and unless a copy thereof be delivered or sent to the borrower within seven days of the making of the contract . . . " (2) The note or memorandum aforesaid shall contain all the terms of the contract. . "

A Although the draftsmanship is not elegant, the terms of the contract, and in particular the terms of the default clause, are, I think, clear.

The memorandum, however, a copy of which was sent to the defendant, does not set out the terms of the promissory note in relation, in particular, to the default clause. An explanation has been given that in 1948 a re-print was made of the then existing clause as a result of which a line was left out. I do not think B that the circumstances in which the mistake arose really affect my judgment. This is what the memorandum said in relation to the default clause. Having referred to the promissory note, it goes on:

> " and in the event of default in payment of any instalment or part thereof then the said Edgware Trust, Ltd. shall be at liberty at their option to demand payment of the whole of the balance of the said sum of £2,000 remaining unpaid and interest at the rate aforesaid whether in respect of principal or interest shall bear simple interest on that sum at the rate of £60 per cent. per annum from the date of such demand until payment and until such demand continue to pay the said monthly instalments."

C

That wording seems to me to be unintelligible, and I find it impossible to put D any clear meaning on it. The relevant words are:

> " in the event of default . . . shall be at liberty at their option to demand payment of the whole of the balance of the said sum of £2,000 remaining unpaid and interest at the rate aforesaid whether in respect of principal or interest shall bear simple interest on that sum at the rate of £60 per cent. per annum from the date of such demand until payment and until such demand continue to pay the said monthly instalments."

E

What is the sum on which simple interest shall be borne? In the earlier part it says: " interest at the rate aforesaid " To what date is that interest to be calculated? It follows the words: " the balance of the said sum of £2,000 remaining unpaid and interest at the rate aforesaid ". Is it interest agreed to be F paid but not yet due and remaining unpaid, as it is in the case of one of the earlier loans for £500? I find the words in the memorandum by themselves unintelligible, and certainly as not bearing the meaning which is clearly expressed in the promissory note. If, therefore, I must read them by themselves, it seems to me that the note or memorandum does not contain all the terms of the contract, because it does not contain the very important terms of the default clause, a G clause which appears to have been misread by the person who drafted, and by Mr. Genese (2) who swore, the affidavit in support of the specially indorsed writ in this action.

Counsel for the plaintiffs, while arguing that the clause in the memorandum is intelligible if not wholly clear, says that if there is any difficulty about it I am entitled to look at the promissory note which is referred to in the memorandum; H and in support of that proposition he relies on the observations of SCRUTTON, L.J., and in particular GREER, L.J., in Reading Trust, Ltd. v. Spero (3). The question in that case was whether the promissory note might be identified as being the promissory note mentioned in the note or memorandum of the contract. But in the course of his judgment GREER, L.J., says (4):

> " Once the form of the promissory note is identified, it can, in my judgment, be treated as part of the memorandum of contract, and the memorandum can then be read as if it contained the words, ' on the security of a promissory note in the following form '. The words of s. 6 are that, without such a note, no contract of loan shall be enforceable. They are analogous to the words of the Statute of Frauds and the Sale of Goods Act [, 1893]."

I

(2) The plaintiffs' representative who dealt with the defendant.
(3) [1929] All E.R. Rep. 405; [1930] 1 K.B. 492.
(4) [1929] All E.R. Rep. at p. 411; [1930] 1 K.B. at p. 507.

He then refers to the cases under those statutes and continues (5): A

> "Following the same line of reasoning, I think that if a memorandum of a contract of loan states that the loan is granted on the security of a promissory note, it may be proved by oral evidence that at the time of the loan there was in existence a form of promissory note ready for signature, and that when this evidence is given, the court can read the two documents together as a complete memorandum of the contract of loan." B

Those observations were obiter in that particular case.

Counsel for the plaintiffs relies also on the judgment of DU PARCQ, L.J. (sitting as a judge of the King's Bench Division) in Mills Conduit Investments, Ltd. v. Tattersall (6). The learned lord justice said:

> "One may, I think, incorporate the terms of one document by reference into the memorandum, provided that one gives the borrower a copy of the document, so incorporated with the copy of the memorandum. One may incorporate, for instance, the terms of a bill of sale . . ." C

It seems to me that plainly DU PARCQ, L.J., in that case was contemplating that a copy of the promissory note was handed to the borrower and available for reference by him. There are subsequent cases (7), to which I need not refer, where that practice and DU PARCQ, L.J.'s decision were followed. D

In my view (and I refer in passing to Dunn Trust, Ltd. v. Feetham (8) and Kent Trust, Ltd. v. Cohen (9)), the memorandum itself must contain all the terms of the contract, and where, as in this case, in my view, the memorandum does not contain the important provisions of the default clause, it is not permissible for me to look at the promissory note to ascertain what the meaning of those unintelligible words was meant to be unless a copy of the promissory note was left with the borrower. It seems to me that the whole purpose of s. 6 of the Act of 1927, requiring a note or memorandum in writing of the contract to be made and signed personally by the borrower, and a copy delivered or sent to the borrower within seven days of the contract, providing that unless this is done the contract shall not be enforceable, and that the note or memorandum shall contain all the terms of the contract, would be defeated unless the document in the possession of the borrower contained all the terms of the contract. I find, therefore, with considerable reluctance, because the point is a technical one, that the defence on these grounds succeeds. E F

[HIS LORDSHIP then dealt with the counterclaim and having reviewed the evidence held that the appropriate rate of interest on the loans made prior to February, 1959, would be forty per cent. per annum and on the loans made after that date, thirty per cent. per annum, and HIS LORDSHIP ordered that the six earlier transactions should be re-opened on that basis (the three transactions sued on being unenforceable under s. 6 of the Moneylenders Act, 1927).] G

Judgment for the defendant on the defence and counterclaim. H

Solicitors: M. A. Jacobs & Sons (for the plaintiffs); Walter Burgis & Co. (for the defendant).

[Reported by WENDY SHOCKETT, Barrister-at-Law.]

I

(5) [1929] All E.R. Rep. at p. 411; [1930] 1 K.B. at p. 508.
(6) [1940] 1 All E.R. at p. 283.
(7) See, e.g., Tooke v. Bennett & Co., Ltd., [1939] 4 All E.R. 200; and Allighan v. London and Westminster Loan and Discount Co., Ltd., [1940] 3 All E.R. 530, where a bill of sale was attached to the note or memorandum. See also dicta of LORD JAMIESON in George Shaw, Ltd. v. Duffy, 1943 S.C. at pp. 360, 361.
(8) [1935] All E.R. Rep. 280; [1936] 1 K.B. 22.
(9) [1946] 2 All E.R. 273: [1946] K.B. 584.

A

YEOMAN CREDIT, LTD. v. WARAGOWSKI.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Ormerod, Upjohn and Davies, L.JJ.), June 27, 1961.]

Hire-Purchase—Damages for breach of contract—Hirer's breach by not paying instalments—Goods re-sold by owners—Hirer's option to determine agreement not exercised—Measure of damages.

B

Under a hire-purchase agreement the total hire-purchase price of the vehicle hired thereunder was £434 7s., being £72 cash deposit plus thirty-six monthly rentals each of £10 0s. 9d., plus £1 payable if the hirer exercised his option to purchase the vehicle. The cash price, which the owners had paid a dealer for the vehicle, was £360. The hirer paid the £72 deposit, but did not make any further payment. The agreement gave the hirer an express option, which he did not exercise, to determine the agreement by returning the vehicle. Six months after the agreement had been made, the owners terminated the hiring and re-took possession of the vehicle, which they later sold for £205, the best price that they could reasonably get. Clause 7 of the agreement provided that "Should the hiring be terminated by the hirer or the owner then . . . the hirer shall forthwith pay to the owner damages for breach hereof (if any) and either (a) such further sum as with the total already paid by the hirer by way of first payment and rentals shall equal one-half of the hire-purchase price as agreed compensation for depreciation of the goods or at the option of the owner (b) the amount of the rentals and other moneys then already due hereunder together with such further sums as would if the hiring had not been terminated have been payable in respect of rent during the period (if any) between the termination of the hiring hereunder and the return of the goods to the owner." In an action by the owner for the amount of rentals in arrear (claimed pursuant to cl. 7 (b) of the agreement) and for damages for breach of contract the owner recovered judgment for £60 4s. 6d. arrears of rentals and damages assessed at £96 2s. 6d., viz., the difference between £433 7s. (the hire-purchase price less the £1) and £337 4s. 6d. (the sum of £72 deposit, the £205 re-sale price and £60 4s. 6d. arrears of rentals). On appeal by the hirer.

C

D

E

F

Held: (i) damages were recoverable for breach of the agreement, the owner's remedy not being merely one for recovery of money not paid, nor being a claim for depreciation, but lying in damages for breach of contract by the hirer.

G

(ii) the amount of the damages was rightly assessed.

Appeal dismissed.

[As to the owner's right to damages on determination or repudiation of a hire-purchase agreement, see 19 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 550, para. 891; and for cases on the subject, see 17 DIGEST (Repl.) 154, 155, 522, 523.]

H

Cases referred to:

Cooden Engineering Co., Ltd. v. Stanford, [1952] 2 All E.R. 915; [1953] 1 Q.B. 86; 17 Digest (Repl.) 154, 523.

Elsey & Co., Ltd. v. Hyde, (1926), JONES & PROUDFOOT'S NOTES ON HIRE-PURCHASE LAW (2nd Edn.), p. 107.

I

Appeal.

The defendant hirer, who had entered into an agreement with the plaintiff finance company, the owners of a motor vehicle, for the hire-purchase of that vehicle, appealed against an assessment of the damages for breach of the agreement, the damages being assessed by Master LAWRENCE on Feb. 15, 1960, at £96 2s. 6d. The facts are stated in the judgment of DAVIES. L.J.

M. Mann for the hirer.

J. Lloyd-Eley for the owners, was not called on.

DAVIES, L.J., delivered the first judgment at the request of ORMEROD, L.J.: The circumstances giving rise to the case can be very shortly stated. The plaintiffs are a well-known hire-purchase finance company. On Jan. 19, 1959, a hire-purchase agreement was entered into between the parties for the hire of a Thames Ford van. The owners had, according to the learned master's finding, paid to the dealer the agreed cash price of £360. The detailed figures of the transaction appear on the face of the photostatic copy of the hire-purchase agreement that we have seen, and it is sufficient for the purposes of this judgment to say that the total hire-purchase price was a sum of £434 7s. That was made up of a cash deposit of £72, thirty-six monthly instalments of £10 0s. 9d., commencing on Feb. 6, 1959, and the usual £1 if the hirer exercised the option to purchase at the end of the hiring if it so long lasted. The defendant hirer paid the initial deposit of £72 and, for reasons that we have not been told, paid not a penny more. The owners, as they were entitled to under the agreement, terminated the hiring on July 18, 1959, and re-took possession of the vehicle on July 21, 1959, and eventually sold it for the sum of £205, which the learned master has found—and no complaint whatsoever is made of this finding—was the best price that in all the circumstances they could reasonably get.

That having been done, the owners brought an action in the Queen's Bench Division against the hirer under cl. 7 of the hire-purchase agreement. I bear in mind that by cl. 5, as in all these agreements, the hirer is given expressly the option at any time to determine the hiring by returning, at his own risk and cost, the goods in good condition and repair to the owner at such address as the owner may appoint. Clause 7 says:

> "Should the hiring be terminated by the hirer or the owner then (subject to the provisions of cl. 11 hereof) [which I think are not material to the present case] the hirer shall forthwith pay to the owner damages for breach hereof (if any) and either (a) such further sum as with the total already paid by the hirer by way of first payment and rentals shall equal one-half of the hire-purchase price as agreed compensation for depreciation of the goods or at the option of the owner (b) the amount of the rentals and other moneys then already due hereunder together with such further sums as would if the hiring had not been terminated have been payable in respect of rent during the period (if any) between the termination of the hiring hereunder and the return of the goods to the owner."

In fact what the owners, the plaintiffs, chose to sue for in this action was the amount of the rentals due up to July 6, 1959, a total of £60 4s. 6d.; that is to say they proceeded under para. (b) of cl. 7 of the agreement and elected not to go under para. (a) of the agreement, which provides, as I have said, for a claim for compensation for depreciation at a sum to be ascertained according to a scale, and in addition they claimed under the main part of cl. 7 damages for breach of contract. On Dec. 30. 1959, Master GRUNDY gave judgment for the owners for the sum of £60 4s. 6d., the arrears of monthly instalments due; there was no dispute by the hirer as to his liability for that; and also gave judgment for the owners for damages to be assessed, and the order of Master LAWRENCE on that assessment, on Feb. 15, 1960, was as I have already said, that the damages should be £96 2s. 6d. As I understand the calculation of the learned master, he arrived at that figure in this way: he took not the full hire-purchase price but the hire-purchase price less the £1 at £433 7s., he deducted from that the £72 which was the cash deposit, the £205 which was the sum that the car fetched when it was sold and the £60 4s. 6d. which was the amount of instalments for which the owners had recovered judgment against the hirer, the answer was the figure of £96 2s. 6d., and that sum he awarded for damages for breach of contract.

Counsel for the hirer has argued that the owners failed to show any damage at all and that they were not entitled to recover anything. As I understand his

A contention, though it is put in several different ways in the notice of appeal, it really amounts to two points. The first point is that this claim for damages for breach of contract is really a claim for damages for the non-payment of money, and in accordance with well-known principles the remedy for non-payment of money in the ordinary way is not damages but a judgment for the money that was not paid. In that connexion counsel referred us to some observations of B SALTER, J., in an unreported case in the Divisional Court of the Queen's Bench Division (1) which is referred to in a judgment of JENKINS, L.J., in Cooden Engineering Co., Ltd. v. Stanford (2). However, I am bound to say that, as is apparent if one looks at the relevant clause that was under consideration in the Divisional Court there (3) the hirer undertook to pay the owners

C

> ". . . 'such further sum as with the total amount previously paid under cll. 1 and 2 hereof [the deposit and instalments] will equal the sum of £25—by way of compensation for depreciation of the said article '."

JENKINS, L.J., points out expressly (4) the importance of those words in that case. I do not feel that I can derive any assistance in the decision of this case from D that authority. It seems to me that the circumstances here are entirely different from a case where there has been a failure of an obligation to pay money. This was not merely the failure of an obligation to pay money. The hirer had agreed to hire this vehicle, and, subject to his right to terminate the agreement lawfully by notice when certain circumstances would ensue, to pay the sums that I have E mentioned spreading over a period of three years. Had he carried out that contract, then the total sum of money which the owners would have received would have been £433 7s. He did not carry out that contract and I can really see no answer to the broad proposition contended for by the owners: he agreed over a period of three years to make us payments totalling £433 7s. He chose to pay us nothing apart from the £72. He did not exercise his right to terminate the F contract. He broke it. As a result of that, instead of receiving that sum of money, we have, by selling the car, by suing him and getting judgment, received that sum of money less £96 2s. 6d., and that is our damage. In my judgment that proposition is sound in law, and I can see no way in which it can validly be attacked.

The second ground of counsel's submission for the hirer was this: He points G out correctly that the owners here chose to go under para. (b) of cl. 7 of their agreement and not under para. (a). Paragraph (a) is the one which provides for the ascertainable compensation for depreciation. But, says counsel, this really is a claim for depreciation, and as the owners have chosen not to make the claim which under the contract they might have done for depreciation but H to proceed under the alternative limb of the clause, they cannot by a back door recover damages for depreciation in this case. If in truth and in fact what they were claiming was damages for depreciation, I should have thought there was a great deal of force in that contention; but I am quite satisfied that they are not claiming damages for depreciation. As was said in the course of the argument, although £360 was the cash price, that was a cash price fixed between I the dealer and the hirer, and it may very well be that the car that the hire-purchase finance company paid £360 for was in fact worth only £250 or less. This is not a claim for damages for depreciation; this is a claim for damages for

---

(1) Elsey & Co., Ltd. v. Hyde, (1926), JONES & PROUDFOOT'S NOTES ON HIRE-PURCHASE LAW (2nd Edn.), p. 107.

(2) [1952] 2 All E.R. at p. 922; [1953] 1 Q.B. at p. 99.

(3) See [1952] 2 All E.R. at p. 922; [1953] 1 Q.B. at p. 100.

(4) [1952] 2 All E.R. at p. 924; [1953] 1 Q.B. at p. 102.

breach of contract, and I cannot see that the second submission made by counsel for the hirer has any more force in it than the first. A

In my judgment this appeal fails and must be dismissed.

ORMEROD, L.J.: I agree, and have nothing to add.

UPJOHN, L.J.: I agree. Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Foss, Bilbrough, Plaskitt & Co., agents for Tuckey & Rylatt, St. Albans (for the hirer); Paisner & Co. (for the owners). B

[Reported by HENRY SUMMERFIELD, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

MEEK v. FLEMING.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Holroyd Pearce, Willmer and Pearson, L.JJ.), June 21, 22, 23, 26, 1961.] C

Court of Appeal—New trial—Misleading the court at trial—Concealment of material matter relevant to credit of party—Duty of advocate to court—Action for false imprisonment—Defendant police officer reduced in rank while action pending—Disciplinary charge leading to reduction showing deception of court in relation to another arrest—Concealment of reduction in rank during trial of action—Miscarriage of justice. D

At the trial in October, 1960, of an action for false imprisonment and assault, in which the main question was whether the plaintiff's or the defendant's account of the circumstances of the plaintiff's arrest by the defendant at Trafalgar Square and his detention at a police station on Guy Fawkes night, 1958, was correct, it was concealed from the court that in December, 1959, while the action was pending, the defendant had been reduced in rank from chief inspector to station sergeant on a disciplinary charge of having been party to an arrangement whereby a police constable purported to have arrested a street bookmaker in October, 1959, when the defendant was the officer who in fact made the arrest. This matter was known to the defendant's legal advisers, but neither the plaintiff nor his legal advisers had reason to suspect it. It was deliberately concealed from the court at the trial of the plaintiff's action, which took place before a judge and jury. Judgment in the action was given for the defendant. The plaintiff applied for a new trial. E F

Held: where a party deliberately misled the court in a material matter, e.g., by the concealment of a matter of vital significance even though one that affected the party's credit and did not relate directly to an issue in the action, a judgment obtained or probably obtained by the deception should not be allowed to stand (see p. 154, letter D, p. 156, letter F, p. 156, letter H, post); accordingly the judgment in the present case would be set aside and a new trial would be ordered. G

Dicta of LORD ESHER, M.R., in Praed v. Graham ((1889), 24 Q.B.D. at p. 55), of LORD BUCKMASTER in Hip Foong Hong v. Neotia & Co. ([1918] A.C. at p. 894), and of DENNING, L.J., in Tombling v. Universal Bulb Co., Ltd. ([1951] 2 T.L.R. at p. 297) applied. H

Appeal allowed.

[As to grounds of new trial, see 30 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 475, para. 891; and for cases on the subject, see DIGEST (Practice) 817, 818, 3778-3781.] I

Cases referred to:

Braddock v. Tillotson's Newspapers, Ltd., [1949] 2 All E.R. 306; [1950] 1 K.B. 47; 2nd Digest Supp.

Brown v. Dean, [1910] A.C. 373; 79 L.J.K.B. 690; 102 L.T. 661; Digest (Practice) 602, 2431.

Hip Foong Hong v. Neotia & Co., [1918] A.C. 888; 87 L.J.P.C. 144; 119 L.T. 588; Digest (Practice) 602, 2433.

Ladd v. Marshall, [1954] 3 All E.R. 745; [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1489; 3rd Digest Supp.

A Mohahir Ali v. Ellmore, [1953] 2 All E.R. 1044; 3rd Digest Supp.

Praed v. Graham, (1889), 24 Q.B.D. 53; 59 L.J.Q.B. 230; Digest (Practice) 602, 2426.

R. v. Copestake, Ex p. Wilkinson, [1926] All E.R. Rep. 252; [1927] 1 K.B. 468; 96 L.J.K.B. 65; 136 L.T. 100; 90 J.P. 191; 3 Digest (Repl.) 464, 475.

B Tombling v. Universal Bulb Co., Ltd., [1951] 2 T.L.R. 289; 2nd Digest Supp.

Appeal.

This was an appeal by Alan Sidney Charles Meek, the plaintiff, from a judgment of STREATFEILD, J., sitting with a jury, given on Oct. 21, 1960, dismissing the plaintiff's action for assault and battery, trespass and false imprisonment C against the defendant, Richard Fleming. The defendant was a police officer. On the night of Nov. 5, 1958, he held the rank of chief inspector, and was engaged in controlling a disorderly crowd in Trafalgar Square. The plaintiff, who was a press photographer, was there with his camera for the purpose of taking photographs. At about 9.40 p.m., the defendant arrested the plaintiff and took him in a tender to a police station where he was kept in a cell until about 1.30 a.m. D the following morning when he was released on bail after being charged with obstructing the defendant in the execution of his duty and wilful damage to a police inspector's raincoat. On Nov. 17, 1958, the plaintiff issued the writ in the action. On Dec. 17, at Bow Street Magistrates' Court, the plaintiff was fined £5 on the obstruction charge, and the charge of wilful damage was dismissed. By his statement of claim in the action, dated Mar. 20, 1959, the E plaintiff alleged that he had been arrested by the defendant without reasonable and probable cause, further and alternatively that the defendant had detained the plaintiff or caused him to be detained in custody for an unnecessary and unreasonable length of time and without reasonable or probable cause, and he also alleged assault. The allegations of assault were that on arrival at the police station the defendant assaulted and beat the plaintiff by punching him on his F mouth with closed fist causing him to fall on his knees, that then the defendant (together with other police officers) beat the plaintiff by striking him repeatedly with the fist on the face, head and body, and that then police officers acting under the defendant's direction dragged him by his feet along a corridor and threw him violently into a cell. The plaintiff alleged that as a consequence of these assaults, he sustained personal injuries, including a false tooth broken from G a denture and bruising, and that his trousers were torn beyond repair. By his defence, delivered on May 11, 1959, the defendant alleged that the arrest of the plaintiff was justified and was made in the following circumstances. That the plaintiff on at least four occasions during the course of the evening had obstructed police officers in the course of their duty by interposing himself between them and police tenders which were drawn up in Trafalgar Square for the purpose of H conveying arrested persons to the police station; that the defendant on two occasions had cautioned the plaintiff concerning such obstruction; that on another occasion the defendant had directed police officers to remove the plaintiff from the vicinity of the tenders; and that finally the defendant had arrested the plaintiff on a charge of obstruction and conveyed him in a tender to the police station. The defendant alleged that the plaintiff resisted arrest with such I violence that the defendant was pushed to the ground and other police officers were compelled to come to his assistance. The defendant denied that he had assaulted or beaten the plaintiff, and alleged that no more force than was necessary to effect his arrest and to conduct him to the charge room had been used, and that if violence was shown to the plaintiff by officers acting under the direction of the defendant (as was not admitted), it was done for the protection of the defendant and in the course of a violent assault on him by the plaintiff and in order to avoid a further breach of the peace, using no more force than was reasonably necessary. If the plaintiff sustained any personal injury or damage, the defendant alleged that resulted from the plaintiff's own violence and the necessity to overcome it. A

On Dec. 16, 1959, while the action was pending, the defendant was charged before a disciplinary board with offences involving the deception of a court of law and reduced from the rank of chief inspector to station sergeant. At the trial of the action the plaintiff and the court believed that the defendant was still a chief inspector. The defendant's altered status and the reason for it were known to the defendant's legal advisers, but his leading counsel decided as a matter of policy that they should not be put before the court. B

The facts in relation to the concealment of the alteration in status are stated in the judgment of HOLROYD PEARCE, L.J., at p. 151, post.

Neville Faulks, Q.C., and Sebag Shaw for the plaintiff, the appellant.
Victor Durand, Q.C., and W. W. Stabb for the defendant, the respondent. C

Cur. adv. vult.

June 26. The following judgments were read.

HOLROYD PEARCE, L.J.: The plaintiff appeals from the judgment of STREATFEILD, J., sitting with a jury, given on Oct. 21, 1960, after a trial lasting five days. The jury, after an absence of four hours, gave answers to certain questions on which the learned judge dismissed the action and entered judgment for the defendant. The plaintiff by his notice of appeal complains that the verdict was against the weight of evidence, and makes certain unsubstantial criticisms of the summing-up. These have not been stressed, and in my judgment no criticism can be made of the conduct of the judge or the verdict of the jury on the evidence before them. The real ground of this appeal is stated in the notice of appeal as follows: D E

> " (6) That at the trial the rank and status of the defendant was by implication represented to be that of a chief inspector when in fact between the date of the matters complained of in the action and the date of the trial he had been reduced to the rank of a station sergeant by reason of misconduct and that the credit of the parties was a crucial issue at the trial." F

A further notice of motion for leave to give fresh evidence alleges that on the question of credit the defendant deceived or misled the court, and thereby occasioned a miscarriage of justice.

The plaintiff was claiming damages for assault and wrongful imprisonment in respect of an incident that happened on Guy Fawkes night, Nov. 5, 1958. There was a disorderly crowd in Trafalgar Square, and many police officers had been detailed to deal with it. They made a number of arrests that night, and removed the arrested persons in a police tender to Cannon Row police station where they charged them and then, as a rule, released them. The defendant was the chief inspector at Cannon Row police station, and was actively engaged in helping to control the disorder in Trafalgar Square. The plaintiff, a press photographer with a good record, was there with his camera for the purpose of taking photographs. At about 9.40 p.m. the defendant arrested him on a charge of obstructing the police, and took him in a tender to Cannon Row police station where he was kept in a cell until 1.30 a.m. If the plaintiff's story was correct, the defendant arrested him without proper cause, used considerable violence to him which caused physical injury, and without justification locked him up for some hours instead of charging him straight away and releasing him. If the defendant's story was correct he acted with propriety; he was justified in arresting the plaintiff, and the subsequent violence (which was far less than the plaintiff alleged) was wholly occasioned by the plaintiff's own violence and resistance. G H I

On Nov. 17, 1958, the plaintiff issued the writ in this action. On Dec. 17 he appeared at the magistrates' court and was convicted of obstructing the police and fined £5. Another charge was dismissed. On Dec. 16, 1959, while this action was pending, certain events occurred which at the trial were unknown to

A the plaintiff's advisers, and which they had no reason to know or to suspect. These events were deliberately concealed at the trial by the defendant and his legal advisers. It is on this concealment that the plaintiff relies in this appeal. He asks for a new trial in order that these facts may be proved by fresh evidence. The facts have been agreed between the parties for the purpose of this appeal in the following terms:

B

> "(1) At the date when the defendant gave evidence at the trial of the action, his true rank in the Metropolitan Police Force was station sergeant. (2) The defendant was reduced from the rank of chief inspector to station sergeant on Dec. 16, 1959. (3) On Dec. 16, 1959, the defendant appeared before a disciplinary board on the following charges: (i) Acting in a manner prejudicial to discipline by being a party to an arrangement with [a police constable] whereby that officer purported to have arrested a street bookmaker on Oct. 26, 1959, when in fact you were the officer who made the arrest. (ii) Without good and sufficient cause did omit promptly and diligently to attend to a matter which was your duty as a constable, that is to say having arrested . . . for street betting on Oct. 26, 1959, you did not attend the hearing of the case against him at Thames Metropolitan Magistrates' Court on Oct. 27, 1959. The defendant was reduced in rank to station sergeant on each charge, but on appeal to the commissioner on Dec. 30 the punishment on the second charge was reduced to a reprimand, but there was no variation in the first punishment."

C

D

It is conceded that those facts were known to the defendant's legal advisers and his counsel, and that as a matter of deliberate policy (1) they were not put before the court. A letter written by the defendant's solicitor on Nov. 21, 1960, pending the appeal says:

E

> "The learned Queen's Counsel instructed by me was throughout, as I believe you are aware, in full possession of all the facts relating to my client's past and present status and the reasons for his reduction in rank, and conducted the case in full knowledge of these facts in the manner he felt was consistent with his duty to his client and the court, and he is fully prepared to defend and justify his handling of the case at the proper time if called upon to do so."

F

It having been decided not to reveal these facts, the following things occurred at the trial. The defendant attended the trial not in uniform, but in plain clothes, whereas all the other police witnesses were in uniform. Thus there was no visible sign of the defendant's altered status. He was constantly addressed by his counsel as "Mr.", and not by his rank of sergeant. Counsel tells us that he would so address a sergeant in the normal case. When the defendant entered the witness-box, he was not asked his name and rank in the usual manner. No suspicions were aroused since no one had any reason to suspect. The plaintiff's counsel, however, and the judge frequently addressed the defendant, or referred to him, as "inspector" or "chief inspector", and nothing was done to disabuse them.

G

H

The defendant started his evidence with a brief summary of his career up to the time when he was chief inspector at Cannon Row police station, but no reference was made to his reduction in rank. In cross-examination he was asked:

I

> "Q.—You are a chief inspector, and you have been in the force, you told us, since 1938? A.—Yes, that is true."

That answer was a lie.

> "Q.—You realise, as chief inspector, the importance of the note being

(1) See as regards responsibility for this policy p. 157, letter F, post.

accurate? A.—The importance of it conveying to me what I want to give in evidence." A

He was asked further:

"Let us understand this. You are a chief inspector. How old are you? A.—I am forty-six years of age . . . Q.—I am not asking you whether you took part in the inquiries, but whether you as a responsible and senior adult man—never mind about your being a chief inspector—had no anxiety about this case, no concern or interest? A.—No. I can only repeat I have nothing to fear." B

The learned judge referred to the defendant as "inspector" or "chief inspector Fleming" many times in his summing-up to the jury. It is clear that he reasonably considered that the defendant's rank and status were relevant on credibility in a case where there was oath against oath, and where there was a question of the defendant's conduct in the course of his duty. No doubt he felt what SINGLETON, L.J., expressed in Mohahir Ali v. Ellmore (2) when, in dealing with a matter concerning evidence, he said: C

"It appears to me that that evidence was irrelevant and unnecessary. The fact that a witness who is also a defendant, is a superintendent of Leeds city police force shows that he is of good standing and that he has the confidence of his superior officers." D

Nor was the defendant's counsel prepared to forgo the advantage to be derived from the status in the police force of his witnesses in general. The parties have, fortunately, in the interests of economy, been able to use the reports of the case in "The Times" newspaper. These show that in his opening speech for the defence, counsel stated that the jury had not yet had an opportunity of listening to persons against whom it was at times fashionable to make wild hysterical allegations, but who could not have reached their positions unless they had shown to those who controlled the Metropolitan Police a substantial degree of responsibility. They were not concerned here with some newcomer to the force who had only just finished his course, and was out on the street full of enthusiasm to arrest the first person he could. "The Times" report of the final speech of defendant's counsel shows that he said in reference to the allegations of the plaintiff: E F

"That was un-English, and not what the jury would expect of any police officer who had passed through the sieve, been trained and risen to any rank in the Metropolitan Police." G

He then went on to contrast unfavourably the plaintiff's background in Fleet Street where "words come out in very large letters, and the range of adjectives and description is so wide as to make us callous". I accept from counsel that he was intending to refer to the generality of his seven or eight witnesses, all of whom had attained some rank above that of constable. Nevertheless, such references must inevitably have connoted in the minds of judge and jury a reference to the status of the defendant, who was the leading person in the case, and held (in their erroneous belief) the highest rank of all the witnesses. H

The fact that the defendant's advisers were prepared to act as they did showed the great importance which they attached to the facts concealed. If one leaves aside for the moment any question of ethics, the hazards of such a course were extremely great. With so many police witnesses who might well know the truth (since the defendant's demotion was circulated in police orders) the chance of somebody in cross-examination referring to the defendant by his present rank of sergeant, or letting the truth out in some other way, was not negligible. Had that occurred, or had the plaintiff's counsel known the facts, and elicited them in cross-examination, it seems very unlikely that the jury would accept the I

(2) [1953] 2 All E.R. at p. 1046.

A defendant's case when they found how they had been deceived. Even without knowing the facts, the jury took four hours for their deliberations; and since the plaintiff's evidence was, broadly speaking, that of one against so many, one must, I think, conclude that he did well in the witness-box.

How, then, does the matter stand now that the truth has come out? This court is rightly loth to order a new trial on the grounds of fresh evidence. Interest B reipublicae ut sit finis litium. The cases show that this court has given great weight to that maxim. There would be a constant succession of re-trials if judgments were to be set aside merely because something fresh that might have been material has come to light. In the case of fresh evidence relating to an issue in the case, the court will not order a new trial unless such evidence would probably have an important influence on the result of the case, though such C evidence need not be decisive; R. v. Copestake, Ex p. Wilkinson (3), per SCRUTTON, L.J., and Ladd v. Marshall (4). Such evidence must also, of course, be apparently credible and such that it could not have been obtained with due diligence (ibidem). But in the present case the fresh evidence is agreed, and it could not have been found out with due diligence since there was no reason to suspect it. In the present case, therefore, these two latter considerations are D not in issue.

Where, however, the fresh evidence does not relate directly to an issue, but is merely evidence as to the credibility of an important witness, this court applies a stricter test. It will only allow its admission (if ever) where, per TUCKER, L.J., in Braddock v. Tillotson's Newspapers, Ltd. (5),

> E "the evidence is of such a nature and the circumstances of the case are such that no reasonable jury could be expected to act on the evidence of the witness whose character has been called in question", or, per COHEN, L.J. (6),

> "... where the court is satisfied that the additional evidence must have led a reasonable jury to a different conclusion from that actually arrived at F in the case."

Counsel for the plaintiff claims that the fresh evidence in the present case satisfies even that strict test. Whether that be so it is not necessary for us to decide.

Where the judge and jury have been misled, another principle makes itself felt. LORD ESHER, M.R., in Praed v. Graham (7) said:

> G "If the court can see that the jury in assessing damages have been guilty of misconduct, or made some gross blunder, or have been misled by the speeches of the counsel, those are undoubtedly sufficient grounds for interfering with the verdict ..."

In Tombling v. Universal Bulb Co., Ltd. (8) it was sought to adduce fresh evidence on the ground that there had not been revealed to the judge the fact that a H highly material witness was at the time of the trial serving a prison sentence for a motoring offence. Counsel had allowed him to give in evidence a residential address which was his normal home, and asked him questions which indicated that he had in the past held a responsible position. The appeal was dismissed; but SINGLETON, L.J., described the case as "near the line". DENNING, L.J., there said (9):

> I "This case raises an important question of professional duty. I do not doubt that, if a favourable decision has been obtained by any improper conduct of the successful party, this court will always be ready to grant a

(3) [1926] All E.R. Rep. at p. 257; [1927] 1 K.B. at p. 477.
(4) [1954] 3 All E.R. 745. (5) [1949] 2 All E.R. at p. 311; [1950] 1 K.B. at p. 53.
(6) [1949] 2 All E.R. at p. 312; [1950] 1 K.B. at p. 56.
(7) (1889), 24 Q.B.D. at p. 55. (8) [1951] 2 T.L.R. 289.
(9) [1951] 2 T.L.R. at p. 297.

new trial. The duty of counsel to his client in a civil case—or in defending an accused person—is to make every honest endeavour to succeed. He must not, of course, knowingly mislead the court, either on the facts or on the law, but, short of that, he may put such matters in evidence or omit such others as in his discretion he thinks will be most to the advantage of his client."

I respectfully agree with those words. DENNING, L.J., then discussed the facts of that case, and came to the conclusion that there had been nothing improper in the conduct of the case for the plaintiffs. In that case the failure to reveal was not a premeditated line of conduct. Nor was conviction for a motoring offence so relevant on credibility as the demotion of a chief inspector (who is a party to the case) for an offence which consisted in deceiving a court of law as to the accurate facts relating to an arrest. There is no authority where the facts have been at all similar to those of the present case, but in my judgment the principles on which we should act are clear.

Where a party deliberately misleads the court in a material matter, and that deception has probably tipped the scale in his favour (or even, as I think, where it may reasonably have done so) it would be wrong to allow him to retain the judgment thus unfairly procured. Finis litium is a desirable object, but it must not be sought by so great a sacrifice of justice which is and must remain the supreme object. Moreover, to allow the victor to keep the spoils so unworthily obtained would be an encouragement to such behaviour, and do even greater harm than the multiplication of trials. In every case it must be a question of degree, weighing one principle against the other. In this case it is clear that the judge and jury were misled on an important matter. I appreciate that it is very hard at times for the advocate to see his path clearly between failure in his duty to the court, and failure in his duty to his client. I accept that in the present case the decision to conceal the facts was not made lightly, but after anxious consideration. In my judgment the duty to the court was here unwarrantably subordinated to the duty to the client. It is no less surprising that this should be done when the defendant is a member of the Metropolitan Police Force on whose integrity the public are accustomed to rely.

It was argued that there were several other police witnesses against the plaintiff's story; that although part of the issue depended on the evidence of the parties alone, the greater part of the defence depended on other witnesses than the defendant, and that, therefore, the concealment did not have any substantial result. Since the defendant and his advisers thought fit to take so serious a step they must, in the light of their own intimate knowledge of their case, have regarded the concealment as being of overwhelming importance to their success. Therefore, I am not prepared to countenance their present argument that it may have made no difference to the result.

It was argued that the defendant was justified in that a party need not reveal something to his discredit; but that does not mean that he can by implication falsely pretend (where it is a material matter) to a rank and status that are not his, and, when he knows that the court is so deluded, foster and confirm that delusion by answers such as the defendant gave. Suggestio falsi went hand in hand with suppressio veri. It may well be that it was not so clear in prospect as it is in retrospect how wide the web of deceit would be woven before the verdict came to be given; but in the event it spread over all the evidence of the defendant. It affected the summing-up of the learned judge, and it must have affected the deliberations of the jury. The defendant and his legal advisers, and probably some at least of his witnesses, on the one hand, were aware of the facts, and intent not to reveal them, in order that on the other hand the plaintiff and his counsel and the jury and the judge might remain in ignorance, and that the defendant might be thereby enabled to masquerade as a chief inspector of unblemished reputation enjoying such advantage as that status and character would give

A him at the trial. It would be an intolerable infraction of the principles of justice to allow the defendant to retain a verdict thus obtained. I would accordingly allow the appeal with costs, and order a new trial.

WILLMER, L.J.: I agree. In saying that, I wish to make it clear that not only do I concur in the result, but that I agree with and subscribe to the B reasons which HOLROYD PEARCE, L.J., has so clearly stated.

The course which the defendant took resulted in the learned judge and the jury, as well as the plaintiff and his advisers, being deceived into thinking that the defendant was, and remained, a high-ranking officer of unblemished reputation. In view of the nature of the charges brought against him, the character of the defendant was in my judgment a matter of vital importance for the proper C determination of the case. We now know not only that the defendant has been reduced in rank to station sergeant, but that this was done in consequence of a disciplinary offence which involved the deception of a court of law. This is, therefore, the second occasion on which the defendant's conduct has had the result of deceiving the court. It is in these circumstances that the plaintiff now asks for an order for a new trial, basing himself on the submission that there has D been a miscarriage of justice.

We are not dealing here with an ordinary case of an application to adduce fresh evidence. The plaintiff's contention involves something much more fundamental, and I regard this case as a wholly exceptional one, as was, I think, conceded in argument by counsel for the defendant. The rules which are ordinarily applied where an application is made to adduce further evidence on appeal E are those set out by DENNING, L.J., in Ladd v. Marshall (10). Where the fresh evidence sought to be adduced is directed solely to credit, the rules are even more stringent, as was pointed out by TUCKER, L.J., and COHEN, L.J., in Braddock v. Tillotson's Newspapers, Ltd. (11) in the passages to which HOLROYD PEARCE, L.J., has already referred. These rules are based on the maxim that it is in the public interest that there should be an end to litigation; but in my judgment F the application of this maxim cannot be pressed to the extent of allowing a miscarriage of justice to go uncorrected. The rules relating to the admission of fresh evidence do not apply, e.g., in a case where fraud or surprise is alleged; see per LORD BUCKMASTER in delivering the judgment of the Privy Council in Hip Foong Hong v. Neotia & Co. (12). He there said:

> " In all applications for a new trial the fundamental ground must be that G there has been a miscarriage of justice. If no charge of fraud or surprise is brought forward, it is not sufficient to show that there was further evidence that could have been adduced to support the claim of the losing parties; the applicant must go further and show that the evidence was of such a character that it would, so far as can be foreseen, have formed a determining factor in the result. Such considerations do not apply to questions of surprise, H and still less to questions of fraud. A judgment that is tainted and affected by fraudulent conduct is tainted throughout, and the whole must fail . . ."

In my judgment this is an analogous case, and much the same considerations must apply.

I think that the exceptional nature of the present case becomes clear when regard is had to the features which distinguish it from Tombling v. Universal I Bulb Co., Ltd. (12a). There the application was to adduce further evidence by way of cross-examination of a witness for the plaintiff in respect of matters going to his credit. True, he was an important witness, but failure to disclose his record was only of incidental significance. But here we are concerned with evidence relating to the character of one of the parties to the suit, and it is a case

(10) [1954] 3 All E.R. at p. 748.
(11) [1949] 2 All E.R. at pp. 311, 312; [1950] 1 K.B. at pp. 53, 56.
(12) [1918] A.C. at p. 894.
(12a) [1951] 2 T.L.R. 289.

in which the character of the parties was of peculiarly vital significance, so that failure to disclose the defendant's record amounted in effect to presenting the whole case on a false basis. Next, the matter sought to be proved against the witness in Tombling's case (13) was his conviction for a wholly irrelevant offence, that is to say, a motoring offence. Here the matter sought to be proved against the defendant was an offence involving not only the deception of a court of law, but also a question of police discipline, a matter which, I should have thought, was of crucial importance having regard to the issues to be determined. Lastly, in Tombling's case (13) what was done was not done knowingly to deceive the court; see per DENNING, L.J. (14). Had it been done knowingly, DENNING, L.J., would have regarded it as improper; and it is to be inferred that he would have concurred in the view of SINGLETON, L.J., that a new trial should have been directed.

In the present case there is no doubt that the course taken, which had the effect of deceiving the court, was taken deliberately. Counsel for the defendant has so informed us with complete candour. I accept his assurance that the decision was not taken lightly, but after careful consideration, and in the belief that the course taken was proper in all the circumstances. But for my part I am in no doubt that it was a wrong decision. I would venture to follow the example of SINGLETON, L.J., in Tombling's case (15) in quoting from LORD MACMILLAN on THE ETHICS OF ADVOCACY, at p. 17. This is what LORD MACMILLAN said:

> "In the discharge of his office the advocate has a duty to his client, a duty to his opponent, a duty to the court, a duty to the state and a duty to himself."

It seems to me that the decision which was taken involved insufficient regard being paid to the duty owed to the court and to the plaintiff and his advisers.

The result of the decision that was taken was that the trial proceeded in a way that it should not have done. Where the court has been thus deceived in relation to what I conceive to be a matter of vital significance, I think that it would be a miscarriage of justice to allow a verdict obtained in this way to stand. For these additional reasons, as well as for the reasons already stated by HOLROYD PEARCE, L.J., I agree that this appeal must be allowed.

PEARSON, L.J.: I agree with the judgments which have been delivered. In the reported cases great emphasis has been laid on the need for finality in litigation, and the courts have been unwilling to order a new trial on the ground of fresh evidence having become available unless very stringent conditions were fulfilled; and there is no reported civil case in which a new trial has been ordered on account of fresh evidence not directly relating to an issue in the case, but merely affecting the credit of a witness. Brown v. Dean (16); Hip Foong Hong v. Neotia & Co. (17); R. v. Copestake (18); Braddock v. Tillotson's Newspapers, Ltd. (19); Mohahir Ali v. Ellmore (20); Ladd v. Marshall (21). In the present case the fresh evidence only affects the credit of the defendant, and does not relate directly to any issue in the case. Accordingly it would not be right to order a new trial unless there is some feature of paramount importance outweighing the grave disadvantage of protracting the litigation. In my opinion, however, there is such a feature in the present case.

It was decided, after very careful consideration, that the defendant's case should be conducted in such a way as not to reveal to the judge and jury the fact that the defendant had been demoted from the rank of chief inspector to the rank of station sergeant. Well-devised and effective steps were taken to (13) [1951] 2 T.L.R. 289. (14) [1951] 2 T.L.R. at p. 298.

(15) [1951] 2 T.L.R. at p. 296. (16) [1910] A.C. 373. (17) [1918] A.C. 888.
(18) [1926] All E.R. Rep. 252; [1927] 1 K.B. 468.
(19) [1949] 2 All E.R. 306; [1950] 1 K.B. 47. (20) [1953] 2 All E.R. 1044.
(21) [1954] 3 All E.R. 745.

A carry out the decision, with the consequence that the defendant appeared to the judge and jury throughout the trial as a person still holding the rank of chief inspector, and therefore as a highly credit-worthy person, whereas in fact he had been demoted for an offence involving deception of a court. Whatever erroneous analogies may have prompted the decision, which was well-intentioned, it was, in my view, utterly wrong, and it had deplorable results. There was in the result B at the trial of this action a deception of the court, and the defendant in cross-examination was giving uncandid (and at one point false) evidence in order to preserve the concealment of the truth.

The fresh evidence has materiality. The main issue at the trial was whether the evidence of the plaintiff or the evidence of the defendant should be believed as to what happened in the passage at the police station. If the purport of the C fresh evidence had become known in the course of the trial, it would have shown both that the defendant had taken part in the deception of a court in the matter for which he was demoted, and also that he was at the trial of this action participating in another deception of a court.

LORD BUCKMASTER said in Hip Foong Hong v. Neotia & Co. (22):

> " In all applications for a new trial the fundamental ground must be that D there has been a miscarriage of justice. If no charge of fraud or surprise is brought forward, it is not sufficient to show that there was further evidence that could have been adduced to support the claim of the losing parties; the applicant must go further and show that the evidence was of such a character that it would, so far as can be foreseen, have formed a determining factor in the result. Such considerations do not apply to questions of E surprise, and still less to questions of fraud. A judgment that is tainted and affected by fraudulent conduct is tainted throughout, and the whole must fail . . ."

Having regard to the deception of the court and the materiality of the fresh evidence, I agree that the appeal should be allowed with costs, and that there F should be an order for a new trial.

Appeal allowed: new trial ordered.

After delivery of the judgments the following statement was made by Victor Durand, Q.C.: I indicated last week in the course of my argument before your Lordships that I took responsibility for the decision; I hope that the words I used then left the court under no misunderstanding as to my personal responsi- G bility. It is right that I should say as emphatically and clearly as I can, that the decision not to make disclosure of the defendant's change of status was mine, and mine alone. Having come to the conclusion that this course was justifiable, I determined and dictated the policy which was thereafter followed during the course of the trial. Neither my learned junior counsel, Mr. Stabb, nor my instructing solicitor was responsible for initiating or pursuing that policy, and, H indeed, they expressed their disapproval of it. I thought it right, having regard to the observations made last week, to make that statement before your Lordships in open court, and I am very grateful to your Lordships for allowing me to make it.

Solicitors: Zeffertt, Heard & Morley Lawson (for the plaintiff, the appellant); J. Stewart Williams (for the defendant, the respondent).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

---

(22) [1918] A.C. at p. 894.

COUTTS & CO. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS.

A

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Buckley, J.), May 30, 31, June 1, 22, 1961.]

Estate Duty—Exemption—Property which has borne duty on death of spouse—Derivative settlement—Marriage settlement followed by derivative settlement by widow of defeasible, but otherwise absolute, interests in settled estates—Estate duty paid on death of husband on settled estates comprised in marriage settlement—Death of widow—Passing of property settled by derivative settlement—Whether estate duty ascertainable on her death was payable in respect of the settled estates so as to attract exemption under Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 5 (2).

B

By a settlement dated May 12, 1914, made on the marriage of S. and B. certain freeholds and leaseholds ("the settled estates") were settled (in the events which happened) on the following trusts: (i) on trust to secure a yearly rentcharge of £200 to B. during the joint lives of S. and B. and subject thereto (ii) on trust for S. for life with remainder (iii) on trust to secure a yearly rentcharge of £1,500 (reducible to £1,000 on her re-marriage) to B. during her life if she should survive S. and subject thereto (iv) on trust for the sons of A., successively according to seniority in tail male ("the paramount limitations") with remainder (v) on trust for S. in fee simple. On Sept. 15, 1916, S. died having bequeathed his residuary estate to W. absolutely; and on his death estate duty was paid in respect of all the settled estates less the "slice" referable to the yearly rentcharge of £200. On July 5, 1917, B. re-married, and on Dec. 14, 1923, she executed a voluntary settlement whereby she settled (in the events which happened) all her terminable and defeasible interests in the settled estates on the following trusts: (a) on trust to give effect to the yearly rentcharge of £1,000 and the paramount limitations; (b) for a term of ninety-nine years determinable on her death on trust to hold the net income arising therefrom on discretionary trusts for the benefit of herself and others; (c) on trust for her daughter L. for life; and (d) on trust for the sons of L. successively according to seniority in tail male, with remainders over. On May 17, 1957, B., who had re-married, died; and on her death estate duty was claimed under the 1923 settlement in respect of an absolute interest, subject only to the paramount limitations, in all the property held on the trusts of the 1914 settlement at her death. At the date of the hearing A. was aged eighty-six and had never had a son. The question arose whether the Finance Act, 1894, s. 5 (2)* (as amended)† gave exemption from the claim.

C D E F G

Held: (i) the exemption from estate duty provided by s. 5 (2) of the Finance Act, 1894, as amended, applied in respect of the proportion of the value of the property indicated at (c) p. 159, post, for the following reasons—

(a) estate duty whose amount was ascertained by reference to the value of an interest in settled property that was less than the whole beneficial interest in that property was, when paid, paid "in respect of" the settled property within the meaning of s. 5 (2) of the Finance Act, 1894 (see p. 169, letter G, post).

H

Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Priestley ([1901] A.C. 208) and A.-G. v. Dodington ([1897] 2 Q.B. 373) followed.

(b) in the present case the amount of estate duty in question on B.'s death was ascertainable by reference to the cesser of B.'s jointure rentcharge and the passing of her defeasible interests in the settled estates and, in accordance with (a) above, that duty (if it were paid) would be paid "in respect of" the settled estates within s. 5 (2); and as estate duty had been paid in relation to the settled estates on the death of S., and B. had

I

* For the Finance Act, 1894, s. 5 (2), see p. 162, letter B, post.
† As amended by the Finance Act, 1898, s. 13.

A never been competent to dispose of the settled estates as distinct from her interests therein, the exemption conferred by s. 5 (2) applied on the death of B. (see p. 169, letter I, to p. 170, letter A, and p. 170, letter I, to p. 171, letter A, post).

(c) the words " any settled property " in the phrase " paid in respect of any settled property " in s. 5 (2) described, in the circumstances of the present B case, the part of the settled estates in respect of which estate duty was paid on the death of S., viz., the whole of the settled estates less the " slice " referable to B.'s £200 jointure rentcharge; accordingly, the exemption conferred by s. 5 (2) extended only to a like part or proportion of the duty otherwise payable on the settled property at B.'s death, viz., of the duty referable to the cesser of her £1,000 jointure rentcharge and the passing of her C defeasible interests in the settled estates (see p. 171, letter C, post).

(ii) the principle stated in Midland Bank Executor and Trustee Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. ([1959] 1 All E.R. 180), viz., that where an interest arises under a settlement is itself settled by a second settlement the phrase " settled property " (in s. 1 of the Finance Act, 1894) refers to the property settled by the second settlement, applies generally irrespective (a) of the D nature of the limited interest sub-settled and (b) of the question whether there would have been a passing of settled property on the death if the second settlement had not been made (see p. 166, letter C, post).

[As to exemption for prior payment of estate duty on settled property, see 15 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 49, para. 97; and for cases on the subject, see 21 DIGEST 20, 21, 111-121.

E For the Finance Act, 1894, s. 2 (1) (b), s. 5 (2), s. 7 (10), s. 16 (3), s. 22 (1) (h), see 9 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 350, 356, 365, 376, 383.]

Cases referred to:

A.-G. v. Dodington, [1897] 2 Q.B. 373; 66 L.J.Q.B. 684; 77 L.T. 299; 61 J.P. 644; 21 Digest 20, 111.

F A.-G. v. Hay, [1899] 2 Q.B. 245; 68 L.J.Q.B. 557; 80 L.T. 712; 21 Digest 20, 116.

Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Priestley, [1901] A.C. 208; 70 L.J.P.C. 41; 84 L.T. 700; affg. sub nom., Re Finance Act, 1894, and Studdert, [1900] 2 I.R. 281, 400; 21 Digest 8, 30.

Midland Bank Executor and Trustee Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1959] 1 All E.R. 180; [1959] Ch. 277; [1959] 2 W.L.R. 77; 3rd Digest Supp.

G Parsons, Re, Parsons v. A.-G., [1942] 2 All E.R. 496; [1943] Ch. 12; 112 L.J. Ch. 65; 167 L.T. 384; 2nd Digest Supp.

Adjourned Summons.

This was an application by originating summons dated Feb. 1, 1961, by Coutts & Co., who were (i) trustees of a settlement made on May 12, 1914, H between the late Hon. Richard Philip Stanhope, the late Hon. Beryl Franziska Kathleen Bianca Groves, then Le Poer Trench (" the deceased "), and the Right Hon. James Richard Earl Stanhope, and (ii) trustees of a settlement made on Dec. 14, 1923, between the deceased then the Hon. Beryl Franziska Kathleen Bianca Gilbert, the Right Hon. James Richard Earl Stanhope and William Bennett, and (iii) the executors of the deceased as to the settled land comprised I in the settlements. The application was to determine whether the property comprised in the settlement dated May 12, 1914, or any interest therein was chargeable with estate duty in connexion with the death of the deceased and, if so, that the extent, if any, of the plaintiffs' liability for such duty (a) as trustees of that settlement, (b) as trustees of the settlement dated Dec. 14, 1923, and (c) as executors, might be determined. The facts appear in the judgment.

Lionel Edwards, Q.C., and J. P. F. E. Warner for the plaintiffs.

E. I. Goulding, Q.C., for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 22. BUCKLEY, J., read the following judgment: In this case I have to decide what estate duty (if any) is payable on the death of Lady Beryl Groves, who died on May 17, 1957, in respect of property comprised in a settlement dated May 12, 1914, made on the occasion of her first marriage. By that settlement (which I will call the " 1914 settlement ") certain freeholds and leaseholds were settled by way of legal and equitable limitations (a) to the use that Lady Beryl should during the joint lives of herself and her first husband, Capt. the Hon. Richard Philip Stanhope, receive for her separate use by way of pin money a yearly rentcharge of £200 and subject thereto (b) to the use of Capt. Stanhope during his life with remainder, (c) to the use that if the deceased should survive Capt. Stanhope she should during her life receive for her separate use a yearly rentcharge of £1,500 reducible to £1,000 on her re-marriage, such rentcharge to be in full for her jointure and in bar of all dower and free-bench and to be payable without any deduction except in respect of death duties and subject thereto (d) to uses which failed (partly because of the absence of issue of the marriage and partly because Capt. Stanhope did not exercise a power of appointment in favour of the deceased thereby conferred on him) with remainder, (e) to the use of the trustees in fee simple in trust for the second, third, fourth and every other younger son of the Right Hon. James Richard Earl Stanhope, who is still living, aged eighty, but has never had a son, (whether born in the lifetime or after the death of Capt. Stanhope) successively in remainder one after the other according to seniority in tail male with remainder (f) on trusts which failed (owing to the absence of daughters of the marriage) with remainder (g) in trust for Capt. Stanhope in fee simple.

The 1914 settlement contained a proviso that:

> ". . . if and so long as during the life of Lord Stanhope there should be no person living who under the equitable limitations thereinbefore contained in favour of his younger sons [to which I will refer as " the paramount limitations "] should be entitled to the possession or receipt of the rents and profits of the hereditaments thereby settled the trustees or trustee for the time being of the 1914 settlement should pay or apply the income of the settled hereditaments to the person for the purposes and in the manner to whom for and in which the same would be payable or applicable under the equitable limitations thereinbefore contained if Lord Stanhope were dead without issue inheritable under the paramount limitations, but that such proviso should be without prejudice to the estates of the younger sons of Lord Stanhope under the paramount limitations if and when they respectively should come into existence."

Captain Stanhope was killed in action on Sept. 15, 1916, having devised and bequeathed his residuary estate to Lady Beryl absolutely. His interest under the ultimate trust in remainder contained in the 1914 settlement formed part of his residuary estate. Estate duty was paid on the death of Capt. Stanhope by the trustees of the 1914 settlement in respect of all the property then comprised in that settlement, subject to deduction from the principal value thereof of a notional " slice " sufficient to produce the £200 yearly pin money payable to Lady Beryl. Lady Beryl married for the second time on July 5, 1917, and there were issue of that marriage a son who was killed in action on May 2, 1942, without having married and a daughter, now Mrs. Lee, who is married and has an infant son. On Dec. 14, 1923, Lady Beryl made a voluntary settlement, which I will call " the 1923 settlement ". The material provisions of the 1923 settlement were briefly as follows: by cl. 2 thereof Lady Beryl conveyed to the grantee all the freeholds then subject to the limitations or trusts of the 1914 settlement (including, expressly, the benefit of any trust for payment of the rents profits or income thereof to the deceased) to hold unto the grantee in fee simple subject to the yearly jointure rentcharge of £1,000 limited to the deceased during her life by the 1914 settlement and subject to the paramount limitations, to uses

A declared by numbered paragraphs as follows: (i) to such uses as might be necessary for confirming the said jointure rentcharge; (ii) to such uses as Lady Beryl should appoint for the purpose only of exercising her statutory powers as tenant for life; (iii) to such uses as should be necessary for confirming the paramount limitations; (iv) to the use of the said trustees for a term of ninety-nine years if Lady Beryl should so long live on the trusts thereinafter declared B concerning the same and subject to the said term and the trusts thereof; (v) to uses conferring on Lady Beryl a power of appointment among her issue (which she did not exercise) and subject thereto, in (vi) to (xi) to certain uses for the benefit of Lady Beryl's son and issue; (xii) to the use of Mrs. Lee during her life with remainder (xiii) to the use of the first and other sons of Mrs. Lee successively according to seniority in tail male, with remainders over.

C By cl. 3 thereof it was declared that the trustees should stand possessed of the said term of ninety-nine years determinable on the death of Lady Beryl on trust to enter into and during the life of Lady Beryl continue in possession or receipt of the rents and profits of the premises (with power from time to time to delegate the right to enter into such possession or receipt to Lady Beryl) and to hold the net income of the premises on trust in the first place to keep on foot cer- D tain policies therein mentioned (which policies all became fully paid before the death of Lady Beryl) and subject thereto on a discretionary trust for the benefit of Lady Beryl, her issue for the time being in existence and any after taken husband of hers and other persons.

By cl. 4 thereof, power was conferred on Lady Beryl to appoint a rentcharge in favour of such a husband of hers, but she did not exercise this power. By cl. 11, E Lady Beryl assigned and confirmed unto the said trustees all the leaseholds then subject to the trusts of the 1914 settlement, (again including expressly the benefit of any trust for the payment of the rents profits or income to her) to hold unto the trustees (subject to the said yearly jointure rentcharge and to the paramount limitations) and it was declared that those trustees should hold such leaseholds on trusts and subject to powers and provisions as nearly corresponding with F the uses trusts powers and provisions thereby declared concerning the freeholds thereinbefore settled as the different tenure would permit, with usual exceptions. By cl. 12 thereof Lady Beryl directed the trustees to stand possessed of all investments and money representing capital money arising out of the Settled Land Acts from the premises settled by the 1914 settlement, subject to the said yearly jointure rentcharge and to the paramount limitations on the trusts and subject G to the powers and provisions on and subject to which capital money arising under the same Acts from the freehold premises settled by the 1923 settlement or investments representing the same would be held.

Although, apart from her jointure rentcharge, Lady Beryl's interests in the settled estates in 1923 were equitable only, the 1923 settlement purported to convey the legal estate and to create legal limitations. It has not, however, been H questioned that the 1923 settlement was effective in equity to achieve its manifest intention. The trustees from time to time of the 1923 settlement have always been the same persons as the trustees for the time being of the 1914 settlement. The plaintiff is the present trustee of both settlements. On Dec. 2, 1931, Lady Beryl married for the third time. There was no issue of this marriage. She died, as I have said, on May 17, 1957, and the present plaintiffs are her special personal I representatives in respect of the settled land vested in her under the compound settlement constituted by the 1914 settlement and the 1923 settlement. At her death the settled property consisted in part of land and in part of investments and cash representing capital moneys. The Commissioners of Inland Revenue have claimed estate duty in connexion with Lady Beryl's death under the 1923 settlement in respect of an absolute interest, subject only to the paramount limitations, in all the property held on the trusts of the 1914 settlement at her death.

In these circumstances, estate duty having been paid to the extent I have mentioned in connexion with the death of Capt. Stanhope in respect of the property comprised in the 1914 settlement (which I will refer to as "the settled estates" in order to avoid confusion with the property settled by the 1923 settlement, which comprised, I think, only limited or defeasible interests in the settled estates) the question arises whether the exemption from estate duty provided by the Finance Act, 1894, s. 5 (2) (which is still effective under the Finance Act, 1914, s. 14, on the death of a surviving spouse) is applicable in the present case. Subsection (2) is in the following terms:

> 'If estate duty has already been paid in respect of any settled property since the date of the settlement, the estate duty shall not, nor shall any of the duties mentioned in para. 5 of Sch. 1 to this Act, be payable in respect thereof, until the death of a person who was at the time of his death or had been at any time during the continuance of the settlement competent to dispose of such property, and who if on his death subsequent limitations under the settlement take effect in respect of such property was sui juris at the time of his death or had been sui juris at any time while so competent to dispose of the property."

That is the form of the subsection as it was amended by the Finance Act, 1898, s. 13.

The contention of counsel on behalf of the plaintiff trustee of the two settlements is, stated shortly, (a) that duty was paid on the settled estates on Capt. Stanhope's death; (b) that Lady Beryl was never competent to dispose of the settled estates by reason of the paramount limitations; and (c) that the claim for duty which apart from s. 5 (2) would arise on her death would be "in respect of" the settled estates within the meaning of that subsection. As regards (b), Lady Beryl's statutory powers of disposition as a person having the powers of a tenant for life are, of course, not relevant: competence to dispose must for the purposes of the subsection be competence to dispose of the beneficial ownership of the settled property. Counsel says that it matters not whether what passed on Lady Beryl's death was the settled estates or only her terminable and defeasible interests in the settled estates: exemption from duty under s. 5 (2) is available, he contends, in either case.

Counsel's argument on behalf of the Inland Revenue, on the other hand, may be stated shortly to be (a) that what was settled in 1923 was not the settled estates but only Lady Beryl's terminable and defeasible interests therein, and that this was what passed on her death; (b) that the claim for duty which, subject to the operation, if any of s. 5 (2), arose on her death arose on the passing of that property and no other; (c) that until 1923 Lady Beryl was competent to dispose of that property and in fact did so by the 1923 settlement; and accordingly (d) that, even if duty can be said to have been already paid in respect of that property on Capt. Stanhope's death, the exemption under s. 5 (2) is nevertheless not available.

For the purpose of construing the subsection, counsel invite me to approach it at different points of time. Counsel for the plaintiff takes his stand at that moment at which the opening words are first satisfied, that is to say, when estate duty is paid in respect of any settled property. Thereafter, he says, until the death of a person who is at his death competent to dispose of that property or has been so at any time during the continuance of the settlement to which the property was subject when that duty was paid, no claim can arise for any duty which could properly be described as "in respect of" that settled property. Counsel for the Inland Revenue, on the other hand, takes his stand at the moment when some property passes or is deemed to pass so as to give rise to a prima facie claim for duty which may or may not be defeated by the subsection. One must then, he says, see whether any duty has previously been paid "in respect of" that property in circumstances in which that duty can be said to have been paid

A in respect of that property since it became settled. If not, cadit quaestio; but, if it can be so said, then one must consider whether anyone has since died who at his death or at any time during the continuance of the settlement was competent to dispose of the property the passing or notional passing of which occasions the claim for duty which is under consideration. Counsel for the Inland Revenue's method of approach is more oblique than that of counsel for the plaintiff, but B counsel for the Inland Revenue suggests that it produces the more reasonable result.

Following in the footsteps of KENNEDY, J., in A.-G. v. Hay (1), I should, I think, read the section in a straightforward and simple manner as the first step to discovering its meaning and its application to the facts of the present case. The first question which the subsection poses is whether, in fact, estate duty has C already been paid in respect of any settled property since the date of the settlement by virtue of which the property was settled when that duty became payable. "Settled property" is defined in the Act by s. 22 (1) (h) as meaning property comprised in a settlement. Accordingly the opening words of s. 5 (2) must be interpreted as though they ran: "If estate duty has already been paid in respect of any property comprised in a settlement since the date of the settlement." It D is, in my judgment, clear as a matter of language that when the passage is read in this way the word "settlement" must in each place where it occurs refer to the same settlement. In the present case the settled estates were clearly settled property at the death of Capt. Stanhope by virtue of the 1914 settlement and estate duty was then paid in the way I have stated. It is common ground that that duty was paid in respect of the settled estates with the possible exception of E a sufficient "slice" to produce the £200 a year pin money. I will for the present ignore the complication introduced by the fact that duty was not paid on that occasion on the pin money "slice" and will return to it at the end of my judgment.

For the sake of simplicity I will proceed to discuss the case as though duty had been paid on the whole settled estates on Capt. Stanhope's death. It follows that no estate duty is to be paid "in respect thereof" until the occurrence of the event F mentioned in the subsection. I shall have to say something about the words "in respect" in a moment. The word "thereof" must grammatically relate back to "any settled property." The event which puts an end to the exempting effect of the subsection is the death of a person "competent to dispose of such property". Again the words "such property" must, in my opinion, relate back to "any settled property". Neither counsel before me has contended that G either "thereof" or "such property" must be construed as relating only to the entirety of the property comprised in the settlement. Counsel for the Inland Revenue suggested that if, for instance, both Blackacre and Whiteacre were settled by one settlement and duty had been paid in respect of both on a death since the date of settlement but at a later stage a person died competent to dispose of Blackacre but not of Whiteacre, exemption could still be claimed for H Whiteacre but not for Blackacre. In such a case each of Blackacre and Whiteacre would fall to be treated on its own for the purposes of the subsection as "any settled property". This, in my judgment, must be right.

In Re Parsons, Parsons v. A.-G. (2) where a testatrix made a specific bequest of stock to her husband and settled her residuary estate on him for life and thereafter on her son absolutely and the husband disclaimed the specific bequest, I the Court of Appeal treated the case as though the stock at all relevant times formed part of the residue subject to a power for the husband to appoint the stock in his own favour absolutely, and reached the conclusion that the stock was not exempt from duty on the husband's death under s. 5 (2) because the husband was, until he disclaimed, competent to dispose of the stock. It was not argued that s. 5 (2) did not apply because the husband's competence did not extend to disposing of the whole residuary estate, but the judgments clearly proceed on the footing that, had he not been competent to dispose of the stock, s. 5 (2) would have applied. This view was also assumed both in argument and by the court in A.-G. v. Hay (3) which related to an undivided share in settled property. In cases of this kind the distinguishable settled property or the undivided share, as the case may be, can be traced back into, and be shown to have formed part of, the corpus of settled property in respect of which the earlier payment of duty was made; and exemption from duty is lost in respect of that part or share of the settled property, if before the second claim for duty arises someone has become competent to dispose of that part or share. It is not, in my judgment, difficult to make the language of the subsection fit such a case and to read the expressions " any settled property ", " in respect thereof " and " such property " in the subsection as applicable to one subject-matter throughout.

(1) [1899] 2 Q.B. at p. 251. (2) [1942] 2 All E.R. 496; [1943] Ch. 12.

Such cases, however, differ from the present case because I am not presently concerned with an identifiable part or undivided share of the trust property but with a qualified interest in the whole of the trust property. When she made the 1923 settlement Lady Beryl was clearly not capable of settling the entire beneficial interest in the settled estates. She was then entitled to her jointure rentcharge of £1,000 a year, and, subject thereto, she was entitled under the combined operation of the 1914 settlement and Capt. Stanhope's will to the income of the settled estate during Lord Stanhope's life so long as there should be no son of Lord Stanhope inheritable under the paramount limitations and after Lord Stanhope's death, to the absolute interest in the settled estate defeasible in the event of the birth of a son to Lord Stanhope inheritable under the paramount limitations. She could have settled her rentcharge as well as her terminable and defeasible interests. In fact, she only settled the latter. From the date of the 1923 settlement until Lady Beryl's death the income of the settled estates was payable as to £1,000 a year to Lady Beryl and the balance was applicable under the discretionary trust of the term created by that settlement for the benefit of Lady Beryl herself and others. On the death of Lady Beryl the rentcharge ceased to be payable and the term and discretionary trust came to an end: the whole income thereupon became payable to Lady Beryl's daughter, Mrs. Lee, for life.

The enjoyment of the whole of the income therefore changed hands on Lady Beryl's death. Counsel for the plaintiff says that consequently the settled estates thereupon passed for the purposes of the Finance Act, 1894. This does not, in my judgment, necessarily follow. The fact that the enjoyment of the whole of certain income changes hands on a death is a manifestation of the fact that some property has then passed, but does not without more identify the property which has passed. For example, a change in the enjoyment of all the rents and profits of certain land would be equally consistent with a passing of the fee simple or of a term of years or of some other limited interest such as an estate pur autre vie. To ascertain what in fact has passed one must look at the trust instrument under the provisions of which the passing has occurred to see what property is subject to the trusts of that instrument, or, if there is no trust instrument, one must look at the relevant circumstances to discover what property has changed hands by operation of law.

This is, I think, the effect of the decision of the Court of Appeal in Midland Bank Executor and Trustee Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (4). In that case a testator who died on July 20, 1937, had by a codicil declared trusts of certain property to continue until the expiration of twenty-one years from his death or the earlier death (which did not occur) of his daughter. After that period in the events which happened three-fifths of the property were to be held in trust during another life to apply the income thereof for the benefit of the children of a nephew of the testator for the time being alive and if more than one in such shares as the nephew and his wife should direct. By an arrangement made in

(3) [1899] 2 Q.B. 245. (4) [1959] 1 All E.R. 180; [1959] Ch. 277.

A 1941, the trusts during the first-mentioned limited period were put an end to and it was declared that as from the testator's death until the end of the twenty-one year period or the earlier death of the testator's daughter the settled property should be held on the trusts declared by the codicil in respect of the income thereof after the expiration of the twenty-one year period. In 1955, before the twenty-one year period expired, a son of the nephew died who was at his death in receipt B of one-fifth of the income of the settled property under a direction given by the nephew and his wife. The Crown claimed duty on his death on one-fifth of the corpus of the trust property, but the court held that what passed on the death in question was derived not from the codicil but from the 1941 arrangement and that duty became payable only on the actuarial value as at the date of the death of one-fifth of the income of the settled property during the remainder of the C twenty-one year period or until the earlier death of the testator's daughter.

JENKINS, L.J., said that the somewhat complicated facts tended to obscure the point at issue and continued (5):

> "However, it is in fact a question of considerable general importance, which so far as I can see enters into every case in which there has been a D derivative disposition or settlement of a limited interest created by a previous settlement."

He then gives three examples of sub-settlements by persons who are either life tenants under a head settlement or entitled to a limited interest in the nature of a term of years or an estate pur autre vie, and in each case he supposes a change under the sub-settlement in the enjoyment of the whole income of the settled E property during the currency of the limited interest which has been sub-settled. He went on as follows (6):

> "In all three examples and in all comparable cases it appears to me that the true position in fact and in law is that a limited interest conferred on a person by a settlement has been disposed of by the beneficiary as a distinct item of property in right of his or her beneficial interest in it, and that any F subsidiary limited interests carved out of the limited interest disposed of are to be regarded as taking effect exclusively out of and to the extent of the limited interest disposed of and not otherwise. I see no sufficient reason for regarding them in any other way for estate duty purposes. The commissioners' view would seem to produce somewhat remarkable results. For instance, it would mean that a life tenant could by an appropriate disposition of his G life interest in a settled fund subject the capital of the fund, in which he had no interest whatever, to a claim for duty on the death of any person on whom he might choose to confer a life interest carved out of, and necessarily limited in its duration to the duration of his own life interest. This seems to me absurd."

H ROMER, L.J., put the matter thus (7):

> "Counsel for the trustees submitted in effect that the expression 'settled property' in s. 1 of the Finance Act, 1894, is referable to property which is settled by a disposition and which passes under that disposition; and that the section should in this regard be confined to property passing under a disposition on the death of a person entitled under that disposition. It appears I to me that, at all events in general, this contention is well founded and that, applying it to the present case, the disposition under which the deceased was entitled at his death to one-fifth of the income of the retained shares was the deed of 1941 and not the testator's codicil."

Counsel for the plaintiff says that that case is distinguishable from the present case on two grounds: (i) that in that case the court was concerned with a sub-settlement of an interest which was limited as to time and that all the examples of JENKINS, L.J., were of a similar kind, whereas in the present case what was settled in 1923 was an absolute, although defeasible, interest, and (ii) that in the present case, had there been no 1923 settlement, the settled estates would have passed on the death of Lady Beryl, whereas in Midland Bank Executor and Trustee Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (8) but for the 1941 arrangement, nothing would have passed on the death in 1955. In that case and in the case of each of the examples of JENKINS, L.J., says counsel for the plaintiff, to raise a claim for duty the Inland Revenue was or would be compelled to rely on the terms of the sub-settlement and nothing else as giving rise to the actual or notional passing of property occasioning the claim for duty. It is true that, subject to what I shall say later about what the position would have been on Lady Beryl's death had there been no 1923 settlement, there are these distinctions of fact between the two cases, but they do not appear to me to be relevant to the application of the principle of the Court of Appeal's decision to the present case. Logically, in my opinion, the nature of the limited interest which is sub-settled can have no bearing on the principle in question which JENKINS, L.J., described in a passage already cited as entering into every case in which there has been a derivative disposition or settlement of a limited interest created by a previous settlement.

(5) [1959] 1 All E.R. at p. 188; [1959] Ch. at p. 289.
(6) [1959] 1 All E.R. at p. 189; [1959] Ch. at p. 290.
(7) [1959] 1 All E.R. at p. 193; [1959] Ch. at p. 297.

As regards the second ground of distinction of counsel for the plaintiff, I do not see why consideration of whether some, and if so what, property would have passed or have been deemed to pass on a particular death in certain circumstances should influence the answer to the question whether any, and if so what, property in fact passed or should be deemed to have passed on that death in different circumstances. Moreover, I am not persuaded that, had there been no 1923 settlement, the settled estates would have passed on Lady Beryl's death. Apart from the jointure rentcharge, the cesser of which on her death was unaffected by the 1923 settlement, she had no interest in the settled estates which would have ceased on her death. Apart from the cesser of the rentcharge, it seems to me that what would have passed on Lady Beryl's death, if there had been no 1923 settlement, would have been that interest in the settled estates which would have formed part of her own estate at and after her death. Not only would what would have so passed have been something other and less than the whole beneficial interest in the settled estates, but also the passing would have had no reference to the trusts of the 1914 settlement. In my view what would have passed on Lady Beryl's death, apart from the "slice" of the settled estates referable to the jointure rentcharge, would have been not the settled estates but Lady Beryl's terminable and defeasible interest therein. The rentcharge, of course, ceased on Lady Beryl's death, but, if there had been no 1923 settlement, the income of so much of the settled estates as was required in her lifetime to service the rentcharge would have continued after her death to be payable to her estate in virtue of her determinable interest in the income during the life of Lord Stanhope.

In these circumstances it would, I think, have been at least arguable that there was no passing, actual or notional, on Lady Beryl's death of the "slice" of the settled estates referable to the rentcharge. Although for these reasons I do not go all the way with counsel for the plaintiff in thinking that, but for the 1923 settlement, the settled estates would have passed on Lady Beryl's death, it seems to me that he is right in suggesting that, subject to possible exemption under s. 5 (2), some claim for duty would have arisen on her death. Nevertheless, I do not consider that this is a valid ground of distinction between the present case and Midland Bank Executor and Trustee Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (8). I have, therefore, to consider the question whether, on the footing that the

(8) [1959] 1 All E.R. 180; [1959] Ch. 277.

A settled estates as a whole did not pass either actually or notionally on Lady Beryl's death, any and if so what, claims for duty which, but for s. 5 (2), would have arisen on her death in the events which happened, can properly be described as being "in respect of" the settled estates within the meaning of s. 5 (2).

So far as such claims would have arisen under s. 2 (1) (b) because of the cesser of the rentcharge, it seems to me to be clear that they would have arisen if not B "in respect of" the settled estates as a whole, at least "in respect of" the "slice" of the settled estates referable to the rentcharge and would fall within s. 5 (2), as would have been the case if the annuity had been a fractional undivided share (A.-G. v. Hay (9)). But what of the duty which, unless s. 5 (2) applies, became payable on Lady Beryl's death by reason of the passing of her other interests in the settled estates; that is to say, the interests comprised in the 1923 C settlement?

In this respect counsel for the Inland Revenue points out that Lady Beryl was until 1923 competent to dispose of these other interests. This is, of course, true; she did in fact dispose of them by the 1923 settlement. But this competence ceased on her making that settlement. She was never, since that settlement, competent to dispose of the interests thereby settled. On the other hand she was D not at any time competent to dispose of the settled estates. Counsel for the Inland Revenue concedes that if counsel for the plaintiff can establish that in this connexion "in respect of" in s. 5 (2) means "in relation to the settled estates or any part thereof or any interest therein" the subsection is applicable to the present case. Counsel for the plaintiff contends that this is in fact the effect of these words. He points out that s. 1 of the Act in conjunction with Sch. 1, E para. 3 and para. 5 enacted that, inter alia, succession duty, which was of course a duty payable on the value not of the property involved but of the interest of the successor in that property, should to a certain extent not be levied "in respect of" property chargeable with estate duty. He makes a similar point on the reference in para. 4 of the same Schedule to s. 6 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1889, which taxed the value of successions. He points out that s. 5 F (2) also refers to these duties as "payable in respect thereof". He says that s. 7 (10) by inference indicates that, but for that subsection, duty might become payable more than once on the same death by reason of the deceased having more than one interest in the property.

Finally, he draws attention to the fact that s. 16 (3) in its original form enacted that where estate duty had been paid on the principal value of a small estate G ". . . the legacy and succession duties shall not be payable . . . in respect of that estate". Counsel for the plaintiff contends that these passages all indicate that the expression "in respect of" any property is of wide import and extends to matters relating to interests in that property. He relies on A.-G. v. Dodington (10) in which probate duty paid in respect of a reversionary interest in settled property was treated as having been paid "in respect of" the settled property within the H meaning of s. 21 (1) of the Finance Act, 1894; and, coming nearer home, he relies strongly on Re Finance Act, 1894, and Studdert (11), a case decided in Ireland and ultimately in the House of Lords under s. 5 (2).

In that case property was settled on trust for B for life and after his death for his wife A for life, and after the death of the survivor in the event which happened of there being no issue of the marriage in trust as A should appoint. A I pre-deceased B and on her death estate duty was paid on her reversionary interest in the trust fund. On B's death, s. 5 (2) was held to apply. PALLES, C.B., said this (12):

> "Now I assume, for the purposes of my judgment, that had it not been for s. 5 (2), the contention of the Inland Revenue would have been correct; and, therefore, the sole question which I propose to consider is whether the provisions of that subsection are, in the events which have happened, applicable to the case before us. To render them so applicable, two, but only two, matters must be shown: 1, that the £97 1s. 4d. paid upon the death of Mrs. Studdert was 'paid in respect of settled property'; 2, that until after the death of the Rev. George Studdert there was not any person who was 'at the time of his death, or had been at any time during the continuance of the settlement, competent to dispose of such property'."

(9) [1899] 2 Q.B. 245. (10) [1897] 2 Q.B. 373. (11) [1900] 2 I.R. 281.
(12) [1900] 2 I.R. at p. 285.

Having first answered the second question in the negative, and having held that the relevant property was at the relevant time "settled property" he proceeded as follows (13):

"If, then, the property, at the time the first duty accrued, answered the description of 'settled property', the only remaining consideration is, was the duty which was paid upon Mrs. Studdert's death so paid in respect of that settled property? I find it difficult to see how this question can receive any answer other than an affirmative one. Indeed, the contrary seems to me to be incapable of argument. As, however, we are told that the question has not as yet been decided, and that this case is to be brought to an appellate court for a binding decision upon this question, I must, in courtesy, assume that there is something which renders it worthy of consideration, and for this reason only I refer further to it. The argument for the Inland Revenue is that as the duty paid on Mrs. Studdert's death was paid in respect of her reversionary interest in the settled property, it was paid in respect of something different from the 'settled property' mentioned in the section, the latter expression being confined, as is insisted upon by the commissioners, to the entire interest in such settled property; and it is said that, were any other construction given to these words, the amount which the Crown would be limited to recovering during the continuance of a settlement in a case in which the event upon which the first duty accrued was such that an interest of but small value in the property became subject to the duty would be less than that which would have been assessed upon the full capital value of the trust funds. It was, as I understand, in consequence of this argument that the appellants admitted liability to duty upon the death of George Studdert on the value of his life estate. Now, I do not propose to stop to consider whether the estate duty paid on Mrs. Studdert's death was so paid in respect of a partial interest only in the settled property, within the meaning of this subsection, or whether it was not so paid in respect of the then present value of the entire capital moneys which passed or were deemed to pass, but which moneys were not payable until the deferred time to which the payment of the duty might have been deferred. Had the executors elected to defer payment until the death of Mr. Studdert, it would be difficult to argue that the deferred duty was not paid in respect of the entire corpus of the fund; and I do not myself see that the omission to exercise the option of the executors can vary the case."

Then he made a reference to A.-G. v. Dodington (14), and a little later went on (15):

"Assuming, then, that the payment of £97 1s. 4d. was made in respect of a partial interest in the settled property, I am still of opinion that that payment was in respect of the 'settled property' within s. 5 (2), because, on ordinary principles of construction, the whole must include a part, and because the taxing section (i.e., s. 1), by using the words 'save as hereinafter expressly provided', renders it necessary to construe s. 5 (2), as part of that taxing section; and if, on the true construction of both together, the case is not within the words of the enactment the omission cannot be supplied. In other words, if we read 'settled property' so as to exclude a part of it, we, for the purpose of extending taxation, omit to give to that expression

(13) [1900] 2 I.R. at p. 287. (14) [1897] 2 Q.B. 373. (15) [1900] 2 I.R. at p. 288.

A its full force—a construction which I hold to be impossible in a taxing enactment."

The case is reported in the Court of Appeal in Ireland (16). The Court of Appeal affirmed the decision of the Divisional Court. It is, I think, sufficient if I read the following passage from the judgment of HOLMES, L.J. (17):

B "Therefore no estate duty was payable on that event if estate duty had already been payable in respect of such property. There only remains the narrow point—whether, within the meaning of the subsection, duty was so payable upon the death of Mrs. Studdert. It is, in my opinion, quite clear that it was. If it were not payable in respect of the property comprised in the settlement, in respect of what was it payable? It is said on C behalf of the Crown that it was only payable upon a reversionary interest in such property; but it was not for that reason the less payable in respect of the property comprised in the settlement."

The case was taken to the House of Lords under the name Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Priestley (18). The House affirmed the decision of the court in Ireland, approving the judgment of PALLES, C.B., and also the judgment of D RIGBY, L.J., in A.-G. v. Dodington (19). I read the following passage from the speech of LORD MACNAGHTEN (20):

"The principal value of the settled property was estimated (as the Act directs) at the price which, in the opinion of the commissioners, the property would have fetched if sold in the open market at the time of the death of Mrs. Studdert. The commissioners seem to have arrived at their estimate E in the ordinary way in which buyers of such property in the market make their calculations, by taking the market value of the securities forming the settled property as at the time of Mrs. Studdert's death, and then making an abatement or allowance in respect of Mr. Studdert's life interest, reckoning the probability of life according to the accepted tables of mortality. But the persons accountable for the duty have nothing to do with the mode in F which the commissioners form their opinion so long as they comply with the directions of the Act, Whatever process the commissioners may go through in their own minds—however they may split up the property for the purpose of coming at their estimate—the duty is leviable in respect of the settled property, not in respect of any particular part or parts of the settled property, or in respect of anything short of the full amount of the property."

G That case, therefore, is authority for the view that duty, the amount of which is ascertained by reference to the value of an interest in settled property which is less than the whole beneficial interest in that property, is none the less properly described as paid "in respect of" the settled property. If so, it must, in my opinion, follow that when, but for s. 5 (2), duty would be payable, the amount of which would fall to be ascertained by reference to the value of some limited or H qualified interest in settled property, such duty would be properly described as duty which, but for the subsection, would "be payable in respect of" the settled property within the meaning of the subsection. No closer nexus between the charge of duty and the settled property is required to satisfy the expression "in respect thereof".

Following the approach of counsel for the plaintiff to the construction of the I subsection therefore (and still ignoring the point about the pin money "slice") I would reach the conclusions: (a) that on the death of Capt. Stanhope estate duty was paid in respect of the settled estates; (b), that, but for s. 5 (2), on the death of Lady Beryl claims for duty would arise in relation to—(i) the cesser of her jointure rentcharge and (ii) the actual or notional passing of her terminable and defeasible interests in the settled estates which were comprised in the 1923 settlement, and in this connexion I need not pause, I think, to consider how such duty would be assessed or what effect s. 7 (10) would have on these claims; (c) that all such claims would relate to duty which would be properly described as payable in respect of the same property in respect of which duty had been paid on Capt. Stanhope's death; (d) that Lady Beryl was never competent to dispose of the settled property in respect of which duty was paid on Capt. Stanhope's death; (e) that consequently s. 5 (2) is applicable.

(16) [1900] 2 I.R. 400. (17) [1900] 2 I.R. at p. 413. (18) [1901] A.C. 208.
(19) [1897] 2 Q.B. 373. (20) [1901] A.C. at p. 214.

The contention of counsel for the Inland Revenue may, I think, be said to be that this reasoning results from approaching the subject through the wrong doorway or viewing it in the wrong perspective. I hope that I do his argument justice if I put it thus. (i) the application of the subsection comes in question only when an actual or notional passing of some property occurs in respect of which duty is payable unless exemption under the section is available. This is the property, be it an absolute or some lesser interest, which is contemplated by the words " in respect thereof." (ii) Since it is clear from the language that these words relate back to " any settled property " the latter words must be construed as referring to the same interest or property. If the interest or property in question be not the corpus of settled property but, say, one only of a series of beneficial interests existing under a settlement, for example, a life interest or a reversionary interest, nevertheless, if duty has been paid since the date of the settlement on the corpus of the settled property, such duty may properly be said to have been then paid " in respect of " the relevant interest in the settled property as well as in respect of every other interest in it (Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Priestley (21)).

The argument of counsel for the Inland Revenue involves, I think, not merely reading " any settled property " as meaning " any settled property or share thereof or interest therein " but also adding by inference from what follows the words " in respect of which a further claim for estate duty would but for this subsection have subsequently arisen ", for it is only by restricting the effect of the words " any settled property " in some such way as this that he is able to take the last step in his argument by saying (iii) that the words " competent to dispose of such property " refer and refer only to the property the actual or notional passing of which gives rise to the debated liability for duty; that is to say, the relevant limited beneficial interest under the settlement.

Counsel for the Inland Revenue says that what passed actually or notionally on Lady Beryl's death was the subject-matter of the 1923 settlement and nothing else, and that that property would fall to be valued on her death free from the jointure rentcharge; that duty was paid on Capt. Stanhope's death in respect of the same subject-matter as an element or interest in or part of the settled estates, that Lady Beryl was until 1923 competent to dispose of that same subject-matter; and that consequently exemption under s. 5 (2) is not available.

I do not feel justified in putting such a gloss on the words " any settled property " as the argument of counsel for the Inland Revenue seems to me to involve. They can, in my judgment, be construed in this subsection in accordance with their natural and apparent meaning. So construed in the present case they are appropriate to describe the settled estates, or rather, that part of the settled estates in respect of which duty was paid on Capt. Stanhope's death—i.e., the whole settled estates less the " slice " referable to pin money.

Lady Beryl was not at her death or at any time during the subsistence of the settlement competent to dispose of any part of the settled estates. However, in consequence of the 1923 settlement of Lady Beryl's qualified interests in the settled estates a claim for duty will, unless s. 5 (2) is applicable, have arisen on her death in relation to the interests comprised in the 1923 settlement. If that duty could, if exigible, properly be described as payable " in respect of " the settled estates, exemption will be available under the subsection. It appears to me on the (21) [1901] A.C. 208.

A authority of Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Priestley (22) that the duty in question can be properly so described. It follows that, in my judgment, the subsection is applicable and the claim for exemption is well founded.

I now return to the complication introduced by the fact that when duty was paid on Capt. Stanhope's death, an allowance was made for a "slice" of the settled estates referable to the pin money rentcharge of £200 a year. If the pin B money "slice" was X per cent. of the value of the settled estates at that date, and if it be assumed that 100—X=Y, then duty was paid on Y per cent. of the then value of the settled estates. It might be said, nevertheless, such duty as was paid was paid in respect of the whole settled estates on reasoning similar to that adopted in Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Priestley (22). It seems to me, however, (although I have heard little argument on this part of the case) that a distinction C is to be drawn between a case in which duty is paid, as in Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Priestley (22) in relation to an interest which, although it is less than the full beneficial interest, extends to the whole corpus of settled property, and a case where duty is paid in relation to part only of the settled property. The present case falls, I think, within the latter class.

It follows, in my judgment, that only Y per cent. of the settled estates can D qualify for exemption from duty under s. 5 (2), that proportion of the settled estates constituting the only settled property in respect of which duty was paid on Capt. Stanhope's death. Consequently the effect of s. 5 (2) in the present case is that on Lady Beryl's death, no duty is to be paid in respect of Y per cent. of the settled estates. Accordingly X per cent. only of the duty which would be payable but for s. 5 (2) on her death, whether in respect of the cesser of the jointure E rentcharge or in respect of the passing of Lady Beryl's terminable and defeasible interests in the settled estates, is, in my judgment, exigible in respect of Lady Beryl's death. I declare that the plaintiffs are liable as trustees, under the 1914 settlement, to duty on a proportion of the estate.

Declaration accordingly.

F Solicitors: Caprons & Crosse (for the plaintiffs); Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

[Reported by JENIFER SANDELL, Barrister-at-Law.]

G

PRACTICE DIRECTION.

PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (DIVORCE).

Divorce—Practice—Summons—Transfer from solicitors' to counsel's list.

Where, on a summons for hearing by a Registrar of the Divorce Registry, H issued in the solicitors' list, the party to whom the summons is directed intends to be represented by counsel, that party should notify the applicant of his intention and arrange for a fresh time of hearing to be fixed. Application should be made to the clerk to the Registrar who will fix the fresh time between 12 noon and 1 p.m. on the day already fixed for the hearing or, if this is not possible, refer the matter to the Registrar. Notice of the fresh time for hearing must be given to the applicant.

B. LONG,
Senior Registrar.

July 18, 1961.

---

(22) [1901] A.C. 208.

INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS v. J. B. HODGE & CO. (GLASGOW), LTD. (in voluntary liquidation).

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Lord Reid, Lord Cohen, Lord Hodson and Lord Guest), June 5, 6, 7, July 13, 1961.]

Profits Tax—Distribution—Distribution charge—Reconstruction—Vendor company's business sold in 1950 in consideration of shares in purchasing company—Subsequent sale by vendor company of shares of purchasing company—Liquidation of vendor company in 1955*—Liability to distribution charge—Finance Act,* 1947 (10 & 11 Geo. 6 c. 35), s. 30 (3), s. 36 (4), s. 43 (1).

The respondents, a limited company, carried on a business of selling heavy earth-moving equipment from 1941 to 1950. During that period they were allowed non-distribution relief from the profits tax under the Finance Act, 1947, s. 30 (2). On Apr. 5, 1950, they sold that business to another company in consideration of shares in the purchasing company, and thereafter carried on business as an investment company. In September, 1950, the respondents and the purchasing company gave notice of election under s. 36 (4) of the Act of 1947. The respondents sold their shares in the purchasing company and, on Mar. 18, 1955, went into voluntary liquidation. In their last chargeable accounting period (Nov. 1, 1954 to Mar. 18, 1955) the net relevant distributions to proprietors exceeded the profits of the period. The respondents were assessed for that period to a distribution charge under s. 30 (3)* of the Act of 1947 in respect of the non-distribution relief allowed during years when the business of selling heavy earth-moving equipment had been carried on.

Held: the respondents were liable to the distribution charge for the following reasons—

(i) since, during the chargeable accounting period for which the respondents were assessed they were carrying on a trade and made net relevant distributions in excess of the profits of the trade for that period, they were within the charging words of s. 30 (3) of the Finance Act, 1947, and there was nothing to exclude their liability in the proviso to s. 30 (3) of that Act; moreover, the scheme of the Act of 1947 was that the profits of each chargeable accounting period should no longer be put into separate watertight compartments, and s. 43 (1)* of the Act of 1947 (by which all trades carried on were to be treated as one) applied in respect of different trades carried on successively as well as in respect of different trades carried on simultaneously (see p. 178, letter G, p. 176, letter F, p. 180, letter I, to p. 181, letter A, and p. 179, letter I, post).

(ii) liability to the distribution charge was not transferred by virtue of s. 36 (4) (ii) from the respondents when election under that subsection was made, but remained with the respondents, there being no express relief from it in the statute (see p. 179, letters B and F, p. 180, letter A, p. 174, letter I, and p. 179, letter I, post).

Dictum of CROSS, J., in Ackland & Pratten, Ltd. (in liquidation) v. Inland Revenue Comrs. ([1960] 3 All E.R. at p. 377) approved.

Per LORD COHEN and LORD HODSON, LORD GUEST concurring: if the Crown recovered distribution charge from the respondents, the amount could not be recovered a second time from the purchasing company (see p. 179, letters G and I, and p. 180, letter E, post).

Appeal allowed.

[Editorial Note. Owing to the repeals noted on p. 173 the principal relevance of the decision for future cases is, perhaps, its application to the interpretation of s. 43 (1) of the Finance Act, 1947.

---

* The terms of s. 30 (2), (3), of s. 36 (4) and of s. 43 (1) of the Finance Act, 1947, are printed at p. 177, letter C, to p. 178, letter C, post.

A As to the treatment of trades and changes in trades for purposes of the profits tax, see 20 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 615, para. 1199; as to election for purposes of the profits tax on the reconstruction of companies, see 20 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 636, para. 1244.

For the Finance Act, 1947, s. 30, s. 36 and s. 43 (1), see 12 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 774, 780, 788; and for the repeal of s. 30 and s. 36, see the B Finance Act, 1958, s. 40 (5) and Sch. 9, Part 2; 38 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 507, 513.]

Cases referred to:

Ackland & Pratten, Ltd. (in liquidation) v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1960] 3 All E.R. 367; [1960] 1 W.L.R. 1117; 3rd Digest Supp.

Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Butterley Co., Ltd., [1956] 2 All E.R. 197; [1957] C A.C. 32; 36 Tax Cas. 411; [1956] 2 W.L.R. 1101; 28 Digest (Repl.) 377, 1645.

Appeal.

Appeal by the Crown from an interlocutor of the First Division of the Court of Session as the Court of Exchequer in Scotland (LORD CLYDE (Lord President), LORD CARMONT, LORD SORN and LORD GUTHRIE), dated July 14, 1960, dismissing D an appeal by the Crown from a determination of the Commissioners for the Special Purposes of the Income Tax, dated May 14, 1959. The commissioners sustained an appeal by the respondents against an assessment to the profits tax made on them for the chargeable accounting period from Nov. 1, 1954, to Mar. 18, 1955, in the sum of £63,237 16s. by way of distribution charge under the Finance Act, 1947, s. 30 (3). The facts are set out in the opinion of LORD REID.

E The Solicitor-General for Scotland (D. C. Anderson, Q.C. (of the Scottish Bar)), A. S. Orr and A. J. Mackenzie Stuart (of the Scottish Bar) for the Crown.

Sir John Senter, Q.C., D. C. Miller, Q.C., and N. P. M. Elles for the respondents.

Their Lordships took time for consideration.

July 13. The following opinions were read.

F LORD REID: My Lords, the respondents carried on a business of selling heavy earth-moving equipment from 1941 to 1950. During that period, they were allowed non-distribution relief under s. 30 (2) of the Finance Act, 1947. On Apr. 5, 1950, they sold that business to another company, and thereafter they carried on business as a holding or investment company. They went into voluntary liquidation on Mar. 18, 1955. They were assessed in respect of their G last chargeable accounting period, Nov. 1, 1954, to Mar. 18, 1955, to a distribution charge of £63,237 16s. under s. 30 (3) of the Act of 1947. They maintain that that assessment is invalid on two separate alternative grounds. First, they say that they are relieved of liability by s. 36 (4) of the Act of 1947. Alternatively, they say that, in any event, the assessment is bad because it is made in respect of the wrong chargeable accounting period. The First Division sustained the first H objection but not the second.

Admittedly s. 36 (4) applies. The former business was sold to another company as part of a scheme of reconstruction, the consideration consisted wholly or mainly of shares of the purchasing company, and the two companies jointly elected that the section should apply. This section enacts two " modifications " of the other provisions of the Act, and this first point turns entirely on the proper I construction of the second of these modifications. They are:

" (i) any distribution of those shares to any person in a winding-up of the first company shall, notwithstanding anything in sub-s. (1) of this section, not be deemed for the purposes of the last preceding section to be a distribution to that person; and

" (ii) in considering what distribution charge, if any, falls to be made on the second company, any difference on which non-distribution relief for chargeable accounting periods before the transfer was given to the first company or other person assessable to profits tax on the profits of the trade or business of the first company shall, except so far as it has already operated to increase a distribution charge on the first company, be taken into account as if it had been a difference arising in relation to the second company on which non-distribution relief had been given to that company, and shall also be taken into account, in the case of the last chargeable accounting period of the second company, so as to increase the amount which, for the purposes of sub-s. (1) (c) of the last preceding section, is to be treated as not a distribution of capital."

The general scheme of the Act of 1947 was to encourage the retention of profits in the business by granting non-distribution relief under s. 30 (2). But, if the retained profits were later distributed, that relief was withdrawn by means of a distribution charge under s. 30 (3). So, a purchaser of a business, not having received relief, would not be liable to pay a distribution charge, but the seller would remain liable in the event of the retained profits being later distributed. The modifications alter this in two respects: the second makes the purchasing company liable to pay distribution charges in future as if it had received the non-distribution relief which the selling company received before the sale, and the first grants a limited exemption from distribution charges to the seller — limited in that it only applies on a liquidation of the selling company and only applies to certain assets of that company, its shares in the purchasing company.

These modifications would be comparatively easy to apply if the selling company went into liquidation soon after the sale. But that did not happen in this case. The selling company, the respondents, carried on business for a considerable time and, during that time, they sold their shares in the purchasing company. Accordingly, modification (i) gave them no benefit. They maintain that the terms of modification (ii) are such as to relieve them from all liability for distribution charges, and, if I had to consider this modification by itself, I would agree with the First Division in reaching that conclusion. If that were right, however, modification (i) would be unnecessary. No doubt there are cases where an unnecessary provision is inserted in an Act to avoid some possible doubt; but, in the circumstances of this case, I cannot regard that as a possible explanation. I cannot imagine any competent draftsman inserting modification (i) if he intended that every distribution whether of shares or money and whether in a winding-up or not should not be deemed for the purposes of sub-s. (1) to be a distribution; but that is said to be the effect of modification (ii). Of course, if the language of modification (ii) were capable of no other interpretation, that would be an end of the matter. But the most that can be said is that it has failed to provide for important matters which clearly ought to have been provided for if the intention was to make the purchasing company liable and also to preserve the liability of the selling company subject only to the relief given by modification (i). I do not think that, in the circumstances, that is sufficient to turn the scale. The draftsman may have overlooked the possibility that companies would make this election and yet the selling company would not go into liquidation at once; it is difficult to see why companies should make this election otherwise, because the selling company would get no immediate benefit from it, whereas the purchasing company would get an immediate detriment. But, whether or not that is a possible explanation, I find it impossible to dissent from your Lordships' view on this point, though I recognise the strength of the respondents' case.

The second point is highly technical, and I agree with the decision of the First Division. The respondents first argue that s. 43 (1) of the Act of 1947 does not apply to this case. Subsection (1) is in the following terms:

"All trades or businesses to which s. 19 of the Finance Act, 1937, applies carried on by the same person shall be treated as one trade or business for the purposes of the enactments relating to the profits tax."

A Under the original Act of 1937, if a person carried on two trades simultaneously, these trades had to be dealt with separately. It is argued that the sole purpose of s. 43 is to require that all trades carried on by a person simultaneously shall be treated as one for the purposes of this tax, and that it has no application where, as in the present case, a taxpayer first carries on one trade and then, after ceasing to carry it on, he starts another. Then the respondents go to s. 35 (1) (c) B of the Act of 1947, which includes in the gross relevant distribution

> " in the case of the last chargeable accounting period in which the trade or business is carried on so much of any distribution made after the end of that period . . . as is not a distribution of capital."

If s. 43 does not apply, then " the trade or business " must in this case be the C former trade in machinery, because it was in respect of the profits of that trade that the non-distribution relief was granted, and a distribution charge is merely a belated collection of the tax of which payment was postponed by the non-distribution relief. The reasoning in this House in Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Butterley Co., Ltd. (1) shows that profits tax in respect of the profits of any trade can never be assessable except for a chargeable accounting period during which D that trade is in fact being carried on. So, it is argued, both the general scheme of the Act and the express terms of s. 35 (1) (c) show that any assessment for the purpose of collecting by means of a distribution charge the tax of which payment was postponed by non-distribution relief can only be effective if it is made in respect of the last chargeable accounting period in which the trade which yielded the profits sought to be taxed was actually carried on. If one stops there, the E argument is attractively logical, but it would lead to strange consequences, and I do not think that it can be reconciled with the scheme of s. 30 (2), (3) of the Finance Act, 1947, which are in the following terms:

> "(2) Subject to the provisions of this Part of this Act, if, in the case of any trade or business, the net relevant distributions to proprietors (as defined in the subsequent provisions of this Part of this Act) for any chargeable account- F ing period are less than the profits thereof for that period chargeable to the profits tax, the amount chargeable by way of the profits tax in respect of that period shall be reduced by an amount equal to seven and a half per cent. (2) of the difference.
>
> "(3) Subject to the provisions of this Part of this Act, if, in the case of a trade or business, the net relevant distributions to proprietors (as defined G in the subsequent provisions of this Part of this Act) for any chargeable accounting period are greater than the profits thereof for that period chargeable to the profits tax, there shall be charged for that period, in addition to the other profits tax, if any, chargeable therefor, profits tax at the rate of seven and a half per cent. (2) on the amount of the difference: Provided that the amount on which tax is chargeable under this subsection for any H chargeable accounting period shall not, when added to the total of the amounts on which tax is charged thereunder for previous chargeable accounting periods, exceed the total of the differences in respect of which reductions have been made under sub-s. (2) of this section for previous chargeable accounting periods."

I I cannot see how these provisions can properly be applied if a line has to be drawn when a company ceases to carry on one trade and begins another. They appear to me to require that, so long as a company is trading at all, each year's accounts shall be considered. If, in respect of a particular year, less is distributed than the profits of that year, non-distribution relief is granted under sub-s. (2). The difficulty arises under sub-s. (3). When more is distributed than the profits of the year, it authorises a distribution charge which will collect the tax of which payment was postponed by operation in a previous year of non-distribution relief. Suppose a case where, in the course of a previous trade, there was non-distribution relief in respect of £10,000. Then, in some year after that trade ceased and a new trade started, £15,000 more is distributed than the profits of that year. It appears to me to be plain that the subsection requires a distribution charge which will withdraw the earlier non-distribution relief. But, if that is so, it completely destroys the respondents' theory, because the subsection requires this charge to be made for the period when the excess distribution was made, whereas the respondents' theory is that it is incompetent to make a distribution charge of this kind in respect of any period after the cessation of the former trade; the former trade yielded the profits in respect of which the non-distribution relief was granted, and that relief can only be withdrawn—so it is said—by an assessment relating to a period during which the trade was still being carried on. The respondents' theory can be plausibly argued in the present case, because the assessment is made in a liquidation. I do not see how it could work if the excess distribution was made by a going concern which continued to carry on the new trade, unless, indeed, some limitation is to be read into sub-s. (3) which would go far to destroy the whole scheme.

(1) [1956] 2 All E.R. 197; 36 Tax Cas. 411.

(2) Increased retrospectively to fifteen per cent. by the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1947, s. 7.

The real flaw in the respondents' argument is, I think, a misconstruction of s. 35 (1) (c). If the last chargeable accounting period there referred to is the last period during which any trade or business is carried on, the scheme works perfectly well. But if it is the last period during which a particular trade was carried on, it leads to an absurd result; it would require "any distribution" made after that particular trade ceased—which would include distribution of the profits of the new trade—to be included in the gross relevant distributions of the last year of the old trade, and thereby make the whole scheme unworkable. And, further, I think that the argument is based on a mis-reading of Butterley's case (3). That case decided that the profits of any trade could not directly be assessed in respect of a period after the trade has ceased. It did not decide that non-distribution relief could not be withdrawn by a distribution charge in respect of a period after the trade has ceased; the plain meaning of s. 30 (3) is that it can be so withdrawn.

Now I must return to s. 43 (1). I was at first inclined to think that the respondents' argument about it was right, but now I am inclined to take a different view. If it means that all trades or businesses, whether carried on concurrently or in succession, are to be treated as one trade or business, then all the difficulties with which I have been dealing are avoided. I do not think it necessary to decide this. Whether I take that simple solution or proceed by considering the interrelation of s. 30 and s. 35, I reach the same result; I am satisfied that this objection to the assessment cannot be sustained. Accordingly, as neither of the respondents' objections to the assessment is valid, the Crown must succeed.

I, therefore, move that this appeal should be allowed.

LORD COHEN: My Lords, before the Special Commissioners and in the Court of Session, the issues between the parties were as follows:—(i) Whether (as contended by the Crown and disputed by the respondents) on the true construction of s. 30 (3) of the Finance Act, 1947, the respondents, having in April, 1950, transferred to another company a trade of selling and servicing heavy earth-moving equipment previously carried on by the respondents, and having thereafter carried on a new business of investment-holding, are liable to be assessed, for a chargeable accounting period of such new business, to a distribution charge by reference to non-distribution relief obtained by them in chargeable accounting periods of the said former trade. (ii) Whether (as contended by the respondents and disputed by the Crown) the effect of a notice of election (4)

(3) [1956] 2 All E.R. 197; 36 Tax Cas. 411.

(4) The respondents gave due notice of this election on Sept. 25, 1950, and the requirements of paras. (a), (b) and (c) of s. 36 (4) of the Finance Act, 1947, were satisfied.

A pursuant to s. 36 (4) of the said Act, given by the respondents as transferors and the said other company as transferees of the said trade, was to free the respondents from all further liability by way of distribution charge in respect of non-distribution relief obtained by them before the date of the said transfer. The Special Commissioners decided both the said issues in favour of the respondents, and on both grounds allowed the respondents' appeal against an assessment B to the profits tax made on the respondents for the chargeable accounting period from Nov. 1, 1954, to Mar. 18, 1955, the date of the voluntary liquidation of the respondents. On appeal by the Crown to the Court of Session, the First Division held that the Special Commissioners had been in error in deciding the first of the said issues in favour of the respondents, but upheld the Commissioners' decision on the second issue and, accordingly, dismissed the appeal.

C It will be convenient at this stage to set out the relevant portions of the Finance Act, 1947.

" 30. . . . (2) Subject to the provisions of this Part of this Act, if, in the case of any trade or business, the net relevant distributions to proprietors (as defined in the subsequent provisions of this Part of this Act) for any chargeable accounting period are less than the profits thereof for that period D chargeable to the profits tax, the amount chargeable by way of the profits tax in respect of that period shall be reduced by an amount equal to seven and a half per cent. (5) of the difference.

"(3) Subject to the provisions of this Part of this Act, if, in the case of a trade or business, the net relevant distributions to proprietors (as defined in the subsequent provisions of this Part of this Act) for any chargeable E accounting period are greater than the profits thereof for that period chargeable to the profits tax, there shall be charged for that period, in addition to the other profits tax, if any, chargeable therefor, profits tax at the rate of seven and a half per cent. (5) on the amount of the difference: Provided that the amount on which tax is chargeable under this subsection for any chargeable accounting period shall not, when added to the total of the amounts on F which tax is charged thereunder for previous chargeable accounting periods, exceed the total of the differences in respect of which reductions have been made under sub-s. (2) of this section for previous chargeable accounting periods.

"(4) The reductions falling to be made under sub-s. (2) of this section and the charges falling to be made under sub-s. (3) thereof are hereafter in this G Act respectively referred to as 'reliefs for non-distribution' and 'distribution charges'.

" 36. . . . (4) Where—(a) as part of a scheme of amalgamation or reconstruction a trade or business carried on by a body corporate (in this subsection referred to as 'the first company') is transferred to another body corporate (in this subsection referred to as 'the second company'); (b) the H consideration for the transfer consists wholly or mainly of shares in the second company; and (c) the first and second companies jointly so elect by notice in writing given to the commissioners within six months after the transfer or such longer time as the commissioners may in any case allow, the provisions of this Part of this Act shall apply subject to the following modifications, that is to say—

I "(i) any distribution of those shares to any person in a winding-up of the first company shall, notwithstanding anything in sub-s. (1) of this section, not be deemed for the purposes of the last preceding section to be a distribution to that person; and

"(ii) in considering what distribution charge, if any, falls to be made on the second company, any difference on which non-distribution relief for chargeable accounting periods before the transfer was given to the first company

(5) Increased retrospectively to fifteen per cent. by the Finance (No. 2) Act, 1947, s. 7.

or other person assessable to profits tax on the profits of the trade or business of the first company shall, except so far as it has already operated to increase a distribution charge on the first company, be taken into account as if it had been a difference arising in relation to the second company on which non-distribution relief had been given to that company, and shall also be taken into account, in the case of the last chargeable accounting period of the second company, so as to increase the amount which, for the purposes of sub-s. (1) (c) of the last preceding section, is to be treated as not a distribution of capital.

"43.—(1) All trades or businesses to which s. 19 of the Finance Act, 1937, applies carried on by the same person shall be treated as one trade or business for the purposes of the enactments relating to the profits tax."

I need not cite in full any other section of the Act. Suffice it to say that it is not disputed that the respondents built up "reliefs for non-distribution" during the years in which they were carrying on the business of selling and servicing heavy earth-moving equipment which they ceased to carry on after Apr. 5, 1950. Nor is it disputed that, in the accounting period in respect of which the disputed assessment was made, distributions were made in excess of the profits of that period.

So far as the first point in dispute is concerned, the respondents claim that, since the profits distributed arose from a trade which was not carried on by the company during the accounting period in respect of which assessment was made, the assessment must be discharged. This contention was upheld by the Special Commissioners because, in their view, the proviso to s. 30 (3) forced them to the conclusion that the respondents' argument was well founded. I am unable to agree. On the admitted facts, it cannot be disputed that, during the relevant accounting period, the respondents were carrying on a trade and made net relevant distributions as defined in s. 35 of the Act in excess of the profits of that trade for that period chargeable to profits tax. I see nothing in the wording of the proviso which enables me to cut down the plain meaning of the charging section. I understand there is no question here on the figures of the proviso being called into operation, but I think it right to add that, in my opinion, the proviso would operate notwithstanding that the differences in respect of which reductions had been made under s. 30 (2) had arisen from a trade other than that which was being carried on during the accounting period in respect of which the disputed assessment was made. The First Division based their decision in favour of the Crown on this point on s. 43 (1). I arrive at my conclusion in favour of the Crown without recourse to that subsection, but I respectfully agree with the Lord President (LORD CLYDE) that the scheme of the Act of 1947 was no longer to put the profits of each accounting period into separate watertight compartments, and that s. 43 (1) is more consistent with the conclusion at which he and I have arrived on the first point than with that reached by the Special Commissioners.

Before I leave this part of the case, I ought to mention the decision of this House in Inland Revenue Comrs. v. Butterley Co., Ltd. (6), which was relied on by the respondents. That case raised quite a different question from that which is before your Lordships. It was whether certain interim income payments received by the Butterley Co. under the Coal Industry Nationalisation Act, 1946, were profits from a trade or business being carried on by the company during the relevant chargeable accounting periods and, therefore, had to be included in the return of profits chargeable to tax. It was held that these payments were not profits arising from any trade or business. No question arose as to liability to distribution charges under s. 30 (3). I agree with the Lord President in thinking that the observations of their Lordships in the Butterley case (6) throw no light on the point which your Lordships have now to decide.

I turn to the second question. It is common ground that the respondents and

(6) [1956] 2 All E.R. 197; 36 Tax Cas. 411.

A the company to which they had sold their trading assets gave the notice required by s. 36 (4) (c) and that, in consequence, the modifications specified in the subsection became applicable. The first modification does not apply as the respondents did not distribute in the winding-up the shares it received from the purchasing company. The Special Commissioners held that the word "already" in modification (ii) referred to the date of the election, and that the subsection B impliedly operated to transfer the liability from the first company to the second when the election was exercised. The same view was taken by LORD SORN. The Lord President took a similar view, though he did not place so much reliance on the word "already". I agree with LORD SORN that the section is not free from obscurity, but I have come to the opposite conclusion to that reached by the First Division. In my opinion, the opening words of the modification "in C considering what distribution charge, if any, falls to be made on the second company" decide the moment when the calculations directed by the modification have to be made. They indicate a recurring event, and it seems to follow that, in respect of each accounting period of the second company for which it makes a distribution in excess of its profits of that period, it will be necessary to see what distribution charges have been made on the first company; in other words, D "already" refers to the time of consideration directed in the modification not to the date on which the election was made.

I am fortified in the construction I have placed on the word "already" by the observations of CROSS, J., in Ackland & Pratten, Ltd. (in liquidation) v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (7). The learned judge, dealing with an argument similar to that advanced by the respondents in the present case, said:

E "In my judgment, that argument, which is an ingenious one, rests on a misconstruction of the word 'already'. This part of s. 36 (4) is not dealing with the liability of the first company at all, but simply with the liability of the second company; and the word 'already', I think, refers not simply to the time before liquidation but to all the time before the question of the amount of any distribution charge on the second company falls to be con- F sidered. Consequently, any distribution charge to which the first company becomes subject after liquidation will be taken into account in estimating the liability of the second company as and when that liability falls to be determined."

There is no express relief of the first company from liability, and it would have been so easy expressly so to provide if that had been the intention. I can well G understand that Parliament may have decided not to relieve the first company from liability before the second company had paid. It is said that the effect of the Crown's argument would be to enable it to recover once from one company and again from the other. This does not now arise for decision. Suffice it for the moment to say that, as at present advised, I think if the Crown recovers from the respondents, it would fail pro tanto in a claim against the second H company, since the "difference" would already have operated to increase the distribution charge on the respondents. The construction of s. 36 (4) on which the Crown relies seems to me to accord with the natural meaning of the words used and to give effect to the policy of the part of the Finance Act, 1947, dealing with profits tax and distribution charges.

I would allow the appeal.

I My noble and learned friend, LORD GUEST, who is unable to be present today, has asked me to say that he agrees with the speech that I have delivered.

LORD HODSON: My Lords, on the first point, which concerns the two modifications, I think that the contention of the Crown is right. Section 36 (4) (i) of the Finance Act, 1947, gives an advantage to the first company, if in a winding-up it distributes shares that it received from the purchasing company. Section

(7) [1960] 3 All E.R. at p. 377.

36 (4) (ii) does not purport to give an advantage to the first company and is directed to the second company. The opening words are: "in considering what distribution charge, if any, falls to be made on the second company". The first company is not expressly or, in my opinion, by implication freed from the charge. It it were so freed, modification (i) would be unnecessary. The phrase "except so far as it has already operated to increase a distribution charge on the first company" covers any operation prior to the time of consideration. I cannot accept the argument that "already" means before the date of winding-up or election. If Parliament had meant this it could have said so. The taxpayer's construction was, I think, rightly rejected by CROSS, J., in Ackland & Pratten, Ltd. (in liquidation) v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (8). I agree with the passage in the judgment, which reads (9):

> "This part of s. 36 (4) is not dealing with the liability of the first company at all, but simply with the liability of the second company; and the word 'already', I think, refers not simply to the time before liquidation but to all the time before the question of the amount of any distribution charge on the second company falls to be considered. Consequently, any distribution charge to which the first company becomes subject after liquidation will be taken into account in estimating the liability of the second company as and when that liability falls to be determined."

The First Division were impressed by the apparent futility of the election. The election is not futile if the first company is in a position to avail itself of modification (i), which the respondents cannot do in the events which have happened. I agree with my noble and learned friend, LORD COHEN, that it does not seem that any question of double taxation arises for, as he says, it would appear that, if the Crown recovers from the respondents, it would fail in a claim against the second company since the difference would have already operated to increase the distribution charge on the respondents.

On the second point, the respondents contend that, since the profits distributed arose from a trade which was not carried on by the company during the accounting period in respect of which the assessment was made, the assessment must be discharged. I have felt some difficulty in accepting the solution reached by the First Division, who found the answer to this contention in the language of s. 43 (1) of the Act, which provides:

> "All trades or businesses to which s. 19 of the Finance Act, 1937, applies carried on by the same person shall be treated as one trade or business for the purposes of the enactments relating to the profits tax."

The Lord President (LORD CLYDE), construing this section as applying to trades carried on whether simultaneously or in succession, held that it was not open to the respondents to contend that, because the trade in which they were engaged before 1950 and in respect of which they got relief from the profits tax for non-distribution of profits has been discontinued by them, and because in 1954 and 1955 they were engaged in quite a different trade, the relief they got before 1950 must be excluded from consideration in computing their liability to the profits tax in the latter period.

It would seem at first sight that the expression in s. 43 (1) "carried on by the same person" means carried on simultaneously and not whether simultaneously or in succession. On consideration, however, I am not prepared to dissent from the contrary construction of s. 43 (1) adopted by their Lordships of the First Division. Indeed, this construction fits in with the general scheme of the Act. At the same time, without recourse to s. 43 (1), I would reach the same conclusion on the reading of s. 30 (2) and (3) of the Act. There is nothing in the proviso which cuts down the effect of the charging provision, and I agree with the noble and learned Lord on the Woolsack that these provisions cannot be applied

(8) [1960] 3 All E.R. 367. (9) [1960] 3 All E.R. at p. 377.

A properly if a line has to be drawn when a company ceases one trade and begins another. The plain meaning of s. 30 (3) is that non-distribution relief can be withdrawn by a distribution charge.

I would allow the appeal.

Appeal allowed.

B Solicitors: Solicitor for Scotland of the Board of Inland Revenue, agent for Solicitor for England of the Board of Inland Revenue (for the Crown); E. P. Rugg & Co., agents for Dundas & Wilson, Edinburgh (for the respondents).

[Reported by G. A. KIDNER, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

WEG MOTORS, LTD. v. HALES AND OTHERS.

C [COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Evershed, M.R., Harman and Donovan, L.JJ.), June 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, July 4, 1961.]

Option—Renewal of lease—Option of taking a further lease granted by agreement in writing (but not under seal), executed on same date as lease—Whether option for renewal of lease or void as infringing rule against perpetuities—

D Whether obligation to grant new lease ran with reversion—Whether agreement was "covenant" within Law of Property Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5 c. 20), s. 142 (1).

Mortgage—Charge by way of legal mortgage—Estate of mortgagee—Whether legal term of years vested in chargee—Law of Property Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5 c. 20), s. 87 (2).

E By a mortgage, dated July 8, 1937, G.R.I., Ltd., as the registered proprietors with an absolute title under the Land Registration Act, 1925, of property* in London, including certain land with the garages erected thereon, charged the property by way of legal mortgage to an insurance company. Clause 15 of the mortgage provided that the statutory powers of leasing should not be exercisable by the borrowers without the written

F consent of the lenders except in the case of lettings for any period up to twenty-one years. The charge was registered. By a lease, dated July 26, 1938, G.R.I., Ltd. demised the land with the garages thereon to the plaintiff company for a term of twenty-one years from Dec. 25, 1938, determinable by the lessee at the end of seven or fourteen years, at a rent of £1,500 a year. A clause in the lease referred to "making good [certain matters] at the

G expiration of the term or any renewal thereof". By an agreement (not under seal) made on the same date and between the same parties (referred to therein as "the lessors" and "the lessees"), but signed before the execution of the lease, it was stated that the expressions "lessors" and "lessees" included, wherever appropriate, their respective successors in title, and it was agreed that "In consideration of the lessees taking a lease

H of even date with but executed after these presents from the lessors the lessees shall have the option of taking a further lease of the premises demised by the . . . lease for a term of twenty-one years at the yearly rental of £1,500". By cl. 2 it was agreed that the option should be exercisable by notice in writing given by the lessees to the lessors at any time before Dec. 25, 1959, and that, if and when it should be exercised, the lessors

I should grant "a further lease" of the premises "for the said term (such term to commence from the date of the exercise of the option) at the said rent", and the lessees should thereupon surrender the unexpired residue, if any, of the lease of July 26, 1938. By cl. 3 it was agreed that the lease should be in the form and to the effect of the lease of July 26, 1938. On Jan. 5, 1939, notice of the option was registered in the charges register. On Oct.

---

* The property which was the subject of the legal charge and of the agreements between the defendants comprised not only the property demised to the plaintiff (title No. 348760), but also other property (title Nos. 348759 and 396102).

15, 1941, G.H.C., Ltd., transferees of the freehold, were registered as the proprietors of the land. By an agreement in writing dated Jan. 10, 1947, G.H.C., Ltd. sold the freehold to a friendly society, subject to the plaintiff company's lease and with notice of the option agreement, and, by a transfer dated Feb. 11, 1947, the land was transferred to the trustees of the society, subject to the matters set out in the register of title so far as they were still subsisting and capable of being enforced. By a lease, dated Feb. 11, 1947, the trustees of the friendly society demised the land to G.H.C., Ltd. for a term of one hundred and fifty years from that date, subject to the matters set out in the register, at a yearly rent. By a deed of substituted security, also dated Feb. 11, 1947, and made between G.H.C., Ltd., of the first part, the insurance company, of the second part, and the trustees of the friendly society, of the third part, G.H.C., Ltd. demised the land comprised in the lease of the same date to the insurance company for the term of a hundred and fifty years less the last ten days thereof, and the insurance company surrendered to the trustees of the friendly society the land comprised in the freehold titles to the intent that the term subsisting therein by virtue of, among other deeds, the mortgage of July 8, 1937, might cease and merge in the reversion immediately expectant thereon. No term had, in fact, subsisted under the mortgage, but the insurance company was protected under s. 87 (1) (a) of the Law of Property Act, 1925. On Feb. 21, 1947, the entry on the charges register relating to the mortgage of July 8, 1937, was cancelled. By notices dated Apr. 30, 1959, the plaintiff company's solicitors gave notice to G.H.C., Ltd., the insurance company and the friendly society, requiring a renewed lease of the land for a further term of twenty-one years from the date on which the notices were served, in accordance with the agreement of July 26, 1938. Before giving these notices (and again at a later date) the plaintiff company's solicitors had written to the insurance company explaining the circumstances and asking if the insurance company would be agreeable to the grant of a lease in accordance with the option. In written replies, the assistant investment manager of the insurance company said that the company did not consider that its consent would be required. All moneys due to the insurance company were paid by Sept. 2, 1959. As G.H.C., Ltd. and the trustees of the friendly society refused to grant a lease in accordance with the agreement of July 26, 1938, the plaintiff company brought an action against them for specific performance of the agreement.

Held: the plaintiff company was entitled to specific performance of the option agreement of July 26, 1938, for the following reasons—

(i) the option agreement was not, when it was entered into, a contract to create a term of years and was not, therefore, rendered void by s. 149 (3)* of the Law of Property Act, 1925, for it was not until the option was exercised (in 1959) that the option agreement could be said to create a term of years (see p. 186, letter E, and p. 192, letters F to I, post).

(ii) the execution of the option agreement and of the lease formed a single transaction, since in view of the fact that the " taking of [the] lease of even date " was the expressed consideration for the grant of the option, the option agreement was in truth no more than an offer having no binding effect until the lease was executed, and since the documents were contemporaneous and intimately related (see p. 187, letter D, p. 191, letter G, and p. 191, letter I, to p. 192, letter A, post); accordingly the right and obligation of the option agreement were properly incidents of the demise, were for the renewal of the lease and, as such, were excepted by long established authority from the scope of the rule against perpetuities (see p. 188, letters D to F, post).

Woodall v. Clifton ([1905] 2 Ch. 257) followed as regards the exception.

* The relevant terms of s. 149 (3) are printed at p. 186, letter A, post.

A (iii) if it were necessary that, in order to be within the exception from the application of the rule against perpetuities, the obligation of the option agreement should run with the reversion under s. 142 (1)* of the Law of Property Act, 1925 (Muller v. Trafford, [1901] 1 Ch. 54 considered), the obligation of the option agreement did fall within that subsection because—

(a) the relationship of lessor and lessee subsisted between the parties to B the option agreement when it came into force, viz., when the lease was executed;

(b) neither the fact that the option agreement was a separate document nor the fact that it was not under seal excluded the option agreement from s. 142 (1) (see p. 189, letter I, to p. 190, letter A, and p. 191, letters H and I, post);

C (c) the existence of the legal charge at the time when the option agreement was entered into did not prevent the lessor from satisfying the requirement of s. 142 (1) that he should have "power to bind the reversionary estate immediately expectant on the term granted by the lease" since this objection, based on the charge by way of legal mortgage, was available only to the mortgagee and in fact there was no mortgagee to raise it (see p. 190, letter D, D cf., p. 192, letter E, post); moreover the charge by way of legal mortgage did not have the effect, under s. 87 (2) of the Law of Property Act, 1925, of vesting a term of years in the chargee (see p. 190, letter C, and p. 192, letter D, post).

Decision of DANCKWERTS, J. ([1960] 3 All E.R. 762) affirmed.

[As to an option to renew a lease, see 23 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 473, E para. 1094; and for cases on the subject, see 31 DIGEST (Repl.) 67-69, 2236-2258. For the Law of Property Act, 1925, s. 142 (1), s. 149 (3), see 20 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 734, 753.]

Cases referred to:

Muller v. Trafford, [1901] 1 Ch. 54; 70 L.J.Ch. 72; 31 Digest (Repl.) 470, 5960.

F Rogers v. Hosegood, [1900] 2 Ch. 388; 69 L.J.Ch. 652; 83 L.T. 186; 40 Digest (Repl.) 340, 2769.

Strand & Savoy Properties, Ltd., Re, D.P. Development Co., Ltd. v. Cumbrae Properties, Ltd., [1960] 2 All E.R. 327; [1960] 3 W.L.R. 1; 3rd Digest Supp.

G Woodall v. Clifton, [1905] 2 Ch. 257; 74 L.J.Ch. 555; 93 L.T. 257; 30 Digest (Repl.) 495, 1395.

Appeal.

These were two appeals, by the first three and by the remaining defendants, from an order of DANCKWERTS, J., dated Nov. 3, 1960, and reported [1960] 3 All E.R. 762, granting to the plaintiffs specific performance of an agreement (alleged H to have been constituted on the plaintiffs' exercise of an option) for the grant of a further lease of garages and outbuildings at the rear of a block of flats known as Grove Hall Court, St. John's Wood, London, for a term of twenty-one years from Apr. 30, 1959, at a yearly rent of £1,500. The facts are summarised at pp. 184, 185, post, and are more fully stated in the judgment of DANCKWERTS, J., [1960] 3 All E.R. at pp. 765-769.

I H. A. P. Fisher, Q.C., and A. A. B. Fuller for the defendants.

R. W. Goff, Q.C., and I. M. Phillips for the plaintiffs.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 4. The following judgments were read.

LORD EVERSHED, M.R.: The judgment which I am about to read is the judgment of HARMAN, L.J., and myself and is the judgment in both appeals.

* The relevant terms of s. 142 (1) of the Law of Property Act, 1925, are printed at p. 189, letter F, post.

The long and somewhat complicated history of the title to the premises which are the subject of the present appeals, has been fully set out in the judgment of DANCKWERTS, J., and we do not find it necessary to repeat that history for the purposes of this judgment. The claim in the action arises under an agreement (not under seal) dated July 26, 1938, made between the plaintiffs, Weg Motors, Ltd., who are respondents in this court and a company known as G.R. Investments, Ltd., which has long since ceased to exist, but which at the date of the agreement was the freehold owner of the premises. The purport of the agreement was to give to the plaintiffs the option of " taking a further lease " of the premises for a period of twenty-one years from the date of the exercise of the option at the rent of £1,500 per annum; and the option was expressed to be exercisable " at any time before Dec. 25, 1959 ". The date last mentioned was one more than twenty-one years from the date of the agreement. It is on that fact, for reasons which we will later define, that the defendants, the present appellants, have based their contention that the option agreement was and is ineffective or void at law. The defendants have accordingly submitted that they are entitled to disregard the exercise of the option by the plaintiffs on Apr. 30, 1959. The essential phrase in the option agreement was that which we have already quoted—viz., " taking a further lease " of the premises; and the use of the phrase is explained by the fact that on the same date as that of the option agreement, viz., July 26, 1938, G.R. Investments, Ltd., granted to the plaintiffs a lease of the premises in suit for a term of twenty-one years from Dec. 25, 1938 (a term which would accordingly expire on Dec. 25, 1959). It is, however, important to observe that the lease contained provisions (a) enabling the lessees, i.e., the plaintiffs or their successors in title, to determine the demise at the end of seven or fourteen years and (b) requiring the reinstatement "at the expiration of the term or any renewal thereof " of certain openings in party walls between the demised premises and adjoining premises which the plaintiffs were given by the lease authority to make.

We shall revert hereafter to the terms of the lease and (more patricularly) to those of the option agreement. It may be convenient at this point to summarise the other facts relating to the title, the history of which, as we have said, was fully related by the learned judge. They are as follows:—

(1) At the date of the option agreement and the lease the freehold interest of G.R. Investments, Ltd. was subject to a mortgage dated July 8, 1937, by way of legal charge in favour of the Standard Life Assurance Co. of Edinburgh. The mortgage provided that the statutory powers of leasing should not be exercisable by the borrowers without the written consent of the mortgagees, but such prohibition was expressed not to be applicable to leases for any period up to twenty-one years.

(2) The land in question being registered land, G.R. Investments, Ltd., had been registered as proprietors with absolute title in 1934 and the mortgage was also duly registered in the charges register. The lease of July 26, 1938, was duly entered in the register and similarly there was entered on the register a notice of the option agreement, such entry being prior to any of the subsequent dealings with the premises.

(3) As a result of various transactions dated in 1947, the freehold of the premises became in that year vested in the trustees of the Royal Liver Friendly Society who in February, 1947, granted a lease to the fourth defendants, Grove Hall Court, Ltd., for a term of one hundred and fifty years subject to the lease of 1938. At or about the same time the Standard Life Assurance Co. accepted a charge on the one hundred and fifty years' term in substitution for their charge on the freehold of the premises which they released. At the time of the transactions mentioned in this paragraph the trustees of the Royal Liver Friendly Society, Grove Hall Court, Ltd., and the Standard Life Assurance Co. all had full notice of the option agreement, and the last named company later expressed the view through its agent (the assistant investment manager) on receiving

A notice from the plaintiffs of their intended exercise of the option in April, 1959, that no consent to the grant of the new lease was, on their part, required. In fact, on or before Sept. 2, 1959, all moneys due to the Standard Life Assurance Co. on their mortgage were paid off and such mortgage discharged accordingly.

(4) After the date of the commencement of the present proceedings the unexpired residue of the term of one hundred and fifty years was assigned by Grove B Hall Court, Ltd., to Daejan Investments (Grove Hall), Ltd., who were added as fifth defendants to the action.

Although before DANCKWERTS, J., the first three defendants (being the present trustees of the Royal Liver Friendly Society) were separately represented, in this court all five defendants have made common cause as appellants.

It was the foundation of the judgment of the learned judge that the option C agreement and the lease respectively of July 26, 1938, were part of a single transaction. Consequentially on this finding the learned judge proceeded to hold (a) that the obligation of G.R. Investments, Ltd., was a covenant or obligation on their part for the renewal of the lease and, as such, fell within the long-established rule of law exempting such obligations or covenants from the application of the so-called "rule against perpetuities", (b) that, if necessary so to D decide, such obligation or covenant ran with the reversion expectant on the lease within the meaning of s. 142 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, so as to bind the fourth and fifth defendants and (if requisite) the first three defendants, (c) that the interest of the Standard Life Assurance Co. was not such as to vest in them a reversion to the said lease or any relevant interest in such reversion so as to qualify his immediately preceding conclusion and (d) (founding himself, as it was E conceded in his court that he should do, on a decision of BUCKLEY, J., in Re Strand & Savoy Properties, Ltd., D.P. Development Co., Ltd. v. Cumbrae Properties, Ltd. (1)) that the option contract was not rendered void by the terms of s. 149 (3) of the Law of Property Act, 1925.

Counsel for the defendants very naturally and forcibly, directed his main attack on the premise to the conclusions which we have set out. It was the con- F tention of counsel for the defendants, expressed in summary form, that although it might no doubt be true that in a somewhat loose or broad "business" sense, the option agreement and the lease could fairly be called a single transaction, yet in truth the parties thereto deliberately chose—and chose no doubt with an eye on the restricted leasing power comprised in the original mortgage—to carry through the transaction by means of two separate and distinct instruments; G with the result that the obligation of G.R. Investments, Ltd. (and of those others who might be bound thereby) could not be properly regarded as though it were a covenant for renewal in the lease, so as to fall within the historic exception to the perpetuity rule, but must be strictly construed in accordance with the terms of the option agreement itself and so construed could not fairly be described as necessarily capable of taking effect as a covenant for renewal; with the result H that the agreement must fail in effect through remoteness. As this argument must lie at the root of this court's conclusion of the appeal as it lay at the root of the judgment under appeal, and as the argument was put forward with great force and persuasiveness, it will be necessary to examine closely the terms of the agreement and its relation to the lease of the same date. Since, however, the argument raised under s. 149 of the Act of 1925 is not only quite distinct from I the other questions in the case but also, if well founded, would be conclusive against the plaintiffs whatever be the answer to such other questions, it will be convenient to deal first with the argument on that section. It may also be stated that the point taken in the court below that the action was not properly constituted in the absence of G.R. Investments, Ltd.—a point which the learned judge unhesitatingly rejected—has not been put forward by counsel for the defendants in this court. It is therefore unnecessary to say anything more about it.

---

(1) [1960] 2 All E.R. 327.

Section 149 (3) of the Law of Property Act, 1925, provides: A

> " A term, at a rent or granted in consideration of a fine, limited after the commencement of this Act to take effect more than twenty-one years from the date of the instrument purporting to create it, shall be void, and any contract made after such commencement to create such a term shall likewise be void . . ." B

It is to be observed that the section cited has to be read in conjunction with certain unrepealed parts of the Law of Property Act, 1922 (which came into operation like the Act of 1925 on Jan. 1, 1926), particularly certain paragraphs of Sch. 15 to the Act of 1922. For the purposes of the present appeal, however, it is unnecessary to refer to the latter statutory provisions. For present purposes the question is, in our judgment, an extremely short one—viz., does the option C agreement of July, 1938, fall within the scope of the language in s. 149 (3) of the Act of 1925 as being a contract " to create such a term " as therein mentioned? The view of the learned author of the note to the section in WOLSTENHOLME AND CHERRY'S CONVEYANCING STATUTES (12th Edn.), Vol. 1, p. 497, appears clearly to have been that a contract to create a term of years, which might begin to take effect more than twenty-one years from the date of the contract, D fell within the vice of the subsection. It was this view that BUCKLEY, J., rejected in the case already cited; and he did so on the basis that the phrase " such a term " could in its context refer and refer only to a term commencing more than twenty-one years from the instrument purporting to create the term, that is to say, the lease executed in pursuance of the contract and not the contract itself. We must not be taken to be expressing any doubt of the correctness of E the decision of BUCKLEY, J. But in the present case we are concerned not with a contract, that is a binding agreement, to grant and take a lease, but with an option which might never be exercised and cannot, until exercised, be in any event said, in our judgment, to create a term of years at all. It follows, therefore, in our view, that the option agreement with which we are concerned cannot be said to be such a contract as is comprehended in s. 149 (3) of the Act of 1925. The F challenge to the plaintiffs based on that section must therefore fail.

We return to the option agreement, and since so many of the points in argument turned on its exact language, and since the document is short, we set it out substantially in full:

> " An agreement made the 26th day of July, 1938 between G.R. Investments, Ltd., . . . (hereinafter called ' the lessors ' that term including G wherever appropriate their successors in title) of the one part and Weg Motors, Ltd. . . . (hereinafter called ' the lessees ' that term including wherever appropriate their successors in title) of the other part
>
> " Whereby it is agreed as follows:
>
> " 1. In consideration of the lessees taking a lease of even date with but H executed after these presents from the lessors the lessees shall have the option of taking a further lease of the premises demised by the above mentioned lease for a term of twenty-one years at the yearly rental of £1,500.
>
> " 2. The said option shall be exercisable by notice in writing given by the lessees to the lessors at any time before the 25th day of December, 1959, and if and when the same shall be exercised then the lessors shall grant and I the lessees shall accept a further lease of the said premises for the said term (such term to commence from the date of the exercise of the option) at the said rent and the lessees shall thereupon surrender the unexpired residue (if any) of the above mentioned lease of the 26th July, 1938 to the lessors who shall accept such surrender.
>
> " 3. The lease shall be in the form and to the effect of the above mentioned lease of the 26th day of July, 1938.
>
> " As witness, etc."

A It may be noted as a matter of almost piquant interest, but not of relevance to the case, that this somewhat unusual document appears to have been executed by the same individual on behalf respectively of both contracting parties.

The first point to notice—and it is in our judgment one of considerable importance—is that the expressed consideration moving from the "lessees" is that, not of promising to execute a lease in a form already prepared and identified, but B of "taking a lease of even date with but executed after these presents". As the learned judge observed, it is in fact impossible to execute two documents at precisely the same time. No doubt, as counsel for the defendants pointed out, it was deliberately contrived that the signing of the option should by some period of time, however short, precede the signing of the lease so as to avoid any suggestion that the consideration given by the lessees for the option was a past con- C sideration. But although there was no evidence of what exactly happened on this July date in 1938, it must clearly be inferred that the execution of the lease immediately followed that of the option agreement. The relevant words, after all, are "executed after these presents" and not "to be executed . . .". What is more (and more important) no binding contract came into existence until the lease was in fact executed. The option document, although expressed to be an D agreement, was in truth a mere offer having no binding effect until the lease was executed, the execution being in fact the acceptance of the offer so that no agreement for an option came into existence until the relationship of lessor and lessee existed between the parties. It follows in our judgment that the execution of the two documents did in a real, and not merely a loose sense, form a single transaction, viz., the grant of a lease coupled with the option. Further, the E substantial contemporaneity of the two documents and their essential and intimate relationship has, we think, a strong influence on the matters of construction next to be discussed.

We turn to the definition of the two parties to the agreement called respectively "the lessors" and "the lessees" "that term including wherever appropriate their successors in title". Counsel for the defendants laid considerable emphasis F on the difference in language between these definitions and those to be found in the lease. In the latter document G.R. Investments, Ltd., are defined as "The lessor which expression shall include the reversioner for the time being immediately expectant on the term hereby created . . ." and the plaintiffs as "the lessee which expression shall include its successors and assigns . . ." Counsel for the defendants contended, particularly in light of this variation in terminology, G that by "successors in title" in the option agreement was meant those who might by appropriate assignment succeed to the obligation and benefit respectively of the agreement, whether or not they were also respectively successors in title to the reversion and the lease. Like the learned judge, we have been unable to accept that view. In our judgment, having regard to the nature and purport of the option agreement and to the intimate relation between the agreement and H the lease already noticed, the terms of the definition in the agreement must have been intended to limit its effect to the two parties thereto so long as they retained the quality of being respectively "lessors" and "lessees" and thereafter to those who should succeed to the reversion immediately expectant on the lease, on the one hand, and to the lease on the other. No doubt an express assignment of the benefit of the option agreement would be necessary to its effective implementation I by subsequent holders of the plaintiffs' title under the lease. But it follows in our judgment inevitably from our last conclusion that, according to the true construction of the agreement, and in particular of cl. 2 thereof, the option would only be exercisable by the plaintiffs or by any assignees of the benefit of the option agreement so long as the lease continued to subsist and the plaintiffs or such assignees respectively continued to have vested in them the term of the lease. DANCKWERTS, J., was of the same opinion though he also took the view that, if necessary, a term could and should be implied in the option agreement so to limit the duration of the option and the right to exercise it. For our part we prefer to base ourselves on what we hold to be the true construction of the instrument itself. Counsel for the defendants contended that on the true construction of its language the plaintiffs (or some assignee of the plaintiffs' rights under the agreement) might still assert the benefit of the agreement notwithstanding that they had previously determined the lease under the powers in that respect therein contained; and he relied somewhat in support of that argument on the two words "(if any)" after the phrase "surrender the unexpired residue" towards the end of cl. 2 of the agreement. We cannot agree; and, as regards the last mentioned point, the words "if any" were in our view merely intended to cover the case where the lease was still subsisting but the option was exercised at some date prior to Dec. 25, 1959.

We do not overlook the impressive point made by counsel for the defendants that the court's duty is to give effect to that which in fact the parties to any transaction or arrangement have chosen to bring about in accordance with the method which they have selected and not to disregard that method because they might well—and perhaps even should—have gone about their business in a different, a simpler, a more usual way. Nonetheless we have in the end come to the conclusion, in light of the circumstances of the execution of the option agreement and the lease (as we have felt bound to assume them to have been) and particularly of the fact that (as earlier stated) the agreement only became effective as such on the execution of the lease and in light also of our construction of the option agreement itself, that the agreement and lease formed a single transaction so that the former was in truth an addendum or appendix to the latter and the plaintiffs' right under the option agreement and G.R. Investments, Ltd.'s corresponding obligation may properly be said to have been an incident of the demise. We add that we obtain some slight support for this view from the reference to any renewal of the lease in the provision therein contained in regard to the restoration of the contemplated wall opening to which we have earlier referred.

If we are so far right, it follows that the right and obligation under the option agreement were a right and obligation, properly so called, for renewal of the lease of 1938. It follows also that the right and obligation prima facie fall into the class excepted by long established authority from the challenge of remoteness. Nevertheless that is still not the end of the matter. If the excepted class is long established, its basis and justification appear somewhat lost in the mists of antiquity. A basis and justification for the exception were stated by FARWELL, J., in 1901 in Muller v. Trafford (2), and if they were correctly stated by him, then the question remains whether the present case, in all its circumstances, including the existence of the original mortgage in favour of the Standard Life Assurance Co., can properly be said to fall within the exception having regard to the impact of s. 142 of the Law of Property Act, 1925.

In Muller v. Trafford (2) FARWELL, J., had based his conclusion in favour of the defendant in the first place on the view that the covenant in question was personal to the covenantor. On that view the covenant was not a covenant "running with the land". The learned judge proceeded then to consider what the result would be if his first conclusion was not well founded. To that extent what he then stated may be said to have been obiter. The material passage is as follows (3):

> "But now I will assume that this is a covenant for renewal running with the land: it is then in my opinion free from any taint of perpetuity, because it is annexed to the land. See Rogers v. Hosegood (4): 'The accurate expression appears to me to be that the covenants' (i.e., running with the land) 'are annexed to the land and pass with it in much the same way as title deeds'. That is adopted by the Court of Appeal as correct, and the same phrase, 'annexed to the land', is used by COLLINS, L.J., in delivering

(2) [1901] 1 Ch. 54. (3) [1901] 1 Ch. at p. 61. (4) [1900] 2 Ch. 388.

A the judgment of the court. He then goes on to say, after referring to the cases (5): 'These observations, which are just as applicable to the benefit reserved as to the burden imposed, show that in equity, just as at law, the first point to be determined is whether the covenant or contract in its inception binds the land'. It must bind the land from its inception, because it would otherwise be an executory interest in land arising in futuro, and B therefore obnoxious to the rules against perpetuity. Perpetuity has no application to covenants which run with the land, because they are so annexed to the land as to create something in the nature of an interest in the land. As between lessor and lessee, therefore, the lessee accepts and the lessor grants something which is more or less, according to the point of view from which you look at it, than the actual term or interest granted. It is a C term subject to something and with the benefit of something. It is a reversion subject to something and with the benefit of something, and those two somethings are annexed to and form part of the land from the beginning of the term in such a sense that the doctrine of perpetuity has no application."

D It was, therefore, the view of that very learned judge that the so-called doctrine of perpetuity did not apply to covenants for renewal of a lease, because such covenants—like other covenants running with the land—are annexed to the land and "form part of it ab initio". On this view it was contended that, even though the option agreement and the lease form one transaction, none the less the "covenant for renewal" in the present case is not in the lease itself, but outside it and, therefore (according to the defendants), outside the scope of s. 142 E of the Act of 1925 wherein is now stated the law as to the obligations of a lessor under covenants by him which run with the reversion. It remains to consider this point. Section 142 (1) provides:

> "The obligation under a condition or of a covenant entered into by a lessor with reference to the subject-matter of the lease shall, if and as far as F the lessor has power to bind the reversionary estate immediately expectant on the term granted by the lease, be annexed and incident to and shall go with that reversionary estate, or the several parts thereof, notwithstanding severance of that reversionary estate, and may be taken advantage of and enforced by the person in whom the term is from time to time vested by conveyance, devolution in law, or otherwise; and, if and as far as the G lessor has power to bind the person from time to time entitled to that reversionary estate, the obligation aforesaid may be taken advantage of and enforced against any person so entitled."

(a) The first objection taken is that the section deals with the lessor's covenants and that the covenantor was not the lessor when the contract was made. This is the same point as that with which we have already dealt and the fallacy is H that it treats the option as a concluded agreement before the execution of the lease. In our judgment this is wrong and the relationship of lessor and lessee did exist between the parties when the contract to grant an option came into force.

(b) Next, it is said that this covenant, like the covenants referred to in the preceding s. 141 which deals with the benefits of lessee's covenants, only applies I to covenants contained in the lease. That is so in the case of s. 141, but in this s. 142 the language is different. It is "entered into by a lessor with reference to the subject-matter of the lease". We take "subject-matter" to mean the demised property. This contract satisfies those words, and we see no reason why, provided the relationship of lessor and lessee exists, a covenant to renew should not be included in an independent document.

(c) It is next objected that the option contract is under hand only. We have been unable to see the force of this. The lease itself would have taken effect in equity if under hand only, and we do not think that the word " covenant " in s. 142 is limited to covenants under seal.

(5) [1900] 2 Ch. at p. 405.

(d) It is next objected that a covenant will only bind the reversion

> " if and as far as the lessor has power to bind the reversionary estate immediately expectant on the term granted by the lease."

It is said that this condition is not satisfied, because at the time when the contract was entered into, the freehold was subject to a mortgage in favour of the Standard Life Assurance Co. and that although this instrument was expressed to be made by charge by way of legal mortgage, the effect of s. 87 of the Law of Property Act, 1925, was to vest a term in the mortgagee. In our judgment this is precisely what the section does not do. It provides that the mortgagee shall have the same protection and so forth as if a mortgage term had been created in his favour. That is to say that he has in fact no term. Moreover, s. 87 (2) enables a mortgagee to convert his mortgage into a charge by way of legal mortgage and provides that in that case the mortgage term shall be extinguished. This seems to us conclusive that the chargee by way of legal mortgage has no term.

In our judgment, even if that conclusion be wrong, the mortgagor being the freeholder can create against all the world except his mortgagee any right or estate he chooses in the land so that even if an option was beyond the mortgagor's powers and could not have prevailed against the mortgagee either as being a lease extending beyond the term of twenty-one years without leave or not being at the best rent, this is not a point which can be relied on except by the mortgagee himself who in this case raised no objection. Apart from this, the charge by way of legal mortgage imposing these terms about leasing was surrendered by the mortgagee by the deed of substituted security executed in 1947. In addition the substituted charge on the term of one hundred and fifty years was released in September, 1959, so that there is no encumbrancer to take any objection. It follows in our opinion that if the case has to rest on s. 142, the provisions of that section are no bar to the plaintiffs' rights. If, on the other hand, the so-called anomalous rule under which covenants to renew leases are said not to be obnoxious to the rule against remoteness needs no other explanation than that it was settled law long before the modern rule against remoteness was perfected, and has not been affected by it, then in our judgment this was, truly construed, a covenant to renew a lease and therefore valid. As ROMER, L.J., observed in Woodall v. Clifton (6)

> ". . . a covenant to renew . . . has been held to run with the reversion, though the fact that a covenant to renew should be held to run with the land has by many been considered as an anomaly, which it is too late now to question, though it is difficult to justify."

For the reasons which we have given, we think the appeals fail and should be dismissed.

DONOVAN, L.J.: The defendants' principal contention is that while covenants for renewal of leases are in general unaffected by the rule against remoteness of vesting (which for brevity I will call " the rule "), this is not true of any such covenant which is contained in some document separate from the lease itself, as in the present case. The distinction follows, it is said, from the reason why covenants for renewal in a lease are immune from the rule. It is this: that such covenants confer an immediate interest in the land; they are annexed and are incident to the reversion, which they bind; and these are attributes which such covenants now derive from s. 142 of the Law of Property Act, 1925—which I will hereafter refer to as " the Act ". In support of these propositions the decision in Muller v. Trafford (7) is cited. It follows, say the defendants, that

(6) [1905] 2 Ch. at p. 279. (7) [1901] 1 Ch. 54.

A any covenant for renewal which is outside s. 142 is not immune from the operation of the rule; and such a covenant when contained in a separate document is outside the section. Accordingly, the option agreement in the present case has no immunity, it offends against the rule, and it is therefore void.

The plaintiffs' reply to this is that a covenant for renewal of a lease enjoys immunity from the rule apart altogether from s. 142, and has done so from time B immemorial though the precise reason cannot now be given (see Woodall v. Clifton (8)). Alternatively they say that if it is necessary for the option agreement to qualify as a covenant within s. 142, it does so notwithstanding that it is contained in a document separate from the lease.

I leave aside the defendants' first contention, for unless one knows the underlying reasons for it, it is impossible to do justice to it. Assuming therefore, C without deciding, that only those covenants coming within s. 142 of the Act now qualify for immunity from the rule, one notices first that the statute of Henry 8, 32 Henry 8 c. 34, s. 2, the prime ancestor of s. 142, dealt only with covenants "expressed in the indenture", and naturally the defendants rely on this fact. Furthermore, s. 141 of the Act, dealing with the benefit of covenants contained in a lease, refers specifically in sub-s. (1) to "rent reserved by a lease, and the D benefit of every covenant or provision therein contained . . .". The defendants ask that s. 142 shall be correspondingly construed. The argument is reinforced by the following considerations. First, it is pointed out that the parties to a covenant for renewal contained in some document other than the lease might not at the time be lessor and lessee of the premises concerned. There would then be no existing reversion for their agreement to bind. It is contended that such E was indeed the position in the present case. Next, while it is conceded that a covenant need not be under seal, it is otherwise when, as here, the lease itself has to be under seal. An agreement for renewal in some separate document must then also be under seal in order to be a covenant for the purpose of s. 142.

These matters are at bottom, I think, questions of construction of s. 142 to be considered against the background of the general law of real property. The section F does not in terms require a covenant for renewal to be in the lease itself. In this respect it differs from the statute of Henry 8 and s. 141 of the Act, and the difference seems to me to tell as much in favour of the respondents as the appellants. The argument would be stronger if it were true, that when the option agreement was signed, the relationship of lessor and lessee of the premises affected had not been brought into being, but I think that it had. The terms of that G agreement are that "in consideration of the lessees taking a lease . . . the lessees shall have the option of taking a further lease . . .". The agreement, therefore, had no binding effect until the lease was executed and the parties had become respectively lessor and lessee thereunder. Up to that moment the so-called agreement was really no more than an offer stipulating the mode of acceptance, viz., the taking of the lease.

H As to the necessity for the covenant to renew to be under seal, again no requirement to this effect is in s. 142. Counsel for the plaintiffs also points out that if the lease itself had been under hand only, it would still have been effective in equity as an agreement for a lease and as such could have been specifically enforced. There would, therefore, seem little point in insisting that the covenant for renewal should be under seal. With this I would agree.

I So far, therefore, I think the defendants' contentions fail. In my view the option agreement was truly an option to renew a lease. As a matter of construction I think that it has effect only while the relationship of lessor and lessee subsists between the parties or their assigns, and that it is unnecessary to imply a term to that effect. If it be necessary that the agreement should qualify as a covenant within s. 142, I think that it does so, notwithstanding that it is contained in a separate document. The whole transaction was clearly one, though two documents were used; and when the option agreement was signed, the parties had become lessor and lessee respectively of the premises concerned. A

(8) [1905] 2 Ch. at p. 268.

Additional contentions were raised by the defendants. It was said that under s. 142 a covenant entered into by a lessor with reference to the subject-matter of the lease ran with the reversion only in so far as the lessor had power to bind the reversionary estate immediately expectant on the term granted by the lease; and that here G.R. Investments, Ltd., the lessors, had no power at the time to bind that reversion. The reason suggested is that the reversion immediately expectant on the lease which they granted to the plaintiffs on July 26, 1938, was a term of years vested in the Standard Life Assurance Co., as mortgagees under a mortgage of the premises dated July 8, 1937. This was a mortgage by way of legal charge, and accordingly the mortgagees had, under s. 87 (1) of the Act, not an actual term of years, but B C

> ". . . the same protection, powers and remedies . . . as if . . . (a) . . . a mortgage term for three thousand years . . . had been thereby created in favour of the mortgagee . . ."

I agree with counsel for the plaintiffs reply on this point to the effect that the section does not create even a notional term of years in the mortgagee, but simply defines what protection, powers and remedies the mortgagee is to have. This conclusion is unaffected by the further provisions of the Act to which counsel for the defendants drew attention, viz., s. 1 (2) and (4), s. 205 (1) (x) and the statutory note to Sch. 5, Form No. 1. D

Since G.R. Investments, Ltd., was a mortgagor of the land at the time of the grant of the option to renew the lease, such renewed lease would, by s. 99 of the Act, have to reserve "the best rent that can reasonably be obtained . . ." (see s. 99 (6)). It is said for the defendants that in 1959, £1,500 did not answer that description. The plaintiffs might well have been in a difficulty vis-à-vis the mortgagee on this point, but he has never raised it. In any event the mortgagee took in 1947 a fresh and substituted security for the mortgage debt, and that debt has since been paid off. I do not think any point is open to the plaintiffs on s. 99 (6). E F

Finally, it is argued that the option to renew is void under s. 149 (3) of the Act as a contract to create a term limited to take effect more than twenty-one years after the date of the contract. The learned judge rejected this contention, and in doing so based himself on a judgment of BUCKLEY, J., to the effect that s. 149 (3) on its true construction referred in this respect only to contracts to grant a lease which when created would be a reversionary lease taking effect more than twenty-one years from the date of such lease (see Re Strand & Savoy Properties, Ltd. (9)). Without in any way differing from this view, I would observe that in the present case there is in fact no contract to create a term limited to take effect more than twenty-one years after the date of the contract. The option agreement enabled the plaintiffs to call for a new lease at any time after the original lease was taken and before Dec. 25, 1959. So that even if the defendants' construction of s. 149 (3) were right, the facts provide no foundation for it. One is dealing here not with the rule, but with a statute, and the language of s. 149 (3) seems to me to postulate a term which will inevitably, not merely possibly, begin outside the period of twenty-one years. G H

On the whole case, therefore, I also think that the learned judge came to a right conclusion, and that these appeals should be dismissed. I Appeals dismissed. Leave to appeal to the House of Lords granted.

Solicitors: Franks, Charlesly & Co. (for the defendants); Curwen, Carter & Evans (for the plaintiffs).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

---

(9) [1960] 2 All E.R. 327.

A

Re DU CROS' SETTLEMENT.
DU CROS FAMILY TRUSTEE CO., LTD. v. DU CROS AND OTHERS.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Pennycuick, J.), July 3, 1961.]

B Settlement—Construction—Beneficial trusts—"Male issue" and "male descendants"—Whether restricted to the male line of descent.

A settlement provided by cl. 5 (iii) that the trustees should hold the remaining six-twentieth parts of the trust fund—(a) as to one-half of the income thereof on trust to pay and divide the same between "such of the brothers of the settlor of the first part as shall for the time being be living C and the male issue for the time being living of such of the said brothers of the settlor of the first part as shall be dead . . ." and (b) as to the remaining one-half of the income thereof to pay and divide the same among "such of the male descendants of Harvey du Cros the founder of the Harvey Co. as shall for the time being be responsible for the active management of the business of the Harvey Co. . . ." The questions arose whether (1) the D expression in para. (a) of cl. 5 (iii) included only the sons for the time being living of deceased brothers of the settlor of the first part; or included only the sons and remoter male issue in the exclusively male line for the time being living of the deceased brothers of the settlor of the first part; or included all the male children and remoter issue for the time being living of deceased brothers of the settlor of the first part; and whether (2) the E expression in para. (b) included only the sons and remoter male issue in the exclusively male line of Harvey du Cros or included all his male children and remoter issue.

Held: (i) the expression "male issue" in para. (a) of cl. 5 (iii) was a legal term of art and, as there was no context in the settlement to the contrary, the expression denoted only the sons and remoter male issue in F the exclusively male line for the time being living of the deceased brothers of the settlor of the first part (see p. 197, letter E, post).

Lambert v. Peyton ((1860), 8 H.L. Cas. 1), Lywood v. Kimber ((1860), 29 Beav. 38), and Allen v. Crane ((1953), 89 C.L.R. 152) followed.

(ii) "male descendants" was an expression of ordinary speech wherein it normally meant male descendants of the propositus whether through G males or females; if, however, in law the court were bound to give to the expression prima facie a meaning limiting it to male descendants of males, yet that meaning would yield to small indication to the contrary in the context; in the present case the use of two different expressions "male issue" and "male descendants" in successive paragraphs provided such a context and indicated that the expression "male descendants" was in- H tended to include male descendants whether through the female or male line (see p. 199, letter I, to p. 200, letter A, post).

Oddie v. Woodford ((1821), 3 My. & Cr. 584); Bernal v. Bernal ((1838), 3 My. & Cr. 559); and Thellusson v. Lord Rendlesham ((1859), 7 H.L. Cas. 429) distinguished.

Allen v. Crane ((1953), 89 C.L.R. 152) applied.

I [As to rules of construction of a gift to "issue male" or "male descendants", see 34 HALSBURY'S LAWS (2nd Edn.) 317, para. 365; and for cases on the subject, see 44 DIGEST 850, 7035-7042, 861, 7164-7166.]

Cases referred to:

Allen v. Crane, (1953), 89 C.L.R. 152; [1953] A.L.R. 959; 27 A.L.J. 538; 3rd Digest Supp.

Bernal v. Bernal, (1838), 7 L.J.Ch. 115; 3 My. & Cr. 559; 40 E.R. 1050; 44 Digest 533, 3499.

Lambert v. Peyton, (1860), 8 H.L. Cas. 1; 11 E.R. 325; 40 Digest (Repl.) 522, 338. A Lywood v. Kimber, (1860), 29 Beav. 38; 54 E.R. 539; sub nom. Lywood v. Warwick, 30 L.J.Ch. 507; 7 Jur. N.S. 507; 44 Digest 861, 7165.

Oddie v. Woodford, (1821), 3 My. & Cr. 584; 40 E.R. 1052; on appeal (1825), 3 My. & Cr. 625; 40 E.R. 1067; 44 Digest 850, 7035.

Thellusson v. Rendlesham (Lord), Thellusson v. Thellusson, Hare v. Robarts, (1859), 7 H.L. Cas. 429; 28 L.J.Ch. 948; 11 E.R. 172; sub nom. Thellusson v. Robarts, Hare v. Robarts, Rendlesham v. Robarts, 33 L.T.O.S. 379; 44 Digest 559, 3753. B

Adjourned Summons.

This was an application by originating summons dated June 21, 1960, by the plaintiff, du Cros Family Trustee Co., Ltd., which was trustee of a settlement dated Jan. 18, 1936, made between William Ernest du Cros and others. The application was to determine, inter alia, (i) whether on the true construction of cl. 5 (iii) (a) of the settlement the expression " male issue for the time being living of such of the said brothers of the settlor of the first part as shall be dead " (a) included only the sons for the time being living of deceased brothers of William Ernest du Cros, deceased; or (b) included only the sons and remoter male issue in the exclusively male line for the time being living of the deceased brothers of William Ernest du Cros; or (c) included all the male children and remoter issue for the time being living of deceased brothers of William Ernest du Cros; and (ii) whether on the true construction of cl. 5 (iii) (b) of the settlement the expression " male descendants of Harvey du Cros " (a) included only the sons and remoter male issue in the exclusively male line of William Harvey du Cros, deceased; or (b) included all the male children and remoter issue of William Harvey du Cros. The defendants were (1) Sir Philip Harvey du Cros, Bart., (2) Arthur Roy Peter du Cros, (3) Verena Eleanor du Cros, (3a) Peter Maurice Barclay, (4) Edward Pierre du Cros, (5) Agnes Mary du Cros, (6) Arthur Claude Philip Mallet du Cros, (7) Julian Claude Arthur du Cros, (8) Harvey du Cros, (9) Charles Gilbert Borlase du Cros Snell, (10) Spencer William Harvey du Cros, (11) Barry Jackson du Cros, (12) Patrick Jackson du Cros, (13) Patrick Graham Hedley-Dent, (14) Enid Mary Thompson, and (15) George Thomas Gordon Stevens. The defendants all claimed to be interested (in the case of the third and third (a) defendants, as personal representatives of Harvey Arthur William du Cros, deceased, in the case of the fifth defendant as personal representative of George Louis du Cros, deceased, in the case of the fourteenth defendant as being interested in the estate of William Ernest du Cros, and in the case of the fifteenth defendant as the personal representative of Dame Florence May du Cros, deceased), under the trusts of the settlement dated Jan. 18, 1936. C D E F G

J. A. Wolfe for the plaintiff.

G. T. Hesketh for the first and second defendants. H

N. C. H. Browne-Wilkinson for the third, third (a), fourth and fifth defendants.

D. G. Scott for the sixth, seventh and eighth defendants.

J. Bradburn for the ninth, eleventh and twelfth defendants.

L. H. L. Cohen for the tenth, fourteenth and fifteenth defendants.

Martin Roth for the thirteenth defendant.

I

PENNYCUICK, J.: This summons raises a number of questions on a settlement dated Jan. 18, 1936, made between William Ernest du Cros, described as " the first settlor ", his son Spencer William Harvey du Cros, described as " the second settlor ", Lady Florence May du Cros, who also contributed something to the settlement, and a number of other parties.

The settlement contains a number of provisions not now in point which are to take effect until the death of the first settlor and the survivor of the wife of the first settlor and a lady called Mrs. Mary Anastasia Thompson. Mrs. Thompson

A died on Nov. 6, 1955, and those provisions then ceased to operate. Clause 5 of the settlement which gives rise to the present question is, so far as now material, in the following terms:

> "Subject as aforesaid the trustees shall after the death of the first settlor and . . . Mrs. Thompson hold the trust fund and the future income thereof upon the trusts and subject to the provisions hereinafter declared concerning the same that is to say (i) the trustees shall hold fourteen-twentieth parts of the trust fund . . ."

B

on certain trusts operative during the life of the second settlor (who is still alive) and any widow of his. Then there is a trust for the children of the second settlor and an ultimate trust. With those fourteen-twentieth parts the present question is not concerned.

C

Sub-paragraphs (iii) and (iv) of cl. 5 are as follows:

> "(iii) The trustees shall hold the remaining six-twentieth parts of the trust fund upon the trusts and for the following purposes namely: (a) as to one-half of the income of such six-twentieth parts or the investments for the time being representing the same on trust during the lives of the issue now living of His Majesty King George V and the lives and life of the survivors and survivor of such issue and the period of twenty-one years after the death of such survivor and for such further period (if any) as shall be allowed by law to pay and divide the same between such of the brothers of the settlor of the first part as shall for the time being be living and the male issue for the time being living of such of the said brothers of the settlor of the first part as shall be dead and who shall have attained the age of twenty-one years per capita and not per stirpes in equal shares.
>
> "(b) As to the remaining one-half of the income of such six-twentieth parts on trust during the lives of the issue now living of His Majesty King George V and the lives and life of the survivors and survivor of such issue and the period of twenty-one years after the death of such survivor and for such further period (if any) as shall be allowed by law to pay and divide the whole or such part of the same and in such proportions as the trustees in their absolute discretion may think fit among such of the male descendants of Harvey du Cros the founder of the Harvey Co. as shall for the time being be responsible for the active management of the business of the Harvey Co. or any part of it and/or its subsidiary and associated companies Provided always that if at any time the trustees in their absolute discretion are of the opinion that the income received by them under this clause is in excess of what they may deem necessary or advisable to divide then they may add such surplus to the income distributable under sub-cl. (a) of this clause and pay and apply the same accordingly.
>
> "(iv) Subject as aforesaid the trustees shall hold the said six-twentieth parts of the trust fund and the future income thereof in trust for all the male descendants of the said Harvey du Cros who shall be living at the time when the period mentioned in the preceding sub-cl. (a) and sub-cl. (b) shall determine and who shall have attained the age of twenty-one years and if more than one in equal shares."

D E F G H

There is nothing else in the settlement which bears directly on the present question except that in one or two passages in the settlement the expression "child or children" is used.

I

Harvey du Cros, the founder of the Harvey Co., was the father of the first settlor. The first settlor is dead, but his son, the second settlor, is still alive. He has no son. The first settlor had a number of brothers, all of whom are now dead. Certain of the brothers had sons who are now living, and some of those sons have sons now living. In addition some of the brothers had daughters who have sons now living. It is unnecessary to go in detail into the particulars of the family. The first two questions raised by the summons have been argued together, and are in these terms:

> "(1) Whether on the true construction of cl. 5 (iii) (a) of the settlement the expression 'male issue for the time being living of such of the said brothers of the settlor of the first part as shall be dead' (a) includes only the sons for the time being living of deceased brothers of the late William Ernest du Cros; or (b) includes only the sons and remoter male issue in the exclusively male line for the time being living of the deceased brothers of the said William Ernest du Cros; or (c) includes all the male children and remoter issue for the time being living of deceased brothers of the said William Ernest du Cros.
>
> "(2) Whether on the true construction of cl. 5 (iii) (b) of the settlement the expression 'male descendants of Harvey du Cros' (a) includes only the sons and remoter male issue in the exclusively male line of the late William Harvey du Cros; or (b) includes all the male children and remoter issue of the said William Harvey du Cros."

On the first question I have felt very little doubt. The trust in sub-cl. (iii) (a) of cl. 5 is for > ". . . such of the brothers of the settlor of the first part as shall for the time being be living and the male issue for the time being living of such of the said brothers of the settlor of the first part as shall be dead . . ."

As between the sons of brothers and grandsons of brothers there is no doubt that the word "issue" prima facie connotes descendants of all degrees, and that the expression is to be limited to children—that is of the first generation—only if there is some context which leads to that conclusion. In the present settlement there is no indication of an intention that the class entitled to benefit under cl. 5, sub-cl. (iii) (a) is to be confined to children of the brothers. On the contrary it is accepted that the word "issue" in the expression which limits the trust period by reference to royal lives must mean descendants of all degrees, and it would be strange if the settlors used the same word "issue" in a different sense in different parts of the same sub-clause. That is particularly so because in the ordinary course of nature the first generation—the descendants of the first settlor's brothers—would be likely to die out before the issue of the descendants of all degrees of King George V living at the date of the settlement. One would expect the beneficial provisions in this paragraph to be such as would subsist during the whole of the trust period declared by reference to the lives of royal issue.

As regards the question whether the term "male issue" is confined to sons in the exclusively male line or extends to male children in the female line—that is to say sons of daughters of the brothers—the expression "issue male" is a legal term which can properly be described as a term of art, and which has more than once been judicially held to denote only males in the exclusively male line. I will refer to two cases on that point. In Lambert v. Peyton (1) the expression under consideration was "issue male", and LORD CRANWORTH said (2):

> "Although I quite agree in the argument that you might have an instrument so worded that the son of a daughter would come under the description of 'issue male', I think that is not the prima facie construction, and certainly not the construction to be put upon these articles."

In fact in that case the expression was held to be limited to male children.

In Lywood v. Kimber (3) the expression was "unto and amongst his issue male". SIR JOHN ROMILLY, M.R., said (4):

---

(1) (1860), 8 H.L. Cas. 1.
(2) (1860), 8 H.L. Cas. at p. 13.
(3) (1860), 29 Beav. 38.
(4) (1860), 29 Beav. at p. 41.

A "I have looked through this will, in order to see if it contained anything to support the argument that the technical words 'issue male' are to be restricted by the general scope and object of the will. I am satisfied that there is nothing of that sort, and that these words must be construed in their strict technical sense, which means issue male claiming through males. I should be unsettling the settled rules of the court, if I gave any other B meaning to these words, unless I found on the face of the will something to show that he intended to use them in another sense."

The prima facie meaning of the expression "issue male" will, of course, yield to a context in which the testator or settlor shows that he intended to use the words in a different sense; but in the absence of a context there is no question that the expression "issue male" has a recognised meaning as a term of art, and C means male descendants through the exclusively male line. I do not think that it would be legitimate to make any distinction for this purpose between the expression "issue male" and the expression contained in this settlement: "male issue". Nor can I find anything in the context of this settlement which affords an indication that the settlors intended by the expression "male issue" anything other than descendants through the exclusively male line.

D The precise expression "male issue" as opposed to "issue male" was discussed in an interesting judgment in the High Court of Australia in Allen v. Crane (5). DIXON, C.J., discussed at length the expressions "issue male", "male issue" and "male descendants" to which I will come in a moment; and he came to the conclusion on authority that prima facie the effect of a gift to "male issue" is restricted to males through the "male line" though E the meaning may yield to the context.

As regards the first question in the summons, therefore, the answer must be that the expression "male issue" includes, and includes only, the sons and the remoter male issue in the exclusively male line for the time being living of the deceased brothers of William Ernest du Cros.

The next question gives rise to much greater difficulty. In para. (b) of F sub-cl. (iii) of cl. 5 the expression used is > ". . . such of the male descendants of Harvey du Cros the founder of the Harvey Co. as shall for the time being be responsible for the active management of the business of the Harvey Co."

The expression "male descendants" is not a term of art, but an expression of G ordinary speech. Apart from authority my own view would be that as a matter of ordinary speech the expression "male descendants" includes males descended from the individual propositus whether through males or females. It appears to me that if an elderly man were asked how many male descendants he had, he would sensibly and normally include in the number of his male descendants not only sons and sons of sons, but also sons of daughters. To take another example, H if a man has a daughter but no son, and the daughter has a son, I should have thought that the answer to the question whether the man had a male descendant would be "yes".

It seems to me, further, that the view that here the expression "male descendants" includes males who are the sons of females derives much support from the circumstance that in para. (a) the settlors have used the different I expression "male issue". Where a settlor in the same clause uses two different expressions, one expects those expressions to bear different meanings. One must not strain the natural meaning of one or the other expression in order to produce a difference; but if one of the expressions is ambiguous, then one would naturally prefer that meaning which is different from that of the other expression. So here in sub-para. (a) the settlors have used the expression "male issue", and in sub-para. (b) they have used the expression "male descendants". If the expression " male descendants " is capable of more than one meaning, one would naturally prefer that meaning which is different from the expression " male issue ". A

(5) (1953), 89 C.L.R. 152.

Moreover there is this in the context, that the gift of income under sub-para. (b) is for such of the male descendants of the founder of the family business " as shall for the time being be responsible for the active management of the business ". There seems no reason in principle why in that connexion any preference should be given to male descendants of the founder through males over male descendants of the founder through females. The position is quite different from that which arises where a settlor or testator is apparently intending to keep an estate in the male line of his family. B

The question then arises whether I am compelled by authority to come to a different conclusion, and on this point some three cases decided in the middle part of the last century have been cited. The first is Oddie v. Woodford (6). This case was one of several which were concerned with the will of Peter Thellusson, and the expression which was there under review was " eldest male lineal descendant ". LORD ELDON, L.C., said this (7): C

> " Now, upon the best consideration that I can give this case, it does appear to me that ' male lineal descendant ' must mean a male descendant in the male line; ' lineal ' is otherwise altogether surplusage, and it is not only surplusage introduced into the clause, but in every word of this will where the male descendant is mentioned. If the person meant was a male descendant, whether of the male or female line, that intent would have been quite sufficiently expressed by the words ' male descendant ' only, without the word ' lineal ', and yet that word is, as I have said, used in every clause of the will; and I do not think myself at liberty to hold that that word was not intended to have some additional meaning . . ." D E

So in that paragraph LORD ELDON, L.C., says (although no doubt it is by way of dictum) that if one had the expression " male descendant " without the word " lineal ", that would include male descendants whether of the male or female line. F

The next case is Bernal v. Bernal (8). It appears that the report of Oddie v. Woodford (6) was inserted as a sort of appendix to the decision in Bernal v. Bernal (8). In that case the will was that of a person domiciled in Holland, and the gift was in favour not only of certain men and the male children of the men, but also in favour of certain women and the children of the women; and the full terms of the gift were of significance in enabling LORD COTTENHAM, L.C., to reach the decision which he did. By an earlier order in Bernal v. Bernal (9), dated Aug. 15, 1837, it had been declared in effect that the expression " male children ", which was actually used in the will, as translated from the original Spanish, must mean male descendants. In the course of his judgment LORD COTTENHAM, L.C., said this (10): G H

> " The general class is descendants; the qualification of the class is being male. To entitle anyone to claim, he must show that he is one of the favoured class; that is, one of the class of male descendants. A male, descended from a female of the family, would undoubtedly answer the description, as he would be a descendant and a male; but he would not be one of the class of male descendants. Such would be the ordinary acceptation of the terms. In speaking of a man and his male descendants, as a class, no one would conceive the son of a female descendant as included; and such is the construction which our law has put upon the words; as I

(6) (1821), 3 My. & Cr. 584.
(7) (1821), 3 My. & Cr. at p. 618.
(8) (1838), 3 My. & Cr. 559; 7 L.J.Ch. 115.
(9) See 3 My. & Cr. at pp. 581, 575.
(10) (1838), 3 My. & Cr. at p. 581; 7 L.J.Ch. at p. 117.

A ' issue male ', which is, in fact, the same thing as male descendants. The case of Oddie v. Woodford (11) appears to me to be a strong authority for the same purpose."

In that passage, LORD COTTENHAM, L.C., was laying down the general proposition that the expression " male descendants " means the same thing as " issue male " and is confined to males deriving exclusively through the male line. But B the authority of that statement appears to me to be considerably weakened when one observes that he relied on Oddie v. Woodford (11) as a strong authority for the same purpose, whereas in fact in Oddie v. Woodford (11), as I read it, LORD ELDON, L.C., said exactly the opposite. The actual decision turned on a complicated expression whereby the gift included not only males but females.

The third English case is Thellusson v. Lord Rendlesham (12) which, again, C was a decision on the will of Peter Thellusson. This case, again, dealt with the expression " eldest male lineal descendant ". LORD ST. LEONARDS went carefully through the components of that expression, and in the course of his speech said (13):

" Then as to the word ' male ', the meaning of that was thought for a long D while to be very doubtful, but it has been held to mean males claiming through males. Full effect, therefore, must be given to that."

Unfortunately LORD ST. LEONARDS did not state where that had been held, and it may be that he was only referring to the decision of LORD ELDON, L.C., on the same will in Oddie v. Woodford (11), with which his judgment was principally concerned. In truth LORD ELDON, L.C., gave his decision on the whole expression E " eldest male lineal descendant ", and would have decided otherwise, it appears, if the word " lineal " had been omitted. LORD WENSLEYDALE said (14):

" The words ' male lineal descendant ' have already received one judicial construction by this House [that is, Oddie v. Woodford (14A)] by which we are unquestionably bound; they mean a male descendant claiming entirely through males."

F DIXON, C.J., dealt with the expression " male descendants " in Allen v. Crane (15). His view was that the expression prima facie bears the same meaning as " male issue " though, as he said (16):

" There can be no doubt that the prima facie meaning restricting such expressions to descent by the male line may readily yield to a context."

G He pointed out that the expression " descendants " was untechnical (17).

I feel great doubt whether, in view of those authorities, I should be at liberty, if there were no favouring context in the will, to give effect to what is my own view, namely, that the expression " male descendants " includes males descended through the female as well as through the male line. To do so would be to bring myself into direct conflict with what was said by LORD COTTENHAM, L.C., H in Bernal v. Bernal (18). But it certainly seems to me that even if the expression " male descendants " prima facie means descendants exclusively through the male line, this prima facie meaning will readily yield to a very small indication to the contrary in the context.

In the present case it appears to me that an adequate indication to the contrary is to be found in the simple circumstance that the settlors used two different I expressions: " male issue " and " male descendants ", in the two successive sub-clauses of this clause. I think it is natural to construe the expression " male descendants " as meaning something different from " male issue "; and the only meaning which that expression " male descendants " can bear, if it is to bear a

(11) (1821), 3 My. & Cr. 584.
(12) (1859), 7 H.L. Cas. 429.
(13) (1859), 7 H.L. Cas. at p. 512.
(14) (1859), 7 H.L. Cas. at p. 520.
(14A) (1825), 3 My. & Cr. 625, 631.
(15) (1953), 89 C.L.R. 152.
(16) (1953), 89 C.L.R. at p. 163.
(17) (1953), 89 C.L.R. at p. 161.
(18) (1838), 3 My. & Cr. at p. 581; 7 L.J.Ch. at p. 117.

different meaning from the expression "male issue", is male descendants whether through the male or through the female line; and as I have said, that meaning is in harmony with the qualification under sub-cl. (b) that the beneficiaries must for the time being be responsible for the active management of the business.

I conclude, therefore, that question (2) in the summons should be answered by saying that the expression "male descendants" includes all the male children and remoter issue—the word "male" covers both—"of the said William Harvey du Cros". I would only add that I do not think that the distinction in meaning between the expression "male issue" and the expression "male descendants" is purely artificial. It is true that apart from any controlling context the words "issue" and "descendants" are interchangeable; but the composite expression "male issue", which is a legal term of art not used in common speech, and the expression "male descendants", which is not a legal term of art and is used in common speech, have I think a significant difference in their shades of meaning.

I therefore answer questions (1) and (2) accordingly.

Declarations accordingly.

Solicitors: Shelton, Cobb & Co., agents for J. J. Saunders & Co. (for the plaintiff and the first, second, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, ninth, tenth, eleventh, twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth and fifteenth defendants); Beachcroft & Co. (for the third, third (a) and eighth defendants).

[Reported by JENIFER SANDELL, Barrister-at-Law.]

R. v. METHARAM.

[COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL (Ashworth, Elwes and Thesiger, JJ.), July 5, 1961.]

Criminal Law—Grievous bodily harm—Direction to jury—Intent only to interfere seriously with health or comfort not sufficient—Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s. 18.

As a result of the decision in Director of Public Prosecutions v. *Smith it is now a misdirection, when summing-up to a jury at the trial of a charge of wounding with intent to do grievous bodily harm, contrary to s. 18 of the Offences against the Person Act, 1861, to adopt the formula based on R. v. Ashman† and to invite the jury to bring in a verdict of guilty of that offence if the only intent established is to interfere seriously with health or comfort, as distinct from an intent to do really serious bodily harm (see p. 202, letter C, post).

[As to the offence of wounding with intent to do grievous bodily harm, see 10 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 734, para. 1410; and for cases on the subject, see 15 DIGEST (Repl.) 988, 989, 9670-9699.

For the Offences against the Person Act, 1861, s. 18, see 5 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 793.]

Cases referred to:

Director of Public Prosecutions v. Smith, [1960] 3 All E.R. 161; [1961] A.C. 290; 124 J.P. 473; [1960] 3 W.L.R. 546; 3rd Digest Supp.

R. v. Ashman, (1858), 1 F. & F. 88; 175 E.R. 638; 15 Digest (Repl.) 986, 9645.

Appeal.

The appellant, Pessuman Metharam, was convicted at the Central Criminal Court on Feb. 10, 1961, before the commissioner (His Honour JUDGE BLOCK) and a jury on a charge of wounding Sheila Kay McNally with intent to do her

---

* [1960] 3 All E.R. 161; [1961] A.C. 290.

† (1858), 1 F. & F. 88.

A grievous bodily harm and was sentenced to imprisonment for two and a half years. He appealed against conviction on the ground of misdirection in that in summing-up the commissioner had directed the jury that bodily harm which was neither permanent nor dangerous, but which seriously interfered with health and comfort, was sufficient to constitute "grievous bodily harm" for the purposes of the offence charged. This direction accorded with the decision B in R. v. Ashman (1), but the summing-up contained no reference to the observations on that decision in Director of Public Prosecutions v. Smith (2) and it was contended on the appellant's behalf that the direction based on R. v. Ashman (1) was, in view of the decision last cited, a misdirection.

A. C. L. Lewisohn for the appellant.
C R. I. S. Bax for the Crown.

ASHWORTH, J., delivered the following judgment of the court in which, after referring to the appellant's conviction and sentence, he continued: The victim was a prostitute, and the incident out of which the charge arose occurred in her premises. They had had trouble together, and on the day in question, according to her, she saw him coming up the stairs to her flat, and he asked to see D her for about five minutes. They went into the lounge, and he said: "I want you to come back to me", to which she replied: "I will never do that". He said: "If you don't I'm going to kill you", and she picked up the telephone and started to telephone the police. Then she felt something go round her neck, and it was tight. She put her fingers underneath and managed to get it off. She then saw him take a knife out of his pocket. She had seen that knife E previously when it was used as a vegetable knife. Then, to quote her description of the incident: "He tried to pull my head back. He had the knife in his left hand. I saw him raise the knife and I put my hands out to try and stop it". That was her version, and it was not disputed that somehow that woman sustained injuries which, it is fair to say, were not as serious as they might well have been considering the respective size of the man and the girl and the weapon he F used, but they did involve the insertion of five stitches on her cheek, six more stitches in her right thumb and another six in her right ring finger, in all seventeen stitches. His defence at the trial was that the infliction of these wounds was accidental, and that was the issue between the parties, whether it was deliberate or accidental, the charge being one of wounding with intent to cause her grievous bodily harm.

G In summing-up the learned commissioner directed the jury in the terms of what one may conveniently call the old-fashioned definition of grievous bodily harm. It was a definition that was taken from R. v. Ashman (1), decided in 1858, but the learned commissioner omitted to direct the jury having regard to the comments made by the House of Lords on that earlier decision in Director of Public Prosecutions v. Smith (2). What the learned commissioner said was H this:

> "Grievous bodily harm, about which [counsel for the defendant] has just been addressing me, is defined in the book as not necessarily either permanent or dangerous, but harm that seriously interferes with health or comfort. That is sufficient."

I Then, having called attention to the injuries, he said:

> "It is a matter for you to decide whether you consider that number of stitches is very serious interference with a person's comfort at all events. The definition is serious interference with health or comfort."

It is said with force by counsel on behalf of this appellant that in the circumstances of this case that was a misdirection. He points out that the facts of the case are distinguishable from those in Director of Public Prosecutions v. Smith (3), which went to the House of Lords because as VISCOUNT KILMUIR, L.C., pointed out in that case (4), there was really no room for a contrary view about grievous bodily harm; if there was the intent, the intent was at least to do that. In the present case, however, it would have been possible for a jury to take the view that there was no intent to do grievous bodily harm, that is to say, really serious bodily harm, but that there was merely the crime of unlawful wounding, always assuming that it was not an accident. It is said on the other side that although no doubt as the result of the decision in Director of Public Prosecutions v. Smith (3) it is unnecessary and, indeed, inadvisable to add anything to the words "grievous bodily harm", none the less the direction given in this case cannot be called a misdirection; it was a direction which in the light of the authorities, though regarded as inadvisable, was not wrong.

(1) (1858), 1 F. & F. 88. (2) [1960] 3 All E.R. 161; [1961] A.C. 290.

In the view of this court, as a result of the decision in Director of Public Prosecutions v. Smith (3) and certainly as applied to the facts of the present case, it is a misdirection of the jury to adopt the old formula and invite a jury to find a man accused of wounding with intent to do grievous bodily harm guilty if the only intent established is one to interfere seriously with health or comfort. Reading the speech of VISCOUNT KILMUIR, L.C., as a whole (5), it seems to follow that certainly as applied to this case the adoption of the old formula is one that amounts to a misdirection. It is a legitimate inference from the closing paragraphs of that speech (4) that were it not for the fact that in R. v. Smith (6) the learned judge on three other occasions had referred in terms to the serious character of the offence, they would have held that the adoption of the old formula was a misdirection. At any rate, the view of this court is that in this case the direction given to the jury at the start of the summing-up, which was not followed by any further description of the ingredients of the offence, was a misdirection.

That does not conclude the matter. The issue before the jury in essence was whether this was an accident or whether they accepted the girl's story. We take the view, not accepting counsel for the appellant's submission on this point, that if the jury came to the conclusion that the girl's story was right, the intent to do grievous bodily harm was really the only verdict that a reasonable jury could reach. After all, he had attempted, as it appears, to strangle her, and then he drew a knife. He had said he would kill her and he pulled her head back with the knife in his left hand. It was because of her struggle that she escaped with relatively light injury, but the issue before the jury was the intent in the mind of the accused when he inflicted the wounds on her. In our view, this is a case in which the proviso can and should be applied. In so far as we hold that there was misdirection, we think that there was no substantial miscarriage of justice, and this appeal is accordingly dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Graham Dawson (for the appellant); Solicitor, Metropolitan Police (for the Crown).

[Reported by N. P. METCALFE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

---

(3) [1960] 3 All E.R. 161; [1961] A.C. 290.
(4) [1960] 3 All E.R. at p. 172; [1961] A.C. at p. 335.
(5) [1960] 3 All E.R. 163-172; [1961] A.C. 323-335.
(6) A direction following the "old formula" will be found in a passage quoted from the summing-up in R. v. Smith, see [1960] 2 All E.R. at p. 455, letter I; subsequent passages referring to "grievous bodily harm" and "serious harm" will be found in the extracts quoted in [1960] 2 All E.R. at p. 456, letters B, E-F, H and I.

A

SUNSHINE PORCELAIN POTTERIES PROPRIETARY, LTD. v. NASH.

[PRIVY COUNCIL (Viscount Simonds, Lord Reid, Lord Radcliffe, Lord Tucker and Lord Hodson), May 2, 3, 8, July 17, 1961.]

B Privy Council—Australia—Victoria—Workmen's compensation—Injury by accident arising out of or in the course of . . . employment—Worker developing silicosis long after she left employment—Compensation not payable for silicosis at date of worker leaving employment—Later Act providing that compensation to be payable in respect of silicosis due to nature of employment "at any time" prior to disablement—Victoria Workers Compensation Act, 1951 (No. 5601), s. 12 (1).

C Between 1931 and 1938, the respondent was employed by the appellants. She ceased such work in 1938, having married in 1937, and had not since then worked for wages. During her employment with the appellants, she was exposed to dust containing silica and, as a result of this exposure, she developed silicosis. She noticed the first symptoms in about 1950, and in 1955 a doctor certified that she was disabled from earning full wages by reason of silicosis. No notice of injury nor claim for compensation was given or made before 1956, and the appellants had not paid any sums by way of compensation. During the period of the respondent's employment, the Victoria Workers' Compensation Act, 1928, was in force and compensation was payable under s. 18 of that Act in respect of certain scheduled industrial diseases which did not include silicosis. By the Workers' Compensation Act, 1946, which was to be read and construed as one with the Act of 1928, a new s. 18* was substituted which was not restricted to scheduled diseases and, whereas under the Act of 1928, the disease had to be due to the nature of employment in which the worker was employed within the twelve months previous to the date of disablement, under the Act of 1946 it was sufficient "if the disease was due to the nature of employment in which the worker was employed at any time prior to the date of the disablement". The Victoria Workers Compensation Acts were consolidated in 1951, and s. 12 (1) of that Act reproduced s. 18 of the Act of 1946 as substituted. On a claim for compensation by the respondent, the appellants contended that the Act of 1946 could not apply to a person who was not in employment after it was passed.

G Held: the respondent was entitled to compensation since s. 12 (1) of the Act of 1951 applied to her case because the disease was due to the nature of employment in which she was employed "at any time prior to the date of the disablement", so that the terms of the enactment were satisfied, and there was nothing in their context or in the circumstances that required a restricted meaning to be given to them, as by limiting their application to cases where the worker was in employment after the enactment became law.

Decision in Victoria Insurance Co., Ltd. v. Junction North Broken Hill Mine ([1925] A.C. 354) not to be regarded as establishing a principle of general application.

Greenhill v. "Daily Record" Glasgow, Ltd. ([1909] 1 S.L.T. 344) disapproved.

I Appeal dismissed.

[As to statutes prima facie being prospective not retrospective, see 31 HALSBURY'S LAWS (2nd Edn.) 513-516, para. 670; and for cases on the subject, see 42 DIGEST 693, 694, 1083-1096.]

Cases referred to:

Bellambi Coal Co., Ltd. v. Clark, (1953), 53 S.R.N.S.W. 440.

---

* The terms of the section are set out at p. 205, letter D, post.

Blatchford v. Staddon and Founds, [1927] A.C. 461; 96 L.J.K.B. 608; 137 L.T. 257; 20 B.W.C.C. 391; 34 Digest 465, 3810. A

Clement v. D. Davis & Sons, Ltd., [1927] A.C. 126; 96 L.J.K.B. 284; 136 L.T. 258; 19 B.W.C.C. 416; 34 Digest 411, 3341.

Ellerbeck Collieries, Ltd. v. Cornhill Insurance Co., Ltd., [1932] 1 K.B. 401; 101 L.J.K.B. 117; 146 L.T. 153; 24 B.W.C.C. 376; Digest Supp.

Greenhill v. "Daily Record" Glasgow, Ltd., (1909), 46 Sc.L.R. 483; [1909] 1 S.L.T. 344; 2 B.W.C.C. 244; 34 Digest 241, e. B

R. v. Ipswich Union, (1877), 2 Q.B.D. 269; 46 L.J.M.C. 207; sub nom. Ipswich Union v. Great Yarmouth Guardians, R. v. Burton-on-Trent, R. v. Aston Union, 41 J.P. 374; 42 Digest 694, 1089.

Richards v. Goskar, [1936] 3 All E.R. 839; [1937] A.C. 304; 106 L.J.K.B. 85; 156 L.T. 52; 29 B.W.C.C. 357; Digest Supp. C

Victoria Insurance Co., Ltd. v. Junction North Broken Hill Mine, [1925] A.C. 354; 34 Digest 463, r.

Walder v. Mono Concrete Co., Ltd., [1943] 2 All E.R. 306; 113 L.J.K.B. 1; sub nom. Walden v. Mono Concrete Co., Ltd., [1943] 1 K.B. 683; 169 L.T. 210; 36 B.W.C.C. 186; 2nd Digest Supp.

Appeal. D

Appeal by special leave by Sunshine Porcelain Potteries Proprietary, Ltd., from an order of the Full Court of the High Court of Australia (DIXON, C.J., MCTIERNAN, FULLAGAR, TAYLOR and WINDEYER, JJ.), dated Mar. 2, 1959, allowing an appeal by the respondent, Iris Doreen Nash, from an order of the Full Court of the Supreme Court of Victoria (HERRING, C.J., GAVAN DUFFY and SMITH, JJ.), dated Mar. 21, 1958, on a Case Stated pursuant to s. 56 (3) of the Victoria Workers Compensation Act, 1951, by the Workers' Compensation Board. The facts are set out in the judgment of the Board. E

Eustace Roskill, Q.C., and R. A. MacCrindle for the appellants.

Anthony Cripps, Q.C., and J. G. Le Quesne for the respondent.

LORD REID: This is an appeal from an order of the High Court of Australia which, by a majority (DIXON, C.J., MCTIERNAN and WINDEYER, JJ.; dissenting FULLAGAR and TAYLOR, JJ.), on Mar. 2, 1959, allowed an appeal from an order of the Full Court of the Supreme Court of Victoria (HERRING, C.J., and SMITH J.; dissenting GAVAN DUFFY, J.). The case arises out of an application by the respondent under the Workers Compensation Act claiming compensation from the appellants in respect of the disease of silicosis. On Feb. 21, 1957, the Workers' Compensation Board awarded compensation at the rate of £2 2s. per week, and thereafter, at the request of the present appellants the board stated a Case for the determination of the court. The following facts were therein set out as being admitted or proved:— F G

"(a) Between the years 1931 and 1938 the [respondent] worker was employed by the [appellants] as an insulator cleaner. She was about fifteen years of age when her employment began. (b) The [respondent] married in December, 1937, and ceased to work for the [appellants] in May, 1938. Since that time she has been supported by her husband. (c) At no time since she ceased to work for the [appellants] has she worked for wages and at the time of hearing of this application she had no intention of again taking up any employment. At the date of the hearing she had two children under the age of sixteen years and was fully engaged in the domestic duties involved in being a housewife. (d) During her employment with the [appellants] she was exposed to dust containing silica and as a result of this exposure she developed the disease of silicosis although it was not known to her nor manifested by any signs or symptoms until within the last few years. The first symptom noticed by her was breathlessness from about 1950 onwards. (e) On Dec. 20, 1955, Dr. K. J. Grice certified that the H I

A [respondent] was disabled from earning full wages by reason of silicosis. It was admitted by the [appellants] that the [respondent] had been physically totally disabled for work by reason of the disease for the last twenty-four months preceding the date of hearing. By reason of the disease the [respondent] has incurred expenses for medical treatment since 1953, and she was in Fairfield Hospital for about a month in 1956. (f) No notice of injury B nor claim for compensation was given or made before Jan. 5, 1956, and the [appellant] employer has not paid any sums by way of compensation."

The question of law submitted for the opinion of the Full Court was: "Whether upon its findings of fact the board was justified in law in making the said award or any part of it."

The Act in force during the period of the respondent's employment by the C appellants was the Workers' Compensation Act, 1928 (No. 3806). Under s. 18 of that Act, compensation was only payable in respect of certain scheduled industrial diseases which did not include silicosis. By an amending Act of 1946 (No. 5128), which was to be read and construed as one with the Act of 1928, it was provided, by s. 8, that for s. 18 of the principal Act there should be substituted the following section:

D "18. Where—(a) a medical practitioner certifies that a worker is suffering from a disease and is thereby disabled from earning full wages at the work at which he was employed; or (b) the death of a worker is caused by any disease—and the disease is due to the nature of any employment in which the worker was employed at any time prior to the date of the disablement, then subject to the provisions hereinafter contained the worker or his E dependants shall be entitled to compensation under this Act as if the disease were a personal injury by accident arising out of or in the course of that employment and the disablement shall be treated as the happening of the accident."

In 1951, the Workers' Compensation Acts were consolidated by Act No. 5601, F Section 12 (1) of this Act reproduces from the Act of 1946, s. 18 as quoted above. This section differs from s. 18 of the Act of 1928 in two respects material to the present case. In the first place, it is not restricted to scheduled diseases and, admittedly, it covers silicosis, and, secondly, whereas under the Act of 1928 the disease had to be due to the nature of employment in which the worker was employed within the twelve months previous to the date of disablement, after G 1946 it was sufficient if the disease was due to the nature of the employment in which the worker was employed at any time prior to the date of disablement. It should also be noted that, whereas under the Act of 1928 injury by accident had to arise out of and in the course of the employment, it was sufficient under the Act of 1946 and subsequent Acts if it arose out of or in the course of the employment. By an amending Act of 1953 (No. 5676) s. 12, the word "injury" H was substituted for the phrase "injury by accident" throughout the principal Act and, by a consequential amendment, the last part of the section which has been quoted now reads "the disablement shall be treated as the happening of the injury." Section 20 of the Act of 1951 provides that the date of disablement shall be deemed to be such date as the medical practitioner certifies as the date on which the disablement commenced, or, if he is unable to certify I such a date, the date on which the certificate is given. The certificate in this case was given on Dec. 20, 1955. In it the medical practitioner states, "I certify that the disablement commenced about 1950, according to the history given." It is unnecessary to determine whether on this certificate the date of disablement is 1950 or 1955.

The respondent's contention is that the section quoted clearly applies to her case. Her disablement—the happening of the "injury" to her—occurred after it came into operation; her disablement and the disease which caused it were admittedly due to the nature of her employment by the appellants; and the long interval which elapsed between the termination of her employment and the onset of her disease and disability is immaterial because the Act, by using the words " at any time ", expressly entitles a worker to relate his disablement to past employment no matter how long that interval may be. A

The appellants rely on the strong presumption that an Act is not intended to be retrospective, and contend that this section can and should be construed so as to avoid retrospectivity; the general rule of construction is B

> ". . . that where a statute is passed altering the law, unless the language is expressly to the contrary, it is to be taken as intended to apply to a state of facts coming into existence after the Act "

(per COCKBURN, C.J., in R. v. Ipswich Union (1)). Generally there is a strong presumption that a legislature does not intend to impose a new liability in respect of something that has already happened, because generally it would not be reasonable for a legislature to do that. So, if a worker has already sustained injury or contracted a disease at a time when the employer is under no statutory liability to him arising out of that injury or disease, there would in general be a presumption that an Act bringing that injury or disease within the scope of compensation would not apply to that case; otherwise there would be liability on the employer arising out of a state of things which existed before the Act was passed. But this presumption may be overcome not only by express words in the Act but also by circumstances sufficiently strong to displace it. In their Lordships' judgment, the circumstances of this case clearly prevent its application at least in so wide a form. Notoriously, silicosis is a disease of slow onset; it may result from the inhalation of noxious matter over a long period of years, there is no certainty when that inhalation reaches the danger point, and, after the damage has been done, a long period may elapse, as it did in this case, before the disease manifests itself. It cannot be supposed that the legislature intended that every worker disabled by this disease after 1946 must prove that the disease was contracted or that the damage was done to him after 1946, because that would involve there being a period of many years of uncertainty; there would be doubt in the case of many workers disabled long after 1946 whether their disablement resulted from a state of things already in existence in that year, and there is no provision in the Act to deal with a case where the disease was contracted before 1946 but aggravated by further exposure to noxious inhalation after that date. None of the learned judges in Australia supported the appellants' argument to this extent. So the Act of 1946 must be held retrospective in substance at least to this extent, that all those who were working in noxious employment after 1946 will get compensation when disablement occurs even if it is clear that the disease was contracted or the whole or most of the damage was done before the Act of 1946 was passed. C D E F G

The appellants' main argument was directed to a much more limited application of the presumption that a statute is not retrospective. Admitting that a worker may be entitled to compensation although the disease had manifested itself and the whole or substantially the whole of the damage had been done before the Act of 1946 came into operation, the argument is that a line must be drawn between those who ceased to be workers (or workers in noxious employment) before that date and those who continued in such employment thereafter. That means that, if two workers both contracted the disease before 1946 and both only suffered disablement after 1946, one, who happened to remain in employment for a short time after the Act of 1946 was passed, would get compensation, but the other, who ceased to be employed just before the Act was passed, would not. An examination of the various statutory provisions and of the authorities may show that that result cannot be avoided, but it is not a result which would seem to follow naturally from an application of the broad principle which gives H I

(1) (1877), 2 Q.B.D. at p. 270.

A rise to the presumption—that it is not reasonable to suppose that a legislature intends to impose a new liability in respect of something which has already happened. Moreover, the success of this argument would lead to a further difficulty. Section 14 of the Act of 1951, which took the place of similar earlier provisions, entitles the employer who last employed the disabled worker, and who is primarily liable to pay him compensation, to seek relief against earlier B employers if he can show that the disease was contracted while in their employment, or that, the disease being contracted by a gradual process, a contribution should be made by an earlier employer. So, an employer who employed a disabled worker for a short time after 1946 may be able to show that the disease was due in whole or in part to earlier employment before 1946. But counsel for the appellants rightly admitted that, if his argument is correct, it must mean C that, in such a case, the last employer must pay the compensation, but is deprived of the relief which s. 14 appears to give him because this argument must absolve an employer who ceases to employ a worker before the Act of 1946 was passed from any liability to pay compensation in respect of his disablement by silicosis.

Their Lordships must now consider the relevant sections of the statutes, and it will be convenient to take the sections of the Act of 1951, since the argument D is the same whether one takes those sections or the corresponding sections of the earlier Acts. The main difficulty is the proper correlation of s. 5 and s. 12. Section 5 (1) provides:

> "If in any employment personal injury [by accident] arising out of or in the course of the employment is caused to a worker his employer shall . . . E be liable to pay compensation . . ."

Section 12 has already been quoted; in cases to which it applies the worker is entitled to compensation

> "as if the disease were a personal injury [by accident] arising out of or in the course of that employment and the disablement shall be treated F as the happening of the injury [accident]."

The words in square brackets occurred in the Act of 1951; as already noted, they are now omitted by reason of the amendments made in 1953. But it was not argued that this change was material in the present case. In the ordinary case under s. 5, it would seem clear that the injury must be sustained while the worker is still in the employment, but the position under s. 12 is far from clear. G The appellants argue that s. 12 merely adapts s. 5 to apply it to diseases; s. 5 is the leading section and s. 12 follows it in requiring that, here again, the injury must happen or be sustained during the employment while the claimant is still a worker. On this view, the question at once arises—what is the injury; is it the contracting of the disease or the first manifestation of the disease, or the disablement resulting from the disease? The respondent answers that, in the H case of some diseases, including silicosis, it is often impossible to discover when the disease was contracted, that the date of the first manifestation of the disease may be very doubtful, and that the legislature has foreseen and avoided the difficulty by enacting expressly in s. 12 that the disablement shall be treated as the happening of the injury. The next step in the argument is that the legislature cannot have intended that the right to compensation should depend on I whether or not disablement occurred while the claimant was still in employment; under s. 20, the date of disablement may be the date on which the medical certificate is given, and it would be absurd to suppose that a claimant can lose his compensation merely because he does not get a certificate while he is still in employment. Therefore, it must be held that s. 12 does not follow s. 5 in requiring that the injury must happen or be sustained during the employment. Before proceeding to deal with these arguments their Lordships must consider the authorities.

Victoria Insurance Co., Ltd. v. Junction North Broken Hill Mine (2) was an action to recover from an insurance company compensation paid to certain workers in respect of the disease of nystagmus. It was admitted that they contracted this disease during the period covered by the insurance, but their disablement did not occur until after that period. The insurance company was held liable under its policy. Their Lordships' ground of judgment, if of general application, would probably enable the present appellants to succeed. LORD WRENBURY said (3):

> "The date of contraction of the disease and not the date of its ascertainment or its certification is the date for fixing liability . . . The disablement or suspension establishes the happening of the accident, but not the date at which it happened . . . It is an accident to be attributed in point of date so far as liability is concerned to the time at which the disease was contracted, but subject to 'modification' as mentioned in s. 12 (1) (a), that is to say as regards 'compensation' . . . , the accident is to be taken as having happened when disablement or suspension supervened . . . The liability to pay arose so soon as the disease was contracted."

Their Lordships did not consider what the position would be if, in a case of a disease of gradual onset, it was impossible to say when the disease was contracted, and they appear to have been influenced by a view that, unless liability arose during the period of employment, there would be no valid claim for compensation. This case arose under New South Wales legislation (4) which is in general similar to the British legislation and to the Victorian legislation. Blatchford v. Staddon and Founds (5) was an English case. Here quite a different view was taken of similar provisions, the Victoria Insurance Co. case (6) not having been cited. The disease in this case was lead poisoning. VISCOUNT SUMNER pointed out that such diseases (7)

> ". . . come on gradually; their first steps may not be perceptible for some time; their rate of progress may vary widely . . . If there was to be an effective remedy, much more had to be done than simply to declare the disease to be an accident. Means had to be found for enabling the workman to recover compensation from an employer even though he could not prove the precise time when the disease was contracted."

He then dealt with the provision entitling the workman to sue his last employer and said that they (8)

> ". . . provide a means, perhaps rough and ready, of enabling a suffering workman to get compensation from some one certain, in respect of a disease contracted at a wholly uncertain time."

He said in a later passage (9):

> "The difficulty of proving the date when the disease was contracted is met by treating the date of the disablement as the date of the happening of the accident."

LORD WRENBURY said (10) that the Act

> ". . . says that the disease or suspension is to be considered as the personal injury by accident. Does this mean that the contraction of the disease is the accident, or does it mean that the ascertainment in a defined way of the fact of the disease having been contracted is the accident? On the whole from that which I have to say further, I think it must mean the latter."

Ellerbeck Collieries, Ltd. v. Cornhill Insurance Co., Ltd. (11) was, like the Victoria Insurance Co. case (6), an action under an insurance policy. The

(2) [1925] A.C. 354. (3) [1925] A.C. at p. 357.
(4) Workmen's Compensation Act (No. 71 of 1916, N.S.W.). (5) [1927] A.C. 461.
(6) [1925] A.C. 354. (7) [1927] A.C. at p. 467. (8) [1927] A.C. at p. 468.
(9) [1927] A.C. at p. 470. (10) [1927] A.C. at p. 478. (11) [1932] 1 K.B. 401.

A Court of Appeal followed the decision in Blatchford (12). SCRUTTON, L.J., was unable to reconcile this decision with that in the Victoria Insurance Co. (13); their Lordships cannot regard the attempt of GREER, L.J., to reconcile them as successful. Richards v. Goskar (14) and Walder v. Mono Concrete Co., Ltd. (15) dealt with a different question, the recurrence of a disease after the initial disability caused by it had ceased. They indicate that the date of the onset B of a disease may be relevant if ascertainable, but the argument in Blatchford's case (12) was not dealt with and their Lordships have derived little assistance from these two cases.

In considering these authorities, their Lordships note that two of the three members of the Board in the Victoria Insurance Co. case (13), LORDS ATKINSON and WRENBURY, concurred in the decision in Blatchford's case (12). Moreover, C it is impossible to apply the grounds of decision in the Victoria Insurance Co. case (13) without radical modification to a case, where owing to the gradual onset of a disease, no particular date can be held to be the date of its contraction. Accordingly, in their Lordships' view, the Victoria Insurance Co. case (13) cannot be regarded as establishing a principle of general application.

Their Lordships can deal more briefly with the other authorities cited. There D are many cases, Australian and British, a leading example being Clement v. D. Davis & Sons, Ltd. (16), where it has been held that an amending Act does not apply to cases where the injury or injury by accident occurred before the Act was passed. So, if the "injury" in this case occurred before 1946, the appellants must succeed. But these cases do not help in determining when the injury must be held to have occurred. The other authorities dealt with the E particular point in this case to which their Lordships must return after completing their consideration of s. 12. That point is whether it is fatal to the respondent's case that she was never in employment after the Act of 1946 was passed.

In their Lordships' judgment, s. 12 does not follow s. 5 in requiring that the injury must occur during the employment. It could only be held to do so if (first), notwithstanding the express provision that "the disablement shall be F treated as the happening of the injury", it could be held that contracting the disease is the injury, and (secondly) it could be assumed that the disease is always contracted while still in the employment. Their Lordships are unable to assume that, where a long interval has elapsed, as in this case, between the last inhalation of noxious material and the first manifestation of the disease, it is a medical fact that the disease was contracted before that inhalation ceased, G and then lay dormant for many years. They have no reason to exclude the possibility that the noxious material remaining in the claimant's body may only have brought on the disease after a long time. If that be a possibility, then it is quite unreasonable to suppose that the legislature intended the success of a claim for compensation to depend on whether or not the claimant could prove by medical evidence that his disease was in fact contracted before he left H the employment. But if s. 12 requires that the injury must occur during the employment, that would have to be proved. No one has said that the inhalation of the noxious material is itself the injury, and that is the only thing that certainly occurs during the employment.

The appellants submitted an argument to the effect that the requirement of compulsory insurance by s. 72 is unworkable if an injury can occur long after a I worker has left the employment. That requirement is in very general terms, and their Lordships express no opinion whether it could cover a case like the present. But, even if it could not, that is not, in their Lordships' view, a sufficient reason for giving to s. 12 an interpretation open to the grave objections which have been stated.

---

(12) [1927] A.C. 461.
(13) [1925] A.C. 354.
(14) [1936] 3 All E.R. 839; [1937] A.C. 304.
(15) [1943] 2 All E.R. 306; [1943] 1 K.B. 683.
(16) [1927] A.C. 126.

The particular point in this case is whether the Act of 1946 can apply to a person who was not in employment after it was passed. That Act amended and has to be read with the earlier Act under which the respondent was a worker. The point must be considered in light of the conclusions already reached. Section 12 does not require that a person shall still be in employment when he sustains an injury arising out of his employment, and the respondent did sustain an injury arising out of her employment after the Act of 1946 was passed. Further, it is no answer to a claim to show that the real cause of the injury was inhaling noxious material before the Act was passed. In these circumstances, the presumption against a statute being retrospective can have little weight, if, indeed, it can apply at all. The question becomes one of construction of the Act of 1946. Their Lordships were referred to a majority decision of the Full Court of the Supreme Court of New South Wales, Bellambi Coal Co., Ltd. v. Clark (17), where the grounds of judgment of the majority were similar to those of the minority in the High Court in the present case. Their Lordships were also referred to a decision of the First Division of the Court of Session, Greenhill v. "Daily Record", Glasgow, Ltd. (18), in which the facts were not unlike those of this case. The man had left his employment disabled by disease before the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, came into operation, and died later. That Act for the first time made his disease, lead poisoning, a subject for compensation. The statutory provisions were rather different, but the reasoning of the short judgment of the Lord President, LORD DUNEDIN, would apply to the present case. He regarded the claim as an attempt to make the Act retrospective, but the considerations which have been developed at length in later cases and in the present case were not before him, and their Lordships, with all deference to the importance of any opinion of LORD DUNEDIN, are for that reason unable to accept it.

Their Lordships recognise the strength of the arguments adduced by the learned judges who have taken a different view and regard this as a narrow and difficult case. But, in the end, they must return to the words of the new s. 18 enacted by the Act of 1946. Those words apply exactly to the present case. The certificate and disablement were subsequent to its passing. The disease was "due to the nature of any employment in which the worker was employed at any time prior to the date of the disablement". In their Lordships' judgment, there is nothing in the context or in the circumstances to require that any restricted meaning should be given to the words of this section.

Their Lordships will, therefore, humbly advise Her Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed. The appellants must pay the costs of the appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Nicholas Williams & Co. (for the appellants); Markby, Stewart & Wadesons (for the respondent).

[Reported by G. A. KIDNER, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

---

(17) (1953), 53 S.R.N.S.W. 440.

(18) [1909] 1 S.L.T. 344.

A

HENRY ANSBACHER & CO. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Evershed, M.R., Harman and Donovan, L.JJ.), June 12, 13, 14, July 4, 1961.]

Stamp Duty—"Mortgage, bond, debenture, covenant"—"Only or principal or primary security"—Guarantee—Deed securing a payment under an agreement not under seal for sale of stock—Additional secondary or collateral security to agreement—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), Sch. 1, Mortgage, bond, etc.

B

By an agreement under hand, which was exempted from stamp duty as an agreement for the sale of stock under s. 35 (1) (a) of the Finance Act, 1949, the respondents agreed to buy the whole of the ordinary shares in a company for a price payable in two instalments, one of which was paid but the other of which remained outstanding because its amount depended on claims for compensation against the governments of Singapore and Malaya. Under a term of the agreement the purchasers procured the execution by a bank of a guarantee under seal, securing the payment of the second instalment to trustees for the shareholders up to £750,000. The Commissioners of Inland Revenue assessed the guarantee to stamp duty at £1,875 (being 5s. per £100 on £750,000) on the ground that the deed was chargeable under the head "Mortgage, bond, debenture, covenant . . . (1)" in Sch. 1 to the Stamp Act, 1891, and was "the only or principal or primary security", for payment of the £750,000.

C

D

E

Held (DONOVAN, L.J., dissenting): the guarantee was not the "only or principal or primary security . . . for the payment . . . of money", but an additional, secondary or collateral security to the agreement, which was the first and primary security notwithstanding that the agreement itself did not fall within the heading "Mortgage, bond, debenture, covenant . . ." in Sch. 1, because the agreement was not under seal; accordingly the guarantee did not attract stamp duty at 5s. per £100.

F

British Italian Corpn., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (SERGEANT ON STAMP DUTIES (3rd Edn.), p. 334) followed.

Per LORD EVERSHED, M.R., and HARMAN, L.J.: the word "security" in the heads "Bond, covenant, or instrument of any kind whatsoever" and "Mortgage, bond, debenture, covenant" in Sch. 1 to the Stamp Act, 1891, means any written obligation for payment of money (see p. 213, letter F, post).

G

Jones v. Inland Revenue Comrs. ([1895] 1 Q.B. 484) applied.

Decision of DANCKWERTS, J. ([1960] 1 All E.R. 686) affirmed.

[As to stamp duty payable on a mortgage, bond, debenture, covenant, see 28 HALSBURY'S LAWS (2nd Edn.) 477, para. 1008.

H

For the Stamp Act, 1891, Sch. 1, Mortgage, bond, etc., see 21 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 682.]

Cases referred to:

British Italian Corpn., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1921] W.N. 220; SERGEANT ON STAMP DUTIES (3rd Edn.) 334; 39 Digest 277, 615.

I

Independent Television Authority v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1960] 2 All E.R. 481; [1961] A.C. 427; [1960] 3 W.L.R. 48; 3rd Digest Supp.

Jones v. Inland Revenue Comrs., Sweetmeat Automatic Delivery Co. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1895] 1 Q.B. 484; 64 L.J.Q.B. 84; 71 L.T. 763; 39 Digest 276, 607.

Limmer Asphalte Paving Co. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., (1872), L.R. 7 Exch. 211; 41 L.J. Ex. 106; 26 L.T. 633; 39 Digest 259, 433.

National Telephone Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1900] A.C. 1; 69 L.J.Q.B. 43; 81 L.T. 546; 64 J.P. 420; 17 Digest (Repl.) 253, 571.

Appeal. A

The respondents presented an instrument dated Dec. 9, 1957, to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue under s. 12 of the Stamp Act, 1891, for their opinion as to the stamp duty chargeable thereon. The instrument was called a deed of guarantee and was expressed to be supplemental to a contract of sale of stock in the Oriental Telephone and Electric Co., Ltd. Under it the National Bank, Ltd., guaranteed to the extent of £750,000 the payment to parties to the deed B who were described as trustees of whatever sum should become payable to them by the respondents as purchasers of the stock under a clause of the contract of sale. The commissioners were of opinion that the guarantee fell within the heading "Mortgage, bond, debenture, covenant . . . (1)" in Sch. 1 to the Stamp Act, 1891, and that it was "the only or principal or primary security . . . for the payment" of the sum of £750,000. They accordingly assessed it to duty at 5s. C for every £100 of the sum of £750,000, viz., £1,875. The respondents contended that the sale agreement was a security and "the principal or primary security" for the specified sum and accordingly that the guarantee was not a principal or primary security within the heading: and that it was a "collateral, or auxiliary, or additional, or substituted security (other than an equitable mortgage), or by way of further assurance . . . where the principal or primary security is duly D stamped" within the same heading and as such should be liable to duty at the rate of 1s. for every £100 limited to a maximum of 10s. under s. 7 of the Revenue Act, 1903. The respondents required the commissioners to state and sign a Case for the opinion of the High Court. On Feb. 18, 1960, DANCKWERTS, J. ([1960] 1 All E.R. 686) allowed the respondents' appeal against the decision of the commissioners, holding that the agreement constituted the principal or primary E security though not subject to duty under the same head in Sch. 1 to the Stamp Act, 1891, through not being under seal, and that the guarantee constituted a secondary security chargeable to stamp duty at 10s. The Crown appealed to the Court of Appeal.

Peter Foster, Q.C., and E. Blanshard Stamp for the Crown.

J. G. Foster, Q.C., G. B. H. Dillon and D. M. Burton for the respondents. F

Cur. adv. vult.

LORD EVERSHED, M.R.: In this case I have had the advantage of reading in advance the judgment of HARMAN, L.J. I find myself entirely in agreement with his reasoning and conclusion and therefore do not desire to add anything in a separate judgment. G

July 4. The following judgments were read.

HARMAN, L.J.: This appeal raises a question as to the correct stamp to be impressed on a document under seal of Dec. 9, 1957, which is annexed to and sufficiently recited in the Case and has been called the guarantee. The other H relevant document is an agreement under hand dated Oct. 29, 1957, also annexed to the Case, and is referred to as "the agreement". By the agreement, the respondents, an unlimited corporation, agreed in effect to buy the whole of the ordinary shares in the Oriental Telephone and Electrical Co., Ltd. (called "the company"). It was a conditional agreement when made, but the conditions have been satisfied and can be ignored. The price payable for the purchase was I divided into a first and second instalment. The first has long been paid, but the second is still outstanding because its amount depends on certain complicated claims for compensation by the company against the governments of Singapore and Malaya. The agreement provided that the share certificates should be handed over to the purchasers on payment of the first instalment, and that in return the purchasers would procure the National Bank, Ltd., by way of securing the payment of the second instalment, to enter into a guarantee in the form of the draft set out in the schedule to the agreement. This was duly done. The

A guarantee is under seal and is expressed to be supplemental to the agreement and it guarantees to certain trustees for the shareholders in the company, to the extent of £750,000, the due and punctual payment by the respondents of the second instalment.

The question raised is what is the right stamp duty exigible on the guarantee. The commissioners decided that the guarantee should be stamped ad valorem B at the rate of 5s. per cent. on the maximum sum payable, viz., £750,000, which works out at £1,875. The respondents appealed to the court and DANCKWERTS, J., allowed the appeal on the ground that the guarantee is not the only or principal or primary security for the payment of the money. The Crown appeals.

Each of the two heads in Sch. 1 to the Stamp Act, 1891, the first of which begins, "Bond, covenant, or instrument of any kind whatsoever", and the C second with the words, "Mortgage, bond, debenture, covenant", and so on, talks of the instruments included in them respectively as being "(1) . . . the only or principal or primary security" and so on. Now it is clear, as I think, that the word "security" is used in the same sense in both those headings. This has been the law ever since Jones v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (1), in which WRIGHT, J., says (2):

D

> "The case of Limmer Asphalte Paving Co. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (3) is, I think, an authority that the word 'security' in the 'bond' clause is to be construed in the same way as 'security' under the 'mortgage' clause: I do not see how the court could have arrived at the conclusion at which they did arrive unless that had been their view. It seems to me that we are bound by that decision; but even if we are not bound by it, it appears to me that it E puts the proper construction on the schedule, and that the word 'security' as used in these schedules does not mean as in popular language some obligation which is auxiliary to some other obligation, but means any obligation created by any instrument."

It appears from that passage not only that the word "security" must be construed in the same way in both headings, but that the word as used in Sch. 1 F has not its ordinary meaning, but means any written obligation for payment of money. Compare the speech of LORD RADCLIFFE in Independent Television Authority v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (4). It seems to me to follow that the agreement here in question is a "security" within the meaning of Sch. 1. It does not follow that it is stampable. To ascertain that one must look further into the G Schedule. The agreement is to my mind clearly the principal or primary security for the payment of the money constituting the second instalment of the price of the shares agreed to be sold. Nevertheless, the agreement will not fit into either of the headings, because, as to the first, the money payable is not an annuity nor a sum payable at stated periods nor for the term of life or any other indefinite period. Nor does it fit the second heading, because. in order to come within that, H the security must be properly described as a "mortgage, bond, debenture, covenant." It is settled law that "covenant" in this heading is confined to covenants under seal; see the opinion of the EARL OF HALSBURY, L.C., in National Telephone Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (5). Even if it were under seal, the amount secured was entirely unascertainable and therefore no stamp ad valorem could be affixed.

I The Crown's argument is that the guarantee is within para. (1) as being, in the circumstances, the only security for the repayment up to £750,000 of the second instalment. It is said that, because the agreement is not within the heading, it must be put out of account altogether and for Stamp Act purposes must be regarded as not a security at all. I can see no warrant for this. Each of these documents is, to my mind, a security. The first and primary security is the promise of the respondents, who are primarily liable as purchasers of the shares, and it is only on their default that there is any liability under the guarantee, which is therefore a collateral or additional security. The Crown's argument depends, I think, on the view that, unless an instrument is a security which comes within the whole of the conditions of the heading and is duly stamped as such, it is not a security at all and can be ignored, but this is to fly in the face of the authority I have cited.

(1) [1895] 1 Q.B. 484. (2) [1895] 1 Q.B. at p. 492.
(3) (1872), L.R. 7 Exch. 211.
(4) [1960] 2 All E.R. at p. 484; [1961] A.C. at p. 441. (5) [1900] A.C. at p. 2.

In my judgment, British Italian Corpn., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (6) shortly reported in [1921] W.N. 220, but adequately only in SERGEANT ON STAMP DUTIES (3rd Edn.), p. 334, is pertinent in this connexion. There, the principal document, which was a document under hand, was exempt from stamp duty as being an agreement for the sale of a ship, there being a general exemption from duty for that transaction. There was also a guarantee for payment of part of the purchase price. The Crown sought to charge the guarantee with stamp duty as being the only security for that price on the ground that the agreement, being wholly executory, was not a security within either heading, and LORD STERNDALE, M.R., is found saying this (7):

> "But, of course, if the agreement of sale itself be not a security this [the guarantee] is not only the primary or principal, but it is the only security."

The Master of the Rolls then cited Jones v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (8) and discussed the point taken by counsel for the Crown that the agreement was not a security within the meaning of the Act because it was entirely executory.

The court held on the authorities that this point was not maintainable. LORD STERNDALE, M.R., ended with these words (9):

> "... I think here on the authority of these cases the original agreement was a security for the payment of these sums, and whether it was stampable or not, or whether it was exempted or not, does not seem to me to matter. If it were the principal or primary security which was exempt from stamp duty, the fact still remains that the guarantee was not the only or principal or primary security."

It has been objected that the heading under consideration in that case was the earlier one above set out (which includes, it will be remembered, documents under hand), but as "security" must have the same meaning in both cases I am not impressed by that argument. If this be right, it seems to me that we are not precluded from holding, according to the true facts of the case, that the guarantee is what in fact it is, secondary or collateral, and not the primary security, and that it does not matter that the primary security itself either is exempt as being an agreement for the sale of shares or as not being under seal or as securing an indeterminate sum or otherwise howsoever, and I would dismiss the appeal.

DONOVAN, L.J.: In my opinion the head of charge in Sch. 1 to the Stamp Act, 1891, reading "Mortgage, bond, debenture, covenant, . . . and warrant of attorney to confess and enter up judgment" is an exclusive description of the instruments to be stamped under this heading. Admittedly, the agreement of Oct. 29, 1957, is not within it, for that agreement is under hand only; and I accept that it follows from the House of Lords' decision in National Telephone Co., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (10) that the term "covenant" is here confined to a document under seal. Accordingly, whatever the meaning and scope of the word "security" in the Stamp Act, 1891, the agreement was never within this particular head of charge.

One turns, therefore, to the guarantee of Dec. 9, 1957. That document is under seal, and it is admittedly a security for the payment of a sum of money, viz., a maximum of £750,000. It is also true to describe it as a collateral, auxiliary, or additional security. The first question is whether it comes, as such, within

(6) [1921] W.N. 220; SERGEANT ON STAMP DUTIES (3rd Edn.) 334.
(7) SERGEANT ON STAMP DUTIES (3rd Edn.) at p. 338.
(8) [1895] 1 Q.B. 484.
(9) SERGEANT ON STAMP DUTIES (3rd Edn.) at p. 340.
(10) [1900] A.C. 1.

A para. (2) of this head of charge, so as to attract a stamp of 10s. only. In terms of para. (2), such a result ensues only where "the principal or primary security is duly stamped." The respondents say that such is the case here, because the principal or primary security is the agreement of Oct. 29, 1957, and it is duly stamped although exempt from stamp duty. Apart from the special point of construction which arises in this case, I would accept that the agreement is, B within the general meaning of the Stamp Act, 1891, a "security". Whether, as opposed to the bank guarantee, it is really "the principal or primary security", I should doubt, but for the purpose of the argument I will assume that it is. The circumstance that the agreement is exempt from stamp duty does not, on the authorities, prevent its being "duly stamped" for present purposes. But the special point of construction remains, and is this. This head of charge deals C exclusively with five specified instruments, and, because of that, the agreement is admittedly outside para. (1). Is it not, therefore, also outside para. (2)? In other words, when construing the expression in that paragraph, "where the principal or primary security is duly stamped", is it legitimate to travel outside the confines of the five specified instruments with which alone this heading deals and include some instrument with which the heading does not deal—i.e., the D agreement under hand only of Oct. 29?

Apart from authority I would answer that question in the negative. But counsel for the respondents says that the decision in British Italian Corpn., Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (11) permits this. Having looked at that decision more than once, I am unable to accept this suggestion. It is true that the Commissioners of Inland Revenue in that case assessed the stamp duty under the head of charge E "Mortgage, bond, debenture, covenant", and also alternatively under the head of charge "Bond, covenant, or instrument of any kind whatsoever". But in the courts the problem debated was whether the instrument came under this second heading, where, if it did, the amount of the stamp duty would in the particular circumstance be the same as under the first alternative heading. No such question of construction as that I am now considering arose. What F was argued was whether the executory character of the agreement in that case deprived it of the status of "security" for the purpose of the Stamp Act. The answer was "No". It was the "principal or primary security" within para. (1) of the heading "Bond, covenant, or instrument of any kind whatsoever" and satisfied the condition in para. (2) of that heading, viz., "where the principal or primary instrument is duly stamped". Obviously no question could arise from G the fact that the agreement was under hand only, because the head of charge comprised such instruments. But in the present case it does not, and I therefore cannot treat the British Italian Corpn. case (11) as authority for the view that the words in para. (2) of the heading "Mortgage, bond, debenture, covenant", include an instrument under hand only, though the heading itself does not. I think the expression in para. (2) of this head of charge, viz., "where the . . . H primary security is duly stamped", refers as a matter of construction, and refers only, to securities which are themselves instruments of one of the five kinds alone dealt with in the heading. The agreement of Oct. 29, 1957, is not such a one.

That leads to this result, and this result alone, that the guarantee is not stampable under para. (2) of the heading for one of the conditions of coming I within that paragraph is not fulfilled. This does not mean that it therefore comes within para. (1). One now has to ask, as an independent question, is the guarantee the only or principal or primary security, being a mortgage, or a bond, or a debenture, or a covenant, for payment of this £750,000? The only other possible claimant for this distinction is the agreement, but that claim fails because the agreement is admittedly not a document of the kind specified, since it is under hand only. For that reason the guarantee, in my opinion, is the only document which comes within para. (1) of this heading, i.e., as being a covenant and a security. A

(11) [1921] W.N. 220; SERGEANT ON STAMP DUTIES (3rd Edn.), p. 334.

The Crown also contends that the words "duly stamped" in para. (2) mean duly stamped under this particular head of charge, or, I suppose, specifically exempt from it. As a matter of construction I would agree. It fits in with what seems to be the obvious purpose of the Act in this particular head of charge, viz., that, where a primary document has suffered the full charge, an auxiliary document should suffer a lower one. With diffidence, therefore, I think the Crown should succeed. B

Appeal dismissed. Leave to appeal to the House of Lords granted.

Solicitors: Solicitor of Inland Revenue; Herbert Smith & Co. (for the respondents). C

[Reported by F. A. Amies, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re ST. JOHN-IN-BEDWARDINE, WORCESTER.

[Court of Arches (Dean of Arches, Sir Henry Willink, Q.C.), July 7, 26, 1960.] D

Ecclesiastical Law—Consistory court—Jurisdiction—Faculty proceedings for confirmation of re-siting—Disregard of faculty previously granted—Whether court had jurisdiction to make mandatory order to secure observance of faculty previously granted.

In 1920, in spite of the fact that the chancellor of the diocese had on two occasions refused a faculty for a war memorial of a particular design, containing a calvary above a cenotaph, a parish committee collected subscriptions for and ordered a war memorial of that design. In 1921 the chancellor was asked to sanction the erection of this monument, but he refused. It was accordingly placed in the vicarage garden, where in the course of time it became overgrown and neglected. In 1956 the then chancellor, who was not advised of the decisions of his predecessors, granted a faculty for placing the monument on a site in the churchyard. The proposed site was, however, adversely affected by a road-widening scheme and in September, 1957, the incumbent had the calvary separated from the cenotaph. He placed the calvary near the wall of the church and the cenotaph near the south-eastern end of the church. This conduct caused resentment from some parishioners, although in January, 1958, the parochial church council gave its approval to what had been done. A few weeks later the incumbent informed the parochial church council that, to avoid risk of damage, the calvary had been removed to a stonemason's yard. In February, 1958, the incumbent presented a petition asking for confirmation of the re-siting of the memorial and the removal of the calvary. In May, 1958, the chancellor refused the relief prayed for and ordered the cenotaph to be removed to the site contemplated by the 1956 faculty and further ordered the replacement of the calvary. On appeal by the incumbent, E F G H

Held: (i) the mandatory part of the chancellor's order was in excess of the jurisdiction of a consistory court and must be set aside.

(ii) on the evidence the cenotaph should remain where it was and the calvary should not be replaced, and a confirmatory faculty would be granted. I

[As to the enforcement of faculties, see 13 Halsbury's Laws (3rd Edn.) 419, para. 926; and for a case, see 19 Digest 361, 1790.]

Appeal.

This was an appeal by the incumbent, the Rev. Thomas Malcolm Hart Richards, against an order of Chancellor Gray in Worcester Consistory Court, dated May 2, 1958. The facts appear in the judgment.

A J. H. Ellison for the incumbent.
D. H. M. Davies for the respondents.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 26. THE DEAN read the following judgment: For reasons which will appear later in this judgment on May 9, 1960, I acceded to an application for leave to appeal out of time and ordered that the incumbent should pay the costs of and occasioned by this application in any event. On my intimating that I would give leave, counsel for the incumbent and counsel for the respondents agreed to an order giving leave for evidence by affidavit and to my retaining the cause.

It is necessary that I should review an unhappy story extending over forty-one years. The subject-matter is a war memorial first projected in July, 1919, to the memory of men who fell in the first world war. Over the years there has been a series of blunders due in part to ignorance of the law of the Church of England, in part—I regret to say—to clear disregard of an order of the consistory court. The circumstances being as they are, should I conclude that the chancellor's order of May 2, 1958, cannot stand, it is my duty within the law so to exercise discretion as, if possible, to bring an unhappy situation to an end.

The first blunder was in November, 1920. In spite of the fact that the late Chancellor DUGDALE had on two occasions refused a faculty for a memorial including a figure of the Crucified Christ the committee appointed at a parish meeting of St. John-in-Bedwardine collected subscriptions for and ordered such a memorial. This is the monument now in question. It can be described as in its lower part a cenotaph, bearing the names of the fallen, with an upper part consisting of a gilded crucifix under a canopy. For the sake of brevity I shall refer to the two parts as the cenotaph and the calvary. In January, 1921, Chancellor AUBREY LAWRENCE was asked to sanction the erection of this monument. He refused to re-open the considered decision of his predecessor. It was, accordingly, impossible to erect the memorial in the churchyard and it was placed in the garden of the adjoining vicarage.

Apart from the inherent unsuitability of such a situation and of the fact that a memorial had been erected which had not been adjudged appropriate for the churchyard the monument was, at any rate at times, neglected and, moreover, became obscured and overgrown by trees. The incumbent who was instituted and inducted in September, 1952, had served as a chaplain to the Forces. He was very soon disturbed by its position and condition and in May, 1953, raised with his parochial church council the question whether it should not be moved to a position in the churchyard. By the autumn of 1955 the parochial church council had agreed on a site and on Feb. 20, 1956, on a petition by the incumbent and the then churchwardens, which was not opposed, a faculty was granted by Chancellor GRAY, valid for twelve months, a certificate of the work done to be rendered to the chancellor by Feb. 20, 1957. It was unfortunate that the learned chancellor was not advised of the decisions of his predecessors Chancellors DUGDALE and AUBREY LAWRENCE.

Not long after this date there were two fresh circumstances. In the first place the city corporation were minded to widen the road, a proposal which may go further than it has up to now: in the second place the city corporation formulated a scheme for the moving of gravestones and taking over the churchyard under the Open Spaces Act, 1906. For the second of these projects the corporation on June 2, 1957, obtained a faculty. The proposed setting for the war memorial was substantially changed in character, and there was a likelihood that the agreed position would have to be inconveniently close to the road. Instead of proceeding with regard to well-recognised principles both of law and parochial administration, the incumbent acted in a manner which he now recognises to have amounted to a contempt. In September, 1957, with little, if any, consultation with his churchwardens or consent he arranged for the calvary to be separated from the cenotaph and deposited near the wall of the church and for the cenotaph to be erected close to the south-eastern end of the church. The position was, he says, convenient for Remembrance Day services, but the calvary would have obscured one of the church windows. He was influenced too, I think, by the fact that the tradition of St. John-in-Bedwardine is broadly evangelical and that to some the calvary was suggestive of Anglo-Catholic or Roman Catholic feeling. Whatever the incumbent's reasons such autocratic conduct was bound to lead to resentment not least from any who had subscribed to the memorial and also from his parochial church council. There was acrimonious correspondence with one of the respondents, who had been a subscriber, and at the parochial church council on Nov. 6 he was asked and agreed to explain in the parish magazine what he had done. He did not do so.

It is not possible to assess with certainty the feeling in the parish with regard to the calvary. There is substantial evidence that the original contributors greatly deplore the dismemberment of the monument. On the other hand, it is undisputed that the tradition of the parish is evangelical: I have the weighty evidence of the Archdeacon of Worcester that the interests of the parish will be best served by the memorial remaining as and where it now stands. Thirdly, it is noteworthy that on Jan. 28, 1958, the parochial church council, notwithstanding their feeling that they had not been treated with due consideration, gave their approval to the action of the incumbent, both as to the new position and as to the removal of the calvary, by a majority of twenty-seven to two, one member not voting. A few weeks later the incumbent reported to the council that to avoid risk of damage the calvary had been moved to the yard of Messrs. Ben Davis (Worcester), Ltd., the stonemasons who had moved the monument from the vicarage garden to its new position.

The incumbent's petition asking for confirmation of the re-siting of the monument and the removal of the calvary is dated Feb. 18, 1958. On Apr. 21 an appearance was entered on behalf of thirteen ladies as to whom it has now been admitted that not one had " locus standi " in the consistory court. On Apr. 23 an appearance was entered for Mr. Robert Henry Smith, a parishioner who had been vicar's warden from 1937 to 1953. Hearing of the petition was fixed for May 2 and took place in The Old Palace in the City of Worcester. It is with regret and some embarrassment that I find myself bound to say that the course of the hearing had unsatisfactory features. It is, I think, clear that the learned chancellor was affronted by the incumbent's complete disregard of the 1956 faculty. Furthermore, he was repelled by the suggestion that a calvary was in these days objectionable. But for these strong feelings he would not have omitted to take note of the fact that of fourteen respondents thirteen had no locus standi, nor would he have called of his own motion two representatives of the diocesan advisory committee to give evidence without the notice to the parties that is required by r. 6 of the Faculty Jurisdiction Rules, 1939 (S.R. & O. 1939 No. 771).

It is, however, to the order that he made that I am primarily bound to give consideration. The learned chancellor was not content to refuse the relief prayed for but went on to order the removal of the cenotaph to the area contemplated by the 1956 faculty and, furthermore, to order the replacement of the calvary. In my judgment such a mandatory order is clearly in excess of the jurisdiction of a consistory court and cannot stand.

It follows that I must consider whether merely to strike out these parts of the order and refuse the incumbent the confirmatory faculty for which he asks. Such a course would be in the highest degree unhelpful. I do not believe that it is the course that the learned chancellor would have adopted if the limits of his jurisdiction and his inability to make a mandatory order had been present to his mind. Retaining the cause, I have discretion to exercise on all the facts of the case, and on the evidence I come, without hesitation, to the conclusion that the cenotaph should remain where it is and that the calvary should not be replaced.

A It will now be appreciated that the ground on which I gave leave to appeal out of time was that there was a prima facie case of an excess of jurisdiction and of a resultant condition of unhappiness and confusion. During the six months that followed the learned chancellor's order there was much argument, the chancellor himself making most unusual personal efforts to secure performance of his order to the extent of directing the churchwardens to perform the order and B directing the parochial church council to instruct Messrs. Ben Davis to move the cenotaph and replace the calvary. At the same time Messrs. Davis expressed doubt whether a further move of the cenotaph, which had been grouted at the time of its move from the vicarage garden, could be again effected without risk of disintegration. I decide, therefore to grant the confirmatory faculty prayed for, but I do not think it appropriate to leave the matter there. I conceive it to be my C duty while making no formal order to make certain observations with regard to this calvary.

However unwise it may have been, on the part of those responsible, to order a war memorial of this design, and though no doubt many of those who subscribed are now no longer alive, I can appreciate the distress of those who are still alive and who may include a number closely related to the men commemorated when they D saw the memorial so fundamentally changed, and that without authority. They not unnaturally felt that the monument had been improperly dealt with and that they had been treated with a lack of consideration. It is not appropriate that the calvary should merely be deposited in a stonemason's yard.

It is not possible for me to give precise directions but I cannot but feel that with goodwill it should not be difficult to find a suitable position within the City of E Worcester on consecrated ground. The calvary could be re-erected on a low plinth inscribed with words indicating that it had been given in memory of men of Worcester who fell in the first world war, but without reference to the particular parish. I would urge that there should be consultation between the parochial church council, the diocesan advisory committee and the Archdeacon of Worcester with a view to the presentation of a petition to the consistory court of the F diocese.

As to costs, I have already stated that none of the original thirteen female respondents had any locus standi. I dismiss them from the suit. As between the incumbent and Mr. Robert Henry Smith, taking all the circumstances into account I think that it is equitable, save as to the application for leave to appeal out of time, to make no order and that is my direction.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Livingstone, Wood & Son, Worcester (for the incumbent); Balderston, Warren & Co., agents for Gordon Bancks & Co., Pershore (for the respondents).

[Reported by A. T. Hoolahan, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

A

COOK v. NATIONAL COAL BOARD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Evershed, M.R., Harman and Donovan, L.JJ.), July 10, 11, 1961].

Coal Mining –Statutory duty—Breach –Road—Obstruction –Duty to keep free from obstructions—Rope forming part of haulage system left in situ when haulage system not in use—Whether rope was an "obstruction"—Mines and Quarries Act, 1954 (2 & 3 Eliz. 2 c. 70), s. 34 (1) (b).

B

The main haulage and conveyor road of a coal mine contained a conveyor belt for the transfer of coal from the coal face and, parallel with it, a rail track. The road was on a slope. The rail track haulage system, whereon tubs were hauled by rope along the rails, was not used during a coaling shift, and, indeed, in view of s. 39* of the Mines and Quarries Act, 1954, and of transport rules† made under s. 37 for the mine, ought not to be used during such a shift. The plaintiff's duties included the removal of stones which, as frequently happened during coaling shifts, got fast between the centralisers of the conveyor belt conveying coal. On Nov. 26, 1959, when re-crossing the rail track after removing a stone from the conveyor belt during a coaling shift, the plaintiff tripped on the haulage rope running between the rails of the rail track and sustained injuries. The rope at the time of the accident was taut, as a number of tubs were attached to it and held by it against the slope of the road. The rope was some four inches above the ground. The tubs, with the rope attached, had been left on the rail track at the end of the previous haulage shift, as had happened on many occasions. The road was well lighted. In an action for damages for personal injuries based on negligence and breach of statutory duty under s. 34 (1) (b)‡ of the Act of 1954, it was found that the defendant mine owners were not negligent.

C

D

E

Held: it was not established on the evidence that the tubs and the rope attached to them, which was part of the haulage mechanism, should not have been where they in fact were during the coaling shift; that being so, the rope did not constitute an obstruction within s. 34 (1) (b) of the Mines and Quarries Act, 1954, and the defendants were not in breach of statutory duty under that enactment.

F

Alexander v. Tredegar Iron & Coal Co., Ltd. ([1945] 2 All E.R. 275) considered.

Appeal allowed.

G

[As to the duty to keep roads free from obstruction, see 26 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 650, para. 1259; and for cases on the subject, see 2nd DIGEST Supp.

For the Mines and Quarries Act, 1954, s. 34, see 34 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 545.]

H

---

* Section 39 (1) reads: "The following provisions shall have effect with respect to every length of road in a mine, being a length in which run vehicles moved otherwise than by hand or by animal traction (whether or not vehicles moved by those means also run therein):—(a) during any period during which vehicles are moving in that length of road otherwise than by those means, no person employed at the mine . . . shall, except in accordance with the provisions of regulations in that behalf, pass on foot along that length of road . . . unless the movement of vehicles in that length of road, other than vehicles moved by those means, is specially stopped for the purpose of allowing him to do so . . ."

I

† The terms of the relevant rule are stated at p. 223, letter D, post.

‡ Section 34 (1), so far as material, reads: "It shall be the duty of the manager of every mine to take, with respect to every length of road therein, being a length in which vehicles or conveyors run . . . such steps as may be necessary to secure that the following provisions are complied with, namely . . . (b) every such length of road . . . shall be kept free from obstructions and the floor thereof shall be kept in good repair and in such a condition that any persons or animals who use that length of road can tread it with safety and reasonable convenience."

A Cases referred to:

Alexander v. Tredegar Iron & Coal Co., Ltd., [1945] 2 All E.R. 275; [1945] A.C. 286; 114 L.J.K.B. 377; 173 L.T. 113; 38 B.W.C.C. 94; 2nd Digest Supp.

Sanderson v. National Coal Board, [1961] 2 All E. R. 796; [1961] 3 W.L.R. 73.

Appeal.

B This was an appeal by the defendants, the National Coal Board, from a judgment of His Honour JUDGE OULD given at Rotherham County Court on Dec. 21, 1960. The plaintiff, Leonard Cook, sued the defendants for damages for personal injuries which he alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendants, their servants or agents, or by breaches of their statutory duty under s. 34 of the Mines and Quarries Act, 1954. The plaintiff was employed by the C defendants at Thurcroft Main Colliery, which was a coal mine to which the Act of 1954 applied, as a transfer point attendant. The locus of the accident was the main haulage and conveyor road, a steeply sloping road along which ran a rail track and a thirty-inch conveyor belt. The conveyor belt was used for transferring the coal from the coal face; the rail track was used to haul tubs carrying other things, such as pit props, to the coal face and waste materials D to the outbye. It was the duty of the plaintiff, among other things, to cross the rail track in order to remove any stones which got stuck between the centralisers of the conveyor belt. This was a common occurrence which might happen a dozen times in a shift. On Nov. 26, 1959, the plaintiff was on the coaling shift; the rail track was not in use but as frequently happened, some tubs had been left on the track, at the end of the previous haulage shift, with the rope attached E to and holding them. The rope was more or less taut some four or five inches above ground level. Transport rules made by the mine manager under s. 37 of the Act of 1954 provided that the haulage must not be run while the men were travelling to or from work. In stepping back across the rail track after freeing a stone from the centralisers, the plaintiff tripped on the rope and sustained injuries. The road was well lighted and there was no evidence of any similar F accident over a considerable period. The plaintiff by his statement of claim, alleged negligence and breach of statutory duty, and, in particular, alleged that the defendants in breach of s. 34 of the Act of 1954 (a) failed to keep the length of the main haulage and conveyor road where the plaintiff was free from obstructions, and (b) failed to keep the floor thereof in such a condition that the plaintiff in using it could tread it with safety and reasonable convenience. The county G court judge found that negligence was not established, that the defendants were in breach of their statutory duty under s. 34 to keep the road free from obstructions, that the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence to the extent of three-quarters. He gave judgment for the plaintiff accordingly. The defendants appealed; the plaintiff did not cross-appeal against the findings respecting negligence and contributory negligence.

H Marven Everett, Q.C., and G. Milner for the appellants, the National Coal Board.

P. Stanley Price, Q.C., and S. S. Gill for the respondent, the plaintiff.

LORD EVERSHED, M.R., stated the facts, referred to s. 39 of the Mines and Quarries Act, 1954, reviewed the evidence and continued: The second part I of the case rests, in a sentence, solely on this: was the rope in the position which has been described an obstruction? It is not in doubt that a very recent decision, Sanderson v. National Coal Board (1) supports the view that the language of these sections of the Mines and Quarries Act, 1954, is strict. It is no answer to say, if this rope was an obstruction, that it was not much of an obstruction or that it was in some way excusable—apart from a possible defence based on s. 157 of the Act of 1954 that it was impracticable to get rid of it.

(1) [1961] 2 All E.R. 796, decided on s. 81 (1) of the Act of 1954.

I, therefore, approach the matter bearing in mind the view that Parliament has thought fit to place these stringent obligations on those responsible for the conduct of what is, after all, a somewhat dangerous trade. The word "obstruction" is, however, one of ordinary usage and has, I take it, to be applied in any given case to the circumstances of that case.

Here the situation was that at the end of the preceding shift certain tubs attached to this rope and held by the rope because of the slope in the roadway, had been left standing further to the inbye side of where the plaintiff was working. This part of the road, however, was a track for the conveyance of these tubs. It was not a flat and level pathway. It consisted of a basic floor in or on which were sleepers, on the sleepers rested the rails, and at the time in question between the rails was this taut rope supporting the tubs. The whole thing, sleepers, rails and the ropes, were part of the tramway mechanism; but I agree with counsel for the plaintiff that that does not necessarily mean that the rope was not an obstruction. He concedes that the rails, though in some sense they might be said to be an obstruction, could not be treated as such within the section because they were part of the track of the tramway.

I turn then to the basis on which the learned judge founded his conclusion in favour of the plaintiff. It is to be found in two paragraphs which contain these sentences: "In the ordinary run of affairs, there would be no haulage there". That means I take it, that in the ordinary way during this shift there would be no haulage operations going on.

> "There would be no need for the tubs there and no need for the rope there, and therefore I cannot find that by any necessary implication in the construction of this section there was any licence to have an unrequired haulage rope or any other unrequired obstruction of any kind in a position such as existed on the day of this accident."

Then later he said:

> "By reason of the stringency with which this section has been framed, I am not concerned with the size of the obstruction, the height of the obstruction, or other particulars of this nature. All I am concerned with is something which, to some degree, could militate against the free passage of people whose job it was to work in such confined conditions and clearly this rope could, and did, come within that definition—albeit greatly assisted by the contributory negligence of the plaintiff in this case. I am fortified in my view of the construction of this section by the view expressed by LORD WRIGHT in the case of Alexander v. Tredegar Iron & Coal Co., Ltd. (2) that what is envisaged as an obstruction is something out of the ordinary, not in its proper place in the road in the ordinary course of things. That rope should not have been there."

It will be convenient if I refer to the language of LORD WRIGHT to which the learned judge alluded. LORD WRIGHT said (3):

> "These are things which have no right to be left on the road. They are completely out of place. I put the stress of my opinion on the word 'obstruction'".

Earlier VISCOUNT MAUGHAM had said (4):

> "I would prefer to say that upon the true construction of the section, the presence on the line of tubs or other vehicles for the purpose of working the mine is being contemplated as normal, and accordingly that vehicles so employed are not within the scope or meaning of the words 'other obstructions' as used in that section. I have carefully considered the

(2) [1945] 2 All E.R. 275; [1945] A.C. 286.
(3) [1945] 2 All E.R. at p. 281; [1945] A.C. at p. 297.
(4) [1945] 2 All E.R. at p. 278; [1945] A.C. at p. 293.

A contrary view expressed by SCOTT, L.J. (5), but I find myself unable to agree with it. I do not feel it necessary to express an opinion on the question which might arise if a vehicle was temporarily not being used for the traffic of the mine and was left unattended on the rails; but I think it would not be difficult to distinguish that case from the present one."

B It should be observed that the section which was under review in the Tredegar case (6) was s. 47 of the Coal Mines Act, 1911, the language of which was somewhat more qualified than that of the present section (7). It read: "Every haulage road shall be kept clear as far as possible of pieces of coal and other obstructions". None the less, accepting the general principles which can be derived from the speeches which I have mentioned, I think that the test is C satisfied here if there was something (i..e, this rope) not in its proper place in the ordinary course of things, something which should not have been there at all. Let me say at once that I am dealing with this case and the facts of this case and I must see what the evidence in this case proved. Section 39 of the Act of 1954 provides, in effect, that a length of road, such as that in this case, should be so managed that during a shift such as that with which we are con- D cerned the tubs are not moved at all along or over the rail track; and under s. 37 the management has made transport rules which say quite precisely and very properly that the haulage must not be run when men are travelling to and from work—again emphasising that during the shift with which we are concerned these tubs and this tramway must not be in use. Was it, however, wrong, was it something which should not have been done, that the tubs had been left where E they were on the inbye side with the rope attached to them and so being some four inches from the ground? The learned judge has concluded on the evidence that the answer which should be given is that the rope should not have been there and that the tubs should not have been left in that position attached to the rope. I regret to say, with all respect to him, that studying the evidence as best I can, I do not think that the evidence supports that conclusion. I feel F some assistance can be derived from the rejection by the learned judge of any cause of action founded on negligence. True, as counsel for the plaintiff pointed out, in order that there should be negligence the test is not quite the same as the one with which we are concerned. The question was rightly posed by the learned judge: in the circumstances should the employers as reasonable employers have appreciated that to leave tubs where they were in this way G might cause danger? Still, it is clear enough that it was a common occurrence for tubs to be left where the tubs were on this day with this rope four or five inches above the ground holding them. I have stated the evidence of Mr. Quinn, described, as I have already said, as "the best of a bad lot". He was the safety officer, and I cannot extract from his evidence anything which would lead me to the conclusion that there was here, in light of the transport rule which I H have read and s. 39, anything that was wrong—anything done which ought not to have been done—in the failure to draw the tubs up to the outbye side before the shift started. Nor can I get any similar assistance from the evidence given later by Mr. Hill, who was for the second time recalled. He said that there had never been a practice to take tubs outbye to a certain girder and that if they were taken to that position there would be an obstruction to ventilation. We are I not concerned with whether there was an excuse for doing something which was otherwise wrong, but whether on this evidence it can fairly be said that this rope, being where it was, was not in its proper place and should not have been there. I am not satisfied that that proposition is made good, and if that is so, then although I quite agree that a rope put across an ordinary plain pathway

(5) See [1944] 1 All E.R. at p. 455; [1944] K.B. at p. 397.
(6) [1945] 2 All E.R. 275; [1945] A.C. 286.
(7) I.e., s. 34 of the Act of 1954; the terms of the section, so far as material, are stated in footnote ‡, p. 220, ante.

four or five inches from the ground would plainly be an obstruction, it seems to me that this rope was being used as part of the tramway mechanism; and I do not think, even when stringency is to be applied to the construction of the section that it is in this case established that the rope in the position in which it was should be regarded as an obstruction within the section.

I therefore conclude accordingly, with all respect to the learned judge, that this claim should have failed and that this action should have been dismissed.

HARMAN, L.J.: I agree. In spite of the length to which the legislature goes to protect a workman in a mine, I think that this decision goes beyond anything that is reasonable. It is clear enough that the plaintiff's case here depended on his view that the object which tripped him up was a taut steel rope eighteen inches from the ground in a position which it never occupied and never ought to occupy in the road. On that he failed altogether to convince the court. In fact the thing which tripped him up was four inches or so from the ground, one inch above two railway lines which ran on each side of it. I do not say that a rope four inches from the ground in a clear passageway might not be a very serious obstruction because it would trip you up, but this rope, after all, was between two lines of railway, being just above the sleepers which held the track in position. It was an object which was often there. It is true that there were many times when it was not there and the learned judge, I think, based his view on the fact that it should not have been there. I do not think he was justified in that view. It seems to me that the rope where it was was quite reasonably in that position as an essential part of the mechanism for working these tubs on the railway. It was not in any unusual place or position. It was an object which he surmounted every day, five or six times, according to him, in a shift, when he crossed the line. It does seem to me that once it is found that the employers did not fall short of their duty, in other words, were not negligent either by themselves or by their other employees, then there is no room for finding that this was an obstruction so as to be a breach of s. 34 of the Mines and Quarries Act, 1954. That being so, as it was not an obstruction, the plaintiff ought not to succeed and this appeal ought to be allowed.

DONOVAN, L.J.: I agree. One starts with the admission, which must be made, that during haulage operations the rope was not an obstruction within the meaning of s. 34 of the Mines and Quarries Act, 1954. It is said, however, that if haulage is not in progress, and the rope is left in the road instead of being wound in with its attendant tubs, then the rope becomes an obstruction within the meaning of the section. This was the view taken by the learned county court judge, and I myself shared it for a time during the argument. Certain considerations have, however, displaced it. First, s. 34 is concerned with safety; and this rope had been left in situ on many occasions without anyone concerned thinking that it constituted a danger or being hurt by it. So that if criminal proceedings had been brought successfully against the manager under s. 152 of the Act of 1957, he would be punished not for leaving some recognised danger about, which anyone would regard as an " obstruction ", but really because of the laziness of the haulage boys, or for some defect in the organisation which left insufficient time for the rope and tubs to be taken in at the end of the haulage shift. The second and more persuasive consideration is this; that s. 39 of the Act of 1954 clearly envisages in para. (a) and para. (b) of sub-s. (1) that it will suffice for safety purposes if the trucks are stopped while men are working. It would be odd if, by complying with s. 39, the manager fell foul of s. 34 because the stationary trucks and rope, not being used, were then an " obstruction ". I think that this gives the clue to the meaning of that word in s. 34, at least to this extent; that a rope being part of the haulage system is not an obstruction simply because it is left in situ at a time when no haulage is taking place. There may well be a case where additional circumstances would make such a rope an

A obstruction, for example, if it was left well outside its normal position and in a place impeding foot passengers in the road. Indeed, that was the principal claim put forward here by the plaintiff, but the learned judge has found against him on the point. Otherwise the case might well come within the dicta quoted to us in Alexander v. Tredegar Iron & Coal Co., Ltd. (8).

For these reasons I also think that the appeal must be allowed.

B Appeal allowed. Leave to appeal to the House of Lords refused.

Solicitors: D. H. Haslam, agent for C. M. H. Glover, Doncaster (for the appellants, the National Coal Board); Raley & Pratt, Barnsley (for the respondent, the plaintiff).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

C

BREEN (otherwise SMITH) v. BREEN.

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Karminski, J.), January 19, June 19, 20, 26, 1961.]

Nullity—Foreign marriage—Lex loci celebrationis not providing for divorce—Husband's first marriage in Eire dissolved by English court, parties being then domiciled in England—Second marriage of husband in Republic of Ireland—Whether second marriage void—Constitution of Ireland, art. 41, s. 3 (3).

D

The husband was married in Eire in 1944 to a Miss D. That marriage was dissolved by the English court in 1952, the husband being then domiciled in England. In March, 1953, the wife in the present suit, being then a widow, went through a ceremony of marriage with the husband in Dublin. At that date the husband's former wife (Miss D.) was still alive. After the ceremony the husband and wife came to live in England and became domiciled in England. In 1958 the parties separated and in 1959 the wife presented the present petition praying for a decree that the marriage in 1953 in Dublin was null and void on the ground that by reason of art. 41, s. 3 (3) of the Constitution of Ireland* the husband was incapable of contracting a valid marriage in Dublin in 1953 since the courts of the Republic of Ireland did not recognise the decree of divorce made by the English court in 1952 and that, therefore, in March, 1953, the husband's prior marriage was still subsisting according to the law of the Republic of Ireland.

E

F

Held: the wife's petition would be dismissed since the decree of divorce in 1952 was granted by the court of the husband's domicil and would be recognised by the courts of the Republic of Ireland, art. 41, s. 3 (3), of the Irish Constitution on its true interpretation not interfering with the former law of that territory which recognised decrees of dissolution of marriage pronounced by foreign courts where the parties were domiciled within the jurisdiction of those courts.

G

Dicta of KINGSMILL MOORE, J., in Mayo-Perrott v. Mayo-Perrott ([1958] I.R. 343 et seq.) applied.

H

[As to the recognition and validity of decrees of divorce pronounced by the country of the domicil, see 7 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 114, 115, para. 202; and for cases on the subject, see 11 DIGEST (Repl.) 481-483, 1079-1097.]

Cases referred to:

Bater v. Bater, [1906] P. 209; 75 L.J.P. 60; 94 L.T. 835; 11 Digest (Repl.) 482, 1087.

I

Green v. Green, [1893] P. 89; 62 L.J.P. 112; 68 L.T. 261; 11 Digest (Repl.) 482, 1086.

Keyes v. Keyes and Gray, [1921] P. 204; 90 L.J.P. 242; 124 L.T. 797; 11 Digest (Repl.) 467, 1003.

Mayo-Perrott v. Mayo-Perrott, [1958] I.R. 336.

---

(8) [1945] 2 All E.R. 275; [1945] A.C. 286.

* The Constitution of Ireland was enacted by referendum on July 1, 1937, and was in operation as from Dec. 29, 1937 (see p. 228, letter C, post).

McM. v. McM., McK. v. McK., [1936] I.R. 177. A

R. v. Hammersmith Superintendent Registrar of Marriages, Ex p. Mir-Anwar-uddin, [1917] 1 K.B. 634; 86 L.J.K.B. 210; 115 L.T. 882; 81 J.P. 49; 11 Digest (Repl.) 489, 1123.

Russell's (Earl) Case, [1901] A.C. 446; 70 L.J.K.B. 998; 85 L.T. 253; 15 Digest (Repl.) 887, 8555.

Sinclair v. Sinclair, [1896] 1 I.R. 603. B

Sinclair's Divorce Bill, [1897] A.C. 469; 36 Digest (Repl.) 392, 375.

Petition.

By a petition dated Jan. 20, 1959, the wife alleged that on Mar. 27, 1953, she went through a form or ceremony of marriage with the husband at the Register Office in Dublin; that there were no children; that the parties were domiciled in England, alternatively that the wife had been ordinarily resident in England C for three years immediately preceding the presentation of the petition and continued:

"5. That on Aug. 7, 1944, the [husband] was lawfully married to Alice Breen, then Alice Dineen, spinster at the Roman Catholic Church of Blackrock . . . Dublin.

"6. That the said marriage has never been dissolved or annulled so as to D render valid the ceremony of marriage between [the wife] and [the husband] and at the date of the said ceremony of marriage the said Alice Breen was still alive."

The wife prayed for a decree that the marriage celebrated between herself and the husband was null and void.

The husband, by his answer, pleaded that the parties were and at all material E times had been domiciled in England and that the marriage between himself and Alice Dineen had been dissolved by the English court on Sept. 2, 1952, and prayed that the petition be dismissed. By her reply the wife admitted that a decree absolute had been pronounced on Sept. 2, 1952, and alleged

"2. That notwithstanding the said decree absolute the ceremony of F marriage referred to in para. 1 of the petition did not constitute a valid marriage by reason of the matters set out in paras. 5 and 6 of the said petition and the fact that the said decree absolute was not and would not be recognised by the courts of Eire where the said ceremony of marriage was performed on Mar. 27, 1953, as effective to dissolve the prior marriage of the [husband] which according to the laws of Eire was still subsisting on Mar. G 27, 1953."

The suit came before KARMINSKI, J., on Jan. 19, 1961, and after evidence had been called on behalf of the wife the suit was adjourned for argument by the Queen's Proctor under the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950, s. 10 (1).

I. J. Black for the wife.

The husband appeared in person. H

Colin Duncan for the Queen's Proctor.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 26. KARMINSKI, J., read the following judgment: Mrs. Breen, the petitioner, and Mr. Breen, the respondent, went through a form or ceremony of marriage together on Mar. 27, 1953, at the Register Office, Dublin, in the Republic I of Ireland. At the time of this ceremony of marriage the wife was a widow, her former husband, Mr. Smith, having died in 1942. The husband was married in Ireland on Aug. 7, 1944, to a Miss Alice Dineen. That marriage was finally dissolved by this court on Sept. 2, 1952, on the grounds of the husband's desertion and adultery. It is conceded on behalf of the husband that he was then domiciled in England. The husband's former wife, Alice Breen, was alive on Mar. 27, 1953, and is said to be still alive. After the ceremony of marriage in Dublin the wife and the husband came to live in due course in England and finally at a

A hotel at Deddington in Oxfordshire, where they carried on business jointly as hotel proprietors. Difficulties having arisen between them they separated in June, 1958, and have not lived together since. I have used the word " separated " deliberately, as there is no evidence before me of the circumstances which led to the termination of their life together.

Soon after their separation the husband wrote to the wife referring to their B supposed marriage and alleging that by the terms of the Irish Constitution they were not lawfully married. The husband suggested to the wife that she should take advice, and in January, 1959, the present petition was presented to this court.

[HIS LORDSHIP referred to the pleadings and continued:] There is no dispute as to the domicil of the parties, and I find them to have been domiciled in England C at the inception of this suit. There is no question here as to any defect in the form of the marriage ceremony under Irish law. Nor is it suggested that either the wife or the registrar who performed the ceremony were deceived in any way as to the status of the husband. The wife herself was well aware of his earlier marriage to Alice Dineen and of its dissolution in England. The registrar cannot have been deceived as to the status of the husband, who is described in the D marriage certificate under the heading of condition as " divorcé ".

The wife bases her case on the provisions of art. 41, s. 3 (3) of the Constitution of Ireland of 1937. Article 41 deals generally with the family and its position in the state. Section 3 deals with the institution of marriage and its protection, providing in particular that no law shall be enacted providing for the grant of a dissolution of marriage. Subsection (3) is in the following terms:

E "No person whose marriage has been dissolved under the civil law of any other state but is a subsisting valid marriage under the law for the time being in force within the jurisdiction of the government and Parliament established by this constitution shall be capable of contracting a valid marriage within that jurisdiction during the lifetime of the other party to the marriage so dissolved."

F I do not find the wording of sub-s. (3) easy to interpret, and I am relieved to find that these difficulties have been shared by the Supreme Court of Ireland itself in Mayo-Perrott v. Mayo-Perrott (1) to which I shall refer in detail in due course. In the present case I have had the advantage of expert evidence on Irish law from Mr. McEnery of the Irish and English Bars for the wife, and from Mr. McCreery of the Irish and English Bars for the Queen's Proctor. On their construction of G sub-s. (3) these witnesses differed substantially on the same lines, and certainly as completely, as the judges of the Supreme Court. Before I come to this question of construction, it is necessary to discuss briefly the history of the matrimonial jurisdiction of the Irish courts. Between the Act of Union of 1802 and the Constitution of the Irish Free State in 1922, it is clear that the Irish courts had no jurisdiction to dissolve a marriage a vinculo. The Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, H applied to England only. It did not apply to Ireland, nor indeed to Scotland. For a person domiciled in Ireland until 1922, the only way to obtain a dissolution was by private bill presented to Parliament at Westminster (see Sinclair's Divorce Bill (2)).

The Constitution of the Irish Free State (3) was the first creation of the Irish Provisional Parliament sitting as a Constituent Assembly, and was designed to I implement the Treaty of 1921 between Great Britain and Ireland. It is unnecessary for the purposes of this case to examine that constitution in full, but by art. 12 it created a legislature of the King and two houses, to be known as the Oireachtas. Article 73 provided that, subject to the constitution, the laws in force in the Irish Free State at the date of the coming into force of the Constitution should continue to be of full force and effect until repealed or amended by the Oireachtas. So far as the matrimonial jurisdiction of the Irish courts was concerned, the position remained unchanged. The Irish courts had, as before 1922, no jurisdiction to dissolve marriages. In theory at least, private divorce bills would henceforward be presented to the new legislature in Dublin and no longer to Parliament at Westminster. When the 1922 Constitution came into force, three Irish divorce bills were due for presentation at Westminster. Their subsequent history is set out in the judgment of HANNA, J., in McM. v. McM., McK. v. McK. (4). Between 1922 and 1937 I am satisfied that no divorces by Act of the Oireachtas were granted, and it does not appear that after the 1922 remanets disappeared, any new bills for divorce were presented.

(1) [1958] I.R. 336. (2) [1897] A.C. 469.

(3) This constitution, which is set out in Sch. 1 to the Irish Free State Constitution Act, 1922 (Session 2), was much amended and subsequently was superseded by the new constitution, voted on plebiscite, on July 1, 1937.

On July 1, 1937, the new Constitution of Ireland was enacted by referendum, and came into force on Dec. 29, 1937. The Constitution is of the most comprehensive character, and was clearly drawn with great care and skill. Some of its provisions are statements of fundamental policies and rights. Article 29 on International Relations and art. 44 on Religion may be cited as examples of this class. Article 34 on the courts is an example of the legislative functions of the Constitution. But whatever the nature of the various articles, I am satisfied that the Constitution has the force of law, and indeed forms part of the law of Ireland.

It is in this context that art. 41 on the family has to be examined, and in particular the meaning of s. 3 (3). I now turn to Mayo-Perrott v. Mayo-Perrott (5), where a plaintiff who had been the successful petitioner for dissolution in this court sued in the High Court of Ireland for the unpaid balance of her costs awarded in that suit. It was held by MURNAGHAN, J., at first instance, and affirmed on appeal by the Supreme Court, that the order for costs could not be severed from the substantive order for divorce and could not be enforced in Ireland as creating a separate cause of action in personam. MURNAGHAN, J., remarked (6) that s. 3 (3) did not lend itself to easy interpretation, and finding that the order for costs could not be severed from the decree of divorce, refused to enforce a foreign law which he regarded as repugnant to the Republic's own distinctive policy on divorce. MURNAGHAN, J., did not make any decision with regard to the recognition of the English decree as valid to dissolve the marriage, nor was any such decision necessary for the disposal of that case. On appeal to the Supreme Court, two of the judges went further and discussed the question whether or not the English decree of divorce would be recognised as valid to dissolve the marriage in the Irish courts. The findings on this question were not in my view necessary in determining the question before the Supreme Court, and must therefore be treated as obiter. But, as this is the only reported case in Ireland in which the question of recognition seems to have been discussed since 1937, the observations of MAGUIRE, C.J., and of KINGSMILL MOORE, J., require careful consideration. Unfortunately their views differed completely, and I have been left with the difficult and delicate task of having to decide which view I must accept.

MAGUIRE, C.J., shared the difficulty of MURNAGHAN, J., in construing sub-s. (3). After referring to sub-s. (2), he expressed the view that sub-s. (3) was designed to double bar the door closed in sub-s. (2), and added these words (7):

> "Far from recognising the validity of a divorce obtained outside the country it seems to me expressly to deny to such a divorce any recognition for it prohibits the contracting of a valid marriage by a party who has obtained a divorce elsewhere. The subsection says as plainly as it could be said that a valid marriage which is dissolved under the law of another state remains in the eyes of our law a subsisting valid marriage. It may be that the constitution recognises that a decree of dissolution of marriage elsewhere may be valid in the country where it has been obtained, but to my mind as I have said it denies any validity here."

(4) [1936] I.R. at pp. 188, 189.
(5) [1958] I.R. 336.
(6) [1958] I.R. at p. 339.
(7) [1958] I.R. at p. 344.

A I differ with obvious hesitation from the Chief Justice in his construction of the Irish Constitution, but I am bound to say that I do not understand the section to say either plainly or at all that a valid marriage dissolved by the court of another state remains in the eyes of the Irish law a subsisting valid marriage. Indeed Mr. McEnery, who expressed the view that in other respects the views of the Chief Justice correctly expressed the law of Ireland, at once admitted that the B language used in the passage which I have just quoted was too wide.

KINGSMILL MOORE, J., expressed an exactly opposite view, and, indeed, approached the question by a different route. Pointing out that until 1921 the law of England and Ireland was the same in recognising the validity of a decree of the court of the domicil of the parties, he held that the law of Ireland as it stood in 1921 was expressly retained by art. 73 of the Constitution of 1922. C Discussing the effect of art. 41, s. 3 (3), he used the words (8):

> "It is submitted that the effect of this article is to refuse to recognise the validity of divorces a vinculo by a foreign court in any circumstances, inasmuch as our law does not permit a dissolution of marriage and regards the marriage as valid and subsisting despite a decree purporting to dissolve it; and that the article renders invalid any re-marriage of persons so divorced, D whenever such re-marriage is contracted, so long as the first spouse is alive. First it must be noted that the prohibition is not applicable to all cases of dissolution of marriage, but only to cases where, under the law for the time being in force within our jurisdiction, the original marriage is regarded as valid and subsisting, or in other words where, by that law, the divorce is regarded as not being effectual to put any end to the original valid marriage. No doubt E the Oireachtas could pass a law that no dissolution of marriage, wherever effected, even where the parties were domiciled in the country of the court pronouncing the decree, was to be effective to annul the pre-existing valid marriage. If it did so, then, by the law for the time being in force, the first marriage would still be valid and subsisting within our jurisdiction. But the Oireachtas has not done so, and the law as existing when the constitution F was passed was that a divorce effected by a foreign court of persons domiciled within its jurisdiction was regarded as valid in our jurisdiction. Such law was preserved unless inconsistent with the new constitution and, in the absence of any statement in the new constitution altering such law, inconsistency cannot be spelled out from the words now being interpreted for they are perfectly consistent with the preservation of the pre-existing G law which was the 'law for the time being in force.'
>
> "There were, indeed, divorces carried through under the law and by the courts of a foreign state which were not regarded as effectual to put an end to the marriage. The most obvious instance was where the parties were not for the time being domiciled in the country whose courts granted the divorce (Keyes v. Keyes and Gray (9); Green v. Green (10); Earl Russell's H Case (11)). But there may be other instances; R. v. Hammersmith Superintendent Registrar of Marriages, Ex p. Mir-Anwaruddin (12); suggests that our law would not recognise as valid a dissolution effected in a foreign country by persons domiciled in such country, where by the law of that country, divorce could be brought about without recourse to the courts; nor would it recognise as effective the dissolution of a marriage essentially monogamous I by a form suitable only to the dissolution of a polygamous marriage. It is unnecessary to examine all possibilities. It is, however, legitimate to suggest that it is highly unlikely that the constitution intended, without clear words, to reverse what is a practically universal rule of private international law, and to produce a state of affairs which was stigmatised by LORD PENZANCE and LORD WATSON in the words already quoted (13), words which

(8) [1958] I.R. at p. 348. (9) [1921] P. at p. 207. (10) [1893] P. 89.
(11) [1901] A.C. 446. (12) [1917] 1 K.B. 634.
(13) LORD PENZANCE in Wilson v. Wilson, (1872), L.R. 2 P. & D. at p. 442; LORD WATSON in Le Mesurier v. Le Mesurier, [1895] A.C. at p. 540.

were also adopted by WARREN, P., in Sinclair v. Sinclair (14). I cannot find anything in art. 41 (3) to suggest that the courts (in the absence of further legislation) are entitled to do otherwise than regard as valid and effectual a divorce a vinculo granted by the courts of a foreign country, where the parties at the time of the suit were domiciled in that country.

"The remaining words of art. 41, s. 3, are not without difficulty. They apply only to persons whose divorce in a foreign country is not recognised as effectual by our courts (e.g., where the divorced persons were not domiciled in that country), and where, therefore, the original marriage is considered to be still valid and subsisting. They say that a person whose marriage is thus considered by the law to be valid and subsisting 'shall not be capable of contracting a valid marriage within that jurisdiction (i.e., our jurisdiction) during the lifetime of the other party to the marriage so dissolved.' The words do not declare that such a person cannot anywhere contract 'a marriage valid within our jurisdiction,' but merely prohibit the contracting within our jurisdiction of a valid marriage. It is the contracting of the second marriage within the jurisdiction which is prohibited. There is nothing to make it invalid if contracted elsewhere.

"The general policy of the article seems to me clear. The constitution does not favour dissolution of marriage. No laws can be enacted to provide for a grant of dissolution of marriage in this country. No persons whose divorced status is not recognised by the law of this country for the time being can contract in this country a valid second marriage. But it does not purport to interfere with the present law that dissolutions of marriage by foreign courts, where the parties are domiciled within the jurisdiction of those courts, will be recognised as effective here. Nor does it in any way invalidate the re-marriage of such persons. It avoids the anomalous, if not scandalous, state of affairs stigmatised in the passages which I have already cited whereby legitimacy and criminality could be decided by a flight over St. George's Channel."

The other three judges of the Supreme Court (15) did not discuss the problems created by sub-s. 3 but confined themselves to the narrower issue which the court was called on to decide. Indeed MAGUIRE, J., expressly held (16) that the facts did not call for the application of the subsection and that it was not relevant. I am, therefore, left to choose between the conflicting views of MAGUIRE, C.J., and KINGSMILL MOORE, J. I have approached the matter in this way. I have looked at the subsection unassisted by any expression of Irish judicial opinion and I have tried to construe its meaning. Doing this I find that I must come to the same construction and for the same reasons as KINGSMILL MOORE, J. The principle of recognising the validity of a decree pronounced by the court of the domicil has been long established, and indeed forms an essential part of the comity of nations. Any departure from this principle is likely, as Sir GORELL BARNES, P., pointed out in Bater v. Bater (17) to produce absurd results, which would be neither convenient nor logical. If the article intended to depart from this established principle, it could no doubt have done so; but it would have expressed the intention in clear and unequivocal terms.

I find, therefore, that Irish law in the present case recognises the validity of the English court in dissolving the marriage between the husband and his first wife and recognises the validity of the second marriage celebrated in Ireland between him and the petitioner. In the result the petition fails and must be dismissed.

Petition dismissed.

Solicitors: Buller, Jeffries & Kenshole, Birmingham, agents for Aplin, Hunt, Thomas & Brooks, Banbury (for the wife); Queen's Proctor.

[Reported by A. T. HOOLAHAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

(14) [1896] 1 I.R. 603.
(15) LAVERY, O'DALY and MAGUIRE, JJ.
(16) [1958] I.R. at p. 353.
(17) [1906] P. at p. 217.

A

CLIFFORD v. CLIFFORD.

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Cairns, J.), June 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 1961.]

Divorce—Evidence—Cross-examination—Adultery—Petition on ground of cruelty—Cross-prayer on ground of desertion—No allegation of adultery in pleadings—Admissibility of cross-examination as to adultery—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950 (14 Geo. 6 c. 25), s. 32 (3).

B

It is permissible in divorce proceedings which are not instituted in consequence of adultery (and to which, therefore, s. 32 (3) of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950, is not applicable) to ask questions, as part of cross-examination as to credit, tending to show that the party cross-examined has committed adultery.

C

Blunt v. Park Lane Hotel, Ltd. ([1942] 2 All E.R. 187) and Lewis v. Lewis ([1958] 1 All E.R. 859) considered.

[As to cross-examination as to adultery in a divorce suit, see 12 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 372, para. 812; as to evidence in cases of cruelty, see ibid., p. 278, para. 534; and for cases on cross-examination, see 27 DIGEST (Repl.) 524, 4661-4666.

D

For the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950, s. 32 (3), see 29 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 417.]

Cases referred to:

Blunt v. Park Lane Hotel, Ltd., [1942] 2 All E.R. 187; [1942] 2 K.B. 253; 111 L.J.K.B. 706; 167 L.T. 359; 18 Digest (Repl.) 190, 1638.

E

Lewis v. Lewis, [1958] 1 All E.R. 859; [1958] P. 193; [1958] 2 W.L.R. 747; 3rd Digest Supp.

Petition.

In this case the wife petitioned for divorce on the ground of the husband's cruelty. The husband by his answer denied the alleged cruelty and cross-prayed for divorce on the ground of the wife's desertion. In his answer the husband said that he had called the wife a prostitute, and that this was a reference to his suspicions concerning her unexplained absence from the matrimonial home for two months in 1956. There was, however, no allegation in the pleadings that the wife had committed adultery. At the hearing of the suit, counsel for the husband sought in cross-examination to ask the wife questions tending to show that she had committed adultery during her absence in 1956 and also during the period of her alleged desertion, and contended that the questions went to credit. The case is reported solely on the judge's ruling on this point.

F

G

A. H. Tibber for the wife.

D. P. F. Wheatley for the husband.

H

CAIRNS, J., in the course of his judgment, said: In the course of his cross-examination of the wife counsel for the husband put certain questions directed to eliciting that after she had left the husband she had associated with another man, and to ascertaining whether she had committed adultery with him. These questions were objected to by counsel for the wife on the ground that there was no allegation of adultery on the pleadings. Counsel for the husband contended that the questions went to credit. I felt some doubt whether such a line of cross-examination was permissible. From inquiries which I have since made, it would appear that it has been the general, though not the invariable, practice in this Division to allow such cross-examination. There is, however, so far as counsel have been able to discover, no reported case deciding the point.

I

It is clear that s. 32 (3) of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1950, which protects a witness in proceedings instituted in consequence of adultery from being asked questions tending to show that he or she has been guilty of adultery, unless he or she has already given evidence in dispute of the alleged adultery, has no application when the proceedings are for cruelty only. It is also established by the authority of the Court of Appeal that there is no general protection against questions tending to prove adultery on the ground that such questions are in any sense incriminating: Blunt v. Park Lane Hotel, Ltd. (1). The Court of Appeal has also decided that in a divorce suit founded on cruelty a party may be cross-examined as to adultery where there is on the pleadings an allegation of philandering which is closely connected with the issue of cruelty: see Lewis v. Lewis (2). In the last-mentioned case HODSON, L.J., said (3):

> "It is unnecessary to go further and consider whether in any event the question might have been permissible as tending to go to shake the credit of the husband, to whom the question as to adultery was addressed."

It was argued in the present case on behalf of the wife that a question as to adultery does not go to credit because the fact that a person has committed adultery, if it be a fact, does not make him or her a less reliable witness. The range of permissible cross-examination as to credit is, however, very wide. It has never, I think, been doubted that a conviction for any offence could be put to a witness by way of cross-examination as to credit, even though the offence was not one of dishonesty. Furthermore, if a petitioner who has not filed a discretion statement has to admit adultery when questioned about it, it tends to show that in that respect he or she has not been frank with the court, which may well be considered relevant to credit. Looking at the matter more widely, counsel may have such instructions as enable him to put a series of questions to the witness which may cause the witness to prevaricate or hedge in an attempt to conceal adultery of which he or she has in fact been guilty, and the credit of the witness may be very much shaken by the way in which such questions are dealt with.

For these reasons I decided that the questions put by counsel for the husband were permissible. It is obvious that responsible counsel will not put such questions unless he had instructions which, if true, would in fact indicate a probability that adultery had been committed. If an admission of adultery were obtained then, whatever its effect on the credit of the witness, it would put a wholly fresh complexion on the suit, of which the court would have to take notice. If the witness denies matters put, his evidence must, of course, be accepted, and evidence cannot be led to contradict him. When, in accordance with my ruling, questions were put to the wife she firmly denied that she had had any such association as was suggested so, in the result, this line of cross-examination had no effect at all on her credibility, and I approach the case as if the questions had never been put at all. In some cases the fact of such a line of cross-examination being adopted might well reflect adversely on the party who had authorised it. In the present case I do not consider that the husband in allowing those questions to be put was doing anything reprehensible.

Rule accordingly.

[HIS LORDSHIP, after considering the evidence, granted the husband a decree nisi on the ground of the wife's desertion.]

Solicitors: Cawdery, Kaye & Co. (for the wife); A. D. Vandamm & Co., agents for J. P. Nolan & Janes, Southend-on-Sea (for the husband).

[Reported by A. T. HOOLAHAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

---

(1) [1942] 2 All E.R. 187; [1942] 2 K.B. 253.
(2) [1958] 1 All E.R. 859; [1958] P. 193.
(3) [1958] 1 All E.R. at p. 862; [1958] P. at p. 200.

A

EAVES v. MORRIS MOTORS, LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Holroyd Pearce, Willmer and Pearson, L.JJ.), June 19, 20, 21, July 5, 1961.]

Factory—Dangerous machinery—Duty to fence—Horizontal milling machine—Machine comprising traversing table carrying block in nature of vice—Bolts to be milled affixed to block—Whether block, when moving and carrying bolts, dangerous part of machinery—Factories Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6 c. 67), s. 14 (1).

B

The plaintiff was employed by the defendants to operate a horizontal milling machine which was used for milling bolt heads and comprised a traversing table (or traverse) which, in the course of the operation of the machine, moved forward and then backward, carrying a block in the nature of a vice. Before each operation, the operator had to insert two bolts vertically in the vice, the bolts being held in place by the tightening of a nut. By moving a lever in front of the machine, the operator set in motion the traverse, which then went forward, carrying the bolts with it under the rotating cutting wheels. The traverse reversed itself automatically and stopped when it had returned to the former position. The operator would then remove the bolts, insert two more bolts, pull the starting handle and the operation would be repeated. During the operation, the cutting wheels were guarded by bars, the bolts in the vice passing between them. While the plaintiff was operating the machine, the block traversed forward and backward and then stopped in the normal way, but, as he was about to remove the two bolts from the vice, the machine "repeated", that is, the block started forward again without the plaintiff having pulled the starting handle. He hastily withdrew his hand to avoid its being drawn towards and against the guard, and in so doing cut his hand on a tiny burr or irregularity on the bolt head. The trivial cut became septic and he lost a finger. There was no evidence that the repeating of the machine could have been reasonably foreseen. The plaintiff claimed damages against the defendants for (among other grounds) breach of their statutory duty under s. 14 (1) of the Factories Act, 1937, to fence securely a dangerous part of machinery.

C

D

E

F

Held: there was no breach of statutory duty under s. 14 (1) of the Factories Act, 1937, because—

(i) distinction must be drawn between material (viz., the bolts in the present case), which was dangerous when in motion in a machine, and machinery itself which was dangerous when in motion, and the obligation under s. 14 (1) to fence securely did not require that material should be fenced (see p. 241, letter B, p. 239, letter I, p. 236, letter C, and p. 237, letter C, post).

G

Bullock v. G. John Power (Agencies), Ltd. ([1956] 1 All E.R. 498); Nicholls v. Austin (Leyton), Ltd. ([1946] 2 All E.R. 92); and Close v. Steel Co. of Wales, Ltd. ([1961] 2 All E.R. 953) applied.

H

(ii) (per HOLROYD PEARCE and PEARSON, L.JJ.) the part of machinery in the present case was not dangerous as the "repeating" was not reasonably foreseeable (see p. 238, letter D, and p. 241, letter F, post); (per WILLMER, L.J.) s. 14 (1) did not extend to dangers due to abnormal and unexpected behaviour of a machine, such as the "repeating" in the present case (see p. 240, letter A, post).

I

Dictum of DU PARCQ, J., in Walker v. Bletchley Flettons, Ltd. ([1937] 1 All E.R. at p. 175); and Close v. Steel Co. of Wales, Ltd. ([1961] 2 All E.R. 953) applied.

Per HOLROYD PEARCE, L.J.: in deciding whether machinery is dangerous within s. 14 (1), it is permissible to consider whether the juxtaposition of material placed in the machine and the machinery when in normal motion gives rise to danger (see p. 238, letter C, post).

Decision of WINN, J. ([1960] 3 All E.R. 656) reversed. A

[As to the statutory duty to fence dangerous parts of machinery, see 17 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 74, para. 126; and for cases on the subject, see 24 DIGEST (Repl.) 1049-1055, 180-218.

For the Factories Act, 1937, s. 14, see 9 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 1009.] B

Cases referred to:

Bolton v. Stone, [1951] 1 All E.R. 1078; [1951] A.C. 850; 36 Digest (Repl.) 18, 79.

Bullock v. G. John Power (Agencies), Ltd., [1956] 1 All E.R. 498; [1956] 1 W.L.R. 171; 3rd Digest Supp.

Carroll v. Andrew Barclay & Sons, Ltd., [1948] 2 All E.R. 386; [1948] A.C. 477; [1948] L.J.R. 1490; 24 Digest (Repl.) 1056, 221. C

Close v. Steel Co. of Wales, Ltd., [1960] 2 All E.R. 657; [1960] 2 Q.B. 299; [1960] 3 W.L.R. 401; affd. H.L., [1961] 2 All E.R. 953; [1961] 3 W.L.R. 319; 3rd Digest Supp.

Dickson v. Flack, [1953] 2 All E.R. 840; [1953] 2 Q.B. 464; [1953] 3 W.L.R. 571; 24 Digest (Repl.) 1051, 194. D

Hindle v. Birtwistle, [1897] 1 Q.B. 192; 76 L.T. 159; 61 J.P. 70; sub nom. Birtwistle v. Hindle, 66 L.J.Q.B. 173; 24 Digest (Repl.) 1053, 207.

Hoare v. M. & W. Grazebrook, Ltd., [1957] 1 All E.R. 470; [1957] 1 W.L.R. 638; 3rd Digest Supp.

Johnson v. J. Stone & Co. (Charlton), Ltd., [1961] 1 All E.R. 869; [1961] 1 W.L.R. 849. E

Kilgollan v. William Cooke & Co., Ltd., [1956] 2 All E.R. 294; [1956] 1 W.L.R. 527; 3rd Digest Supp.

Lenthall v. Gimson & Co. (Leicester), Ltd. (Leicester Assizes, May 24, 1956), unreported.

Lewis v. High Duty Alloys, Ltd., [1957] 1 All E.R. 740; [1957] 1 W.L.R. 632; 3rd Digest Supp. F

Newnham v. Taggart Morgan & Coles, Ltd., (July 19, 1956), unreported.

Nicholls v. Austin (Leyton), Ltd., [1946] 2 All E.R. 92; [1946] A.C. 493; 115 L.J.K.B. 329; 175 L.T. 5; 24 Digest (Repl.) 1091, 419.

Rutherford v. R. E. Glanville & Sons (Bovey Tracey), Ltd., [1958] 1 All E.R. 532; [1958] 1 W.L.R. 415; 3rd Digest Supp.

Sparrow v. Fairey Aviation Co., Ltd., [1961] 1 All E.R. 216; [1961] 1 W.L.R. 844. G

Summers (John) & Sons, Ltd. v. Frost, [1955] 1 All E.R. 870; [1955] A.C. 740; [1955] 2 W.L.R. 203; 24 Digest (Repl.) 1055, 217.

Walker v. Bletchley Flettons, Ltd., [1937] 1 All E.R. 170; 24 Digest (Repl.) 1054, 212.

Appeal. H

This was an appeal by the defendants from a judgment of WINN, J., at Birmingham Assizes, given on Oct. 12, 1960, and reported ([1960] 3 All E.R. 656) whereby he awarded the plaintiff the sum of £1,851 10s. 2d. as damages for the defendants' negligence and breach of statutory duty under s. 14 (1) of the Factories Act, 1937. The appeal is reported only on the question of breach of statutory duty. I

John Thompson, Q.C., and R. H. Tucker for the appellants, the defendants.

A. E. James, Q.C., and G. F. I. Sunderland for the respondent, the plaintiff.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 5. The following judgments were read.

HOLROYD PEARCE, L.J.: The plaintiff was engaged on piece-work in the task of putting bolts, two at a time, through a milling machine driven by hydraulic

A power. The speed of the operation is shown by the fact that he could normally hope to deal with three thousand bolts during the night shift. He stood at a metal table on which was a vice or block into which he inserted two bolts standing upright. He made them secure by tightening a nut. He then pulled the starting handle, whereupon the metal table together with the block traversed a few inches towards the cutting knives of the machine, moving fairly fast. The knives had a B guard of vertical bars which allowed the block to pass underneath them and the projecting bolts to pass between them. Thus there was no danger of his hand coming into contact with the knives. While the bolts were being milled by the knives the block momentarily halted. The block (and table) then reversed, the block still holding the bolts emerged once more from within the guard, and returned to the position whence it started. The metal table and block would then C halt. The plaintiff would then loosen the nut and remove the bolts. He would insert two fresh bolts, pull the starting handle again, and the whole operation would be repeated. On the occasion of the accident the machine "repeated" or "performed an uncovenanted stroke". Instead of remaining stationary on the completion of its task it suddenly for no apparent reason started off on its journey again without the plaintiff pulling the starting handle. He was just in D the act of removing the finished bolts when this happened. He hastily withdrew his hand to avoid its being drawn towards and against the guard and in so doing cut his hand on a tiny burr or irregularity on the bolt head. This trivial cut became septic and he lost his finger.

The two questions that arise are: First, was there a failure to fence within s. 14 of the Factories Act, 1937, and secondly, was there at common law a failure E to use reasonable care to see that the machine was properly maintained in consequence of which failure it "repeated"? On both those questions the judge found in the plaintiff's favour.

It is conceded that the block without the bolts in it was not a dangerous part of the machinery. The learned judge said this (1):

> "There can be no doubt, in my judgment, that the block is part of the F machinery, and, at the material moment, a moving part of the machinery. I cannot, for my part, believe that it is right to take the view, and I refuse to take it, that the bolts standing in that block were not themselves part of the block. If the block itself had had a sharp edge and, by moving forward, had cut the plaintiff's finger, then it would have been a moving part of the machinery which was dangerous, moving as it was and giving motion to G the bolts which were then physically in it. The block comprised the bolts, and the bolts in the block were part of the machinery. It may be only playing with words, but I put my thoughts a little differently when I say that the block itself was a dangerous part of the machinery when it moved, because it carried with it those bolts."

H Section 14 (1) of the Factories Act, 1937, reads:

> "Every dangerous part of any machinery, other than prime movers and transmission machinery, shall be securely fenced unless it is in such a position or of such construction as to be as safe to every person employed or working on the premises as it would be if securely fenced . . ."

Section 14 (3) provides:

I

> "Any part of a stock-bar which projects beyond the head-stock of a lathe shall be securely fenced unless it is in such a position as to be as safe to every person employed or working on the premises as it would be if securely fenced. The Secretary of State may, as respects any machine or any process in which a machine is used, make regulations requiring the fencing of materials or articles which are dangerous while in motion in the machine."

(1) [1960] 3 All E.R. at p. 659.

Regulations have been made under that section with regard to fencing particular classes of machinery and when so made they take the place of and to that extent modify the absolute duty to fence under s. 14 so far as concerns those particular classes of machinery. No regulations, however, have been made with regard to fencing the material used in machinery.

I feel sympathy with the learned judge's view of the matter and I would gladly accept it, were it not for s. 14 (3) and authorities which are in my judgment inconsistent with that view. Section 14 (3) would be completely pointless if the true meaning of s. 14 (1) was that materials or articles which are dangerous while in motion in the machine can be regarded as part of the machinery and, therefore, have to be fenced under that section. For s. 14 (3) expressly gives the Secretary of State power to make regulations requiring them to be fenced. Moreover, it expressly provides for the fencing of a stock-bar which projects beyond the head-stock of a lathe—a typical example of material which is dangerous while in motion in the machine. It is, therefore, difficult to construe "machinery" in s. 14 (1) as including the "materials or articles" which are "in motion in the machine".

I cannot accept counsel for the plaintiff's ingenious suggestion that the words of sub-s. (3) are intended to give the Secretary of State power to modify the rigid requirements of sub-s. (1) by making regulations which will supersede them, and which by being in some respects less strict (as, e.g., the Horizontal Milling Machines Regulations, 1928 (S.R. & O. 1928 No. 548)) will give practical help to problems caused by the rigidity of fencing requirements. The words of sub-s. (3) do not tolerate such an argument. They are plainly directed to the making of regulations requiring the fencing of materials or articles and not to regulations modifying the fencing requirements of s. 14 (1).

In Hindle v. Birtwistle (2), it was decided that there had been a failure to fence a dangerous part of machinery when the shuttle flew off a weaving machine and injured the plaintiff. WILLS, J., said (3):

> ". . . machinery or parts of machinery is and are dangerous if in the ordinary course of human affairs danger may be reasonably anticipated from the use of them without protection."

It is urged by counsel for the plaintiff that the learned judges were there considering danger as it should be considered, namely, as danger to the workman for whose protection the Act was passed, without restriction on how the danger is caused, provided that the danger emanates from the machinery and can reasonably be anticipated. That is an attractive and sensible approach if the wording of the Act of 1937 and the authorities allow it. But in Nicholls v. Austin (Leyton), Ltd. (4) the House of Lords on a consideration of the wording of s. 14 concluded that the obligation under it was an obligation to guard against contact with machinery and not to guard against dangerous materials ejected from it—an obligation to "fence out" and not an obligation to "fence in".

In Carroll v. Andrew Barclay & Sons, Ltd. (5) the House of Lords held that there was no breach of s. 14 where a broken belt (part of the transmission machinery) lashed out at the plaintiff and injured him. But doubts were expressed by some of the noble and learned Lords whether, in spite of what was said in Nicholls' case (4), machines which were dangerous because they ejected loose parts of the machinery (as opposed to materials in it) might not require to be fenced. In Dickson v. Flack (6) this court, having considered those dicta, held that there was a breach of s. 14 when a cutter thrown off (as was not unusual) from a spindle in a woodworking machine injured the plaintiff. The same view was taken by this court in Newnham v. Taggart Morgan & Coles, Ltd. (7) and Rutherford v. R. E. Glanville & Sons (Bovey Tracey), Ltd. (8).

(2) [1897] 1 Q.B. 192. (3) [1897] 1 Q.B. at p. 195.
(4) [1946] 2 All E.R. 92; [1946] A.C. 493.
(5) [1948] 2 All E.R. 386; [1948] A.C. 477.
(6) [1953] 2 All E.R. 840; [1953] 2 Q.B. 464. (7) (July 19, 1956), unreported.
(8) [1958] 1 All E.R. 532.

A In Bullock v. G. John Power (Agencies), Ltd. (9) this court decided that a plaintiff could not recover in respect of injury caused by a loose end of wire which was being wound on an electric drum. The ratio of the case is in certain respects conclusive of the present case. The court founded itself on Nicholls' case (10) and on the distinction there drawn between the machinery and the materials in it.

B Counsel for the plaintiff argued that that case would not now be so decided since this court was then largely relying on the view in Nicholls' case (10) that the purpose of fencing under s. 14 was to keep out the body of a workman and not to fence in flying objects, and that, since subsequent cases such as Dickson v. Flack (11) have held that this view did not apply in respect of flying pieces of machinery, the natural force of Bullock v. Power (9) is abated. Therefore, he C urged us to return to the broad common-sense view expressed by WILLS, J., and WRIGHT, J., in Hindle v. Birtwistle (12). But Nicholls' case (10) decided that material is a separate thing from the machine which controls it and that the section does not require material to be fenced. It was on that aspect of Nicholls' case (10) that this court decided Bullock v. Power (9). Judicial opinion on that matter has never changed and in view of the wording of s. 14 (3) it is difficult to D see how it could do so.

Moreover, since counsel for the plaintiff's argument was put before us, the House of Lords decided by a majority in Close v. Steel Co. of Wales, Ltd. (13) that fencing is not required even against flying pieces of machinery, and that, therefore, the three Court of Appeal decisions (14) which decided otherwise were wrong. In the Court of Appeal in that case LORD EVERSHED, M.R. (15), E giving the judgment of the court, had pointed out the lack of logic or common sense in the distinction between danger from flying pieces of materials and danger from flying pieces of machinery. Since this recent decision of the House of Lords has disapproved of the extension of the section by this court (in Dickson v. Flack and the two other cases (14) cited earlier) to cover flying pieces of dangerous machinery, the illogical distinction between flying pieces of machinery and flying F pieces of material has disappeared. But the unprotected gap between the actual dangers of dangerous machinery and the dangers against which fencing is required is correspondingly increased.

Bullock v. Power (9) forbids us to hold that the danger (if any) created by sharpness of the bolts themselves with which this block is normally armed can constitute it dangerous machinery within s. 14. The learned judge was, therefore, G not entitled to equate the bolts to the block or to hold that the sharp burr on the bolt made the machinery dangerous in the present case.

Counsel for the plaintiff argues before us that although the foregoing authorities have held that dangerous machinery need not be fenced if the dangers that they create come from flying machinery or material, yet machinery that is dangerous by reason of some juxtaposition with its normal material (for instance, when it H creates a nip between the machinery and the material) is required to be fenced under s. 14, and that in this case such danger caused the accident.

On the question how far machinery may be said to be dangerous within s. 14 through conjunction with or juxtaposition with the materials on which it was working, ASHWORTH, J., in Lewis v. High Duty Alloys, Ltd. (16), and STREATFEILD, J., in Sparrow v. Fairey Aviation Co., Ltd. (17), have favoured the view I that the presence of the material is not relevant for the purpose of considering

---

(9) [1956] 1 All E.R. 498. (10) [1946] 2 All E.R. 92; [1946] A.C. 493.
(11) [1953] 2 All E.R. 840; [1953] 2 Q.B. 464. (12) [1897] 1 Q.B. 192.
(13) [1961] 2 All E.R. 953.
(14) Dickson v. Flack, [1953] 2 All E.R. 840; [1953] 2 Q.B. 464; Newnham v. Taggart Morgan & Coles, Ltd. (July 19, 1956), unreported; Rutherford v. R. E. Glanville & Sons (Bovey Tracey), Ltd., [1958] 1 All E.R. 532.
(15) [1960] 2 All E.R. at p. 668; [1960] 2 Q.B. at p. 317.
(16) [1957] 1 All E.R. 740. (17) [1961] 1 All E.R. 216.

whether machinery is dangerous. On the other hand, a different view has been taken by FINNEMORE, J., in Lenthall v. Gimson & Co. (Leicester), Ltd. (18); by LYNSKEY, J., in Hoare v. M. & W. Grazebrook, Ltd. (19); and by HINCHCLIFFE, J., in Johnson v. J. Stone & Co. (Charlton), Ltd. (20). Each case must, of course, depend on its facts and in industrial cases the facts vary greatly. But that variation does not conceal an unfortunate divergence of view.

Although Bullock v. Power (21) does not allow us to equate dangers from the nature of the material (i.e., the sharp edge of the bolts) to dangers from the machinery, it does not compel us when deciding whether machinery is dangerous to disregard the nature of the machine when it is doing its normal appointed task or from holding it to be dangerous if that task clearly involves danger from its juxtaposition with its normal materials. If a moving arm of the machine does not project, and is, therefore, safe when the machine is empty, but projects dangerously when the machine is supplied with its proper material, it can obviously be labelled as dangerous machinery. And if it creates a dangerous nip when supplied with its normal material and when working normally (or in a foreseeable manner) I see no reason in principle why the court cannot consider the machinery dangerous, even if that nip is only created by the juxtaposition of material and machinery. For in that case it is not the nature of the material and it is not the material itself which causes the danger. The danger is caused by the design of the machine itself working normally with harmless material. Therefore, if the block in the present case when armed with the bolts for which it was intended and when working normally (or in a foreseeable manner), created a nip between the bolts and the guard which might take the operator unawares, we could in my view hold that this machine was dangerous. But it would only be dangerous if it were shown that the " repeating " was reasonably foreseeable. The evidence here does not establish that a repeat was foreseeable.

Counsel for the plaintiff's able argument by which he seeks to rely on the law as it was laid down in Hindle v. Birtwistle (22) cannot prevail in the light of more recent authorities and of the wording of the Act of 1937. The argument has shown how technical and artificial the question of protection under s. 14 has become and how illusory in certain respects the words " Every dangerous part of any machinery . . . shall be securely fenced " have now become. One may venture, perhaps, to express regret that an important part of the protection accorded to the workman by the Factory and Workshops Act, 1878 and 1891, has been destroyed by the wording of the Factories Act, 1937, and the authorities based on that wording. Under the former Act dangerous machinery had to be fenced if danger might reasonably be anticipated from it (Hindle v. Birtwistle (22)). Now dangerous machinery is only required by s. 14 to be fenced against danger of a particular and limited kind, namely, danger from workmen coming into contact with the machine. There is no protection under s. 14 against a class of obvious perils caused by dangerous machinery, namely, perils which arise from a dangerous machine ejecting at the worker pieces of the material or even pieces of the machinery itself. Thus, there is now left a gap which neither logic nor common sense appears to justify.

At common law the learned judge held, after some doubt, that there had been negligence under certain of the particulars pleaded in the statement of claim, namely: The defendants (a) failed to guard every dangerous part of the machine; (b) failed to maintain the said machine in proper working order; (c) failed to pay any or any sufficient heed to a similar complaint made to the tool setter and to the foreman by another workman shortly before the said accident.

It is conceded that the judge simply equated a negligent failure to guard at common law to a breach of s. 14 and gave no separate consideration to it, and that, therefore, it must stand or fall with the defendants' liability under s. 14.

(18) (Leicester Assizes, May 24, 1956), unreported. (19) [1957] 1 All E.R. 470.
(20) [1961] 1 All E.R. 869. (21) [1956] 1 All E.R. 498. (22) [1897] 1 Q.B. 192.

A There remain only (b) and (c), which may be taken together as an allegation of failure to maintain, emphasised by disregard of warnings.

[HIS LORDSHIP considered the evidence and concluded that the plaintiff had not proved either that the machine had repeated before the accident or that the repeating resulted from insufficient maintenance or that it could have been discovered beforehand or prevented in any way. HIS LORDSHIP continued:]

B No accident of this kind had happened before. The chain of events leading to the injury is quite extraordinary. The machine repeated in this inexplicable way for which the judge tried to account by an ingenious practical theory which may be right but does not on the evidence indicate negligence on the defendants' part. The result of an unusual burr was to cut the plaintiff's finger slightly. The result of that was an injury out of all proportion to it.

C In my judgment, the plaintiff has not established that the defendants have failed to use reasonable care, and loath as I am to differ from a learned judge of wisdom and experience I would regretfully allow the appeal.

WILLMER, L.J.: I have reached the same conclusion. In so far as the plaintiff's claim is based on breach of s. 14 (1) of the Factories Act, 1937, I have D not felt much difficulty, and I do not think that the learned judge's decision on that part of the case can be supported. The alternative claim in negligence seems to me to present a more difficult problem, and I confess that my mind has wavered during the hearing of the appeal. In the end, however, I am not prepared to dissent from the view expressed by HOLROYD PEARCE, L.J., and like him have reached the conclusion that negligence has not been established.

E I will deal first with the claim based on breach of s. 14 (1) of the Act. By their recent decision in Close v. Steel Co. of Wales, Ltd. (23), the House of Lords has, by a majority, laid down once and for all that the duty of an employer under s. 14 (1) of the Act is limited to such fencing as will prevent the workman coming into contact with moving parts of the machinery. Here, therefore, the plaintiff can succeed only if he shows that his injury was due to the defendants' failure F so to fence the machine in question as to prevent him from coming into contact with its moving parts. He can only do this if he is right in his contention that, in the circumstances of this case, the bolts on which he caught his finger are properly to be regarded as parts of the machine. The learned judge thought that they were, and I need not take time by referring again to the relevant part of his judgment, which HOLROYD PEARCE L.J., has already read.

G With all respect to the view of the learned judge, I do not think that it is a view which is open to us. Section 14 (3) of the Act of 1937 draws the clearest possible distinction between the machine and materials or articles which may be in motion in the machine. The subsection would be unnecessary, and indeed nonsensical, if it were permissible to regard the latter as themselves forming part of the machine. Moreover, the view of the learned judge seems to me to be in H direct conflict with the decision of this court in Bullock v. G. John Power (Agencies), Ltd. (24), the authority of which must in my view be regarded as reinforced, albeit indirectly, by the decision of the House of Lords in Close v. Steel Co. of Wales, Ltd. (23). Having regard to the guidance which we have now received from the House of Lords, I do not think it necessary to refer to the numerous authorities which were cited to us on this aspect of the case. I content myself with saying I that in my judgment we are precluded by authority from holding that the bolts which caused the plaintiff's injury were part of the machine, so as to call for fencing to prevent injury from contact with them.

But there is, I think, another and broader ground for holding that there was no breach of the statute in the present case. The provisions relating to fencing of dangerous machinery in Part 2 of the Act are designed, as I see it, to prevent dangers arising in the course of the normal operation of the machinery. I do not think that dangers due to the machinery breaking down or behaving in some abnormal and unexpected way are within the purview of the Act. I think that this is implicit in the provisions of the Act itself. Thus it seems to me that the "motion" referred to in s. 15, and the "motion" and "use" referred to in s. 16, must in their context refer to motion and use in the course of normal operation. It is not without significance that every single one of the numerous cases brought to our attention has been concerned with dangers arising from machinery in the course of its normal operation. Moreover, it is obvious from the dicta of the various judges who have dealt with these cases that they have regarded the provisions of the Act as applicable only to such dangers. Thus in Hoare v. M. & W. Grazebrook, Ltd. (25) LYNSKEY, J., though I do not agree with his decision, stated the question correctly in my view, when he said that it was "whether a machine becomes dangerous in the operation which it is intended to perform". In Carroll v. Andrew Barclay & Sons, Ltd. (26) LORD PORTER said:

(23) [1961] 2 All E.R. 953. (24) [1956] 1 All E.R. 498.

> "Even in the case of the flying spindle it was not a breaking of a part of the machine, but an accident which might have been anticipated from its ordinary working which had to be guarded against."

In the same case LORD NORMAND was, I think, contemplating the normal working of the machine when he referred (27) to the possibility that detachable or broken parts might be thrown off in working. LORD GODDARD, C.J., in Newnham v. Taggart Morgan & Coles, Ltd. (28) (referred to in Close v. Steel Co. of Wales, Ltd. in the Court of Appeal (29)) while holding, as it would now appear erroneously, that the law requires fencing of a machine which it is known may cause danger by reason of its breaking, went on to add,

> ". . . if that breaking is a risk which is, as I would put it, inherent or likely to occur in the working of the machine."

This view of the scope of the Act certainly accords with common sense. An employer may reasonably be expected to foresee and guard against dangers likely to arise in the course of the normal operation of machinery. But no man could be expected to foresee and guard against the almost unlimited possibilities of danger that might arise from a machine going wrong or operating in a way that it was never designed to do. If an employer were required to provide fencing to guard against all such possibilities of danger, this would, as it seems to me, impose an intolerable burden, and one which I cannot think Parliament can have intended to impose in the absence of any clear provision to that effect. The fact of a machine going wrong in such a way as to cause injury to a workman may, of course, and commonly will, provide evidence of negligence against the employers. It is so alleged, for instance, in the present case. Here, on the findings of the learned judge, the machine certainly did go wrong. It did something which it was never designed to do—for, to use counsel for the defendants' picturesque phrase, it "performed an uncovenanted stroke". This may be a ground for imputing negligence to the defendants or their servants, but it does not in my judgment provide any ground for saying, ex post facto, that they were in breach of their duty under the Act in not foreseeing it and in not providing fencing to guard against the danger of injury resulting therefrom. On this ground also I am satisfied that no case of breach of statutory duty was made out against these defendants.

[HIS LORDSHIP considered the alternative claim in negligence and continued:] Taking the evidence as a whole, I think that it does sufficiently show that the defendants had not, prior to this accident, been lacking in reasonable care in and

(25) [1957] 1 All E.R. at p. 474.
(26) [1948] 2 All E.R. at p. 390; [1948] A.C. at p. 485.
(27) [1948] 2 All E.R. at p. 393; [1948] A.C. at p. 490.
(28) (July 19, 1956), unreported.
(29) [1960] 2 All E.R. at p. 666; [1960] 2 Q.B. at p. 315.

A about the maintenance of this machine. On the whole, I come to the conclusion that the charge of negligence was not made out against them. Accordingly, I agree that this appeal should be allowed.

PEARSON, L.J.: The construction of s. 14 of the Factories Act, 1937, has been considered in a number of cases, and three propositions, derived from B the general subject-matter of the section and its detailed provisions, have been established, which are relevant for the present case.

(i) A distinction is drawn between dangerous parts of machinery and materials or articles which are dangerous in motion in the machine. The dangerous parts of machinery are dealt with by s. 14 (1) and are, subject to certain exemptions, required to be fenced. The dangerous materials or articles (which are sometimes, C as in this case, conveniently referred to as " components " because they are destined to become components of other machines) are not required by the section itself to be fenced, but there is a power under the concluding words of the section to make regulations requiring them to be fenced. No relevant regulations have been made, and one can see the difficulty of drafting general provisions for the fencing of things so variable as components. Nicholls v. Austin (Leyton), Ltd. (30); D Carroll v. Andrew Barclay & Sons, Ltd. (31); Bullock v. G. John Power, Ltd. (32); Kilgollan v. William Cooke & Co., Ltd. (33); Close v. Steel Co. of Wales, Ltd. (recently decided in the House of Lords) (34).

(ii) The nature of the danger envisaged by s. 14 (1) is that a workman may suffer injury directly by coming into contact with a dangerous part of the machinery, and indirect causation is not envisaged. Nicholls v. Austin (Leyton), Ltd. (30); E Carroll v. Andrew Barclay & Sons, Ltd. (31); Bullock v. G. John Power, Ltd. (32); Kilgollan v. William Cooke & Co., Ltd. (33); Close v. Steel Co. of Wales, Ltd. (34). Those cases were largely concerned with the meaning and effect of the words " securely fenced ", but they also show the nature of the danger envisaged.

(iii) As regards the degree of danger envisaged, a part of machinery is " danger- F ous " within the meaning of the section if it is a reasonably foreseeable cause of injury to anybody acting in a way in which a human being may be expected to act in circumstances which may reasonably be expected to occur. Walker v. Bletchley Flettons, Ltd. (35) per DU PARCQ, J.; John Summers & Sons, Ltd. v. Frost (36), per LORD REID. In Carroll v. Andrew Barclay & Sons, Ltd. (37) LORD PORTER, referring to previous cases, said:

G

> " In each case, however, it was injury caused by the working of the machine and the danger which might reasonably be anticipated from its working. Even in the case of the flying spindle it was not a breaking of a part of the machine, but an accident which might have been anticipated from its ordinary working which had to be guarded against. The machine was found to be a dangerous H one because of the liability of spindles to fly out, and it was that danger which was liable to occur in the course of its ordinary working, not its abnormal action in breaking, for which a fence had to be provided."

In Close v. Steel Co. of Wales, Ltd. (38), LORD EVERSHED, M.R., said:

> ". . . a part of a machine should not be regarded as ' dangerous ' within I the language of the section unless the risk of injury can be fairly described as reasonably foreseeable in the ordinary course."

---

(30) [1946] 2 All E.R. 92; [1946] A.C. 493.
(31) [1948] 2 All E.R. 386; [1948] A.C. 477.
(32) [1956] 1 All E.R. 498.
(33) [1956] 2 All E.R. 294.
(34) [1961] 2 All E.R. 953.
(35) [1937] 1 All E.R. at p. 175.
(36) [1955] 1 All E.R. at p. 882; [1955] A.C. at p. 765.
(37) [1948] 2 All E.R. at p. 390; [1948] A.C. at p. 485.
(38) [1960] 2 All E.R. at p. 667; [1960] 2 Q.B. at p. 317.

On the question of what is reasonably foreseeable, reference can be made to the speech of LORD PORTER in a negligence case, Bolton v. Stone (39), where he said: A

> "Nor is the remote possibility of injury occurring enough. There must be sufficient probability to lead a reasonable man to anticipate it. The existence of some risk is an ordinary incident of life, even when all due care has been, as it must be, taken."

B

In my opinion, the plaintiff has failed to prove that any relevant part of the machine was "dangerous" within the meaning of s. 14. The combination of the table, the block and the bolts or other components would not cause any injury so long as it was operating properly. If it made an unintended movement, such as has been referred to as a "repeat" or an "uncovenanted stroke", the operator would be taken by surprise, and if he was handling the components his hand might be caught by the moving components and suffer some injury, although nothing more than a very slight injury would be likely to occur. Even if that were likely to happen, it would not render any part of the machinery "dangerous" within the meaning of the section, because the contact causing the injury would not be with the machinery but with the components in motion in the machine. On the facts of this case the distinction seems technical and artificial, but it is clearly drawn by the section, and any theory of indirect causation, for example, that the traverse is a dangerous part when some fault in it causes ultimately the movement of the components, is untenable under the section. Secondly, although it was proved that there was a "repeat" on the night shift of Mar. 31, 1958, and there were "uncovenanted strokes" on the following morning, there was no proof that any such thing had ever happened to this machine or similar machines in this factory before or since, or that there was any liability or tendency or propensity for any such thing to happen. The foreman had heard of such machines repeating but had never seen it apart from this case, and Mr. Haddon, the expert fitter, had been able to make the machines repeat by alteration of the controls in the course of testing and adjustment, but otherwise had apparently no experience of it. The plaintiff said in cross-examination "I can get you twelve chaps who it did it on", but did not call any witness who had had that experience except Mr. Hall. Mr. Hall said he had the experience on Apr. 1, 1958, and there are several passages in his evidence showing that that was the only occasion. In view of Mr. Hall's own evidence, the unexpected statement by Mr. Cole in re-examination, to the effect that Hall made a complaint of his machine "repeating" some time before this accident happened, must be regarded as not only hearsay but also inherently unreliable. The necessary proof that the machine had a propensity to repeat is lacking.

C D E F G

[HIS LORDSHIP reviewed the position at common law, and continued:] In this troublesome case I have been reluctant to differ from the learned judge's decision in favour of the plaintiff, but feel impelled by the evidence to the conclusion that the plaintiff did not prove that his accident was caused by any breach of statutory duty or negligence on the part of the defendants. I agree that the appeal should be allowed.

H

Appeal allowed. Leave to appeal to the House of Lords granted.

Solicitors: Herbert & Gowers & Co. (for the appellants); Alan, Edmunds & Phillips, agents for Hewitt & Walters, Birmingham (for the respondent).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

---

(39) [1951] 1 All E.R. at p. 1081; [1951] A.C. at p. 858.

A

R. v. ATTFIELD.

[COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL (Ashworth, Thesiger and Megaw, JJ.), July 10, 1961.]

Criminal Law—Trial—Summing-up—Evidence—Whether fatal defect if evidence not reviewed by judge in summing-up.

B Criminal Law—Burden of proof—Standard of proof required—Summing-up—Direction that jury should be satisfied and sure of prisoner's guilt.

The proper form of direction to the jury on onus of proof in criminal cases is for them to be told that the burden is on the prosecution, and that the standard of proof required before a verdict of guilty can be returned is that the jury should be satisfied, that they should feel sure (see p. 247, letter A, post).

C

The appellant was charged on two counts with indecently assaulting two boys and on two counts with committing acts of gross indecency with the same two boys. After the boys had given evidence and the accused had been examined in chief, the recorder, after counsel for the Crown at the court's invitation had put to the court in summary form the matters of corroboration on which he relied, invited the jury to stop the case, suggesting to them that, having regard to the discrepancies of the boys' stories and the accused's good character, it would be unsafe to convict. The jury, however, indicated that they wished to hear the case to its end and the court thereupon rose for the Easter recess, on the Thursday, resuming the trial on the following Tuesday. The evidence was then concluded and, after counsel had addressed the court, the recorder summed up, directing the jury as to the law, but did not deal with the evidence except in regard to the appellant's character, and, on the burden of proof, though he told them over and over again that they must be satisfied as to the appellant's guilt or else acquit, he did not use the word "sure". The jury convicted the appellant. On appeal against conviction,

D

E

F

Held: although in a complicated and lengthy case it was incumbent on the court to deal with the evidence in summing-up, yet where, as in the present case, the issues could be simply and clearly stated, it was not a fatal defect for the evidence not to be reviewed in the summing-up (see p. 245, letter I, to p. 246, letter D, post); further, although the jury were not directed on the burden of proof as indicated at letter B above, nevertheless in the present case the defect was not such as would justify the court in interfering with the conviction (see p. 247, letter B, post).

G

R. v. Stoddart ((1909), 2 Cr. App. Rep. 217) followed.

Appeal dismissed.

[As to a judge's summing-up and contents thereof, see 10 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 423-425, paras. 779. 780, especially notes (g) and (h), and Supplement; and for cases on the subject, see 14 DIGEST (Repl.) 330-332, 3197, 3198, 3202-3205, 3222, 333, 3224, 334, 3242-3245, 335, 3249, 3253 and 3rd DIGEST Supp.

H

As to burden of proof, see 10 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 436, para. 809.]

Cases referred to:

Abrath v. North Eastern Ry. Co., (1883), 11 Q.B.D. 440; 52 L.J.Q.B. 620; 49 L.T. 618; 47 J.P. 692; affd. H.L., (1886), 11 App. Cas. 247; 55 L.J.Q.B. 457; 55 L.T. 63; 50 J.P. 657; 33 Digest 506, 492.

I

R. v. Stoddart, (1909), 73 J.P. 348; 2 Cr. App. Rep. 217; 14 Digest (Repl.) 330, 3202.

Appeal.

This was an appeal by Joseph Albert Attfield against his conviction at Portsmouth Quarter Sessions on Apr. 4, 1961, before the recorder and a jury on two counts of indecent assault on two young boys and two counts of gross indecency with the same two boys. He was sentenced by the recorder to nine months' imprisonment on each count, the sentences to run concurrently. The offences were said to have occurred between Mar. 1, 1959, and Nov. 30, 1960. The facts are set out in the judgment of the court. A

The appellant applied for leave to appeal against his conviction on two main grounds—(i) that the recorder failed to instruct the jury correctly on the burden of proof in that (a) he failed to direct the jury that the prosecution had to prove the guilt of the appellant beyond reasonable doubt or that guilt had to be proved so that they were sure of the appellant's guilt; and (b) he wrongly told the jury they could convict if they were satisfied of his guilt; and (c) he wrongly told the jury that the standard of proof was that which they would apply in some serious matter in their own affairs; and (ii) that the recorder failed to put the defence to the jury and failed to instruct them as to what evidence in law could be regarded as corroboration. His application came before the court (ASHWORTH, PAULL and ELWES, JJ.) on May 19, 1961, when the court, granting leave, also allowed the appellant bail. The authority and cases cited below were quoted in argument in addition to those in the judgment*. B C

H. J. M. Tucker for the appellant.
J. H. Inskip for the Crown.

D

ASHWORTH, J., delivered the following judgment of the court: This appellant, Joseph Albert Attfield, was convicted on two counts of indecent assault on two boys, and two counts of gross indecency, at Portsmouth Quarter Sessions, and was sentenced by the learned recorder to nine months' imprisonment. He appeals to this court by leave of the court.

The two substantial grounds of appeal on which he relies are as follows: First, he says that the learned recorder failed to instruct the jury correctly on the burden of proof, and secondly, and perhaps with more force so far as the appellant is concerned, he says that the summing-up was wholly defective and amounted to a misdirection in that throughout its course the learned recorder omitted to discuss any of the evidence except that as to the accused's character. E

It is desirable to state shortly the calendar in regard to the trial itself. The case was called on late in the afternoon of Wednesday, Mar. 29, 1961. On Mar. 30, after a late start, witnesses were called, including the present appellant. The hearing went on until about six o'clock, and the learned recorder then invited counsel for the prosecution to summarise for him the points on which he relied in regard to corroboration and, having heard argument on that, the learned recorder then delivered to the jury what is accepted before us as an invitation to them to stop the case and acquit the accused. It is quite unnecessary to read that invitation, which was lengthy, but it is plain from a study of it that the learned recorder was suggesting to the jury that having regard to the discrepancy in the boys' evidence, the accused's good character and the like, it would be unsafe for them to convict; but the jury withdrew and after a six minutes' retirement they returned, and the foreman said this—" We all feel that we cannot return a verdict now. We must hear the case to the end ". That was the Thursday before Easter, and the court rose at seven o'clock in the evening. On Easter Tuesday the trial was resumed. Two witnesses were called on behalf of the appellant, and then counsel, first for the defence, and then for the Crown, addressed the jury, and the learned recorder came to sum up to the jury, as he says in his opening sentence, at 3.20 in the afternoon. The summing-up took him twenty-five minutes. F G H I

It is unnecessary except in the briefest summary, to mention the facts of the case. The period over which the offences were said to have been committed was considerable. The boys, if the prosecution were right, were assaulted by this man, so to speak, in succession, and one of the points made on behalf of the

* ARCHBOLD, CRIMINAL PLEADING, EVIDENCE AND PRACTICE (34th Edn.), paras. 565, 927; R. v. Finch, (1916), 12 Cr. App. Rep. 77; R. v. Hepworth, R. v. Fearnley, [1955] 2 All E.R. 918; R. v. Blackburn, (1955), 39 Cr. App. Rep. 84.

A defence was that this was a fabricated story by the first boy, and a case of revenge by the second. The details as to the indecencies were unpleasant and precise. The accused himself gave evidence, and protested more than once in answers in cross-examination that he was in love with these boys. Without citing his evidence in any detail, it is sufficient for this court to say that any jury hearing those answers might well take the view that they were the answers of B a most unpleasant man.

It is convenient to deal first with the point that the summing-up was defective on the ground that the evidence was not dealt with at all except in regard to the appellant's character. No doubt it is right to say that probably in nine cases out of ten that come before the courts, the trial judge, whether he be a judge or recorder or chairman of quarter sessions, in summing-up goes through C the evidence. It would be quite wrong to suggest that it is the trial judge's duty to read out the whole of the evidence, and that is not suggested. Indeed, many would take the view that a mere recitation of evidence which the jury themselves have heard does not assist them at all. In most cases what the trial judge endeavours to do is by reference to the evidence to direct the jury's attention to what may be called the salient features for and against the accused D man. No case has laid down, so far as we are aware, that it is essential for the validity of a summing-up that there should be a reference to the evidence, but equally there is no case that, so to speak, absolves a court from what is normally its function of assisting the jury by dealing with the evidence. Some assistance is to be gained from a passage cited in R. v. Stoddart (1). In that case a trial had taken place over a period of twenty days, and there was an omission to E direct the jury on many of the no doubt complex issues which had been considered in the course of it, but this court cited the words of SIR WILLIAM BRETT, M.R. (2) in Abrath v. North Eastern Ry. Co. (3), as follows:

> "It is no misdirection not to tell the jury everything which might have been told them: there is no misdirection, unless the judge has told them something wrong, or unless what he has told them would make wrong that F which he has left them to understand. Non-direction merely is not misdirection, and those who allege misdirection must show that something wrong was said or that something was said which would make wrong that which was left to be understood."

That is the end of the quotation, and this court then went on:

> G "Every summing-up must be regarded in the light of the conduct of the trial and the questions which have been raised by the counsel for the prosecution and for the defence respectively. This court does not sit to consider whether this or that phrase was the best that might have been chosen, or whether a direction which has been attacked might have been fuller or more conveniently expressed, or whether other topics which might have H been dealt with on other occasions should be introduced. This court sits here to administer justice and to deal with valid objections to matters which may have led to a miscarriage of justice (4)."

Nothing that this court is saying today is intended to put forward the suggestion that a judge is entitled to refrain from discussing the evidence if the circumstances of the case and the conduct of the trial demand that he should. The I words that are important in R. v. Stoddart (5) are that each case must depend on its own facts. Clearly, in a complicated and lengthy case it is incumbent on the court to deal with the evidence. Conversely, in a case which has not occupied a great deal of time and in which the issue, guilt or innocence, can be simply and

(1) (1909), 2 Cr. App. Rep. at p. 246. (The appeal was heard before LORD ALVERSTONE, C.J., DARLING, PHILLIMORE, BRAY and LAWRENCE, JJ.)
(2) Later LORD ESHER, M.R. (3) (1883), 11 Q.B.D. at p. 453.
(4) Cf. R. v. Cohen and Bateman, (1909), 2 Cr. App. Rep. at p. 207.
(5) (1909), 2 Cr. App. Rep. 217.

clearly stated, this court is not prepared to hold that it is a fatal defect to the summing-up that the evidence has not been discussed. A

In the present case, if one reflects on what had transpired before the jury, while it is true that the jury had seen the witnesses five days before they gave their verdict, none the less the impression created by those witnesses, the boys against the man, the police officers against the man, must, one may well think, have created an impression on the jury and, accordingly, on the Tuesday after Easter, having heard the addresses of counsel pointing out the pros and cons, and then listened to a direction on the law, we think that they were in a position adequately to discharge their duty of deciding which side they were to believe. It is true, as counsel for the appellant has said, that there were points which could be made on behalf of the present appellant. No doubt they were made by him in addressing the jury, but it is equally true to say that there were points which no doubt were cogently made by the prosecution against him, and what the learned recorder did was to carry out what appears to have been his intention on the previous Thursday to leave the jury to decide, as was their duty, the issue of fact for themselves. Accordingly, this court would not be prepared to set aside this conviction on that ground. B C

The other ground depends on the wording of the summing-up in regard to the burden of proof. It is fair to say that over and over again appeals are brought to this court, or applications are made for leave to appeal, based on alleged inadvertencies in direction as to the burden of proof, and this court finds itself in the position of having to apply, so to speak, two parallel principles. In the first place, the direction as to the burden of proof and as to the standard of proof is undoubtedly of cardinal importance. That is a point in favour of the appellant, and if the direction fails in that respect then indeed the appeal is all the more cogent. On the other hand, there is a counterbalancing principle that this court has said that the words of a summing-up are not to be weighed in too nice scales provided that the substance of the summing-up presents to the jury the issue in a form in accordance with law. It is in the application of those two counterbalancing principles that this court fulfils its function. D E F

In the present case the complaint is made that nowhere from first to last in this summing-up was there any reference either to reasonable doubt or to the current word " sure ". So far as the wording itself is concerned, that is true. Throughout the summing-up over and over again the learned recorder used the word " satisfied ", but it would not be fair to the learned recorder to leave the matter as if that was all that he had said. In more than one place he had directed the jury to considerations which would have been perfectly appropriate if they had been coupled with the words " reasonable doubt ". In effect, he was indicating to them that if they had such a doubt, if in their judgment as men of good sense they were not satisfied, then they should not convict. In one place the learned recorder said this: G

H

> " You will pay such attention to the arguments that they have advanced to you: On the one hand whether prosecuting counsel has proved the defendant's guilt by evidence which he has called or which has been called before you and, on the other hand, whether counsel for the defence has indicated that the evidence leaves you in such a doubt that it would be unsafe for you to convict."

I

Then, after referring to the accused's good character, he said this:

> ". . . if, looking at his good character, you think he is a witness of truth, then of course, that would have proved his innocence because you accept his evidence and obviously he is entitled to a verdict of not guilty. Members of the jury, if because he is a man of good character, having heard his evidence, having observed him in the witness-box, you think that it is extremely unlikely that a man of his reputation would commit these offences

A then that is another reason why you should be doubtful about the proof of his guilt."

This court would wish to reiterate what has been laid down now in several cases, that the proper form of direction is that the jury should be directed that the burden of proof is on the prosecution, and that the standard of proof required before a verdict of guilty can be returned is that the jury should be satisfied, B that they should feel sure. If that simple formula is used, no criticism can be made. In the absence of the use of that formula, in this case when one considers the summing-up as a whole, it is not in our view such a defect as would justify this court in interfering with the conviction.

Before parting with the case, it might be desirable to mention again that while dismissing this appeal, this court does not approve of the course that was C taken in this case. It would have been very much better if the learned recorder on the Tuesday afternoon had summarised the evidence by directing the jury's attention to the salient points. Equally, it would have been much better if he had coupled with the word "satisfaction" the word "sure". None the less, in spite of those points of criticism, which have been most ably put forward by counsel for the appellant, this appeal must be dismissed.

D Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Registrar, Court of Criminal Appeal (for the appellant); Town clerk, Portsmouth (for the Crown).

[Reported by N. P. METCALFE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

E

G. v. G. (otherwise H.).

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Marshall, J.), June 28, 1961.]

Divorce—Maintenance—Application—Leave of judge—Claim not included in wife's answer—Answer claiming costs but no specific matrimonial relief— F Whether leave needed—Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1957 (S.I. 1957 No. 619), r. 3 (3).

Divorce—Petition—Form of petition—Prayer for such further and other relief as may be just—Whether needed—Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1957 (S.I. 1957 No. 619), r. 4 (4).

The wife, in her answer to the husband's petition, included in the prayer G of her answer, merely a claim for costs and "such further and other relief as may be just". After the decree granted to the husband had been made absolute the wife applied by summons for a declaration that no leave was required to make an application for maintenance, or alternatively for leave pursuant to r. 3 (3)*, proviso (ii), of the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1957.

Held: (i) the wife did not require leave to make an application for H maintenance since her answer did not claim "relief" within the meaning of the words "where an answer claiming relief is filed" in r. 3 (3).

(ii) the practice of including a prayer for "such further and other relief as may be just" was no longer necessary and should be discontinued.

[As to an application for maintenance where no prayer is included in the petition or answer, see 12 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 432, para. 971; and for I cases on the subject, see 3rd DIGEST SUPPLEMENT.

For the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1957, r. 3 (3), and proviso (ii), see 10 HALSBURY'S STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS (First Re-issue) 218.]

Summons adjourned into open court.

The wife applied for a declaration that she did not require leave to make an application for maintenance, alternatively for leave pursuant to the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1957, r. 3 (3), proviso (ii), to make an application for maintenance.

---

* The relevant terms of r. 3 (3) are printed at p. 248, letter E, post.

On Mar. 2, 1959, the husband presented a petition for nullity. On Mar. 11, 1959, the wife entered an appearance and in the memorandum of appearance she stated that she wished to make application for alimony and maintenance. On Mar. 13, 1959, the wife gave notice of application for ancillary relief and on Apr. 27, 1959, Mr. Registrar WILKINSON made an order for alimony pending suit. On May 13, 1959, the wife filed an answer in which she denied the allegations in the petition and prayed for costs and for "such further and other relief as may be just" but did not include a prayer for maintenance. On May 18, 1960, the husband was granted a decree nisi which was made absolute in August, 1960.

On Mar. 21, 1961, the wife issued the present summons for a declaration that she was entitled to claim maintenance in the suit without leave of the judge, alternatively applying for leave to make an application for maintenance

> "notwithstanding the fact that no such application appeared in the prayer of her answer filed herein and that the decree nisi in this suit has been made absolute."

N. C. Lloyd-Davies for the wife.
A. H. Bray for the husband.

MARSHALL, J., stated the facts and continued: The matter falls to be considered under the terms of r. 3 (3) of the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1957, as amended in 1958, and the first and only point that has to be considered is whether or not under the terms of that rule the wife is under any obligation to seek the leave of the court to bring a claim for maintenance. Rule 3 (3), in its relevant parts, reads as follows:

> "Every application for ancillary relief, being an application . . . (c) for the payment . . . of . . . sums by the husband for the maintenance . . . of his wife . . . shall be made in the petition or, where an answer claiming relief is filed, in the answer: Provided that . . . (ii) a judge may give leave for an application for ancillary relief which should have been made in the petition or answer to be made subsequently, either by notice in accordance with Form 2 issued out of the Divorce Registry or at the trial."

The point that I have to decide is whether the particular answer which was filed in this suit is an answer claiming relief within the meaning of r. 3 (3).

In my judgment, the word "relief" as used at the end of r. 3 (3) means "relief of a matrimonial kind", which (to use the words that counsel for the wife has used) is intended to change the matrimonial status of the parties, and having considered the use of the word "relief" in conjunction with the words "ancillary relief" in another part of this same rule and in other rules to which my attention has been drawn, I have come to the conclusion that the argument of counsel for the wife is right and that it is not necessary for him to have any leave to bring a claim for maintenance. In my judgment, the answer which was filed, which contained merely the prayer that the husband "be condemned in the costs of this suit" and also a general prayer" that she may have such further and other relief as may be just", is not an answer which claims that matrimonial relief which is intended by the word "relief" in the context of this rule.

I need only add that for a considerable time now it has been clear that the addition of the words "such further and other relief as may be just" is quite unnecessary, for the rules now clearly provide for what must be included in a petition or answer by way of relief and the long-standing practice of adding this omnibus relief prayer is one which in my judgment is no longer necessary and one which it would be better to discontinue.

A In those circumstances I declare that in the circumstances of the present case no leave of the judge under the proviso to r. 3 (3) of the Matrimonial Causes Rules, 1957, is necessary.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Candler, Stannard & Co. (for the wife); Alec Woolf & Turk (for the husband).

B [Reported by A. T. HOOLAHAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

C

CLAYTON v. WOODMAN & SON (BUILDERS), LTD. AND OTHERS.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION (Salmon, J.), June 19, 20, 21, July 5, 1961.]

Negligence—Duty to take care—Proximity of relation—Statements—Careless statements causing damage to persons or property—Statements actionable under principle in M'Alister (or Donoghue) v. Stevenson—Instructions negligently issued by architect to bricklayer resulting in bricklayer's personal injuries.

D

The plaintiff was a bricklayer employed by builders, the first defendants, who had contracted with a regional hospital board, the second defendants, to instal a lift in their hospital. The third defendants were a firm of architects employed by the hospital board to prepare a specification and working drawings for the construction of the lift shaft and a motor room. The building contract between the builders and the hospital board provided for the works to be carried out in accordance with the architect's directions. A stone gable was to be incorporated into the wall of the motor room and, for this purpose, a chase or groove had to be cut into the side of the gable. The gable wall was two feet thick and had a filling of rough rubble and loosely bound stones. This was the usual construction for similar walls and should have been well known to an architect. On Jan. 15, 1959, B., a qualified architect employed by the firm of architects, having inspected the gable, gave instructions on the site direct to the bricklayer to cut the chase in the gable. B. knew that the bricklayer would carry out his instructions promptly on that day without shoring or strutting the gable which B. considered was unnecessary. In fact it was unsafe and dangerous to cut the chase without shoring or strutting the gable as an architect or builder using reasonable care and skill should have realised, but knowledge of the danger was not to be expected of a bricklayer. While the bricklayer was cutting out a small piece of stone, after the chase had been cut, the gable fell inwards injuring him. In an action for damages for personal injuries the bricklayer alleged negligence and breach of statutory duty against his employers, the builders, negligence as against the firm of architects, and vicarious responsibility for that negligence against the hospital board.

E F G H

Held: (i) the architects were liable to the bricklayer in negligence for the following reasons—

I

(a) in accordance with the principle in Donoghue v. Stevenson the architects owed a duty of care to the bricklayer in regard to instructions given to him owing to the close relation between him and them in the circumstances of this case, viz., in particular, the subject-matter was one on which the architects were entitled to issue instructions to the builders by virtue of the building contract, and the architects, knowing that the instructions would be carried out promptly, chose to give them directly to the bricklayer who, by reason of his trade, would not have reason to suppose that danger would be involved in carrying them out (see p. 255, letters A and B, post).

M'Alister (or Donoghue) v. Stevenson ([1932] All E.R. Rep. 1) applied. A

(b) the duty so owed was to take reasonable care for the safety of the bricklayer, and, as the architects should have realised that the carrying out of the instructions to cut the chase would probably lead to serious injury to him, they were negligent in issuing the instructions to him.

(c) orders and instructions carelessly issued were different in their nature from mere statements or representations carelessly made, and only such careless misstatements as led to financial loss, as distinct from damage to persons or property, were outside the principle of Donoghue v. Stevenson (see p. 255, letter I, and p. 257, letter C, post); therefore, it was only careless (but not fraudulent) statements leading to financial loss that could not be actionable in the absence of contractual or fiduciary relationship. B

Le Lievre v. Gould ([1893] 1 Q.B. 491) and Candler v. Crane, Christmas & Co. ([1951] 1 All E.R. 426) considered. C

(ii) the builders were liable to the bricklayer, their employee, in negligence and also for breach of statutory duty under reg. 94 (2) of the Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948, but the hospital board were not liable for the negligence of the architects who were independent contractors.

[As to the nature of negligence and the duty to take care, see 28 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 3, para. 1; 7, para. 4. For cases on the duty to take care, see 36 DIGEST (Repl.) 12-18, 34-79. D

For the Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948, reg. 94 (2), see 8 HALSBURY'S STATUTORY INSTRUMENTS 245.]

Cases referred to: E

Candler v. Crane, Christmas & Co., [1951] 1 All E.R. 426; [1951] 2 K.B. 164; 36 Digest (Repl.) 17, 75.

Denny v. Supplies & Transport Co., Ltd., [1950] 2 K.B. 374; 36 Digest (Repl.) 16, 73.

Derry v. Peek, (1889), 14 App. Cas. 337; 58 L.J.Ch. 864; 61 L.T. 265; 54 J.P. 148; 9 Digest (Repl.) 127, 685.

George v. Skivington, (1869), L.R. 5 Exch. 1; 39 L.J. Ex. 8; 21 L.T. 495; 39 Digest 441, 705. F

Haseldine v. Daw & Son, Ltd., [1941] 3 All E.R. 156; [1941] 2 K.B. 343; 111 L.J.K.B. 45; 165 L.T. 185; 36 Digest (Repl.) 29, 125.

Le Lievre v. Gould, [1893] 1 Q.B. 491; 62 L.J.Q.B. 353; 68 L.T. 626; 57 J.P. 484; 36 Digest (Repl.) 9, 27.

M'Alister (or Donoghue) v. Stevenson, [1932] All E.R. Rep. 1; [1932] A.C. 562; 1932 S.C. (H.L.) 31; 101 L.J.P.C. 119; 147 L.T. 281; 36 Digest (Repl.) 85, 458. G

Old Gate Estates, Ltd. v. Toplis & Harding & Russell, [1939] 3 All E.R. 209; 161 L.T. 227; Digest Supp.

Wallis v. Robinson, (1862), 3 F. & F. 307; 176 E.R. 139; 7 Digest (Repl.) 394, 224. H

Action.

This was an action by John William Clayton, a bricklayer, for damages for personal injuries, loss and expense sustained and incurred as the result of an accident on Jan. 15, 1959, at Wonford House Hospital, Exeter, in the county of Devon, when a bell tower collapsed and struck the plaintiff while he was engaged in building a lift shaft at the hospital. The plaintiff brought the action against his employers, Woodman & Son (Builders), Ltd. (the first defendants), against the building owner, the South Western Regional Hospital Board (the second defendants) and against the firm of architects employed by the building owner, Charles E. Ware and Son (the third defendants), alleging (inter alia) breach of statutory duty and negligence against the first defendants, negligence and failure to comply with their duties under the Occupiers' Liability Act, 1957, against the second defendants and negligence against the third defendants. The particulars of I

A negligence alleged against all three defendants were causing or permitting the plaintiff to cut a chase in the bell tower when they knew or ought to have known that it was dangerous to do so; failing to warn the plaintiff of the danger of cutting a chase in the tower; failing to heed a warning that the tower was unsafe; failing to make any or proper investigation into the brickwork supporting the tower or into the security of the tower before interfering with it; failing to B take any precautions by shoring or otherwise to prevent danger to the plaintiff from the collapse of the tower when work was being carried out which was likely to reduce the security or stability of the tower. In addition, as against the third defendants, the plaintiff alleged that they were negligent in failing to inform the first defendants that the bell tower was unsafe and dangerous; in failing to instruct or advise the first defendants to take precautions by shoring or C otherwise to prevent danger to the plaintiff from the collapse of the tower, and in failing to appreciate that the operation of cutting the chase which they had instructed the plaintiff to carry out might seriously weaken the structure of the tower.

The facts appear in the judgment.

J. F. F. Platts-Mills for the plaintiff.

D John Stephenson, Q.C., and A. K. Allen for the first defendants.

N. J. Skelhorn, Q.C., and F. C. Williams for the second defendants.

Maurice Lyell, Q.C., and H. G. Garland for the third defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 5. SALMON, J., read the following judgment: In 1958 the second E defendants, the South Western Regional Hospital Board, were minded to instal a lift in Wonford House Hospital at Exeter. They accordingly instructed the third defendants, a firm of architects, to prepare a specification and working drawings for the construction of a lift shaft and motor room. When the specification and drawings had been prepared tenders were invited and ultimately the first defendants, who are builders, entered into a written contract F with the second defendants dated Sept. 18, 1958. This contract is in the appropriate R.I.B.A. form.

Wonford House Hospital was built about a hundred years ago in the Gothic style. A stone gable about seven or eight feet wide projected about eight feet above the roof close to the site of the proposed lift shaft. This gable had at one time carried a bell, but long before 1958 the bell had been removed. The gable G wall was two feet thick and had a filling of rough rubble or lightly bound loose stones. This filling was contained by a "skin" of blue limestones of various sizes on the outer side, and a "skin" of stone and random rubble facing on the inner side of the gable. This is the usual construction for all similar walls and should have been well known to any builder or architect. The amount of filling varies from case to case as does the thickness of the "skins". The "skin" on H the inner side of this gable wall was somewhat thinner than usual, but I find that the gable was properly and safely constructed, and in no way dangerous until the chase to which I will presently refer had been cut in it by the first defendants. The specification and drawings called for demolition of part of the roof adjacent to the gable so that a motor room might be built there and the gable incorporated into the wall of the motor room. By Jan. 15, 1959, the lift shaft had been con- I structed inside the building and the appropriate portions of the roof had been removed. The reinforced concrete floor of the motor room remained to be laid, and the brick walls (one of which would incorporate the gable) constructed, and ultimately a concrete roof added. The drawings and specification made it plain that before the floor was laid a chase or groove would have to be cut into the side of the gable, since the concrete floor was to be supported in the walls of the motor room. The brick walls above the floor were to be constructed after the floor had been laid. Unless, however, a chase were cut at the floor level along the side of the gable which was to form part of the inner wall of the motor room, the floor would be unsupported for a length of about seven feet. The cutting of a chase in the gable wall would necessarily so weaken it that, if left unsupported, it would fall and injure anyone working nearby. This should have been obvious to any competent builder or architect. There has been some conflict of evidence whether shoring or strutting was necessary or likely to have been effective.

I find that it was unsafe to cut the chase without shoring or strutting the gable, and that if the gable had been properly strutted or shored, the chase would have been cut without any real danger of the gable falling.

On the morning of Jan. 15, 1959, the plaintiff, who is a senior bricklayer in the first defendants' employ, was on the site with Mr. Gaiment, another bricklayer. After some conversation with Mr. Berry, a qualified architect in the employ of the third defendants, to which conversation I shall presently have to refer in some detail, the plaintiff told the other bricklayer to cut the chase in the gable wall on its inner side, and he did so. The chase was about three inches square, and was completed by 1 p.m. No strutting or shoring was erected. Mr. Lord, an employee of the first defendants, who was in charge of the work on their behalf, arrived at the site at about 4 p.m. and had a conversation with the plaintiff on the scaffolding close to the gable. Shortly afterwards the plaintiff was cutting into a stone on one side of the gable when, after cutting out a piece of stone about the size of a walnut, the whole gable toppled inwards and fell, seriously injuring the plaintiff and Mr. Gaiment. It is suggested that the fall was triggered off by the action of the plaintiff himself. Even if this be so (and I am far from satisfied that it is) it seems to me to be immaterial. I have no doubt that the gable was so weakened by the chase that it became most unsafe and unless supported by strutting or shoring, would inevitably, without any further interference, have fallen within a short time of the chase being cut.

The plaintiff originally brought this action against the first defendants alone, claiming that the injury and damage which he suffered were caused by the negligence or breach of statutory duty of these defendants. Having regard to the allegations made in the defence of the first defendants, the plaintiff joined the second and third defendants. It will be convenient to consider the case against each of the defendants separately.

In my view the first defendants have no defence to this action. It was their duty as the plaintiff's employers to take reasonable care for his safety. They knew that the work had reached a stage when a chase was about to be cut in the gable. They should have appreciated that this would be a highly dangerous operation unless the gable were supported by strutting or shoring, but they allowed this work to be carried out without any such strutting or shoring. Mr. Lord was an exceptionally frank witness. He has many years' experience and is familiar with the normal construction of stone walls and the danger of cutting chases in them without strutting or shoring. I have no doubt that he is usually a very careful man and takes all necessary precautions for the safety of workmen under his control. On this occasion, however, he never applied his mind to the question, and he frankly admits that he should have done so. In my judgment the first defendants were clearly negligent in that they did not shore or strut this wall when they knew that the chase was about to be cut in it. This negligence was a cause of the accident.

They are also liable under reg. 94 (2) of the Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948 (1) which reads as follows:

> "Where any work is carried on which is likely to reduce so as to endanger any person employed the security or stability of any part of an existing building or of a building in course of construction all practicable precautions shall be taken by shoring or otherwise to prevent danger to any person employed from the collapse of the building or the fall of any part thereof."

(1) S.I. 1948 No. 1145.

A The statutory duty cast on the first defendants does not, however, in the circumstances of this case, differ, in my view, from the duty of care imposed on them under the common law. The first defendants have rightly made no allegation of contributory negligence against the plaintiff, for the plaintiff is by trade a bricklayer and not a stonemason, and did not know and had no reason to suspect that the cutting of a chase without shoring or strutting was likely to render the wall B unsafe.

The plaintiff was clearly an invitee of the second defendants, and his claim against them is based on alleged breaches of their duty as occupiers to take reasonable care for his safety. The plaintiff contends that the second defendants are vicariously liable for the negligence of their architects, the third defendants. In my judgment this contention is scarcely arguable. It is true that for certain C purposes an architect is the agent of the building owner, e.g., for the purpose of ordering materials (Wallis v. Robinson (2)). Nevertheless, an architect is clearly an independent contractor. The building owner has no control over the manner in which the architect does his work (indeed, for certain purposes the architect is in the position of a quasi arbitrator). Accordingly, providing that the building owner engages an architect whom he reasonably believes to be competent, he is D not in general responsible for the architect's negligence. When the second defendants engaged the third defendants they rightly believed the third defendants to be competent architects of high repute. Accordingly, the second defendants cannot be vicariously liable for any negligence on the part of the third defendants.

An argument has also been addressed to me on the basis that quite apart from E vicarious liability, the second defendants are liable under the Occupiers' Liability Act, 1957. I must confess that I have found this argument very difficult to follow. The gable was perfectly safe at the time when the architects and builders were called in. The second defendants wanted this gable incorporated in a wall of the proposed motor room if this could safely be done. Whether the gable could be retained, and, if so, how this should be done was essentially a technical F matter for the architects and builders to decide, and very sensibly the second defendants left this matter to them. I am quite unable to find that the second defendants in any way failed in their duty of care to their invitees.

The claim against the third defendants raises a point of law of considerable importance and no little difficulty. The contract of Sept. 18, 1958, between the first and second defendants called for completion by Dec. 1, 1958. The third G defendants' letter of Jan. 9, 1959, makes it plain that the date of completion was postponed, but that it was agreed that the roof should be completed and the lift shaft clear by Feb. 1, 1959. The opening words of cl. 1 of the contract provide that > "The contractor shall carry out and complete the works in accordance with this contract and in every respect in accordance with the directions . . . H of the architect."

The specification also provides that

> "the works are to be carried out in strict accordance with the drawings and specification and with the instructions given by the architect from time to time during the progress of the works."

I Counsel for the third defendants, in the course of his most able argument, submitted that the wide meaning of the words in the specification and of the opening words in cl. 1 of the contract is cut down by what follows in cl. 1, so that the architect can give instructions only in relation to the matters specified in cl. 1. These, however, include instructions in relation to

> "The variation or modification of the design . . . or the addition or omission or substitution of any work and the postponement of any work . . ."

(2) (1862), 3 F. & F. 307.

On the morning of Jan. 15, 1959, Mr. Berry (3) visited the site for the purpose, amongst other things, of examining the gable, which he had not previously done. He had to decide whether it was safe to incorporate it in the wall of the motor room in accordance with the specification and design, or whether it should be demolished. The plaintiff was clearly anxious that the design and specification should be modified by eliminating the gable, partly because of the difficulty he felt in marrying the brickwork to the stone gable, and partly because he had heard a rumour (in my view unfounded) that the gable was then unsafe. I am quite satisfied that he asked Mr. Berry if the gable might be demolished, and urged the difficulty and the rumour to which I have referred as reasons for this modification. Mr. Berry explained to the plaintiff how in his view the brickwork could be married to the stone gable, and intimated that he was satisfied that the gable was safe and must be retained as part of the motor room wall in accordance with the design and specification. He does not remember that part of the conversation relating to safety, but I accept the plaintiff's recollection on this matter. Mr. Berry knew that the motor room had to be completed by Feb. 1, 1959, and that it had reached the stage on Jan. 15, 1959, when the chase was about to be cut in the gable. I find that during the conversation to which I have referred Mr. Berry, as he admits, in effect instructed the plaintiff to carry on and cut the chase. He admits also that he knew that the chase would be cut that day without shoring or strutting. He took the view, and still does, that it was unnecessary to shore or strut. In this he was mistaken. There are, of course, many mistakes that a professional man can make without failing to exercise reasonable skill or care; but not an elementary mistake of this kind. I have no doubt at all that any ordinary architect using reasonable care and skill would certainly have realised the extreme danger of cutting the chase without shoring or strutting the gable. Mr. Berry says that he assumed that the chase would be cut in small sections, each section being chocked before the next section was cut. I do not believe that this method would have substantially reduced the danger of the gable falling or that any reasonably careful and competent architect would have thought so. Moreover, I very much doubt whether any such thought passed through Mr. Berry's head at the time on Jan. 15, 1959. A chase had been cut in the chimney wall which was to be incorporated in another wall of the motor room. There was the open chase in the chimney wall for Mr. Berry to see, and a mere glance would have shown that no chocks had been used in cutting that chase. Mr. Berry's recollection is that on Jan. 15, 1959, he thought that the plaintiff was a foreman stonemason. I do not accept his recollection, for the plaintiff was obviously on the site as a bricklayer.

Counsel submitted that the third defendants had no right to instruct the first defendants as to either the manner in which the work was to be done or the safety precautions to be taken. He contended that the form of specification and contract make it plain that it is for the first defendants to decide what safety precautions are necessary and to make provision for them in their tender. He further submitted that there is no contractual nexus between the architects and the builders, and that the law imposes no duty on the architect to advise the builders or their servants about their safety. So far as the law is concerned, Mr. Berry would be within his rights were he to stand by and without protest or warning watch the plaintiff doing something which Mr. Berry knew to be highly dangerous. Still less could Mr. Berry be liable if through lack of care or knowledge he failed to appreciate the risks involved in the plaintiff's acts.

I agree substantially with all these submissions. I further agree that had the third defendants issued instructions direct to the first defendants to cut the chase, and as a result of those instructions being obeyed, the plaintiff had been injured, the third defendants would have been under no liability to him. The first defendants would in such circumstances have been interposed between the

(3) The architect in the employ of the third defendants.

A instructions and the doing of the work, and the proximity between the plaintiff and the third defendants would not have been sufficiently close to impose any duty of care on them. But the instructions were in fact given direct to the plaintiff. They concerned a subject-matter, i.e., the cutting of the chase, about which, as between the third defendants and the second defendants, the third defendants had a duty to decide, and as between the third defendants and the B first defendants, the third defendants had a right to issue instructions. The architect chose to give the instructions direct to the bricklayer, who had no reason to suspect that any danger was involved. The architect certainly knew that these instructions would be promptly obeyed and equally certainly should have realised that in the existing circumstances they would probably lead to the bricklayer's serious injury or death. Having regard to the exceptionally close C relationship between the architect and the bricklayer on the particular facts of this case, the law to my mind imposed a duty on the architect to take reasonable care for the safety of the bricklayer. Had he exercised any such care, he would not have issued the instructions.

In M'Alister (or Donoghue) v. Stevenson (4) LORD ATKIN laid down the celebrated principle:

D "You must take reasonable care to avoid acts or omissions which you can reasonably foresee would be likely to injure your neighbour. Who then, in law, is my neighbour? The answer seems to be persons who are so closely and directly affected by my act that I ought reasonably to have them in contemplation as being so affected when I am directing my mind to the acts or omissions which are called in question."

E Can anyone doubt that the bricklayer was so closely and directly affected by the instructions that the architect ought to have had him in contemplation as being so affected when the architect was directing his mind to the instructions? LORD MACMILLAN says (5):

"What then are the circumstances which give rise to this duty to take F care? In the daily contacts of social and business life human beings are thrown into or place themselves in an infinite variety of relationships with their fellows, and the law can refer only to the standards of the reasonable man in order to determine whether any particular relationship gives rise to a duty to take care as between those who stand in that relationship to each other. The grounds of action may be as various and manifold as human G errancy, and the conception of legal responsibility may develop in adaptation to altering social conditions and standards. The criterion of judgment must adjust and adapt itself to the changing circumstances of life. The categories of negligence are never closed."

Can anyone doubt that the reasonable man would conclude that the particular relation between this architect and this bricklayer gave rise to a duty to take care?

H Counsel for the third defendants submitted that the instructions amounted to no more than a statement, and that in law a careless as distinct from a fraudulent statement is not actionable in the absence of a contractual or fiduciary relationship between the parties, for in the absence of such a relationship there is no duty to take care, and in the absence of such a duty there can be no actionable negligence. He relies on the well-known cases of Derry v. Peek (6), Le Lievre v. I Gould (7), and Candler v. Crane, Christmas & Co. (8).

On the whole I have come to the conclusion that those authorities are not in point, for in my view orders and instructions are different in their nature from mere statements or representations. To make a statement or representation believing that someone will probably act on it is not, in my view, equivalent to

(4) [1932] All E.R. Rep. at p. 11; [1932] A.C. at p. 580.
(5) [1932] All E.R. Rep. at p. 29; [1932] A.C. at p. 619.
(6) (1889), 14 App. Cas. 337. (7) [1893] 1 Q.B. 491.
(8) [1951] 1 All E.R. 426; [1951] 2 K.B. 164.

issuing orders or instructions which one knows will certainly be obeyed. But even if this distinction be not valid, in my judgment the third defendants were still under a duty of care to the plaintiff. It is to be observed that Donoghue v. Stevenson (9) has frequently been applied, but only where the damage complained of was physical, i.e., damage to persons or property; see e.g., Haseldine v. Daw & Son, Ltd. (10), Denny v. Supplies & Transport Co., Ltd. (11). On the other hand, in Derry v. Peek (12), Le Lievre v. Gould (13) and Candler v. Crane, Christmas & Co. (14), the damage complained of was not physical but financial. May it be that the latter cases can be read as authorities for excluding from the ambit of Donoghue v. Stevenson (9) only careless misstatements resulting in financial loss, but not those causing physical damage?

It appears from the judgment of DENNING, L.J., in Candler v. Crane, Christmas & Co. (15) that it was not seriously disputed by the respondents in that case that a careless statement resulting in physical damage to persons or property is actionable. ASQUITH, L.J., however, appears to take a different view, for he says (16):

> "The inference seems to me to be that LORD ATKIN continued to accept the distinction between liability in tort for careless (but non-fraudulent) misstatements and liability in tort for some other forms of carelessness, and that his formula defining 'who is my neighbour' must be read subject to his acceptance of this overriding distinction."

In the same sense are the references of ASQUITH, L.J. (16) to George v. Skivington (17). On the other hand, he does appear to find support for the decision at which he arrives from the fact that the formula in Donoghue v. Stevenson (9) "has never been applied to injury other than physical" (18). COHEN, L.J., expresses no concluded view whether a careless misstatement resulting in physical damage may be actionable, but he does cite (19), apparently with approval, the following passage from the judgment of WROTTESLEY, J., in Old Gate Estates, Ltd. v. Toplis & Harding & Russell (20):

> "The exceptions laid down by Donoghue v. Stevenson (9)—the exceptions to the rule that a man is obliged to be careful only to those to whom he owes a duty by contract—are, as I understand the decision in that case, confined to negligence which results in danger to life . . . limb, or . . . health, and, this being no one of those, I think that the plaintiffs have no cause of action on the analogy of Donoghue v. Stevenson (9)."

The inference seems to be that had the case been one of those exceptions, WROTTESLEY, J., would have concluded that there was a cause of action notwithstanding that the claim was based on a careless misstatement.

Although the dicta of ASQUITH, L.J., must carry the greatest weight, I do not consider that the decision in Candler v. Crane, Christmas & Co. (14) excludes careless statements causing physical damage from the ambit of Donoghue v. Stevenson (9). It may be difficult to think of a logical reason why there should, in some circumstances, be a duty to take care in making a statement causing physical damage but never such a duty in making a statement causing only financial loss. Logic and common sense, however, are uncertain guides in this branch of the law, and the distinction between the two classes of careless

(9) [1932] All E.R. Rep. 1; [1932] A.C. 562.
(10) [1941] 3 All E.R. 156; [1941] 2 K.B. 343.
(11) [1950] 2 K.B. 374.
(12) (1889), 14 App. Cas. 337.
(13) [1893] 1 Q.B. 491.
(14) [1951] 1 All E.R. 426; [1951] 2 K.B. 164.
(15) [1951] 1 All E.R. at p. 433; [1951] 2 K.B. at p. 179.
(16) [1951] 1 All E.R. at p. 439; [1951] 2 K.B. at p. 190.
(17) (1869), L.R. 5 Exch. 1.
(18) [1951] 1 All E.R. at p. 439; [1951] 2 K.B. at p. 189.
(19) [1951] 1 All E.R. at p. 444; [1951] 2 K.B. at p. 197.
(20) [1939] 3 All E.R. at p. 216.

A misstatement may have its roots in the historical development of the law of torts. ASQUITH, L.J., at the conclusion of his judgment in Candler v. Crane, Christmas & Co. (21) says:

> "I am not concerned with defending the existing state of the law or contending that it is strictly logical. It clearly is not—but I am merely recording what I think it is."

B Clearly there is no logical distinction between liability for careless misstatements and liability for other forms of carelessness. Indeed, it is obvious that where there is the closest proximity between the parties concerned, the financial loss caused by a careless misstatement may have catastrophic consequences for the person to whom it is made, whereas in cases such as that of the snail in the gingerbeer C bottle (had it been there) the damage resulting from the careless act may be comparatively trivial. It is curious and perhaps logically indefensible that the law affords a remedy in the latter case but not in the former. Yet so it is, for some forms of careless misstatement are clearly excluded by the existing authorities from the ambit of Donoghue v. Stevenson (22) however close the degree of proximity between the parties concerned. I read the authorities as excluding not all forms D of careless misstatement, but only those resulting in financial loss. I accept that this view adds illogicality to illogicality, but that seems to me to be preferable to enlarging the class of those to whom a remedy is unjustly denied. The decision in Candler v. Crane, Christmas & Co. (23) rests solely on the narrow ground that Le Lievre v. Gould (24) was not overruled by Donoghue v. Stevenson (22) and is still binding on the Court of Appeal.

E I reach the conclusion that since neither Le Lievre v. Gould (24) nor Candler v. Crane, Christmas & Co. (23) was concerned with a careless statement causing physical damage, they cannot exclude the application of the principle enunciated in Donoghue v. Stevenson (22) to the particular facts of the present case. Applying that principle, I hold that Mr. Berry was under a duty to the plaintiff to use reasonable care, that he failed in that duty and that his negligence was a cause of the plaintiff's damage. There will, accordingly, be judgment for the plaintiff F against the first and third defendants for the agreed sum of £2,352 10s. 9d., and judgment for the second defendants against the plaintiff.

Judgment accordingly.

Solicitors: O. H. Parsons (for the plaintiff); Stanley & Co. (for the first defendants); Bevan, Hancock & Co., Bristol (for the second defendants); Sydney Redfern & Co. (for the third defendants).

[Reported by WENDY SHOCKETT, Barrister-at-Law.]

---

(21) [1951] 1 All E.R. at p. 442; [1951] 2 K.B. at p. 195.
(22) [1932] All E.R. Rep. 1; [1932] A.C. 562.
(23) [1951] 1 All E.R. 426; [1951] 2 K.B. 164.
(24) [1893] 1 Q.B. 491.

LITTLEWOODS MAIL ORDER STORES, LTD. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS.

A

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Evershed, M.R., Harman and Donovan, L.JJ.), June 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 1961.]

Stamp Duty—Exchange—Freehold estate exchanged for leasehold interest in same land—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 54, Sch. 1.

B

Stamp Duty—Conveyance on sale—Lease—Whether a "conveyance"—Exchange of dissimilar legal estates—Whether an exchange or conveyance on sale—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), Sch. 1—Finance Act, 1930 (20 & 21 Geo. 5 c. 28), s. 42—Finance Act, 1938 (1 & 2 Geo. 6 c. 46), s. 50 (1) (b).

As part of a series of transactions between freeholders as lessors, their lessees and a wholly owned subsidiary company of the lessees, which was designed to save payment of greater stamp duty, the lessors accepted surrender of the lease (eighty years' unexpired) and granted to the lessees a new lease of the same property for twenty-two years and ten days at a rent of £6 a year. The lessees assigned this lease to their subsidiary company. The subsidiary company granted an underlease to the lessees for twenty-two years at a rent of £42,450 a year, which considerably exceeded the rent formerly reserved by the surrendered lease. The freeholders and the subsidiary company then executed a deed of exchange, by which the freehold was transferred to the subsidiary company and the lease for twenty-two years and ten days with the benefit of the underlease was transferred to the freeholders.

C

D

E

Held: (i) the deed of exchange was not liable to ad valorem duty as a "conveyance or transfer on sale" within the meaning of Sch. 1 to the Stamp Act, 1891, since, whether or not it was an exchange within the meaning of s. 54 and Sch. 1 (see p. 262, letter I, and p. 270, letter B, post), it was not a sale of the freehold (see p. 264, letter D, and p. 270, letter D, post), sale connoting a sale at common law with a buyer, a seller, something sold and a price in money (see p. 264, letter D, p. 269, letter H, to p. 270, letter A, and p. 271, letter E, post).

F

(ii) the assignment was liable to ad valorem stamp duty, because the words "previously conveyed" in s. 50 (1) (b) of the Finance Act, 1938, comprehended the grant of a lease and the assignment was therefore excluded by s. 50 (1) (b) of the Finance Act, 1938, from the exemption from voluntary disposition duty under s. 74 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, enacted by s. 42 (1) of the Finance Act, 1930 (see p. 268, letter I, to p. 269, letter A, and p. 271, letter H, post).

G

Per HARMAN, L.J.: the principle that different statutes, passed at different times, should when forming a long series of enactments in pari materia, be construed together as explanatory of each other must not be pressed too far; in the present case the distinction between "lease" and "conveyance" drawn in the Stamp Act, 1891, ought not to be carried into the construction of the word "conveyance" in s. 50 of the Finance Act, 1938 (dictum of VISCOUNT SIMONDS in Fendoch Investment Trust Co. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1945] 2 All E.R. at p. 144, applied; see p. 271, letters A to D, post; cf., p. 267, letter F, and p. 271, letter G, post).

H

Decision of DANCKWERTS, J. ([1961] 1 All E.R. 195), affirmed.

I

[For stamp duty on conveyance or transfer on sale or exchange, see 28 HALSBURY'S LAWS (2nd Edn.) 457-465, paras. 972-986 and 466, para. 989; and for cases on the former subject, see 39 DIGEST 278-285, 621-670.

For the Stamp Act, 1891, s. 54 and Sch. 1 "conveyance or transfer on sale" and "exchange", see 21 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 627, 667, 673; and for the Finance Act, 1930, s. 42, and the Finance Act, 1938, s. 50, see ibid., 959 and 1196.]

A Cases referred to:

Coats v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1897] 1 Q.B. 778; affd. C.A., [1897] 2 Q.B. 423; 66 L.J.Q.B. 732; 77 L.T. 270; 61 J.P. 693; 9 Digest (Repl.) 420, 2718.

Escoigne Properties, Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1958] 1 All E.R. 406; [1958] A.C. 549; [1958] 2 W.L.R. 336; 3rd Digest Supp.

B Fendoch Investment Trust Co. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., Alporteno Investment Trust Co. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1945] 2 All E.R. 140; sub nom. Alporteno Investment Trust Co. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., Fendoch Investment Trust Co. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., 114 L.J.K.B. 291; 173 L.T. 35; 27 Tax Cas. 53; 28 Digest (Repl.) 371, 1625.

G.H.R. Co. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1943] 1 All E.R. 424; [1943] K.B. C 303; 112 L.J.K.B. 311; 169 L.T. 206; 23 Digest (Repl.) 395, 4658.

Goldsmiths' Co. v. Wyatt, [1907] 1 K.B. 95; 76 L.J.K.B. 166; 95 L.T. 855; 71 J.P. 79; 42 Digest 685, 992.

Great Western Ry. Co. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1894] 1 Q.B. 507; 63 L.J.Q.B. 405; 70 L.T. 86; 58 J.P. 397; 39 Digest 280, 646.

Kemp v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1905] 1 K.B. 581; 74 L.J.K.B. 112; 92 D L.T. 92; 39 Digest 285, 672.

Portman (Lord) v. Inland Revenue Comrs., (1956), 35 A.T.C. 349; 50 R. & I.T. 35.

Appeal and Cross-Appeal.

The respondents presented six deeds to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue E for adjudication of stamp duty under s. 12 of the Stamp Act, 1891. They did not object to the assessments of duty in respect of four of the deeds, but were dissatisfied with the assessments made in respect of the other two, viz.: (i) an assignment dated Dec. 9, 1958, ad valorem voluntary disposition duty under s. 74 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, on the estimated value of £400,000 of the leasehold interest assigned, £8,000; the respondents did not object to the valuation of the property assigned at £400,000, but contended that the assign- F ment was exempt from stamp duty under s. 42 of the Finance Act, 1930; (ii) a deed of exchange dated Dec. 11, 1958, as a conveyance on sale of the fee simple by reference to the head of charge "Conveyance or transfer on sale" and to s. 56 (2) of the Stamp Act, 1891, ad valorem duty at the rate of £1 per £50 on £42,444 x 20, £16,978; the respondents contended that the deed was liable to the duty of 10s. only, under the head of charge "Exchange or excambion— G instruments effecting" in Sch. 1 to the Stamp Act, 1891. They appealed by way of Case Stated to the High Court. On Nov. 17, 1960, DANCKWERTS, J. ([1961] 1 All E.R. 195) held that the former document attracted ad valorem stamp duty but that the latter document was liable to 10s. stamp duty as a genuine exchange within the meaning of Sch. 1 to the Stamp Act, 1891. The Crown appealed against the decision and the respondents cross-appealed.

H

B. L. Bathurst, Q.C., and E. Blanshard Stamp for the Crown.

Peter Foster, Q.C., and K. B. Suenson-Taylor for the respondents.

LORD EVERSHED, M.R.: We have heard two appeals, and this judgment is my judgment on both. The appeals have raised problems under the stamp I duty legislation of no little difficulty, and we are much indebted to learned counsel for their assistance and, on some points, for interesting historical references; but in the end I have come to the conclusion that we should not differ from the decision of DANCKWERTS, J., on either appeal.

In 1958 the Independent Order of Odd Fellows, the lessors, were the freehold owners of premises in Oxford Street, London, known as Jubilee House. The premises were subject to a lease made in 1947 for ninety-nine years in favour of Littlewoods Mail Order Stores, Ltd., the respondents. The lease would therefore expire in 2046. The rent payable under the lease was £23,444. It is not in doubt that the rent was considerably less than the rent which the premises would have commanded in the market, if vacant, in 1958. Negotiations, therefore, began in the early part of that year, and their nature is stated in a letter written by the respondents' solicitors on May 1, 1959. It is a letter addressed to the Controller of Stamps, in answer to his question what the transaction was, and is as follows:

> " In actual fact, however, the ' proposed transaction ' which you mention in your letter was one discussed at a meeting between our clients and the said [lessors] which took place [in] March, 1958. At that meeting, it was suggested by the [lessors] that the lease of 1947 for a term of ninety-nine years at a rental of £23,444 should be surrendered by operation of law and that a new lease be granted for a term of twenty-two years only at a rental of £42,444, i.e., an increase of £19,000 per annum.
>
> " At that meeting, it was also suggested that the said [lessors] should cease to receive rent at the expiration of the proposed new lease for twenty-two years and that our clients [the respondents] should be entitled to complete possession of the property thereafter without any further payment of rent."

Put otherwise, then, and very briefly, the nature of the arrangement was that the lessors were to get a much larger rent for a shorter period and, subject thereto, that the property would belong exclusively to the respondents. In answer to a question which we put to him, counsel for the Crown was kind enough to find out and tell us that the monetary value of the remaining eighty-eight years' payments of £23,444 at that time could be taken to be £460,000 after discounting in the usual way, and that similarly the then present monetary value of twenty-two years' payments of £43,444 was £560,000 or £100,000 more. The figures are of some interest as showing that the transaction proposed was not as unfavourable to the lessors as at first blush it might have appeared. At that stage, the matter was sent to conveyancing counsel of agreed selection. The instructions to conveyancing counsel were never produced, and this was a matter of a little criticism. In fairness, however, to the respondents I feel clear in my own mind that nothing more would have emerged which is significant had those instructions been produced; in other words, that there never was anything more behind the transaction than the statement of it which I have already made. Conveyancing counsel proceeded to draw the necessary documents in forms which I shall presently mention, and having no doubt an eye on liability to stamp duty. So long, however, as the instruments in question really effected what they purported to do, there is nothing wrong, as is well established, in so contriving them that they minimise the liability to duty. In Escoigne Properties, Ltd. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (1), VISCOUNT SIMONDS gave expression to the well-known principle (2) ". . . I would remind your Lordships that instruments, not transactions, are liable to stamp duty ". It is none the less proper for the court to see what in truth the instruments do effect.

At this stage a change was introduced into the proposed transactions. Instead of the lessors remaining freeholders for twenty-two years, they parted with their freehold interest at once, and took a lease themselves for twenty-two years and ten days, the respondents becoming their sub-lessees at the proposed enhanced rental of £43,444 net, i.e., after deducting the £6 per annum payable under the head lease. To effect that change another company known as Fork Manufacturing Co., Ltd., a subsidiary company wholly owned by the respondents, was introduced into the matter. Although only two of the twenty thousand shares of the subsidiary company were ever issued, it was not then and there formed for the purpose. We were informed by counsel for the respondents that it had been in existence for some ten years and was, in fact, a trading company. On Monday,

(1) [1958] 1 All E.R. 406; [1958] A.C. 549.
(2) [1958] 1 All E.R. at p. 409; [1958] A.C. at p. 558.

A Dec. 8, 1958, and the five succeeding days, documents were executed, one each day, six in all. On Monday, Dec. 8, a lease was granted by the lessors to the respondents for twenty-two years and ten days at the rent of £6 per annum. It has been conceded (and authority was referred to in 23 HALSBURY'S LAWS OF ENGLAND (3rd Edn.), p. 686) that that instrument operated in law to effect a surrender of the outstanding term of ninety-nine years' lease. On Tuesday, B Dec. 9, the new lease was assigned by the respondents to the subsidiary company. On Wednesday, Dec. 10, the subsidiary company granted an underlease of twenty-two years (i.e., ten days less than the term of the head lease) to the appellants at a rent of £42,450 per annum. On Thursday, Dec. 11, was executed what is called a deed of exchange between the lessors and the subsidiary company, the effect of which was that the lessors assigned to the subsidiary company the C freehold reversion and the subsidiary company assigned to the lessors the new lease of Dec. 8, with the benefit of the underlease.

On Friday, Dec. 12, was executed a deed of guarantee whereby the subsidiary company guaranteed the payment by the respondents of the rent of £42,450, and charged its own freehold reversion as security for the performance of that covenant. Finally, on Saturday, Dec. 13, by deed of indemnity, the respondents D indemnified the lessors against any stamp duties that might be exigible in respect of any of the instruments. It is, therefore, the respondents who appear as the appellants in the second appeal, and as respondents in the first. We are concerned in the two appeals with the instruments of Tuesday, Dec. 9 (the assignment of the new lease to the subsidiary company) and Thursday, Dec. 11 (the so-called deed of exchange) which are exhibits respectively B and D to the Case.

E I come now to the first appeal, which is related to document D, viz., the deed of exchange, of Thursday. The parties to it were certain individuals being the then trustees of the lessors of the one part, and the subsidiary company of the other part. It recited the lease of the previous Monday, Dec. 8, and then further recited that the trustees, i.e., the lessors, were entitled to the premises comprised in and demised by the lease for the estate in fee simple expectant on the F determination of the term. It further recited the assignment of the Tuesday from the respondents to the subsidiary company, and the underlease of the preceding day, the Wednesday. The final recital is expressed,

> "The parties hereto have mutually agreed to exchange their said respective estates and interests in the said property. . ."

G The first clause of the operative part of the deed is:

> "In consideration of the assignment hereinafter made by [the subsidiary company to the lessors] the parties of the first part as trustees hereby transfer to [the subsidiary company] all that land and property comprised in the titles above referred to subject to and with the benefit of the lease, but to the intent that any leasehold estate of the [subsidiary] company H comprised in title No. LN 58308 of which the company is the registered proprietor shall merge and be extinguished in the freehold estate . . ."

Those last lines appear to have been inserted in error. The title mentioned shows it to be a reference to the original ninety-nine years' lease which had, in fact, been surrendered and ceased to exist, and in which the subsidiary company never had had any interest.

I

> "(2) In consideration of the transfer hereinbefore made by the [lessors to the subsidiary company] [the subsidiary company] as beneficial owner hereby assigns unto the lessors the lease (of Dec. 8) to hold the same unto the [lessors] for all the residue now unexpired of the term granted by the lease subject henceforth to the payment of the said yearly rent, . . . etc."

but with the benefit of the underlease. Then there is a covenant by the lessors with the subsidiary company, that the lessors would pay the head rent of £6 per annum.

On the face of it, the document is stated to be a deed of exchange. But it is the essential argument of the Crown that it was in truth, for the purposes of stamp duty legislation at any rate, a conveyance on sale. The view of DANCKWERTS, J., was that it was a deed of exchange as that phrase is used in Sch. 1 to the Stamp Act, 1891. In a business sense it is no doubt true that it was an exchange, and it is indeed so described. However, that is not the end of the matter. It is necessary to refer to Sch. 1 to the Stamp Act, 1891. By s. 1 of the Act of 1891 it is provided that

> "From and after the commencement of this Act the stamp duties to be charged . . . upon the several instruments specified in Sch. 1 to this Act shall be the several duties in the said Schedule specified . . ."

There is found in Sch. 1 a long list of headings or titles descriptive of various types of instrument. It includes at p. 173 of the Queen's Printer's copy, "Conveyance or transfer", and there follow some sub-headings to which I must later return, but at p. 176 there is:

> "Exchange or excambion—Instruments effecting. In the case specified in s. 73 see that section."

It is not in doubt that excambion is a term of Scots law, and may be taken to be equivalent to exchange, although its exact significance is not a matter on which we have any expert opinion, and it is not, therefore, one on which I shall say anything. There is little doubt, however, that in its origin the word "exchange" as applied to property transactions may relate to exchanges of freehold, or at least to exchanges of property of a like estate or character. Counsel for the Crown referred us to BLACKSTONE'S COMMENTARIES (21st Edn.), vol. 2, at p. 323, where it is stated:

> "An exchange is a mutual grant of equal interests, the one in consideration of the other . . . The estates exchanged must be equal in quantity: not of value, for that is immaterial, but of interest; as fee simple for fee simple, a lease for twenty years for a lease for twenty years, and the like."

There is a note which in some degree, but not substantially, may be said to qualify that statement. In the present case the estates exchanged were not similar in interest; on the one side there was freehold, on the other a leasehold interest. Counsel for the Crown also referred us to earlier stamp duty legislation, beginning with the Act of 1815, from which it appears at the least highly probable that at that date exchange was used in the limited sense which is stated in BLACKSTONE'S COMMENTARIES. I add two other references. In Sch. 1 the reference to s. 73 applies to the case of an exchange of real or heritable property for other real or heritable property where additional consideration by way of equality of exchange is given. Of course, if the word "exchange" extended to exchanges of other than real or heritable property, it would appear that there would be a hiatus in the statutory scheme, for there is no express provision for the case of an exchange of other interests where a sum of money is paid by way of equality.

Finally, some century and a half after Sir William Blackstone's day, WILLS, J., in Coats v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (3) said this:

> "But certainly, looking at the history of the matter as disclosed to us in the Act of 55 Geo. 3 [i.e. the Act of 1815] and subsequent Acts, there is considerable ground for arguing that 'exchange' really was intended to apply to real property and not to go beyond it."

He then refers to the Scottish term excambion, as probably having a similar limitation.

In the view that I have formed it is unnecessary for me to express an opinion whether in the Stamp Act, 1891, this word "exchange" should be taken as

(3) [1897] 1 Q.B. at p. 784.

A limited in the sense used by Sir William Blackstone. It would appear to follow from the Crown's argument, taken to its full logical conclusion, that every exchange would be also a conveyance on sale, since it could always be said that there was a consideration for the transfer by party A, consisting of the property transferred by party B. Indeed, counsel for the Crown said that, if the instrument here in question was a conveyance on sale, he was not concerned that it B might also be an exchange, since (and there is established authority for this proposition) it would be open to the Crown to charge the greater of the duties applicable. The real question for us to decide is, however, did this document effect a conveyance on sale? If the answer to that question be in the negative, it is sufficient to justify the conclusion which I have already stated; for the result would be the same whether the document is then treated as a conveyance C or transfer other than a conveyance on sale, or as an exchange.

Although the Stamp Act, 1891, contains a definition of "conveyance on sale" (in s. 54, to which I shall have to return) there is nowhere any definition of the word "sale". I apprehend, therefore, that, in deciding whether there is a sale, the court must apply the ordinary standards of sense and language to the transaction under review. The question then here is who was selling what, to whom, D and for what price or consideration?

The answer of the Crown, put forward by Mr. Bathurst with great force, is that the lessors were selling the freehold to the subsidiary company and the consideration was the payment to the lessors by the respondents of twenty-two annual payments of £43,444, a figure arrived at by deducting the rent of £6 under Monday's lease from the rent under the sub-lease. Counsel for the Crown E also conceded in reply that, as an alternative, the price or consideration might properly be stated as twenty-two annual payments of £19,000, being the difference between £43,444, the net rent under the new sub-lease, and £23,444, the rent under the original long lease. Thirdly, and again alternatively, counsel for the Crown contended that the consideration for the sale of the freehold by the lessors was the value of the lease transferred by the subsidiary company to the F lessors which, for the purposes of these appeals, is to be taken as agreed, in accordance with the Case Stated. at the sum of £400,000.

In my judgment these submissions do not represent what the Thursday's instrument, the so-called deed of exchange, in truth effected. I refer again to VISCOUNT SIMONDS' statement that the duty is leviable on the instrument (4). One must see what was the transaction which in truth the instrument effected. G I refer again to the facts earlier stated, and my conclusion that no other bargain behind these instruments was effected by this document. At its highest from the Crown's point of view, as it seems to me, this so-called deed of exchange represents an essential stage in the arrangement made, whereby the lessors received the benefit of the underlease with a rent nearly twice as high as the old lease rent, but parted altogether with their freehold interest, so that that interest H vested in the respondents' subsidiary company.

Counsel for the Crown did concede in reply that, if it was proper (and I take it that it is) to have regard to what was the transaction which these deeds really effected, and to look behind them to find that transaction, one could not go beyond the evening of Monday, because until that evening the subject-matter transferred by the subsidiary company had not come into existence. But in I my judgment the lessors cannot fairly be said to have been selling the freehold for twenty-two annual payments either of £43,444 or of £19,000 or, indeed, of any other such sum. I do not think it can be said to be any more true that the lessors were selling the freehold for annual sums than it would be true to say that the subsidiary company was selling its twenty-two years' and ten days' lease for the value of the freehold.

That brings me at once to the alternative submission of counsel for the Crown,

(4) [1958] 1 All E.R. at p. 409; [1958] A.C. at p. 558—see p. 260, letter G, ante.

that this was a sale of the freehold, the consideration being the value of the lease. Again I have to say that I do not think that that is what the instrument effected. If it were otherwise, it might indeed seem to follow that here there were two sales, on the one side a sale by the lessors of the freehold for the value I have stated, £400,000, and at the same time a sale of the lease by the subsidiary company for the value of the freehold reversion, whatever that might be. If that were the truth, the case might be then said to be parallel to one of the cases to which we were referred, Lord Portman v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (5). But that case had this clear distinction from the present one, that Lord Portman had entered into a firm and binding contract for the sale of certain property for £1,460,000 and also, at an interval of some four days, had entered into another binding contract to buy from the other party, an estates company, other property for £1,280,000. It was sought to say that this was an exchange, and that duty was only leviable on the difference of the two sums I have stated. But the learned judge held that there were there two sales at these figures, and that stamp duty was leviable on the total of the two sales. In my judgment that case has no application to the present.

Many other cases were referred to, and I hope that I shall not be thought disrespectful of counsel if I do not now allude to them. The matter is one not admitting of great elaboration; applying what I have hoped to be the ordinary standards of sense and language I conclude that this document was not a conveyance or transfer on sale. Looking fairly at it, it seems to me that document D, the so-called deed of exchange, as an instrument does not either in terms or in effect satisfy the necessary requirement of a sale. I cannot find or divine the essential characteristics of a sale, viz., the presence of a buyer, a seller, something sold and a price or consideration for what is sold.

I turn accordingly to the cross-appeal by the respondents. By this instrument in question there was assigned by the respondents to their subsidiary company, as a voluntary assignment the lease granted the day before of twenty-two years ten days, subject to the rent of £6 per annum. The document is quite short. It recites the lease; it recites that the respondents are the beneficial owners of the whole of the issued share capital of the subsidiary company; it recites that the respondents have requested the subsidiary company to accept the transfer of the property, and the operative part is to the effect that the respondents as beneficial owners assigned to the subsidiary company the premises comprised in and demised by the lease of Dec. 8, 1958, to hold the same unto the subsidiary company for the residue of the term, subject to the payment of the rent.

The point again is an exceedingly short one, for it turns on the construction of a few words in s. 50 of the Finance Act, 1938. I shall have to refer to the whole of the relevant part of the section, but the particular words which are involved in the appeal are these:

> "... whereunder ... (b) the beneficial interest in the property was previously conveyed or transferred directly or indirectly by such a person as aforesaid."

It is the case of the respondents that those vital words "conveyed or transferred" in the sentence which I have read, in that context—i.e., the context of that Act and other stamp duty legislation—mean conveyed or transferred by instrument called, or defined as, a conveyance or transfer in Sch. 1 to the Stamp Act, 1891, wherein such instruments are distinct from leases. It will be recalled that here the subject-matter transferred by the sale was the lease which had been granted—i.e., created—the day before. It cannot, I conceive, be at all in doubt that the words "conveyance" or "convey" will, to a lawyer at any rate, include prima facie, a lease or the grant of a lease. In modern times that construction may be said to be enshrined in the definition to be found in s. 205 (1), para. (ii) of the Law of Property Act, 1925, but it is indeed of much older significance.

(5) (1956), 35 A.T.C. 349.

A Counsel for the Crown again referred us to SIR WILLIAM BLACKSTONE'S COMMENTARIES (21st Edn.), vol. 2, and at p. 317 I find the statement, "A lease is properly a conveyance of any lands or tenements". Reference was also made to the old conveyancing practice by way of lease and release. But it was the submission of counsel for the respondents that none the less this section is part of the stamp duty legislation and, so treated, "convey" or "transfer" must be B construed in the limited sense used in Sch. 1 so as to exclude a lease.

In Sch. 1 to the Stamp Act, 1891, leases, or rather the heading "Lease or tack" is a separate head or description of instrument from conveyance or transfer. As I am referring to Sch. 1, I note also, since it will be relevant to something which I shall say later, that another separate head or series of heads bears the name or word "Agreement", either alone or in conjunction with C contracts and, in one instance, memorandum of agreement. Counsel for the respondents says it is not merely that there is this dichotomy in Sch. 1 which is introduced into the scheme of the Act by s. 1. He has referred also to other parts of the Act which, he says, emphasise that dichotomy. Thus, a group of sections beginning with s. 54 and ending with s. 61 is headed "Conveyances on sale". There follows s. 62, "Conveyances on any occasion except sale or D mortgage"; and then, a little further on, there is a group of sections beginning with s. 75, bearing the title, "Leases". So, again, says counsel for the respondents, Parliament is emphasising this essential dichotomy between two types of instrument for stamp duty purposes, conveyances or transfers on the one hand, leases on the other.

Section 54, which gives the meaning of conveyance on sale, and s. 62, which E gives a definition of conveyances other than those on the occasion of a sale or mortgage, according to their ordinary language and the understanding of the word "conveyance", etc., would appear to comprehend also a lease. I will illustrate this by reading from s. 62:

> "Every instrument, and every decree or order of any court or of any commissioners, whereby any property on any occasion except a sale or F mortgage, is transferred to or vested in any person, is to be charged with duty as a conveyance or transfer of property . . ."

The language follows closely that of s. 54. Prima facie the language would cover the grant of a lease, since a lease is an instrument whereby property (viz., the term of the lease) is vested in some person (viz., the lessee). But in Kemp v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (6), PHILLIMORE, J., expressed the view, in G reference to s. 62, that it was necessary that the rule of construction sometimes called reddendo singula singulis should be applied, with the result that the word "transferred" in the phrase "transferred to or vested in", is related exclusively to the word "instrument", and the words "vested in" exclusively to decrees or orders of a court. The result of that view would be to exclude necessarily from s. 54 and equally from s. 62 the grant of a lease, since it could H not be said that the subject-matter of the grant of a lease was "transferred". It is indeed created, and, although the estate created would undoubtedly be vested in the lessee, the words "vested in" are, on the view of PHILLIMORE, J. (6), confined to the effect of decrees or orders. Again, it is not necessary to express a conclusion on this point, but I would like to record that I must by no means be taken as assenting to the view expressed by PHILLIMORE, J. (6), and I prefer, as at present advised, the doubts later expressed by MACNAGHTEN, J. (7).

Some other sections were properly referred to, but I turn first to the headings relating to conveyance or transfers in Sch. 1. The first is "Conveyance or transfer . . ." of certain stocks. The second is one which was fundamental to the appeal of counsel for the Crown, viz. "Conveyance or transfer on sale of any property " except the stocks above mentioned, and there follows a reference to a number of sections, including s. 55 and s. 57. Then comes " Conveyance or transfer by way of security ", and there is a reference back to the heading " Mortgage ", and finally " Conveyance or transfer of any kind not hereinbefore described ". A

(6) [1905] 1 K.B. at p. 587.
(7) G.H.R. Co. v. Inland Revenue Comrs., [1943] 1 All E.R. at p. 425; [1943] K.B. at p. 305.

Under the second heading, conveyance or transfer on sale, there is the important line (it was important to the argument of counsel for the Crown) " where the amount or value of the consideration for the sale " either does not exceed and or does exceed certain stated figures. Section 6 deals with the case which arose in the course of the argument, where the consideration, though monetary, was not by way of English currency. It deals in those circumstances with foreign currency. Section 55 provides how, for the purpose of calculating the duty one values what is called in sub-s. (1) " stock or marketable security ", and in sub-s. (2) " security not being marketable security ". It may well be that a case will hereafter arise when the exact meaning of the word " security " will have to be considered. Section 57 deals with the case where the consideration is by way of a debt. B C

I think it unnecessary to refer to other sections, but there was some argument about the proper effect on the general conspectus of the Act of those sections. It clearly cannot be said, I think, that the subject-matters which are dealt with in s. 6, s. 55 and s. 57 by any possibility comprehend all possible types of consideration on a sale. It was therefore said on the one hand that, when one is concerned with conveyances on sale within Sch. 1, and has to consider the value as distinct from the amount of consideration, these sections limit the cases to which the heading " Conveyances on sale " applies at all. On the other side it is said that the sections which I have quoted have a much more limited significance, only indicating how in particular cases particular types of consideration are valued. D E

It may well be something of a criticism of the Act, if I may say so, that these problems are left somewhat in the air. It is one of the difficulties to which the Stamp Act gives rise. I add this final word, however, that, although s. 54 contains a definition of a conveyance on sale, a definition picked up, in a sense, by s. 62 in the way of definition, in the group of sections headed " lease " any definition of lease at all is nowhere to be found. So much for the Act of 1891. F

The next step in the legislative history is s. 74 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910. The section has the cross-heading, " Stamp duty on gifts inter vivos ". Subsection (1) as far as relevant states that any conveyance or transfer operating as a voluntary disposition inter vivos shall be chargeable as if it were a conveyance or transfer on sale, and provides what is to be substituted for the consideration. G

Now, it was not doubted by counsel for the respondents, I think, that, if this case had come before the court after the Act of 1910 had come into operation and before the coming into operation of the later Act of 1930, the assignment would have fallen within s. 74 and have been charged for stamp duty as a conveyance or transfer within the comprehension of that section. But it is said by counsel that, although voluntary gifts by way of transfer were brought into the scope of that section, it was otherwise in the case of a gift in the form of a lease. That would be a strange omission if it were right. It would appear anomalous that, if Parliament was concerned to say that transactions would attract duty if by way of gift or if made for a consideration, it should confine its attention to conveyances and transfers (as counsel for the respondents construes those terms) and say nothing about leases. Such a result is unlikely. If the anomaly is to be avoided, it must be said that Parliament in 1910 had not in mind the rigid dichotomy between conveyance and transfer on the one hand and lease on the other which is the foundation of the argument of counsel for the respondents. H I

Section 42 of the Act of 1930 proceeded to exempt from duty certain conveyances and transfers. In this case there is no doubt that Parliament had in

A mind the dichotomy, because the reference is to duty under the heading conveyance or transfer on sale in Sch. 1 to the Act of 1891. The operation of Sch. 1 is expressly confined to cases otherwise falling under that heading. Subsection (1) states that stamp duty shall not be charged on an instrument to which the section applies, and sub-s. (2) applies the section to any instrument which satisfies the two conditions, (a) that its effect is to convey or transfer the bene-
B ficial interest in property from one company with limited liability to another, and (b) (so far as relevant to this case) that not less than ninety per cent. of the issued share capital of one company is owned by the other.

The section, which is in Part 4 of the Act, is also by the express terms of s. 53 to be construed as one with the Stamp Act, 1891. We are here concerned with a transfer of property for the consideration from the respondents to a wholly
C owned subsidiary. If, therefore, this case had come before the court after 1930 but before 1938, there would appear to be little doubt that the assignment would be exempt from duty. Section 50 (1) of the Finance Act, 1938, refers in terms to s. 42 of the Act of 1930, and states its purpose as having been to relieve from stamp duty any instrument the effect whereof is to convey or transfer the beneficial interest in property from one associated company to another. The sub-
D section provides that s. 42 of the Act of 1930 shall not apply to any such instrument unless it is shown to the satisfaction of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue that the instrument was not executed in pursuance of or connected with an arrangement whereunder—and we are concerned with (b)—the beneficial interest in the property was previously conveyed or transferred directly or indirectly to such a person as aforesaid. "Such a person as aforesaid" means
E some person not associated with transfer or the transferee—someone who has been conveniently called a stranger.

Here there was a grant of a lease by the lessors to the respondents, and then a transfer of that subject-matter by the respondents to the subsidiary company. There is no doubt that the lessors are a "stranger"; they are "such a person as aforesaid" within the meaning of the subsection. Parliament on this occasion
F for some reason did not provide that s. 50 of the Act of 1938 (unlike the Act of 1930) should be read and construed as one with the Stamp Act, 1891. I accept, however (although the omission is not entirely without significance), as a general well established proposition that in an Act of Parliament which amends existing legislation on a particular subject-matter the court will construe the terms of the amending Act in the sense which they bear, or have been held to bear, in G the main legislation.

Observe, then, what the Act demands. It must be shown to the satisfaction of the commissioners (the onus being on the respondents as their counsel concedes) that the transaction was not executed as part of an arrangement. That is the first condition. It is here conceded that the words in para. (b), "previously conveyed", are limited by reference to the arrangement earlier
H referred to. There is no question here that, if the grant of the lease can be treated as a conveyance or transfer, it was within the phrase "previously conveyed" because it was all part of a single arrangement. But there remains the second condition contained, for present purposes, in para. (b), under which arises the vital question: in this paragraph do the words "conveyed or transferred" comprehend a lease, or do they not?

I I think again the point is one of no little difficulty. If counsel for the respondents is right, it would seem to be a somewhat strange anomaly, a casus omissus. It would seem strange to exclude from the benefit of s. 42 (1) of the Act of 1930 the transfer of something granted by way of conveyance or transfer, as counsel for the respondents defines these words, but not to exclude the transfer of something created by way of lease. It would certainly leave an easy loophole for avoiding the impact of s. 50 of the Act of 1938. But in the end on this matter, as on the other, I have come to the conclusion which commended itself to DANCKWERTS, J. The essential words are "the beneficial interest in the property was conveyed or transferred ". There is nothing in the section or elsewhere in the Act which in terms compels one to refer to Sch. 1 to the Stamp Act, 1891. The section does not say " was conveyed or transferred by an instrument called a conveyance or transfer in Sch. 1 to the Act of 1891 ". As it seems to me, bearing in mind the meaning of the word " convey " in the ordinary legal sense, the argument of counsel for the respondents requires the ordinary sense of this sentence to be qualified by adding, in effect, the qualification I have mentioned, " conveyed or transferred by an instrument called a conveyance or transfer in Sch. 1 to the Act of 1891 ".

Again, I feel that much elaboration will not be of assistance, but I have been assisted in reaching this conclusion by the reference made to the argument and decision in the Escoigne Properties case (8). A Mr. Cohen had in his lifetime agreed to sell to company A property for a consideration consisting of shares in the company. The shares were allotted to Mr. Cohen, but the property was never conveyed by way of completion of the bargain, and Mr. Cohen died. Thereafter, company A proceeded to agree to transfer the property to company B, which was indubitably an associated company within the meaning of the sections we are debating. The completion of the whole matter took the form of a conveyance by Mr. Cohen's executors to company B, company A joining in as beneficial owner in order to convey or transfer their outstanding beneficial interest. It was contended that the transaction was excluded from duty because it could not be said in that case, inter alia—there were other arguments—that a beneficial interest in the property had been previously conveyed to company A; and the basis of that argument, as appears from the contentions of counsel for the appellants as reported in the case (9), was that there was no conveyance or transfer thereof, properly so called; there was merely an agreement. As I have earlier observed, an agreement, an agreement or contract, a memorandum of agreement, etc.—these are separate headings from conveyance or transfer in Sch. 1 to the Act of 1891.

I find then, at the end of counsel's reported submission (10):

> " As to s. 50 (1) of the Act of 1938, the words ' conveyed or transferred ' should not here be given a different meaning from that which they bear in the whole of the stamp duty legislation. They should be given their literal meaning and not an extended meaning. The words ' directly or indirectly ' do not widen the meaning of the words ' conveyed or transferred '. They merely indicate that a conveyance or transfer is within the section if it is either directly or indirectly the act of such a person as is therein mentioned."

The argument on the other side was that, although there was that agreement, nevertheless there had been a conveyance or transfer of the beneficial interest in the property by virtue of the contract made by Mr. Cohen, and the issue to Mr. Cohen of the share consideration. VISCOUNT SIMONDS said (11):

> " It was, however, urged that the section did not apply, inasmuch as the beneficial interests in question were not previously conveyed or transferred directly or indirectly by a stranger. I lay no stress on the words ' directly or indirectly ', but I cannot avoid the conclusion that, when Mr. Cohen entered into the contract of 1950 and received the consideration therefor, and the beneficial interest in the property accordingly passed to the old company, it was his act by which it passed and it would be too narrow a construction to say that, nevertheless, it was not conveyed or transferred by him."

I get comfort from that opinion, because it seems to me to support the view that the words " conveyed or transferred " in s. 50 of the Act of 1938 should not be given the narrow construction dependent on the strict dichotomy between the

(8) [1958] 1 All E.R. 406; [1958] A.C. 549. (9) [1958] A.C. at p. 552.
(10) [1958] A.C. at p. 555. (11) [1958] 1 All E.R. at p. 411; [1958] A.C. at p. 560.

A two classes of instrument, a conveyance or transfer as defined in Sch. 1 on the one hand, and a lease on the other. The result is that in my judgment both appeals fail.

HARMAN, L.J.: I concur with LORD EVERSHED, M.R., in thinking that both appeal and cross-appeal should be disallowed. The transaction here, which B my Lord has described, struck the mind of at least one reader when he first saw it with astonishment and dismay; it seemed so artificial. Familiarity has bred not contempt but, I hope, an understanding of the process which was gone through in the course of the six documents spread over the days of that week. Whether, as counsel for the Crown hoped, the parties rested the seventh day remains to be seen.

C Now, in stamp duty cases it is the substance of the case which has to be looked at; authority for that is to be found in the observations of LOPES, L.J., in Great Western Ry. Co. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (12). His Lordship says:

> "It is an established rule in cases under the Stamp Acts that the substance of the transaction is alone to be looked at in determining the question whether an instrument is liable to stamp duty."

D Here, there is no doubt, there must have been an arrangement or agreement between the parties, viz., the respondents and the lessors, which preceded its working out by counsel. For some reason which I do not appreciate the respondents were most unwilling to disclose what this arrangement was. Counsel must have been instructed to bring about the result or he could not have set to work. The method of bringing it about was his invention and the six deeds, or rather E the first four of them, were merely machinery ingeniously invented by him for doing that as inexpensively as possible—a perfectly legitimate device.

What then, in substance, was the arrangement? The lessors had a freehold, saddled with a long lease, having eighty years to run, at a rent which, if it ever had been a rack rent, had long fallen far below it. They were anxious to obtain a rack rent and willing to pay for it by accepting a much shorter term of F years, and giving up the freehold reversion. On their side the respondents were anxious for their own purposes to obtain the freehold and willing to pay for it in the form of a greatly increased yearly rent for a shorter period. The method adopted brought about the desired result. The question for this court is what stamp duty did the several documents so doing involve.

Controversy, so far as this appeal is concerned, centres round No. 4, the G so-called deed of exchange. By this time, Thursday morning, the position was that the respondents' wholly owned subsidiary company held the property as lessee of the lessors for a term of twenty-two years ten days at a nominal rent, and had created an underlease in favour of the respondents for a term of twenty-two years, at a rent of £44,000 odd. The original ninety-nine years' lease had vanished by operation of law on the Monday.

H By Thursday's document the subsidiary company assigned the lease to the lessors with the benefit of the underlease, and in return the lessors transferred the freehold reversion to the subsidiary company. This is said by the Crown to be a conveyance on sale by the lessors. Certainly it does not look like one. A sale prima facie is a transfer for money. For that purpose I quote from BENJAMIN ON SALE (8th Edn., at p. 2) of which one of the editors is FINNEMORE, J. I The sidenote is this:

> "Bargain and sale defined: By the common law a sale of personal property was usually termed a 'bargain and sale of goods'. It may be defined to be a transfer of the absolute or general property in a thing for a price in money. Hence it follows that to constitute a valid sale, there must be a concurrence of the following elements, viz.: (1) parties competent to contract; (2) mutual assent; (3) a thing, the absolute or general property in which is transferred from the seller to the buyer; and (d) a price in money paid or promised." A

(12) [1894] 1 Q.B. at p. 513.

For Stamp Act purposes this meaning is no doubt extended in three respects, viz., by s. 6, to foreign currencies which are a commodity in this country; by s. 55, which deals with stock or securities, and by s. 57 in the case where the consideration is the forgiveness of a debt. But none of these is applicable here. I accept the argument that the proper meaning of the word ought not to be extended further without some very cogent reason. This document is in a popular sense of that word an exchange. There is much to be said for the view that it does not come within the meaning of that expression in Sch. 1 to the Act of 1891, but it is not necessary to decide that point. All we need to decide is that it is not a conveyance on sale within the definition in s. 54 of the Act and in Sch. 1. B

Again, the Crown calculated the amount of duty on the wording of s. 56 (2) of the Act, which of course depends on the document being a conveyance on sale, but it does produce what is admittedly an amount very far in excess of the true consideration, when one considers the transaction as a whole. The respondents had at an earlier stage, on the Monday, given up a leasehold term (the original ninety-nine years' lease) of which the rent was about half the rack rent. The Crown would have us treat the document as a sale of the freehold for twenty-two yearly instalments of purchase-money. Neither party contemplated any such thing, nor does the machinery carry out the arrangement in that way. In my judgment this was not a conveyance on sale. C D

The cross-appeal raises a separate point. By Tuesday's deed the respondents assigned the lease created in their favour on Monday to the subsidiary company without consideration. If executed between 1910 and 1930, this deed would have attracted voluntary disposition duty created by s. 74 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, the duty being equal to that on a conveyance on sale. The value was agreed at £400,000, and the duty would, therefore, have been £8,000. This duty was abolished by the Finance Act, 1930, in cases of transfers between associated companies. This exemption was abused, however, and was by the Finance Act, 1938, withdrawn in cases where someone outside the ring had supplied the subject-matter. E F

Here the lessors were outsiders, and had by Monday's lease done that very thing, so that at first sight the exemption would not seem to apply. However, the respondents take the point that the 1938 section only applies where there has been a conveyance by the other side, and that this word does not apply to the creation of a lease. If this be so, it is a casus omissus from the Act, for Parliament cannot have intended this section to be avoided by so simple an expedient as the creation of a long term of years instead of an assurance of the freehold. The judge decided that a lease was a conveyance within the meaning of the section, and in my judgment he is right. It was conceded that in ordinary parlance a lease is a conveyance, and that this is also true in general in legal parlance. I feel no doubt that this concession was inevitable. BLACKSTONE'S COMMENTARIES, for instance, has the passage cited by LORD EVERSHED, M.R., and appearing at p. 316 of my edition of that work, and the definitions in the Conveyancing Act, 1881, and the Law of Property Act, 1925, confirm it. G H

It was argued, however, that in matters connected with the Stamp Acts this is not so, and I confess that the argument is attractive. In the Act of 1891 and Sch. 1, lease and conveyance are carefully distinguished, and it was said that the success of the Crown's claim would mean that, notwithstanding this, every lease would be stampable with conveyance duty. The Act of 1930 is to be read with the Act of 1891, and, though this is not true of the Act of 1938, s. 50 is dealing with matter in pari materia, and words in it ought, therefore, so runs the argument, to be construed in the same way. This has the authority of LORD MANSFIELD, quoted in Goldsmiths' Co. v. Wyatt (13). In his judgment in that case FARWELL, L.J., cites this (14): I

(13) [1907] 1 K.B. 95. (14) [1907] 1 K.B. at p. 105.

A "LORD MANSFIELD (15) says: 'Where there are different statutes in pari materia, though made at different times or even expired and not referring to each other, they shall be taken and construed together as one system and as explanatory of each other.'"

Nevertheless, this must not be carried too far, and a reminder of that was given by LORD SIMONDS in his speech in Fendoch Investment Trust Co. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (16). It is true that that was an income tax case, but the words, I think, are general. LORD SIMONDS said (17):

B

"My Lords, I do not doubt that in construing the latest of a series of Acts dealing with a specific subject-matter, particularly where all such Acts are to be read as one, great weight should be attached to any scheme which can be seen in clear outline and amendments in later Acts should if possible be construed consistently with that scheme. But this is a principle which can easily be pressed too far in the consideration of a body of legislation such as that now under review . . ."

C

Therefore I think that one must take the principle with a pinch of salt when a long series of Acts of this sort is being dealt with. In my judgment the word "conveyance" here used in s. 50 of the Act of 1938, ought to be given its ordinary meaning. It seems to me that this is necessary in order to give its proper effect to the object of the statute, which was only to allow the exemption to continue where no outsider had a finger in the pie. I would therefore dismiss the cross-appeal.

D

E

DONOVAN, L.J.: I agree with both judgments, and have only two observations to add. Whether a document is a conveyance on sale or not raises a question of fact as well as of law, viz., is property being transferred to or vested in a purchaser on the occasion of a sale? The commissioners' legitimate request for full information as to the genesis of these transactions therefore involved no departure from the rule that documents are stamped, and not transactions. I think that the solicitors here concerned were unnecessarily coy when pressed to say how the whole thing began. If the parties started with the idea of a sale, and then dropped it in favour of some different scheme involving less stamp duty, there was no reason why they should not say so.

F

As to the cross-appeal of the respondents, while it is true that, for the purposes of stamping, conveyances are distinguished from leases in the Stamp Act, it does not follow that this distinction, unless expressly excluded, must be read into all future legislation on stamp duty. HARMAN, L.J., has just referred to the cautionary observations of LORD SIMONDS on a cognate point in Fendoch Investments Trust Co. v. Inland Revenue Comrs. (17). Parliament, in s. 50 of the Finance Act, 1938, had the clear object of withholding exemption where, pursuant to some arrangement, the property came from a source outside the associated companies. As I view the matter, the court should endeavour to give effect to that intention unless the language of the section is too recalcitrant for the purpose. So far from that being the situation, the language is wholly apt to cover the present case, unless the segregation of leases from conveyances in the Act of 1891 is to be imported into the Act of 1938. For this I see no reason, and therefore no justification.

G

H

I

Appeal and cross-appeal dismissed. Leave to appeal to the House of Lords granted to both parties.

Solicitors: Solicitor of Inland Revenue (for the Crown); Jaques & Co., agents for North, Kirk & Co., Liverpool (for the respondents).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

---

(15) In R. v. Loxdale, (1758), 1 Burr. at p. 447.
(16) [1945] 2 All E.R. 140; 27 Tax Cas. 53.
(17) [1945] 2 All E.R. at p. 144; 27 Tax Cas. at p. 68.

BUNCOMBE (VALUATION OFFICER) v. BALTIC SAWMILLS CO., LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Sellers, Devlin and Danckwerts, L.JJ.), June 22, 23, 1961.]

Rates—De-rating—Industrial hereditament—Adapting for sale—Timber—Natural drying of timber—Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (1 Edw. 7 c. 22), s. 149 (1)—Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928 (18 & 19 Geo. 5 c. 44), s. 3 (1).

Timber brought to two timber stores was stacked with slats in between the boards as they lay on top of one another so as to allow a free flow of air. The stacking required skill and experience. After the timber had remained stacked for about three months its moisture content was reduced from that of "green wood", thirty per cent., to that of British Standards Specification, twenty-two per cent., at which retail sales normally took place.

Held: the timber stores were not industrial hereditaments within the meaning of s. 3 (1) of the Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928, because they were used merely for storage (and thus were within the exception enacted in proviso (d)* to s. 3 (1)) and because, no one being employed in drying the timber, no manual labour was exercised in any adapting of the timber for sale, so that the premises were not a factory or workshop within the meaning of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, s. 149† and s. 3 (1) of the Act of 1928.

Poplar Revenue Officer v. William Mallison & Son, Ltd. ((1931), 2 D.R.A. 242) distinguished.

Appeal allowed.

[As to the meaning of "adapting for sale" in the definition of a factory or workshop constituting an industrial hereditament for rating purposes, see 32 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 141, para. 189; and for cases on the subject, see 38 DIGEST (Repl.) 514-519, 242-271.

For the Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928, s. 3 (1), and the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, s. 149 (1), see 20 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 176, 180.]

Cases referred to:

Edwards v. Bairstow, [1955] 3 All E.R. 48; [1956] A.C. 14; 36 Tax Cas. 207; [1955] 3 W.L.R. 410; 28 Digest (Repl.) 397, 1753.

Lanarkshire Assessor v. Jeffray's Trustees, 1935 S.C. 381; 38 Digest (Repl.) 519, 254.

Poplar Revenue Officer v. William Mallison & Son, Ltd., (1931), 2 D.R.A. 242.

Cases Stated.

The ratepayers were the owners and occupiers of two hereditaments comprising "Timber stores and premises, Goods Station Yard, Tunbridge Wells", and "Timber stores and appurtenances, Goods Station Road, Tunbridge Wells", assessed respectively at £100 net annual value, £25 rateable value and £90 net annual value, £22 rateable value, in Part II of the valuation list for Tunbridge Wells Borough under decisions of a local valuation court of Central Kent Local Valuation Panel on proposals made by the ratepayers on Oct. 3, 1956. On May 11, 1960, the Lands Tribunal (SIR WILLIAM FITZGERALD, Q.C., President)

* Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928, s. 3 (1) provides, so far as material—"In this Act the expression 'industrial hereditament' means a hereditament . . . occupied and used . . . as a factory or workshop: Provided that the expression . . . does not include a hereditament . . . primarily occupied and used for . . . (d) purposes of storage . . ."

† By s. 149 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, whose definition of factory is made applicable by s. 3 (2) (b) of the Act of 1928, the expression "factory" for present purposes means—". . . (c) any premises wherein . . . any manual labour is exercised by way of trade or for purposes of gain in or incidental to . . . (iii) the adapting for sale of any article . . ."

A dismissed the valuation officer's appeals against those decisions ((1960), 7 R.R.C. 279). The valuation officer appealed by way of Case Stated to the Court of Appeal. He contended, inter alia, (i) that on the facts found by it the Lands Tribunal was wrong in law in deciding that the hereditaments were industrial hereditaments within s. 3 (1) of the Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928; (ii) that neither hereditament was a factory or workshop within B s. 3 (1) of the Act, the timber in neither hereditament being altered or adapted for sale within s. 149 (1) of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901; and (iii) that such manual labour as was exercised on the hereditaments was not exercised in or incidental to the altering or adapting for sale if there was an altering or adapting for sale of the timber or was in any event so trifling as not to come within s. 149 (1) of the Act of 1901.

C W. L. Roots, Q.C., and J. R. Phillips for the valuation officer.
C. E. Scholefield, Q.C., and D. G. H. Frank for the ratepayers.

SELLERS, L.J.: This is the valuation officer's appeal against a decision of the Lands Tribunal in respect of two hereditaments in Tunbridge Wells described as " Timber stores and premises, Goods Station Yard " and " Timber D stores and appurtenances, Goods Station Road ". The Lands Tribunal, upholding the local valuation court, held that they were both industrial hereditaments and as such were entitled to be de-rated: i.e., that they are within s. 3 (1) of the Rating and Valuation (Apportionment) Act, 1928.

Both the premises are similarly used for the reception of timber used by the respondent ratepayers for their business of timber importers and merchants. E About half of the timber imported goes to some saw-mills belonging to the ratepayers; the remainder is brought by lorries to these premises and is stacked in sheds. The only question is whether the learned President of the Lands Tribunal was entitled on the evidence before him to hold that what took place on these premises amounted to an adaptation of the timber for sale. If so, the decision was correct, because manual labour was exercised there by way of F trade or for purposes of gain, and if there were an adaptation for sale the labour would have been engaged in or incidental to the process and the requirements of s. 149 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, retained for the purpose of the Act of 1928 by s. 159 (3) of the Factories Act, 1937, would have been fulfilled.

When the timber arrives from Scandinavia or elsewhere, so far as the timber G which comes to these two hereditaments is concerned, it is described as " green wood ", containing about thirty per cent. of moisture, which is described as " shipping dry ". In that state it is not properly fit to sell to the building trade for their purposes. The British Standards Specification of moisture content is twenty-two per cent., and retail sales, it seems, were normally made on that basis. Now all that takes place on the premises is that, when it has arrived, H the timber is stacked, and, as it has to dry out, it is stacked with slats in between the boards as they lie on top of one another so as to allow a free flow of air. The stacking requires some skill and some experience, so as to ensure good ventilation, and to assist the ventilation at least one side of the stacking area has a lattice work instead of a solid wall. After the incoming timber has been so stored for about three months, its moisture content is reduced to about I twenty-two per cent.

In my view, the two hereditaments are clearly places where timber is stored or kept, and, facilitated by the slats placed in the stacks, the timber at the same time dries out somewhat. The ratepayers do not dry it; they stack it in such a way that it dries itself. I cannot regard this as an industrial process of any kind, even a very limited one; and no man can properly be said to be employed in drying the timber. The men stow it; they do not dry it. Premises which are used wholly or mainly for storage are not subject to de-rating. That is provided for by s. 3 (1) proviso (d) of the Rating and Valuation (Apportionment)

Act, 1928. I would hold these premises to be so used. That seems to me to be the right conclusion of law on the facts found in the Case. A

It has been urged before this court that the decision in the tribunal is a question of fact—albeit, as the decision states, a "border-line" case—and, that being so, this court ought not to interfere with the finding. I think that there is no evidence that there is any "adapting" by the ratepayers of the timber for sale and therefore the decision would be erroneous in point of law. But, if that is too sweeping a conclusion, the decision in my view cannot stand, applying LORD RADCLIFFE's approach in Edwards v. Bairstow (1), which was a tax case. LORD RADCLIFFE said (2): B

> "When the case comes before the court, it is its duty to examine the determination having regard to its knowledge of the relevant law. If the Case contains anything ex facie which is bad law and which bears on the determination, it is, obviously, erroneous in point of law. But, without any such misconception appearing ex facie, it may be that the facts found are such that no person acting judicially and properly instructed as to the relevant law could have come to the determination under appeal. In those circumstances, too, the court must intervene. It has no option but to assume that there has been some misconception of the law, and that this has been responsible for the determination. So there, too, there has been error in point of law." C D

The learned President reached his decision, as he said, not without some hesitation, and sought to apply Poplar Revenue Officer v. William Mallison & Son, Ltd. (3). It may be (as was submitted on behalf of the valuation officer) that the learned President misdirected himself on this authority. I would regard the case rather in the opposite way as showing the distinction between the case which the court had to decide and the present case, because it emerged in the course of the hearing (during which the court apparently altered its preliminary view) that there was not mere storage (as was submitted on behalf of the revenue officer there), but that in the circumstances of that case and of those occupiers a particular hereditament was set aside for the special treatment of the timber. There were storage and distribution depots belonging to the occupiers, but the particular hereditament under consideration was a special area to which the timber was sent for drying and where there were kilns which provided steam and hot air for that purpose. It was held that, but for the existence of the drying chambers, the occupiers would not have used or occupied the hereditament. The court came to the conclusion that that particular hereditament, used for that special purpose, was de-rateable. LORD HEWART, C.J., said (4): E F G

> "There was some alteration or adaptation in the intimate nature of the wood itself; and I think it matters not, even if it be true, as is not established, that given a longer period of time a similar alteration would be brought about by the processes of nature, assisted perhaps by a slight artifice." H

I apprehend that there he had in mind just what was taking place here and, as I understand it, he said that mattered not. In the particular case which the court was considering there was this special treatment of the timber, even if the other form of stacking, with such "slight artifice" in the way of ventilation, were not in the same category, not entitling the premises to be de-rated, as these premises were. I think that view of the matter is to be derived from the argument of counsel for the occupiers, who was well versed in this branch of the law, and his argument (5) seems to accept that the mere drying of timber I

(1) [1955] 3 All E.R. 48; [1956] A.C. 14.
(2) [1955] 3 All E.R. at p. 57; [1956] A.C. at p. 36. (3) (1931), 2 D.R.A. 242.
(4) (1931), 2 D.R.A. at p. 245. (5) See (1931), 2 D.R.A. at p. 244.

A in the ordinary sense would not have been sufficient to de-rate those particular premises.

Several Scottish cases were also cited, and I think they all support the valuation officer's argument, although junior counsel for the ratepayers sought to show that there were some different features in some of them. In particular, although I do not quote the words, the observations of LORD PITMAN in B Lanarkshire Assessor v. Jeffray's Trustees (6) are very much in point and apt for the present case. For these reasons I think this appeal must be allowed.

DEVLIN, L.J.: I agree. Although we are differing from the decision of the learned President of the Lands Tribunal, I do not think this is a case in which an additional judgment from myself would be of any value. The point C is a short one and the learned President regarded it as a "border-line" case; the judgment of SELLERS, L.J., expresses entirely my conclusions on it.

DANCKWERTS, L.J.: I agree. With all respect to the President of the Lands Tribunal, it seems to me that it was not really a "border-line" case, as he described it, but a very clear case. He seems to have misled himself by a misreading of Poplar Revenue Officer v. William Mallison & Son, Ltd. (7), D which also involved a timber yard but in which some artificial process for the purpose of drying the timber was used by means of steam and heat. In the present case it seems to me that on the evidence the timber was stacked for storage and it was during the process of storage that the wind did the work of drying the timber. In other words, it was the wind and not the workmen that effected any change in the nature of the timber. I agree that the appeal E should be allowed.

Appeal allowed. Leave to appeal to the House of Lords refused.

Order that the appeal of the valuation officer be allowed with costs in this court and with costs in the Lands Tribunal on scale 3 of the county court scale of costs, with discretion as to counsel's fees; that the question asked in the Case Stated be answered F in the negative; declare that the hereditaments the subject of these appeals should be entered in Part I of the valuation list with respectively the figures set out in the Case Stated; and order that the case be remitted to the Lands Tribunal accordingly, with liberty to apply.

Solicitors: Solicitor of Inland Revenue (for the valuation officer); Stone, Simpson & Hanson, Tunbridge Wells (for the ratepayers).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

---

(6) 1935 S.C. at p. 386.

(7) (1931), 2 D.R.A. 242.

A Re BAKER (Infants).

[COURT OF APPEAL (Ormerod, Upjohn and Pearson, L.JJ.), May 30, 31, June 1, July 14, 1961.]

Education—School attendance—Enforcement—Remedies—Wardship proceedings—Mother's refusal to send children to school—Local education authority's proceedings—Two convictions unavailing—Application to have children made wards of court—Directions sought as to their education—Chancery court's jurisdiction—Education Act, 1944 (7 & 8 Geo. 6 c. 31), s. 36, s. 37, s. 40 (2)—Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949 (12, 13 & 14 Geo. 6 c. 100), s. 9.

B

Notwithstanding school attendance orders followed by prosecutions and two fines, the mother of seven children, who was separated from the father, refused to send three of the children of compulsory school age to school; and in consequence they were not receiving efficient full-time education as required by s. 36 of the Education Act, 1944. The local education authority applied to the Chancery Division of the High Court under s. 9 of the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949, for the three children to be made wards of court and for directions as to their education.

C

D

Held: although the court had jurisdiction to continue the wardship of the children, the court would not do so in the present case for the following reasons—

(i) (per ORMEROD, L.J.; PEARSON, L.J., concurring), the prerogative of the Crown in relation to infants had been restricted in that it might no longer be exercised in relation to the particular matters placed by the Education Act, 1944, within the ambit of the local education authority's discretion and powers (see p. 281, letter C, and p. 284, letter H, post).

E

(ii) (per UPJOHN and PEARSON, L.JJ.), the Education Act, 1944, had established a comprehensive code which it was the duty of local education authorities to carry out, and it would not be proper for the court to exercise wardship jurisdiction solely to assist a local education authority in the enforcement of their statutory functions, or, in the absence of special circumstances, to exercise the court's discretionary control over a ward in a sphere of activity which had been entrusted by statute to a local education authority (see p. 283, letter I, p. 284, letter D, and p. 286, letter F, post).

F

(iii) (per ORMEROD and PEARSON, L.JJ.), moreover the remedy provided by the statute had not been fully used (see p. 282, letter A, and p. 287, letter G, post).

G

Re M. (an infant) ([1961] 1 All E.R. 788) applied.

Decision of PENNYCUICK, J. ([1961] 2 All E.R. 250) affirmed.

[As to statutory duty to receive education, see 13 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 555 et seq., paras. 1181 et seq.; and for cases on the subject, see 19 DIGEST 564 et seq. 61 et seq.

H

For the Education Act, 1944, s. 36, s. 37, s. 40, see 8 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 181, 182, 184; and for the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949, s. 9, see 28 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 777.]

Cases referred to:

A. B. (an infant), Re, [1954] 2 All E.R. 287; [1954] 2 Q.B. 385; 118 J.P. 318; [1954] 3 W.L.R. 1; 28 Digest (Repl.) 726, 2326.

I

A.-G. v. De Keyser's Royal Hotel, Ltd., [1920] All E.R. Rep. 80; [1920] A.C. 508; 89 L.J. Ch. 417; 122 L.T. 691; 17 Digest (Repl.) 437, 91.

Carltona, Ltd. v. Works Comrs., [1943] 2 All E.R. 560; 17 Digest (Repl.) 441, 119.

M. (an infant), Re, [1961] 1 All E.R. 788; [1961] Ch. 328; [1961] 2 W.L.R. 350.

Point of Ayr Collieries, Ltd. v. Lloyd-George, [1943] 2 All E.R. 546; 17 Digest (Repl.) 480, 278.

A R. v. Gyngall, [1893] 2 Q.B. 232; sub nom. Re Gyngall, 62 L.J.Q.B. 559; 57 J.P. 773; sub nom. R. v. Gyngall, Re Hausherr (otherwise Austen), 69 L.T. 481; 28 Digest (Repl.) 485, 25.

Appeal.

The appellant local education authority, Norfolk County Council, applied by originating summons dated May 9, 1960, under s. 9 of the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949, for an order that three infants, Robin, Felicity and Wendy Baker, of compulsory school age, be made wards of court and that directions be given as to their education. The respondents were Mrs. Joy Elizabeth Baker, the mother of the infants, and Mr. Peter Shaw Baker, the father who was separated from the mother. On Mar. 15, 1961, PENNYCUICK, J., dismissed the local education authority's application (reported [1961] 2 All E.R. 250), holding that the Chancery court should not make an order seeking only directions as to education, jurisdiction in which was vested by statute in the authority. The local education authority appealed to the Court of Appeal.

Charles Sparrow for the local education authority (Norfolk County Council).
Arthur Bagnall, Q.C., for the mother.
T. A. C. Burgess for the father.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 14. The following judgments were read.

ORMEROD, L.J.: This appeal is against a decision of PENNYCUICK, J., dated Mar. 15, 1961, refusing to continue an order that the children of Mrs. Baker, one of the respondents, should be wards of court. As the case stems from the persistent failure of Mrs. Baker to provide for her children, or such of her children as are of compulsory school age, efficient full-time education suitable to the age, ability and aptitude of those children either by regular attendance at school or otherwise, it is essential that I should refer to the relevant sections of the Education Act, 1944. Section 36 of the Act, which states the duty of the parent, is as follows:

> "It shall be the duty of the parent of every child of compulsory school age to cause him to receive efficient full-time education suitable to his age, ability, and aptitude, either by regular attendance at school or otherwise."

Section 37 then sets out the duty of the local authority in cases where it appears to them that a child is not receiving the efficient full-time education prescribed by s. 36, and is as follows:

> "(1) If it appears to a local education authority that the parent of any child of compulsory school age in their area is failing to perform the duty imposed on him by the last foregoing section, it shall be the duty of the authority to serve upon the parent a notice requiring him, within such time as may be specified in the notice not being less than fourteen days from the service thereof, to satisfy the authority that the child is receiving efficient full-time education suitable to his age, ability, and aptitude either by regular attendance at school or otherwise.
>
> "(2) If, after such a notice has been served upon a parent by a local education authority, the parent fails to satisfy the authority in accordance with the requirements of the notice that the child to whom the notice relates is receiving efficient full-time education suitable to his age, ability, and aptitude, then, if in the opinion of the authority it is expedient that he should attend school, the authority shall serve upon the parent an order in the prescribed form (hereinafter referred to as a 'school attendance order') requiring him to cause the child to become a registered pupil at a school named in the order. Provided that before serving such an order upon a parent the authority shall, where practicable, afford him an opportunity of selecting the school to be named in the order and, if a school is selected by him, that school shall, unless the minister otherwise directs, be the school named in the order."

Section 40 provides for the method of enforcing an order for school attendance, and prescribes an ascending scale of fines, and, on the third or any subsequent offence, the amount of the fine is not to exceed £10 or imprisonment for a term not exceeding one month or both such fine and such imprisonment. The section is as follows:

"(1) Subject to the provisions of this section, any person guilty of an offence against s. 37 or s. 39 of this Act shall be liable on summary conviction, in the case of a first offence against that section to a fine not exceeding £1, in the case of a second offence against that section to a fine not exceeding £5, and in the case of a third or subsequent offence against that section to a fine not exceeding £10 or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding one month or to both such fine and such imprisonment.

"(2) It shall be the duty of the local education authority to institute proceedings for such offences as aforesaid wherever, in their opinion, the institution of such proceedings is necessary for the purpose of enforcing the duty imposed upon a parent by this Act to cause his child to receive efficient full-time education suitable to his age, ability, and aptitude, and no such proceedings shall be instituted except by or on behalf of a local education authority (1)."

It should be noted, for it is important, that it may be the duty of the local education authority to institute proceedings for offences such as the breaches by the parent of the provisions of s. 37. It remains only, I think, to refer to the definition of "parent" contained in the definition section of the Act, which is s. 114 (1) and which provides as follows:

"'Parent', in relation to any child or young person, includes a guardian and every person who has the actual custody of the child or young person."

The facts in this case, so far as they are relevant, are as follows. Mr. and Mrs. Baker, the parents of the children in question, lived at all material times on a farm in Norfolk until November, 1953, when they separated. Mr. Baker went away and Mrs. Baker remained at the farm with the children. There are seven in all, but in this appeal we are concerned with three only, as they are the only ones of compulsory school age, and they are Robin, Felicity and Wendy, who are aged fourteen, thirteen and twelve years respectively. There appears to be no doubt that Mrs. Baker has persistently refused to allow any of her children to attend school. She has contended that by her own methods she is educating the children, and they are receiving at home an efficient full-time education. She has referred in her evidence in one or other of the numerous cases which have been before the courts to the fact that she was giving to the children the "light and warmth of a natural education", and she spoke of schools sometimes as a form of imprisonment and at other times as a zoo. Be that as it may, the local authority, as was their right, and indeed as was their duty, came to the conclusion, after investigating the matter, that Mrs. Baker was not affording to the three children named an efficient education as required by the Education Act, 1944, and, in those circumstances, conceived it their duty to take such steps as they could to ensure that the children received the prescribed education. It is no part of the duty of this court to comment on the behaviour of Mrs. Baker, or to remark as to the correctness or otherwise of the decision taken by the local education authority, but it should be noted that the judicial bodies concerned with the attendance orders, that is to say, the magistrates, and, in due course, quarter sessions, have each in their turn confirmed the view of the local education

(1) Subsection (2) is now amended by the Education (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1948, s. 11 and Sch. 1, Part 1.

A authority that these children were not receiving a proper, or indeed any, education, and, although Mrs. Baker has insisted that she is bringing the children up in such a way that they will get the benefit of a natural education, the fact remains that they are learning very little as education is understood at the present time, and they are associating little if at all with other children of their own age, and indeed that they are doing a great deal of the housework and work about the B farm and land where they live.

In May, 1955, a summons was issued against Mrs. Baker in the local magistrates' court, and she was convicted of the breach of an attendance order served on her by the local education authority, but in July, 1955, that conviction was quashed by quarter sessions on the ground that the preliminaries to the order had not been carried out in accordance with the provisions of the statute. Nothing was C done after that until May 16, 1957, when attendance notices were served on Mrs. Baker in accordance with s. 37 (1) of the Act of 1944, and, as they were not complied with, on July 19 attendance orders were served. Mrs. Baker in turn failed to comply with these orders, and, on Nov. 15, 1957, she was convicted again by the magistrates. She appealed on May 16, 1958, to quarter sessions, but that appeal was dismissed. On Nov. 28, 1958, Mrs. Baker was again convicted D for a similar breach of the orders in question, and, on Feb. 10, 1959, appealed to quarter sessions, when her appeal was dismissed, but she then appealed to the Divisional Court. The appeal was heard on Feb. 5, 1960, and was dismissed. It is worth noting that LORD PARKER, C.J., in giving judgment in the Divisional Court, read from the Case Stated by quarter sessions this finding of fact:

E "Having considered the evidence, observed the children and heard the appellant's argument, we found as a fact that the appellant had failed at all material times to cause any of the said children to receive efficient full-time education suitable to their age, abilities and aptitude otherwise than at school."

On May 9, 1960, the local education authority took out an originating summons F under s. 9 of the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949, and the effect of that summons was that the children automatically became wards of court until such time as the matter was heard by the learned judge. It is conceded that the only purpose of the local education authority in taking out this originating summons was to enforce the orders which in their discretion they deemed it proper, and indeed their duty, to make, and no allegation of any kind G has at any time been made that these children are not being properly cared for other than that the parents have neglected their duties under the Education Act, 1944.

The matter came before PENNYCUICK, J., who made the order appealed from on Mar. 15, 1961. In his judgment he says (2):

H "I should like to make it clear that I do not intend to express the slightest agreement with the mother's views on the education of children in general, or of her own children in particular. Equally, I do not intend to express the slightest disagreement with the views expressed by the Norfolk justices or the Queen's Bench Divisional Court. On the contrary, I too have come to the clear conclusion that the mother is not causing her children to receive efficient full-time education as required by the Act."

I It would appear, therefore, that, not only the magistrates and the court of quarter sessions and the Divisional Court, but also PENNYCUICK, J., on hearing the originating summons formed the view that such education as was being provided by Mrs. Baker was not in accordance with the statutory provisions. Having set out the various statutory provisions and their arguments, PENNYCUICK, J., said (3):

---

(2) [1961] 2 All E.R. at p. 256; [1961] Ch. at p. 311.
(3) [1961] 2 All E.R. at p. 254; [1961] Ch. at p. 307.

"It seems to me necessarily to follow that the court cannot properly give a direction where the decision whether the act is to be done rests with some other authority, so that the court is not itself able to decide whether or not the act is for the benefit of the infant,"

PENNYCUICK, J., as I have said, refused to continue the wardship in the circumstances. As I understand his judgment, the ground of his refusal was that the only matter on which the Chancery court was being asked to exercise its jurisdiction was the question of the education of the children, with regard to which statutory provision had already been made by the Education Act, 1944, and by previous statutes. He felt, therefore, that no useful purpose would be served in continuing the wardship, as clearly, in his view, the court could not make orders which might conflict with orders made by the local education authority in the exercise of a discretion vested in them by the Act of Parliament.

The learned judge derived assistance on this question from Re M. (an infant) (4). That was a case in which the circumstances were very far removed from the circumstances in this case, and indeed the order which had been made by the local authority was under an entirely different Act of Parliament. None the less, the principle, as enunciated by LORD EVERSHED, M.R., when the case came before this court, does appear to apply in any case where it is sought to make children wards of court in order to assist in the enforcement of some statutory duty placed on a local authority or indeed any other body or person. The Master of the Rolls, towards the end of his judgment in this court, said (5):

"It may perhaps be useful for me to add by way of summary the following:

"(i) The prerogative right of the Queen as parens patriae in relation to infants within the realm is not for all purposes ousted or abrogated as the result of the exercise of the duties and powers by local authorities under the Children Act, 1948: in particular the power to make an infant a ward of court by invocation of s. 9 of the [Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949] is unaffected.

"(ii) But even where a child is made a ward of court by virtue of the Act of 1949, the judge in whom the prerogative power is vested will, acting on familiar principles, not exercise control in relation to duties or discretions clearly vested by statute in the local authority, and may, therefore, and in a case such as the present normally will, order that the child cease to be a ward of court. This result will occasion no surprise to those familiar with wardship proceedings, for in many cases where infants are made wards of court, the directions of the court are sought only on particular matters, such, e.g., as the place of education or to control the activities of the infant in relation to marriage or undesirable associations where a united parental control had failed; in such cases the court makes no order as to the custody, care or maintenance, for that remains in the hands of unimpeachable parents and the court does not interfere in relation to such matters.

"(iii) There remains the right (and duty) of the judge in whom the prerogative power is vested, to control the activities of a local authority in cases where the local authority is shown to be acting in some way in breach or in disregard of its statutory duties."

I should say here that No. (iii) of the above summary is not relevant in this case as it has not been suggested by anyone that the local authority have been acting in some way in breach or in disregard of their statutory duties, but it has been included in the judgment of the learned judge, and for completeness should, I think, be cited here.

---

(4) [1961] 1 All E.R. 788; [1961] Ch. 328.
(5) [1961] 1 All E.R. at p. 795; [1961] Ch. at p. 345.

A In the result the position would appear to be that the Education Act, 1944, provides for the education of children of compulsory school age, and it is enacted that it is the duty of the local education authority to satisfy themselves that such children are being properly educated, and, if in the view of the authority they are not being so educated, it is then the duty of the authority to see that they are and to take such steps as are prescribed by the Act of Parliament B to attain that end. It would appear, therefore, that there is a discretion in the local education authority which they must exercise in accordance with the terms of the statute; and there is also a duty laid on them by s. 40 (2) of the Act of 1944 to take steps prescribed in that section in the circumstances therein laid down, if in their view there is a breach of any order made by them. It follows that in such circumstances an anomalous situation might very easily be created C if the court, for instance, were asked to give directions relating to the education of one or other of those children which were inconsistent with the orders made by the local education authority. It seems, therefore, that the second of the principles laid down by the Master of the Rolls in Re M. (an infant) (6) applies in this case, and that the prerogative of the Crown has been limited by the statute in that it may no longer be exercised in relation to the particular matters dealt D with by the Education Act, 1944. This power has now been vested in the local education authority and to be within the ambit of the powers of the local authority and also of the Crown in proceedings of this kind might, as I have already said, result in many anomalies. The position is, therefore, that the jurisdiction of the Crown in relation to the matters vested in the local education authority should not be exercised in these circumstances. The judge recognised that this was the E position and consequently refused to continue the order of wardship.

The local authority, or indeed any other body or individual, may make an application by way of originating summons under s. 9 of the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949, seeking to have one or more of these children made wards of court. But the order will be an empty one, if, as in this case, the only matter on which directions are sought is the matter of education. In this F case there seems to be no ground left on which the Crown could properly make orders either similar to or contrary to orders already made. If this be right, it means that no court in the proper exercise of its discretion would make or continue a wardship order for the reason that there is nothing left for the court to do. It is a well-established principle to which attention has been drawn by the Master of the Rolls in Re M. (an infant) (7) that, where parental control is such as not to G call for complaint, there is no reason why the court should interfere. If the judge has not exercised his discretion to continue the wardship, then it is open to this court to do so and say whether in the circumstances the order of wardship should be continued. For the reasons which I have given, I think that it most certainly should not be, and, although I have every sympathy with the local education authority in the difficulty in which they have been placed, it does not appear H as a matter of law that the proceedings which they have started in the Chancery court are likely to be of assistance to them.

There is one matter to which I think that I should draw attention. Section 40 (1) of the Act of 1944, as I have already pointed out, provides for certain punishments to be administered by the magistrates in the event of a breach of an order made by the education authority. In this case the parent has been sum- I moned before the magistrates twice, and in each case penalties little more than nominal have been inflicted, which may of course have been perfectly proper in the circumstances. The Act does provide, however, that, on a third summons for neglect to obey an order, the magistrates may inflict a penalty of a maximum fine of £10 or imprisonment for not more than one month or both, according to the circumstances of the case. No third summons has been issued in this case in a magistrates' court. It is impossible, therefore, to say how the mother would behave if she were threatened with a sentence of imprisonment. That may not be a matter of any great importance, but it is some indication of the way in which a court should exercise its discretion in deciding whether a wardship order should be continued. If there is another remedy available with a sanction which would appear on the face of it to be similar to the sanction within the power of the Court of Chancery, it is difficult to see why the discretion of the court should be exercised in any other way than by putting an end to the wardship. In these circumstances I would dismiss this appeal.

(6) [1961] 1 All E.R. at p. 795; [1961] Ch. at p. 345.
(7) [1961] 1 All E.R. 788; [1961] Ch. 328.

UPJOHN, L.J.: I agree that this appeal fails. I do so with the greatest regret because it is clear, on the evidence adduced before the learned judge, which has been read to us, that the unfortunate infants, the subjects of this appeal, are not receiving any education in a true sense of the word to enable them to take their proper place in the community when they are older. Though the appeal fails, I have no criticism to make of the local education authority for endeavouring to invoke, for the first time so far as I know, wardship proceedings to assist them in the execution of their statutory duties as education authority. It is obvious that the mother is not merely in complete breach of her duties under s. 36 of the Education Act, 1944 (which I shall call " the Act "), which has already been read by ORMEROD, L.J., but that she is also in utter disregard of her natural moral duty as the mother of these children.

Counsel on behalf of the local education authority has argued this case with great persuasiveness. He makes two main submissions. In the first place, he argues on a broad basis that we ought to approach the case apart altogether from the powers and duties conferred and imposed on the authority by the Act, and give directions as to the future education of the children, because the mother is in serious breach of her duties and it is in the paramount interest of the children that directions should be given by the court exercising powers and duties in relation to wardship proceedings, i.e., the Chancery Division of the High Court (to which I shall for brevity refer to as " the court "). He invites us to do this on the application of the local education authority. At first sight, that is an attractive argument, but on the whole I am unable to accede to it, for it involves the proposition that the authority are entitled to seek the directions of the court as to the education of the children rather than discharge their duties under the Act. This the local education authority plainly cannot do, for, where it appears to the authority that a parent is not giving a child efficient full-time education, they are under a duty to serve a notice under s. 37 (1) on the parent to satisfy the authority that the child is receiving efficient full-time education. If the parent fails to satisfy the authority, they are under a positive duty (if they are of opinion that it is expedient that the child should attend school) to serve on the parent a school attendance order; see s. 37 (2). If the parent fails to comply with the order and does not show that the child is receiving efficient full-time education, he commits an offence under s. 37 (5), and, under s. 40 (2), the authority are in certain circumstances under a duty to prosecute. The specific and positive duties cast on the local education authority cannot be delegated, and the court has no power to interfere in relation thereto. It seems to me that the authority cannot approach the court on this wide basis, but are bound to carry out their duties under the Act.

The second submission which counsel for the local education authority makes goes to the real kernel of the point. He invokes the aid of the court to assist the authority to enforce the statutory duties which are cast on them by the Act. I find this a more attractive argument.

The real question may, I think, be posed in one of two ways: first, whether the Education Act, 1944, in imposing duties on the local education authority, intended those powers and duties to be compendious and exclusive, forming in effect a complete and exhaustive statutory code, so that they have no right to invoke the assistance of the court in carrying out those duties; secondly, whether,

A if the Act does not go so far as that, it would be right to lend the assistance of the court having regard to the conflicting jurisdictions thereby created. Possibly the difference is mainly of academic interest, but during argument the point was made that, if the local education authority have some power to resort to the court for the purpose of assisting them to carry out their statutory powers and duties, yet in this case the point has not been reached when it would be proper B to invoke those powers, for, it is argued, the authority have not yet fully pursued their powers under s. 40 of the Act by prosecuting the mother. Although the authority have twice prosecuted the mother for her failure to carry out school attendance orders, the point has not yet been reached where it is open to the local magistrates to impose on the mother the punishment of imprisonment.

C Speaking for myself, I do not agree with this point. The mother has shown herself in persistent and flagrant disregard of the orders made on her; she has paid the trifling fines imposed on her, and has made no effort whatsoever to remedy her course of conduct or to comply in any way with the duties cast on her by the Act and orders made thereunder. She is plainly contumacious, and I see no reason why the authority, in the particular circumstances of this case, should not invoke the powers of the court (if they are entitled to do so) until there have been D three or more prosecutions under the Act. In the circumstances of this case, the sooner the court makes an order in aid of the powers and duties of the authority so much the better. The authority take the view, in which I concur, that, if the infants are made wards of court, the court, exercising those powers, is in a position to exercise a more effective control over the mother than is available to the education authority in continued prosecutions under s. 40 of the Act. Therefore, E it seems to me that the sole question is that which I have already posed: Is it proper for the court to make an order to assist the local education authority in the discharge of their duties under the Act?

The recent case of Re M. (an infant) (8) was much discussed before us and before the learned judge in the court below. PEARSON, L.J., and I were parties F to that decision. As a matter of decision, that case is not in point here, for the circumstances were very different. In that case the applicant was a lady to whom the care and control of the infant had been entrusted by the respondent local authority, who had, in exercise of their statutory power under the Children Act, 1948, assumed the position of parent. The lady was endeavouring to interfere with the exercise by the parental local authority of their powers under the Act. G But, as it was not shown, or even suggested, that the local authority were in any way exercising the powers and duties cast on them as parent by the Children Act, 1948, improperly, it was held in this court that the court would not interfere with the exercise of those powers and duties. In this case the local education authority are the applicants seeking to obtain the assistance of the court in the discharge of their duties against a mother plainly in breach of her statutory and moral duties H as such. That case is, however, relevant to this case, for it makes two matters clear: first, that the exercise of statutory duties by a local authority does not prevent the exercise by the court of its power to make infants wards of court in any case in which it is desirable to do so. Secondly, it makes equally clear that, where duties are cast on a statutory body such as a local authority, it would normally be wrong in the absence of some impropriety for the court to attempt I to exercise any powers which the legislature has thought fit to delegate to the local authority.

I have reached the same conclusion as the judge, though I prefer to put it in my own language. I think that the Education Act, 1944, has imposed on local education authorities a complete code which they are bound to carry out, and it would not be proper for the court to lend its assistance to them in carrying out those powers and duties. Many difficulties might arise if the court assumed a concurrent jurisdiction. For example, it is plain that (apart from the local education authority themselves) the only body that can direct that a school attendance order shall cease is the local bench of magistrates when a case is prosecuted before them; and then only on an acquittal under s. 40: see s. 37 (6) and s. 40. It is perfectly clear that the Court of Chancery has no power to revoke or vary such an order; see s. 37 (7). What is to happen if the court, having given directions to implement the school attendance order, takes the view that the acquittal was against the weight of evidence? The acquittal and the existing order of the court would be in direct conflict. Let me give another example. Suppose under a direction given by the Chancery court the infants do become registered pupils as defined by s. 114 (1) of the Act. It then follows that under s. 40 (4) of the Act, as replaced by s. 11 of the Education (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1953, the local education authority would have a power, and therefore a duty, in proper cases (which they could not delegate to the court) to make orders under the Children and Young Persons Act, 1933, which the court could not control and which might well be in conflict with the order of the court.

(8) [1961] 1 All E.R. 788; [1961] Ch. 328.

These considerations lead me to the conclusion that Parliament never intended that the local education authority should have power to apply to the Chancery court solely to assist them in the enforcement of their purely statutory duties in relation to elementary education. Alternatively, if there is some residual power in the authority to do so, it should not be exercised in the absence of special circumstances, and there are none present here.

Nothing that I have said in this judgment must be taken as suggesting in any way that, on application by a person having a proper interest in the welfare of infants, the court lacks jurisdiction to make infants wards of court even where the education authority are proposing to make, or have made, a school attendance order; though it is, it seems to me, quite clear that in such proceedings the court would have no power whatever to make orders in conflict with the exercise of duties cast on the local education authority by the Act, unless it be shown that there was some impropriety on the part of the authority in the exercise of their statutory duties and powers under the Act, as distinct from their wisdom (to use the words of LORD EVERSHED, M.R., in Re M. (an infant) (9)). For these reasons I come to the conclusion, again with much regret, that the court has no power to assist the local education authority in the exercise of their statutory duties, and therefore that the appeal must be dismissed.

I only desire to add one sentence by way of explanation of the judgment in Re M. (an infant) (10), though it is not directly in point in this case. The argument of counsel for the local education authority assumed that, in the summary of the law stated in three propositions by LORD EVERSHED, M.R. (11), the reference to "acting on familiar principles" in proposition (ii) referred to principles in infancy cases such as those laid down in R. v. Gyngall (12). This, with all respect to his argument, was an entire misconception. The reference to "familiar principles" was a reference to the well-known law that, where a statute has vested a discretion in a body, the court will not normally interfere with the exercise of that discretion.

PEARSON, L.J.: I agree. The facts which are now material can be summarised shortly. Mrs. Baker has seven children, of whom three, being of school age, are involved in these proceedings. She has persistently omitted and refused to send any of these children to school and they are not receiving efficient full-time education otherwise; indeed they are hardly receiving any education at all. Her husband, who is living apart from her, supports her attitude in regard to the children. Norfolk County Council, as the local education authority, have endeavoured persistently, and so far unsuccessfully, to persuade or compel (9) [1961] 1 All E.R. at pp. 793, 795; [1961] Ch. at pp. 342, 345.

(10) [1961] 1 All E.R. 788; [1961] Ch. 328.
(11) [1961] 1 All E.R. at p. 795; [1961] Ch. at p. 345. (12) [1893] 2 Q.B. 232.

A Mrs. Baker to send her children to school. In 1955 they served on Mrs. Baker a school attendance order, and, when it was not complied with, they prosecuted and the magistrate convicted, but on appeal it appeared that the school attendance order had not been preceded, as it should have been, by a school attendance notice, and the conviction was set aside. On May 16, 1957, they served on her a school attendance notice, and on July 19, 1957, a school attendance order, and B when that was not complied with they prosecuted. There was a conviction and she was fined 10s. in respect of each child. She appealed to quarter sessions, contending that the children were receiving efficient full-time education at home. Her appeal was dismissed, and LORD EVERSHED, as chairman of quarter sessions, gave a short judgment explaining why he and his colleagues were wholly unable to accept her contention. The children were not being educated and not having C the companionship of other children. Mrs. Baker still did not comply with the school attendance order. She was again prosecuted, and, on Nov. 28, 1958, she was convicted and fined £1 in respect of each child. She appealed to quarter sessions, but on Feb. 10, 1959, her appeal was dismissed. She appealed to the Divisional Court, but on Feb. 5, 1960, her appeal was dismissed. In giving judgment, LORD PARKER, C.J., read from the Case Stated by quarter sessions this D finding of fact:

> "Having considered the evidence, observed the children and heard the appellant's argument, we found as a fact that the appellant had failed at all material times to cause any of the said children to receive efficient full-time education suitable to their age, abilities and aptitude otherwise than at school."

E The local education authority might then have instituted a third prosecution, and, if there had been a third conviction, the magistrates' court would have had power to inflict a sentence of imprisonment (not more than one month for each offence) or a fine or both. The local education authority did not take that course. Therefore, it cannot be said that they have exhausted their remedies under the Act.

F The next step of the local education authority was to take out an originating summons, dated May 9, 1960, addressed to Mr. and Mrs. Baker and applying (i) for the three children to be made wards of court, (ii) for directions as to their education, and (iii) for such further or other order as to the welfare of the children as might be just. Under s. 9 of the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949, the effect of that application was to make the three children become G forthwith wards of court, subject to certain provisions for termination of the wardship. The sole object of the local education authority in instituting the wardship proceedings was to compel Mrs. Baker to send her children to school. The Chancery court would have no power to enforce the school attendance order as such. The relevant powers of the Chancery court, stated in general terms, are to give directions in respect of wards of court, and, if any person disobeys such H directions, to commit for contempt of court.

The originating summons was heard by PENNYCUICK, J., in March, 1961. The judge, having read the affidavits of Mr. Earl on behalf of the local education authority, and those of Mrs. Baker and Mr. Baker, and heard the oral evidence of these witnesses, said (13):

I

> "I come without hesitation to the conclusion, so far as I am concerned to do so, that the mother is not causing the children to receive efficient full-time education as required by the statutory provisions of the Education Act, 1944."

However, the judge, having referred to the relevant provisions of the Education Act, 1944, and to passages in the judgment of LORD EVERSHED, M.R., in the recent case of Re M. (an infant) (14) in the Court of Appeal, decided that it would be outside the proper scope of the jurisdiction of the Chancery court to give the directions desired by the local education authority, and, therefore, as there was not action to be taken in the wardship, he ordered that it should cease. The local education authority now contend that the decision of the learned judge was wrong and that he should have given the desired directions. That is the issue in this appeal.

(13) [1961] 2 All E.R. at p. 251; [1961] Ch. at p. 306.
(14) [1961] 1 All E.R. 788; [1961] Ch. 328.

Towards the end of his judgment in Re M. (an infant) (15), LORD EVERSHED, M.R., by way of summary, stated three propositions:

> " (i) The prerogative right of the Queen as parens patriae in relation to infants within the realm is not for all purposes ousted or abrogated as the result of the exercise of the duties and powers by local authorities under the Children Act, 1948: in particular the power to make an infant a ward of court by invocation of s. 9 of the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1949, is unaffected.
>
> " (ii) But even where a child is made a ward of court by virtue of the Act of 1949, the judge in whom the prerogative power is vested will, acting on familiar principles, not exercise control in relation to duties or discretions clearly vested by statute in the local authority, and may, therefore, and in a case such as the present normally will, order that the child cease to be a ward of court . . .
>
> " (iii) There remains the right (and duty) of the judge in whom the prerogative power is vested, to control the activities of a local authority in cases where the local authority is shown to be acting in some way in breach or in disregard of its statutory duties."

I have read the third proposition for the sake of completeness, but it has no application to the present case, as there is no suggestion that the local education authority are acting in breach or in disregard of their statutory duties as contemplated by that proposition.

The first and second propositions are applicable. Under the first proposition, wardship jurisdiction of the Chancery court still exists notwithstanding Acts of Parliament conferring on local authorities powers and duties in respect of children, but, under the second proposition, the effect of such an Act may be, not, I think, if one speaks accurately, to restrict the jurisdiction, but to restrict the scope of the proper exercise of the jurisdiction. In the absence of special circumstances, the court ought not to exercise its power of control in a sphere of activity which has been entrusted by statute to a local authority.

To explain the reference in the second proposition to " familiar principles ", I will read an earlier passage in the same judgment of the Master of the Rolls (16):

> " What then is the effect of this statute to which I have made such references as occur to me to be necessary? I think that the effect may be stated in two propositions. First, the enactment is such that in a case like the present there is in the Act a clear and comprehensive scheme laid down (what LORD SUMNER called a modus operandi (17)) involving positive duties imposed by Parliament on the local authority and a precise formulation of the way in which the consequent powers are to be exercised, and, secondly, that as regards these duties and powers the discretion is conferred on the authority by the words—' appears to them '—which have occurred in the citations that I have made. The meaning of that phrase was expounded by LORD GODDARD, C.J., in Re A.B. (an infant) (18), to which I shall return, as meaning ' appears to the satisfaction of the local authority ', and that is a formula which, as LORD GODDARD, C.J., pointed out, must be taken to confer an absolute discretion on the person or authority concerned provided

(15) [1961] 1 All E.R. at p. 795; [1961] Ch. at p. 345.
(16) [1961] 1 All E.R. at p. 792; [1961] Ch. at p. 341.
(17) A.-G. v. De Keyser's Royal Hotel, Ltd., [1920] All E.R. Rep. at p. 103; [1920] A.C. at p. 561.
(18) [1954] 2 All E.R. 287; [1954] 2 Q.B. 385.

A it is exercised bona fide. LORD GODDARD, C.J., in that respect followed the decisions of this court in Point of Ayr Collieries, Ltd. v. Lloyd-George (19) and the later case of Carltona, Ltd. v. Works Comrs. (20)."

It is necessary to see whether there is in the Education Act, 1944, a clear and comprehensive scheme laid down involving positive duties imposed by Parliament on the local education authority and a precise formulation of the way in which the consequent powers are to be exercised, and whether statutory discretions are conferred on the local education authority. One does find all those features—the scheme and the positive duties and the precise formulation and the discretions—in s. 36 to s. 40 of the Act. The local education authority have to decide: (i) whether it appears to them that the parent of any child is failing to perform the duty imposed on the parent by s. 36; (ii) whether they are satisfied that the child is receiving efficient full-time education; (iii) whether in their opinion it is expedient that the child should attend school, so that a school attendance order should be made; (iv) if the parent selects a school to be named in the order, whether that school is unsuitable or whether attendance of the child at that school would involve unreasonable expenses, so that an application should be made to the Minister of Education; (v) if, while the school attendance order is in force, the parent requests that another school be substituted, or that the order be revoked on the ground that arrangements have been made for the child to receive efficient full-time education otherwise, whether the request should be granted; and (vi) if the school attendance order is not complied with, whether in their opinion the institution of proceedings is necessary for the purpose of enforcing the duty imposed on a parent by the Act so that there should be a prosecution.

If the Chancery court were to give a direction duplicating the obligation already imposed by the school attendance order, for the parent to send the child to school, subsequent questions would arise as to amendment, revocation or enforcement of the obligation. Then who would decide? Would the local education authority surrender their discretion to the Chancery court, or would the Chancery court surrender its discretion to the local education authority, or would they each exercise their own discretion so that a conflict could arise? It is clear that, at any rate in the absence of some very peculiar situation calling for and justifying intervention of the Chancery court in the statutory sphere of activity of the local education authority, there should be no such intervention.

In the present case the remedy under the Act is specifically provided and has not been fully tried out. It is for the local magistrates' court to decide (i) whether the parent has failed to comply with the school attendance order, (ii) whether it is proved under s. 37 (5) that the parent is causing the child to receive efficient full-time education suitable to his age, ability and aptitude otherwise than at school, and (iii) if there is a conviction, what penalty should be imposed. The provisions of s. 40 (1), providing progressive but limited penalties, have evidently been devised with a view to bringing pressure to bear on a parent to induce compliance with the order, without imposing severe penalties which might be disastrous for the children as well as the parent. The offending parent is entitled to have, and also bound to accept (subject to the right of appeal), the decisions of the local magistrates' court on all these matters.

In my opinion, although the local education authority have all the merits in this case and it may be regretted that no help can be given to them, the learned judge was right in declining to give the directions desired by the local education authority and consequently terminating the wardship. I agree that the appeal should be dismissed. A

(19) [1943] 2 All E.R. 546. (20) [1943] 2 All E.R. 560.

Appeal dismissed. Leave to appeal to the House of Lords refused.

Solicitors: Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., agents for Clerk of Norfolk County Council (for the local education authority); Piesse & Sons, agents for Russell Steward, Stevens & Hipwell, Norwich (for Mrs. Baker); Field, Roscoe & Co., agents for Sadler, Lemmon & Gethin, King's Lynn (for Mr. Baker). B

[Reported by F. A. Amies, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

C

CRITCHLEY v. CLIFFORD.

[Court of Appeal (Ormerod Willmer and Danckwerts, L.JJ.), May 8, 9, July 7, 1961.]

Rent Restriction—Sub-tenancy—Letting—Letting to intermediate landlord outside Acts as agricultural holding let to farmer—Sub-tenancy of cottage on farm——Cottage occupied as private dwelling, not in connexion with farm work—Whether sub-tenant protected by Rent Restriction Acts—Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920 (10 & 11 Geo. 5 c. 17), s. 12 (2) proviso (iii). D

A farm of some two hundred acres, including a cottage, was let in 1932 to the plaintiff. The farm was subject to the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, and, by virtue of para. 1 of Sch. 7, not to the Rent Restrictions Acts. In 1944 the plaintiff sub-let the cottage, which was within the limits of rateable value of dwelling-houses to which the Rent Restrictions Acts applied. The sub-tenant was not, however, connected with work on the farm and accordingly the exemption under para. 1 of Sch. 7 to the Act of 1948 would not apply in relation to the sub-letting of the cottage if viewed separately as a letting on its own. The plaintiff, the intermediate landlord, sought to recover from the defendant, the sub-tenant, possession of the cottage, as having a status outside the protection of the Rent Restrictions Acts by virtue of s. 12 (2) proviso (iii) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, which admittedly excluded from those Acts the letting of the farm with the cottage to the plaintiff, as " a house let together with land other than the site of the house " within proviso (iii). E F G

Held: in deciding whether the sub-tenant was entitled to the protection of the Rent Restrictions Acts the determining factor was the letting of the cottage, that sub-tenancy being the letting to which the word " let " in proviso (iii) to s. 12 (2) of the Act of 1920 referred; that sub-tenancy was within the Rent Restrictions Acts, and, therefore, the sub-tenant was entitled to their protection (see p. 292, letter C, p. 295, letter H, and p. 298, letter F, post). H

Prout v. Hunter ([1924] All E.R. Rep. 53) applied.

Rudler v. Franks ([1947] K.B. 530) and Percy G. Moore, Ltd. v. Stretch ([1951] 1 All E.R. 228) distinguished.

Appeal allowed. I

[Editorial Note. It was conceded that the occupying sub-tenant would not be protected by the Rent Restrictions Acts as against the superior landlord, if the tenancy of the farm were determined (see p. 293, letter F, and p. 298, letter C, post).

As to the application of the Rent Acts to houses let with land or other premises, see 23 Halsbury's Laws (3rd Edn.) 751-753, paras. 1507, 1508; and for cases on the subject, see 31 Digest (Repl.) 655-657, 7578-7587.

A For the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, s. 12 (2) (iii), see 13 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (3rd Edn.) 1004.]

Cases referred to:

Clark v. Downes, Clark v. Mawby, [1931] All E.R. Rep. 157; 145 L.T. 20; 31 Digest (Repl.) 635, 7438.

B Cow v. Casey, [1949] 1 All E.R. 197; [1949] 1 K.B. 474; [1949] L.J.R. 565; 31 Digest (Repl.) 713, 7984.

Dudley and District Benefit Building Society v. Emerson, [1949] 2 All E.R. 252; [1949] Ch. 707; [1949] L.J.R. 1441; 31 Digest (Repl.) 639, 7472.

Glossop v. Ashley, [1922] 1 K.B. 1; 90 L.J.K.B. 1237; 125 L.T. 842; 85 J.P. 234; 31 Digest (Repl.) 673, 7687.

C Knight v. Olive, [1954] 1 All E.R. 701; [1954] 1 Q.B. 514; [1954] 2 W.L.R. 646; 3rd Digest Supp.

Lloyd v. Cook, Goudge v. Broughton, Simson v. Miatt, Bartram v. Brown, Barker v. Hutson, [1928] All E.R. Rep. 201; [1929] 1 K.B. 103; 97 L.J.K.B. 657; 139 L.T. 452; 92 J.P. 199; 31 Digest (Repl.) 724, 8079.

Moore (Percy G.), Ltd. v. Stretch, [1951] 1 All E.R. 228; 3rd Digest Supp.

D Prout v. Hunter, [1924] All E.R. Rep. 53; [1924] 2 K.B. 736; 93 L.J.K.B. 993; 132 L.T. 193; 31 Digest (Repl.) 639, 7467.

Rudler v. Franks, [1947] K.B. 530; [1947] L.J.R. 658; 176 L.T. 326; 111 J.P. 190; 31 Digest (Repl.) 635, 7439.

Sherwood (Baron) v. Moody, [1952] 1 All E.R. 389; 2 Digest (Repl.) 15, 63.

Webster v. McDonnell, unreported.

E Wirral Estates, Ltd. v. Shaw, [1932] All E.R. Rep. 43; [1932] 2 K.B. 247; 101 L.J.K.B. 370; 147 L.T. 87; 96 J.P. 143; 31 Digest (Repl.) 635, 7442.

Appeal.

The tenant appealed against an order of His Honour JUDGE FRASER HARRISON made on Oct. 26, 1960, in Liverpool County Court in favour of the plaintiff F landlord, requiring the tenant to give up possession of a dwelling-house at 35, Mill Brow, Speke, Liverpool, on Jan. 26, 1961. The grounds of appeal were that the judge was wrong in law in holding that the tenancy of the dwelling-house was not protected under the Rent Acts.

J. E. Jones for the tenant.

K. W. Dewhurst for the landlord.

G Cur. adv. vult.

July 7. The following judgments were read.

ORMEROD, L.J.: This is an appeal against a decision of His Honour JUDGE FRASER HARRISON given at Liverpool on Oct. 26, 1960, when he decided that the landlord of a cottage in Liverpool was entitled to possession against H the then occupying tenant and made an order to that effect. This appeal is on behalf of the tenant and the respondent is, of course, the landlord. The facts are as follows. The tenant has been the tenant since 1944 or thereabouts of a cottage known as 35, Mill Brow, Speke, Liverpool. At the time of the original tenancy the weekly rent was 7s. 6d. per week but there have been subsequent increases and today it is £1 per week. The landlord is not the owner of the I freehold of the cottage in question. Were he the landlord, there would be no question but that the tenant would be entitled to the protection of the Rent Acts. The landlord is himself a tenant of Tewitt Hall Farm, Speke, which is a farm of about two hundred acres and therefore the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, applies to these premises. The cottage in question is a cottage on the farm which was let to the landlord by Liverpool Corporation as part of the farm. The tenant, however, takes no part in the running or management of the farm but uses the cottage entirely for the purposes of occupation by himself and his family. It was contended successfully before the learned county court judge that, as the Rent Acts operated in rem and not in personam, the Acts did not apply to the premises in question and in the circumstances the tenant was not entitled to protection.

This, of course, is a very difficult problem and it is one on which there is a surprising dearth of authority. It may be that this question has arisen on other occasions before judges of county courts, but by reason of the small amount involved or for other good reason no case similar to this appears to have come before this court. There was a case [cf. p. 297, text and note (25) post] on very similar lines before His Honour JUDGE HAROLD BROWN in Liverpool County Court prior to this case and it would appear that His Honour JUDGE FRASER HARRISON with very good reason chose to adopt the reasoning of JUDGE HAROLD BROWN in that case and in giving his judgment referred at length to the previous judgment. The previous case was to a very large extent on all fours with the present one and in those circumstances it is hardly surprising that the county court judge, having given the matter careful consideration, decided to adopt the reasoning and the language employed by his brother judge.

The relevant section of the Act of Parliament which we have to consider is s. 12 (2) (iii) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, which is as follows:

> "For the purposes of this Act, any land or premises let together with a house shall, if the rateable value of the land or premises let separately would be less than one-quarter of the rateable value of the house, be treated as part of the house, but, subject to this provision, this Act shall not apply to a house let together with land other than the site of the house."

There can be no doubt that in the circumstances of this case this subsection applies, and it is clear that the farm and buildings let with the farm are not within the purpose of the Rent Acts. It is contended, therefore, on behalf of the landlord that, as the Rent Acts operate in rem and not in personam, the exception was created when the tenancy was granted by Liverpool Corporation to the landlord, and in those circumstances any intermediate letting was likewise deprived of the protection of the Acts. The issue in this case is whether in the circumstances the Rent Acts apply to this particular letting or whether their effect is to exclude this letting from the protection of the Acts, thereby justifying an order for possession of the cottage.

The landlord in this case relied on Rudler v. Franks (1). That was a decision of the Divisional Court and the judgment was given by LORD GODDARD, C.J. That was a case of a tenant of a farm held on lease from the Crown and therefore Crown property. A cottage on the farm was let to a tenant and the tenant of the farm subsequently sought to recover possession of the cottage by a warrant under the Small Tenements Recovery Act, 1838. The justices refused to grant the warrant, holding that as between the landlord and tenant of the cottage the Rent Acts applied. It was held that the Rent Acts did not apply as the cottage was Crown property and the Crown was not affected by the Rent Acts, as they applied in rem and not in personam. LORD GODDARD, C.J., said (2):

> "So far as this court is concerned it seems that the case is concluded by the decision of the Divisional Court, consisting of LORD HANWORTH, M.R., and ROMER, L.J., sitting as additional judges of the King's Bench Division, in Clark v. Downes (3). That case has also been considered and must be taken as approved by the Court of Appeal of which the same two judges were members, in Wirral Estates, Ltd. v. Shaw (4). As I understand the decision it is this. The Rent Restriction Acts apply in rem and not in personam. The meaning of that is that the Rent Restriction Acts attach or apply to the property itself, and, therefore, as the Crown is not bound by the

(1) [1947] K.B. 530. (2) [1947] K.B. at p. 531.
(3) [1931] All E.R. Rep. 157. (4) [1932] All E.R. Rep. 43; [1932] 2 K.B. 247.

A Rent Restriction Acts the cottage or house as long as it remains Crown property, never becomes affected by them. If the tenancy of the cottage had been granted by the Crown, I think no one could have disputed the fact that the Rent Restriction Acts would not apply, because the Crown not being named in the Acts, obviously upon all the well known rules of construction is not affected by the Acts. The reason why the Acts do not apply B when the tenant of the Crown creates a sub-tenancy is first because, as I have just said, the Acts operate in rem and not in personam and so are never attached to the house at all. It was also pointed out by ROMER, L.J., that the Crown's rights would or might be affected because if the Crown sold the reversion the Crown would probably receive a less sum for the property if the Acts applied than if they did not apply, because the purchaser would C not be able to obtain vacant possession."

It is to be observed that the court was there dealing with property which was owned by the Crown and remained Crown property and it was well established that the Rent Acts did not apply to Crown property. There was some modification of this rule in 1952, but there is no doubt that in 1947 the rule was in force, D and in the circumstances, if property was originally Crown property, it remained so for as long as the reversion was the property of the Crown, however many lettings and sub-lettings there were. In the circumstances any sub-letting of the property would be subject to the same properties and characteristics as the original letting and the principal characteristic as far as this case is concerned is that, it being Crown property, the Rent Acts would not apply.

E The question which this court has to consider is whether in the circumstances of this case the Rent Acts would not apply because the original letting by Liverpool Corporation to the landlord was the letting of something which was outside the scope of the Acts. It was argued by counsel for the landlord that this was certainly a case where the Acts did not apply and therefore the court was acting properly in making an order for possession: that the operation of the Rent Acts being in rem, a characteristic must, therefore, have attached itself F to this property at the time of the original letting by Liverpool Corporation just as though the property were Crown lands, and that in those circumstances that particular characteristic could not be detached from any portion of the letting if there were a sub-letting by the tenant from Liverpool Corporation to a sub-tenant.

G This appears on the face of it to be a formidable argument, but of course it depends to a very large extent on the proper construction of the words of s. 12 (2) (iii) of the Act of 1920, which I have read. It is to be noted, however, that the section refers to land or premises let together with a house, and later to a house let together with land other than the site of the house, and it appears to me that the material part of the subsection which we have to construe is the meaning of the word "let". If the word "let" relates back to the original H tenancy between Liverpool Corporation and the present landlord, then of course the landlord's contention here is the right one. On the other hand, if it relates only to the contract of tenancy, if contract there was, between the present landlord and the present tenant, then I fail to see how it can apply in the circumstances of the present case.

The clue to the decision in this case may well be in a decision of this court in I Prout v. Hunter (5). Paragraph 1 of the proviso to s. 12 (2) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, provides:

> "this Act shall not, save as otherwise expressly provided, apply to a dwelling-house bona fide let at a rent which includes payments in respect of board, attendance, or use of furniture," and in Prout v. Hunter (5) it was held that the word "let" there meant "let to the occupying tenant", and therefore where a landlord let a house unfurnished to a tenant who let it to a sub-tenant furnished, the former could not on an application by the landlord for possession claim the protection of the statute. It is unnecessary for me to refer to the judgments of the court which were delivered by BANKES, L.J., SCRUTTON, L.J., and SARGANT, J., but the position is clear that, at the time when that case was decided, a furnished dwelling was not within the protection of the Rent Acts, whereas an unfurnished dwelling was, and it was held that, where an unfurnished dwelling had been let to a tenant who afterwards furnished it and sub-let it, the person who had furnished and sub-let it could not claim the protection of the statute. In the circumstances of that case the word "let" was held to mean "let to the occupying tenant". Equally in this case, in construing proviso (iii) to s. 12 (2), it appears that the word "let" must mean "let to the occupying tenant", and, if that be so, the only tenancy that we have to consider in this case is the tenancy of the cottage of which the plaintiff in this case is the landlord and the defendant is the tenant. It may be that, at the time when the present landlord obtained a tenancy of the farm, the whole farm was then outside the protection of the Rent Acts, but the point that matters is that, at the time the landlord, i.e., the tenant of the farm, let the cottage to the tenant, he was letting a cottage to an occupying tenant for the purposes of his occupation of the cottage as a dwelling and not because the tenant was employed on the farm or engaged in any way in the management or running of the farm. If that is the proper way to construe s. 12 (2) (iii) of the Act of 1920, and I think that it is, then it appears to me that the argument which has been submitted on behalf of the landlord falls to the ground.

(5) [1924] All E.R. Rep. 53; [1924] 2 K.B. 736.

It may be that it is much too late to question the proposition that the operation of the Rent Acts is in rem and not in personam but the point which has to be considered is that the quality of being exempt from the provisions of the Acts does not apply until there is a tenancy involving an occupying tenant. In the circumstances, it appears that in this case there was no tenancy to which the Rent Acts could apply until 1944, when this cottage was let to the present tenant. At that time the cottage may well have been a part of a holding which for various reasons, and particularly by reason of s. 12 (2) (iii), was excluded from the operation of the Rent Acts, but nevertheless there was no tenancy of any kind with which this court is concerned until the premises were let to the present tenant. When they were let to him, they were let to him for his occupation, and in those circumstances I can see no reason why the Rent Acts should not apply.

It may well be that, had this cottage been sub-let to some other tenant or to this one as part of a larger holding, e.g., as part of the whole farm let to the landlord by Liverpool Corporation, then the protection of the Acts would not have applied to these premises and it would have been proper to make an order for the possession of this cottage as well as other premises let at the same time. But that is not this case. The landlord retained possession of the whole of the farm and did nothing more than let this particular cottage to the tenant. In those circumstances I see no reason why the Rent Acts should not apply. I would allow this appeal.

WILLMER, L.J.: I have reached the same conclusion. The difficulty in this case is to determine which of two conflicting principles, each of them well established by authority binding on us, is applicable in relation to the particular facts. Both sides agree, and indeed it is now well settled, that the Rent Acts operate in rem, i.e., they operate on property. But to say this, to my mind, does not advance the matter very far; for it remains to consider how the res is to be looked at.

The tenant's case is that, since the fundamental purpose of the Acts is to protect an occupying tenant, the property which constitutes the res must be

A looked at from his point of view. The principle contended for is nowhere more concisely and lucidly stated than in the judgment of SARGANT, J., in Prout v. Hunter (6). He said (7):

> "For the purpose of determining the status of a particular house and ascertaining whether it is within the Act or not, it is necessary, where there are several tenancies and sub-tenancies affecting it, to consider which of B those tenancies is the material one for the purpose. In Glossop v. Ashley (8) it was held that, for the purpose at any rate of determining the standard rent of the house, the material bargain is that which has been made with the occupying tenant, and upon the ground, as SCRUTTON, L.J., insisted (9), and I desire to concur with him—that the object of the Act was prima facie to protect the occupying tenant. If the status of the house as regards the C standard rent is to be ascertained by looking at the position of the occupying tenant, there is as much or more reason for regarding the position of the occupying tenant for the purpose of determining whether the landlord can obtain an order for possession."

In the present case the dwelling-house in question is well within the monetary D limits. Although it formed part of the landlord's agricultural holding, so far as the defendant's tenancy is concerned it is not "a house let together with land other than the site of the house", so as to be excluded by proviso (iii) to s. 12 (2) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920. Nor is it excluded by para. 1 of Sch. 7 to the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, since the tenant who occupies it is not

> E ". . . the person responsible for the control (whether as tenant or as servant or agent of the tenant) of the farming of the holding."

Prima facie, therefore, and viewing the matter from the point of view of the defendant as occupying tenant, there would seem to be no reason why he should not be entitled, as against the plaintiff, his immediate landlord, to the full F protection of the Rent Acts.

It is conceded that, in the event of the superior landlord determining the plaintiff landlord's tenancy, the defendant tenant would not be protected against a claim for possession at the suit of the superior landlord. This was decided in Cow v. Casey (10), a decision of this court. But that decision left untouched the question whether a tenant in the position of this defendant is entitled to protection against his own immediate landlord so long as the latter's G tenancy subsists. It appears to be the view of the learned editors of MEGARRY ON THE RENT ACTS that such a tenant would be entitled to protection (see 8th Edn., at p. 20), and this seems to be in accordance with what was said by JENKINS, L.J., in Knight v. Olive (11). An analogous position arose in Dudley and District Benefit Building Society v. Emerson (12) where a mortgagor of a dwelling-house, whose statutory power of leasing was excluded by the terms of H his mortgage, had nevertheless purported to let the premises. In that case the tenant was held to be not entitled to the protection of the Rent Acts as against the mortgagee; but the view was expressed that, if the mortgagor had sought to get possession, the tenant would have been entitled to protection as against him—see, e.g., per SOMERVELL, L.J. (13).

It will be seen, therefore, that a formidable argument is put forward on behalf I of the defendant, the occupying tenant, as against his own immediate landlord who created the tenancy now in question. If the principle contended for by

(6) [1924] All E.R. Rep. 53; [1924] 2 K.B. 736.
(7) [1924] 2 K.B. at p. 744; [1924] All E.R. Rep. at p. 58.
(8) [1922] 1 K.B. 1.
(9) [1922] 1 K.B. at p. 8.
(10) [1949] 1 All E.R. 197; [1949] 1 K.B. 474.
(11) [1954] 1 All E.R. at p. 703; [1954] 1 Q.B. at p. 519.
(12) [1949] 2 All E.R. 252; [1949] Ch. 707.
(13) [1949] 2 All E.R. at p. 260; [1949] Ch. at p. 723.

the occupying tenant stood alone, I think that there could be no doubt but that he must be entitled to succeed on this appeal. A

The landlord, on the other hand, calls in aid the principle whereby, since the Rent Acts operate in rem, a dwelling-house which is once declared to be outside the ambit of the Acts remains outside them for all purposes, irrespective of who the occupying tenant may be, and regardless of the circumstances in which his tenancy may have been created. The most arresting example of the application of this principle is to be found in the decision of the Divisional Court in Rudler v. Franks (14), where the dwelling-house in question was Crown property, being part of a farm held on lease from the Crown. The tenant of the farm having let the dwelling-house to a sub-tenant, the latter was held not to be entitled to the protection of the Rent Acts. In the course of giving the leading judgment in which the other members of the court concurred, LORD GODDARD, C.J., said (15): B C

> ". . . if the property sought to be recovered is Crown property, notwithstanding that the tenancy is a sub-tenancy created by the tenant of the Crown, the Rent Restriction Acts do not apply to the cottage or house so long as the property remains Crown property. I need not consider what would happen if the Crown sold the reversion. So far as this court is concerned it seems that the case is concluded by the decision of the Divisional Court, consisting of LORD HANWORTH, M.R., and ROMER, L.J., sitting as additional judges of the King's Bench Division, in Clark v. Downes (16). That case has also been considered and must be taken as approved by the Court of Appeal of which the same two judges were members, in Wirral Estates, Ltd. v. Shaw (17). As I understand the decision it is this. The Rent Restriction Acts apply in rem and not in personam. The meaning of that is that the Rent Restriction Acts attach or apply to the property itself, and, therefore, as the Crown is not bound by the Rent Restriction Acts the cottage or house as long as it remains Crown property, never becomes affected by them." D E

Another instance of the application of the same principle is to be found in the decision of this court in Percy G. Moore, Ltd. v. Stretch (18), where the dwelling-house in question belonged to a local authority, so as to fall within s. 3 (2) (c) of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939. That subsection provided: F

> "The principal Acts shall not, by virtue of this section, apply . . . (c) to any dwelling-house being, or forming part of, a house or dwelling in respect of which a local authority for the purposes of Part 5 of the Housing Act, 1936, are required by s. 128 of that Act to keep a housing revenue account, other than a house or dwelling to which s. 129 (3) of that Act applies." G

In proceedings for possession brought by the tenant of the local authority against the sub-tenant to whom the house had been let, it was held that the house was not within the Rent Acts and that the sub-tenant was not entitled to protection. SOMERVELL, L.J., referred (19) to Rudler v. Franks (14) and the cases there cited, and held that the same principle applied as in the case of Crown property. JENKINS, L.J., in a brief judgment, which it is useful to cite in full, said (19): H I

> "I agree. Whether or not the full result of s. 3 (2) (c), in view of the terms in which it appears in the Act of 1939, was foreseen when it was drafted, I find the words of the subsection as it stands an insurmountable

(14) [1947] K.B. 530. (15) [1947] K.B. at p. 531.
(16) [1931] All E.R. Rep. 157. (17) [1932] All E.R. Rep. 43; [1932] 2 K.B. 247.
(18) [1951] 1 All E.R. 228. (19) [1951] 1 All E.R. at p. 230.

A obstacle to the contention of counsel for the tenant. Section 3 (2) (c) contains nothing to confine its application to claims for possession by local authorities. The exclusion operates if the dwelling-house in respect of which protection of the Rent Acts is claimed is, or forms part of, a house or dwelling in respect of which a local authority is required by s. 128 of the Act of 1936 to keep a housing revenue account. Once that fact is estab-
B lished, it follows that the dwelling-house is outside the Acts, and it does not matter whether the tenancy in relation to which protection is claimed is held directly from the local authority or from a lessee of the local authority. I agree both that the language of the subsection makes this plain, and also that the conclusion to which its language points is borne out by the cases to which my Lord has referred."

C The principle sought to be extracted from these authorities is that there are some houses which, whether by a rule of law or by express statutory provision, are altogether and for all purposes excluded from the operation of the Rent Acts. Such houses have a particular quality which affects their status, so as to prevent the occupying tenant, whoever he is, from obtaining protection. The dwelling-house in question in this case, it is said, falls precisely within this class,
D for it forms part of a farm of some two hundred acres let to the landlord by Liverpool Corporation. It is therefore expressly excluded by the concluding words of proviso (iii) to s. 12 (2) of the Act of 1920, which provides: ". . . this Act shall not apply to a house let together with land other than the site of the house ". The result, it is contended, is that this house has acquired a status which, so long as the landlord's tenancy of the farm subsists, excludes it for all
E purposes from the operation of the Rent Acts. It has been pressed on us that this conclusion inexorably follows unless Rudler v. Franks (20) and Percy G. Moore, Ltd. v. Stretch (21) are held to have been wrongly decided, which it is not open to this court to hold.

It seems to me that the solution to this difficult problem must depend on the true construction of proviso (iii) to s. 12 (2) of the Act of 1920. Is the letting
F there referred to the letting under which the occupying tenant holds? Or are the words to be construed as referring to a house which, prior to the letting under which the occupying tenant holds, has been let by the superior landlord together with land other than the site of the house? Counsel for the landlord argued that the status of the house must be looked at as it was immediately before the letting under which the tenant holds. At that moment it was a house
G which had been let (to the landlord) together with land, and accordingly he contended that it was a house to which the proviso applied.

I have come to the conclusion that the reasoning on which this submission is founded is fallacious. The contention that the status of the house in question must be looked at as it was before the letting under which the tenant holds seems to me to be in conflict with the ratio of the decision in Prout v. Hunter (22),
H to which I have already referred. The material letting must be that under which the occupying tenant holds. It follows that the status of the house must be looked at, not as it was before, but as it was after the material letting. Were this not so, it would be impossible, in the great majority of cases, to apply the Rent Acts at all—for, until premises have been let, no question as to the application of the Acts can arise. In these circumstances I think it must follow that,
I as between the tenant and the landlord, it is fallacious to have regard to the fact that, prior to the material letting, the house in question had previously been let together with other land by the superior landlord to the plaintiff landlord. I do not think it right to say that the fact of this prior letting had, as between the landlord and the tenant, had the effect of conferring on the house in question a status of immunity from the Rent Acts, such as was at one time enjoyed by houses which were Crown property or the property of a local authority. Accordingly, in my judgment, the principle on which Rudler v. Franks (23) and Percy G. Moore v. Stretch (24) were decided can have no application to the present dispute between this landlord and this tenant. While it is no doubt true that, in the event of Liverpool Corporation terminating the landlord's tenancy of the farm as a whole, the tenant would be left without any protection, I am in the end satisfied that, so long as the landlord's tenancy continues, the tenant is entitled, as against him, to the protection of the Rent Acts.

(20) [1947] K.B. 530. (21) [1951] 1 All E.R. 228.
(22) [1924] All E.R. Rep. 53; [1924] 2 K.B. 736.

It follows that in my judgment the learned judge came to a wrong conclusion in holding that the landlord was entitled to possession, and I would therefore concur in allowing the appeal.

DANCKWERTS, L.J.: This action concerns a cottage, 35, Mill Brow, Speke, Liverpool. The plaintiff landlord farms Tewitt Hall Farm, which is the property of Liverpool Corporation, and comprises some two hundred acres. The landlord has been the tenant of the farm since 1932, and the cottage which is on the farm was let by the landlord to the defendant tenant on a weekly tenancy in 1944 or thereabouts. The tenant has never had anything to do with the farm. The landlord now wishes to use the cottage for a farm labourer and to house one of his servants, and accordingly has given the tenant notice to quit. The question is whether the tenant is protected by the Rent Acts. On Oct. 26, 1960, His Honour JUDGE FRASER HARRISON gave judgment ordering possession to be given to the landlord on Jan. 26, 1961, and from that judgment the tenant appeals.

There is no doubt that the farm, of which the landlord is tenant, is an agricultural holding which is outside the provisions of the Rent Acts by virtue of Sch. 7 to the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948, which, by para. 1, provides as follows:

> "The Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Acts, 1920 to 1939, shall not apply to any dwelling-house which is comprised in an agricultural holding and is occupied by the person responsible for the control (whether as tenant or as servant or agent of the tenant) of the farming of the holding."

The cottage, on the other hand, unless the situation is such that it is outside the provisions of the Rent Acts, would be within the class of dwelling-houses to which the Rent Acts apply. Section 12 (2) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, provides:

> "This Act shall apply to a house or a part of a house let as a separate dwelling, where either the annual amount of the standard rent or the rateable value does not exceed [certain amounts mentioned in the subsection] . . . and every such house or part of a house shall be deemed to be a dwelling-house to which this Act applies: Provided that . . . (iii) for the purposes of this Act, any land or premises let together with a house shall, if the rateable value of the land or premises let separately would be less than one-quarter of the rateable value of the house, be treated as part of the house, but, subject to this provision, this Act shall not apply to a house let together with land other than the site of the house."

Section 3 (3) of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Act, 1939, provides:

> "Subject to the provisions of para. (a) of the last preceding subsection [which deals with licensed premises] the application of the principal Acts, by virtue of this section, to any dwelling-house shall not be excluded by reason only that part of the premises is used as a shop or office or for business, trade or professional purposes; and for the purposes of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Acts, 1920 to 1938, as amended by virtue of this section, any land or premises let together with a dwelling-house shall, unless the land or premises so let consists or consist of agricultural land

(23) [1947] K.B. 530. (24) [1951] 1 All E.R. 228.

A exceeding two acres in extent, be treated as part of the dwelling-house; but, save as aforesaid, the principal Acts shall not, by virtue of this section, apply to any dwelling-house let together with land other than the site of the dwelling-house."

When the cottage was sub-let to the tenant by the landlord, it was not let B with any land other than the site of the cottage or a garden so small as to make no difference to the position. But it is suggested that, as the cottage when it was let formed part of the farm, an agricultural holding, it is not within, and never acquired the protection conferred on a tenant by the provisions of, the Rent Acts which might otherwise be applicable.

Many judges have remarked on the baffling nature of the Rent Restriction C Acts. It has been said that the Acts apply to houses, not persons; that they operate in rem and not in personam; and that they operate on property. I must confess that I find these expressions more confusing than helpful; nor do they seem to me to be really accurate descriptions of the operation of the Acts. Of course, the Acts deal with houses below a certain value, and, for a tenant to gain the benefit of the Acts, the house in question must come within D the class of dwellings to which the Acts apply. But it is a letting which brings the operation of the Acts into effect. For instance, the provisions of the Acts of 1920 and 1939, to which I have referred, are based on the circumstances of the lettings of the dwellings mentioned in these provisions. It is not accurate to say that the Acts are not concerned with persons: for instance, assignees are denied the protection of the Acts, except in certain limited cases.

E The learned county court judge held that the tenant was not protected by the Rent Acts and gave judgment against him for possession, following a decision of His Honour JUDGE HAROLD BROWN in Southport County Court in Webster v. McDonnell (25). That case had some similar circumstances in that, amongst others, the plaintiff was a tenant of an agricultural holding from a superior landlord, and a cottage had been sub-let to the defendant, who was never F employed on the farm, in 1933. But the plaintiff had been granted a new tenancy of the whole farm on Feb. 2, 1959, so that the original tenancy, out of which the defendant's sub-tenancy was created, must have come to an end, and consequently that case was not really similar to the present. Indeed, JUDGE HAROLD BROWN observed in the course of his judgment that it was

G "perfectly clear and common ground that on the termination of the head tenancy by surrender or otherwise the defendant would have no protection as against the head landlord."

The result is that a situation must have occurred in that case in which the plaintiff was no longer the defendant's landlord, and the superior landlord was entitled to recover possession against the defendant, and the sub-tenant, i.e., H the defendant, had ceased to have the protection of the Rent Acts. In the present case the landlord's agricultural tenancy of the whole farm is still in operation. There is no question of his being evicted, and the only question is whether he can evict the defendant, the sub-tenant, under a tenancy of a cottage without material land created by the landlord.

In the High Court there appears to be no reported decision covering the I precise question to be decided, though there are numerous cases which are said to have some bearing on the matter. As pointed out by WILLMER, L.J., in his judgment, the dwelling-house or cottage let to the tenant in the present case is within the monetary limits specified in the Rent Acts, and the letting to the tenant was not a letting of "a house let together with land other than the site of the house" as required for the exclusion in proviso (iii) to s. 12 (2) of the Act of 1920; and the tenant is not

(25) Unreported.

"the person responsible for the control (whether as tenant or as servant or agent of the tenant) of the farming of the holding" A as required for the exclusion in para. 1 of Sch. 7 to the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1948. The natural assumption, therefore, would be that the tenant is the kind of tenant which the Rent Acts are designed to protect.

The argument for the landlord depends on the assumption that, because the cottage forms part of a holding of two hundred acres which has been originally let for agricultural purposes, the holding and each and every part of it are irretrievably stamped with the agricultural exemption from the Rent Acts which occurred on that letting. Reliance is placed on decisions of this court and the Divisional Court which have conferred exemption from the Rent Acts in the case of land owned by the Crown; Clark v. Downes (26); Wirral Estates, Ltd. v. Shaw (27); Rudler v. Franks (28); or, in the case of property belonging to a local authority, Percy G. Moore, Ltd. v. Stretch (29). WILLMER, L.J., has quoted passages from these decisions and so I need not repeat these. B C

Admittedly, if the landlord's tenancy of the farm came to an end, the tenant would find that he was not protected against the superior landlord: Cow v. Casey (30); Baron Sherwood v. Moody (31); Knight v. Olive (32). But support can be found for the view that a tenant might be protected against his lessor, though not protected against title paramount, in Dudley and District Benefit Building Society v. Emerson (33). It seems to me that it is necessary, in applying the Rent Acts, to ascertain in any given case who is the landlord and who is the tenant and which is the letting to which the provisions of the material Act are referring: see the observations of GREER, L.J., in Lloyd v. Cook (34); and those of SARGANT, J., in Prout v. Hunter (35). It appears quite clearly from the last-mentioned case, and also from Glossop v. Ashley (36) that a sub-letting of a dwelling-house may affect the position of that house and the sub-tenant in respect of the Rent Acts. D E

As I suggested earlier in this judgment, in my view it is the letting of the house which is the determining factor in the construction of those difficult Acts, which, as SCRUTTON, L.J. (37) and SARGANT, J. (38), have pointed out, were designed to protect the occupying tenant. In my opinion the material letting in the present case is the letting of this cottage by the landlord to the tenant, and this court is not concerned for the present purpose with the manner in which the landlord acquired a tenancy of the whole of his holding. I respectfully concur in the observations of WILLMER, L.J., with which I agree entirely. The learned county court judge in my opinion came to a wrong conclusion and the appeal should be allowed. F G

Appeal allowed. Leave to appeal to the House of Lords granted.

Solicitors: Helder, Roberts & Co., agents for John A. Behn, Twyford & Reece, Liverpool (for the tenant); Hatchett Jones & Co., agents for Hodgson & Sons, Preston (for the landlord).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

---

(26) [1931] All E.R. Rep. 157. (27) [1932] All E.R. Rep. 43; [1932] 2 K.B. 247.
(28) [1947] K.B. 530. (29) [1951] 1 All E.R. 228.
(30) [1949] 1 All E.R. 197; [1949] 1 K.B. 474. (31) [1952] 1 All E.R. 389.
(32) [1954] 1 All E.R. 701; [1954] 1 Q.B. 514.
(33) [1949] 2 All E.R. 252; [1949] Ch. 707.
(34) [1928] All E.R. Rep. at p. 212; [1929] 1 K.B. at p. 135.
(35) [1924] All E.R. Rep. at p. 58; [1924] 2 K.B. at p. 744.
(36) [1922] 1 K.B. 1. (37) In Glossop v. Ashley, [1922] 1 K.B. at p. 8.
(38) In Prout v. Hunter, [1924] All E.R. Rep. at p. 58; [1924] 2 K.B. at p. 745.

A

ATTORNEY-GENERAL FOR NORTHERN IRELAND v. GALLAGHER.

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Lord Reid, Lord Goddard, Lord Tucker, Lord Denning and Lord Morris of Borth-y-Gest), June 19, 20, 21, July 20, 1961.]

B Criminal Law—Insanity—Time to which test by M'Naghten rules should be related—Disease of the mind not impairing knowledge when quiescent—Psychopathic condition—Explosive outburst induced by drink.

Criminal Law—Appeal—House of Lords—Jurisdiction—Whether appeal limited to point of law certified by court below—Administration of Justice Act, 1960 (8 & 9 Eliz. 2 c. 65), s. 1 (2).

C On appeal to the House of Lords in a criminal cause or matter, pursuant to s. 1 (2) of the Administration of Justice Act, 1960, the House of Lords is not limited to the point of law of general public importance that has been certified under s. 1 (2) to be involved in the decision of the court below, or to matters consequential on the decision of that point, but has jurisdiction to dispose of the appeal and, if necessary for the purpose, to consider other matters than the question certified (see p. 304, letter D, p. 305, letter D, D p. 305, letter F, and p. 314, letter I, post.)

The accused was, or probably was, according to the medical evidence, a psychopath, suffering from a disease of the mind. Under certain circumstances, one of which was the taking of drink, he was liable to have emotional outbursts of a violent character. During such an outburst it was, E according to medical evidence for the defence, doubtful whether the accused knew the nature of his acts or, if they were criminal, that they were wrong. According to medical evidence for the prosecution, the disease produced lack of self-control, but did not impair appreciation of the nature of facts or knowledge that they were wrong. In September, 1960, when his mental disease was quiescent, the accused formed an intention to kill his wife, F knowing that to be wrong. He bought drink on the morning of the alleged crime, but it was not established by evidence whether he drank it before or after the homicide. The accused killed his wife. He was indicted for murder. He pleaded not guilty, the defence being insanity and, alternatively, incapacity from drink to form the intent necessary to constitute murder. In summing-up to the jury in Northern Ireland, where the G defence of diminished responsibility was not available in law*, the Lord Chief Justice emphasised to the jury the importance of the time at which the test of insanity according to the M'Naghten rules should be applied, directing the jury's attention to the accused's mental state at the time before he bought drink on that morning. The jury found the accused guilty of murder, but the Court of Criminal Appeal in Northern Ireland allowed H an appeal on the ground of misdirection in that the jury should have been directed to apply the test of insanity solely to the time of the homicide. On appeal by the Crown,

Held: the verdict at the trial should be restored because—

(i) the effect of the summing-up as a whole was that the jury were told that they should consider whether the mental disease from which the I accused was suffering was one in which violent outbursts produced absence of knowledge of the nature and quality of the act or of its wrongfulness or one in which they merely produced lack or loss of self-control (see p. 311, letter I, and p. 304, letter F, and letter E, post); accordingly, there had not been any misdirection, and the defence of insanity was not established.

(ii) (per LORD DENNING) the accused was guilty of murder whether he knew at the time when he killed his wife that to do so was wrong or did not know it, for, if he did not know it, he had induced in himself by intoxication the lack of knowledge of wrongfulness, which knowledge he had previously possessed notwithstanding his mental disease (see p. 314, letter D, post).

* Section 2 of the Homicide Act, 1957, which provides the defence of diminished responsibility, does not apply to Northern Ireland (see s. 17 (3)).

Appeal allowed.

[Editorial Note. LORD TUCKER also relied on the proviso, and held that there had been no miscarriage of justice (see p. 312, letter B, post). The question of the jurisdiction of the House of Lords on appeal in a criminal matter pursuant to a certificate was raised in Sykes v. Director of Public Prosecutions (ante, p. 33), but the particular submission there advanced by the Crown, viz., that the appellant was limited to the point certified but the respondent was not (see p. 43, ante), put forward a construction of the enactment that is not discussed in the opinions in the present case.

As to the defences of insanity and the effect in law of drunkenness, see 10 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 287, 290, paras. 530, 536; and for cases on the subject, see 14 DIGEST (Repl.) 60-65, 234-283, 69-72, 315-339.

For the Administration of Justice Act, 1960, s. 1, see 40 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 208.]

Cases referred to:

Bedder v. Director of Public Prosecutions, [1954] 2 All E.R. 801; 38 Cr. App. Rep. 133; [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1119; 15 Digest (Repl.) 940, 9013.

Director of Public Prosecutions v. Beard, [1920] All E.R. Rep. 21; [1920] A.C. 479; sub nom. R. v. Beard, 89 L.J.K.B. 437; 122 L.T. 625; 84 J.P. 129; 26 Cox, C.C. 573; 14 Cr. App. Rep. 159; 14 Digest (Repl.) 71, 332.

Milne v. City of London Police Comr., Leonard v. Same, Boundford v. Same, [1939] 3 All E.R. 399; [1940] A.C. 1; 108 L.J.K.B. 625; 161 L.T. 65; 103 J.P. 299; 31 Cox, C.C. 305; 27 Cr. App. Rep. 90; 8 Digest (Repl.) 675, 162.

M'Naghten's Case, (1843), 10 Cl. & Fin. 200; 8 E.R. 718; sub nom. McNaughton's Case, 4 State Tr. N.S. 847; 1 Town St. Tr. 314; 1 Car. & Kir. 130, n.; 14 Digest (Repl.) 60, 246.

R. v. Davis, (1881), 14 Cox, C.C. 563; 14 Digest (Repl.) 70, 319.

R. v. McCarthy, [1954] 2 All E.R. 262; [1954] 2 Q.B. 105; 38 Cr. App. Rep. 74; [1954] 2 W.L.R. 1044; 14 Digest (Repl.) 71, 330.

R. v. Meade, [1909] 1 K.B. 895; 78 L.J.K.B. 476; 73 J.P. 239; 2 Cr. App. Rep. 54; 14 Digest (Repl.) 71, 328.

R. v. Moore, (1852), 3 Car. & Kir. 319; 175 E.R. 571; 14 Digest (Repl.) 72, 333.

Appeal.

Appeal by leave of the House of Lords by the Crown from an order of the Court of Criminal Appeal of Northern Ireland (BLACK and CURRAN, L.JJ., and SHEIL, J.) dated Apr. 5, 1961, quashing a conviction of the respondent, Patrick Gallagher, on Feb. 2, 1961, at Belfast Assizes before LORD MACDERMOTT, C.J., sitting with a jury, for murder. The facts are set out in the opinion of LORD TUCKER, p. 306, letter B, to p. 307, letter D, post.

The Attorney-General for Northern Ireland (W. Brian Maginess, Q.C.), C. A. Nicholson, Q.C., and H. Bowman (all of the Bar of Northern Ireland) for the Crown.

B. Kelly, Q.C., and R. Ferguson (both of the Bar of Northern Ireland) for the respondent.

Their Lordships took time for consideration.

July 20. The following opinions were read.

LORD REID: My Lords, the respondent, Patrick Gallagher, was convicted at Belfast of the murder of his wife on Sept. 7, 1960. There is no doubt that

A he killed her. The defence was insanity or, alternatively, that he was so drunk when he killed her as to be incapable of having any intent to kill her or do her grievous bodily harm. So there was no room for a verdict of not guilty; if the defence had been successful, the verdict would have been guilty but insane or manslaughter. The respondent appealed to the Court of Criminal Appeal of Northern Ireland on the ground of misdirection of the jury by the trial judge, B LORD MACDERMOTT, C.J. That court held that there had been misdirection and that the verdict of murder could not stand; they further held that, in the circumstances, they could not substitute either a verdict of guilty but insane or a verdict of manslaughter. They, therefore, directed a verdict of acquittal to be entered. The Attorney-General for Northern Ireland thereupon applied under the provisions of the Administration of Justice Act, 1960, for a certificate C that a point of law of general public importance was involved and for leave to appeal to this House. The court granted a certificate, but refused leave to appeal. Leave to appeal was later given by this House.

Before coming to the certificate, I must set out the facts so far as they are necessary for its consideration. The respondent had frequently used violence towards his wife, generally after taking drink. The medical evidence about his D mental condition was conflicting, but there was evidence that he is an aggressive psychopath, that this is a disease of the mind which is quiescent for considerable periods but manifests itself from time to time in explosive outbursts, and that taking drink is likely to cause an outburst. For some time before Sept. 7, 1960, the respondent had been in a mental hospital. On that date he was allowed to go to Omagh. There he bought a knife and a bottle of whisky. He was seen E cycling towards his home, and two hours later he entered a neighbour's house under the influence of alcohol and said that he had killed his wife. She was found dead, having sustained extensive and brutal injuries from the knife and a hammer. The respondent had drunk the greater part of the bottle of whisky either before or after the killing or both.

I can now come to the certificate. The court certified that

F "the following point of law of general public importance was involved in the said decision:—Whether a person in a psychopathic condition which is quiescent may become insane (within the meaning of the rules in M'Naghten's Case (1)) as the result of the voluntary consumption by him of intoxicating liquor, if the effect of that intoxicating liquor is to bring about an explosive outburst in the course of a mental disease although the disease G was not itself caused by intoxicating liquor."

One of the Crown's arguments submitted to the Court of Criminal Appeal and to this House was that, even if at the moment of killing his wife the respondent was incapable of knowing the nature and quality of his act or knowing that he was doing wrong, and even if that was a consequence or manifestation of his mental disease—of his being a psychopath liable to explosive outbursts— H yet the defence of insanity was not open to him because before taking the drink, when there was no defect in his reason, he had clearly evinced an intention to kill his wife and any temporary derangement of his reason at the time of the killing was the result of his own voluntary act in taking the drink. In my opinion, this is the point and the only point of law raised by the certificate. It is, I think, assumed in the certificate that, during an "explosive outburst", I the person's reason is dethroned to the extent required by the M'Naghten rules (2). Whether that assumption was justifiable on the evidence may be questionable, but the argument before the Court of Criminal Appeal appears to have proceeded on the footing that there was just sufficient evidence to entitle a jury to come to that conclusion if so minded.

The first argument submitted by counsel for the respondent was that, under the provisions of the Act of 1960, this House had no power or jurisdiction to decide any question beyond that set out in the certificate. If a decision of that question is sufficient to dispose of the whole case, then this House can do that but not otherwise. Counsel then submitted that no matter how the question of law in the certificate is dealt with, that cannot lead to substituting another verdict for the verdict of acquittal entered by the Court of Criminal Appeal. This must, I think, have been the view of that court, because the ground on which they refused to grant leave to appeal to this House was

(1) (1843), 10 Cl. & Fin. 200. (2) (1843), 10 Cl. & Fin. 200.

> "that in the opinion of this court a ruling on this point of law in favour of the Crown's contention would not lead to a reversal of the decision of this court."

That argument depends on the proper construction of s. 1 of the Administration of Justice Act, 1960, which is in the following terms (3):—

> "(1) Subject to the provisions of this section, an appeal shall lie to the House of Lords, at the instance of the defendant or the prosecutor,—(a) from any decision of a Divisional Court of the Queen's Bench Division in a criminal cause or matter; (b) from any decision of the Court of Criminal Appeal on an appeal to that court.
>
> "(2) No appeal shall lie under this section except with the leave of the court below or of the House of Lords; and such leave shall not be granted unless it is certified by the court below that a point of law of general public importance is involved in the decision and it appears to that court or to the House of Lords, as the case may be, that the point is one which ought to be considered by that House.
>
> "(3) Section 5 of the Appellate Jurisdiction Act, 1876 (which regulates the composition of the House of Lords for the hearing and determination of appeals) shall apply to the hearing and determination of an appeal or application for leave to appeal under this section as it applies to the hearing and determination of an appeal under that Act; and any order of that House which provides for the hearing of such applications by a committee constituted in accordance with the said s. 5 may direct that the decision of that committee shall be taken on behalf of the House.
>
> "(4) For the purpose of disposing of an appeal under this section the House of Lords may exercise any powers of the court below or may remit the case to that court.
>
> "(5) In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires, 'leave to appeal' means leave to appeal to the House of Lords under this section."

Subsection (1) allows an "appeal" from a "decision" of the court below, and sub-s. (4) authorises this House in "disposing of" the appeal to "exercise any powers of the court below". So far there is nothing to suggest that the powers and duties of this House in this matter are different from or more limited than its powers and duties in ordinary appeals. The difficulty arises from sub-s. (2), which limits the grounds on which leave to appeal can be granted. First, there must be a certificate by the court below that a point of law of general public importance is involved in the decision, i.e., in the decision of the court below. And then comes the provision which causes the difficulty; before the court below or this House can grant leave, it must appear that "the point is one which ought to be considered" by this House. Taken by themselves, these last words might seem to indicate that all that this House is to do is to consider (which must include deciding) the point of law. But that cannot be right because there would then be no reason for authorising this House to exercise "any powers of the court below". Moreover, a limited consultative jurisdiction of this kind would

(3) In the application of the Administration of Justice Act, 1960, to Northern Ireland, references to the Court of Criminal Appeal and the Divisional Court of the Queen's Bench Division are modified by ibid., s. 18 (4), Sch. 2, Pt. 1, paras. 1, 2, and a specific modification of ibid., s. 1, is made by Sch. 2, Pt. 2; see 40 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 226, 228, 229.

A be a novelty in United Kingdom procedure and, if that were all that this House can do, the procedure could hardly be called an "appeal" from the "decision" of the court below. The point of law is not the decision—it is only "involved in the decision". The decision in the present case was the substitution of a verdict of acquittal for the verdict of murder, and that is the decision from which the present appeal lies. The point certified by the Court of Criminal Appeal is B certified by them as having been "involved in the decision".

To make the issue clearer, let me suppose a case where the respondent in this House argued two points in the court below either of which, if right, entitled him to succeed. The court below, having decided one in his favour, might well say it was unnecessary to consider the second. Then, the first point having been certified, this House holds that the court below was wrong. What is then C to happen? It cannot reasonably be supposed that Parliament intended that the respondent is to have no opportunity of having his second point considered so that his conviction must stand. So it must either be considered by this House or by the court below. It is true that sub-s. (4) authorises a remit to that court, but that is only for the purpose of disposing of the appeal to this House. I can find nothing to authorise a remit to the court below directing it to re-open and D re-hear the case and come to a fresh decision. So in that case at least this House must go beyond the point certified and hear and decide the second point which may have no connexion at all with the first. If in such a case this House must exercise the whole of its ordinary functions on appeal, what is there to show that, in some other class of case, it is not to do so? The respondent points to the contrast between the language of s. 1 (2) of the Act of 1960 and the language of E s. 6 (1) of the Criminal Appeal (Northern Ireland) Act, 1930 (which is the same as in the corresponding English Act). Under the latter (4), the Attorney-General had to certify that "it is desirable in the public interest that a further appeal should be brought"; under the Act of 1960 it must appear "that the point is one which ought to be considered by that House"; under the old procedure, it was decided in Milne v. City of London Police Comr. (5) that it was open to the F appellant to take any point before this House, and the argument is that the change of language in the Act of 1960 clearly shows an intention to alter this.

In my judgment, the change of language can properly be regarded as indicating an intention to make some alteration, but the question remains—What was the alteration which was intended? In deciding that well-settled principles require us to go to the words of the new Act, we can have in mind the circumstances G when the Act was passed and the mischief which then existed so far as these are common knowledge, but we can only use these matters as an aid to the construction of the words which Parliament has used. We cannot encroach on its legislative function by reading in some limitation which we may think was probably intended but which cannot be inferred from the words of the Act.

If I had to consider the provisions of sub-s. (2) without reference to the earlier H law, I would have no doubt that the purpose of sub-s. (2) is merely to define the conditions which must be satisfied before leave can be given and that, once leave has been given, its purpose is spent. The court below must certify that a point of law of general public importance is involved; then leave is not to be granted unless further it "appears", or is thought by that court or this House in deciding whether to give leave, that the point is one which ought to be con- I sidered by this House. I would not infer a prohibition against this House considering anything else but that point, and I would find no basis for an inference that this House is permitted to consider some further points but not others which it could normally consider in an ordinary appeal. It is familiar and well known that one thing which this House considers in deciding whether to give leave in a civil case is whether the case involves a point of law which ought to be considered by this House. But, once leave is given, this House can and does consider other points as well. Subsection (2) could well mean that, whereas in civil cases the existence of such a point is only one element, though an important element, in deciding whether to give leave, in criminal cases, it is an indispensable element. There was no such indispensable element under the former law; so far as its language went, the Attorney-General could have acted on any ground that seemed sufficient to him to warrant a certificate that it was desirable in the public interest that a further appeal should be brought. Of course I do not say that this was the reason for the change of language. I only say that it is not an inevitable inference from the change of language that it must have been intended to limit the scope of the appeal once leave had been given.

(4) Cf., the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, s. 1 (6); 5 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 927.

(5) [1939] 3 All E.R. 399; [1940] A.C. 1.

As the proper construction of this section raises a new and important issue, I do not wish to go further than is necessary to decide this case. Others regarding it in the light of different facts may be more successful than I have been in finding in the terms of the section some basis for an implication that, in hearing an appeal under it, the powers of this House are in some way limited. This is a case in which the question of law certified and the question whether there was misdirection are not entirely unrelated. They are different questions because, even if I agree with the view of the Court of Criminal Appeal on the question of law certified—and I do agree with what I understand to be their view—I can still hold that there was no misdirection. So a decision that there was no misdirection is in no way merely consequential on a decision on the point of law certified. It is, therefore, necessary for me to hold, as I do, that the section does not limit this House to the question certified and matters consequential on its decision of that question. But I do not have to decide whether it is open to an appellant to raise matters wholly unrelated to the question certified.

On the question of misdirection, I have had an opportunity of reading the speech about to be delivered by my noble and learned friend, LORD TUCKER. I agree with it, and, in particular, I wish to add that I entirely agree with his view that absurd and disastrous consequences can result from the present limitation of the powers of the Courts of Criminal Appeal. Accordingly, I move your Lordships that this appeal should be allowed and the verdict of murder restored.

LORD GODDARD: My Lords, in my opinion, this appeal should be allowed and the verdict and sentence passed at the trial restored. I have had an opportunity of reading the opinion about to be delivered by my noble and learned friend, LORD TUCKER, who has fully and carefully analysed the medical evidence, and I agree with his conclusions. I would, however, say that, despite the somewhat guarded admission of the Attorney-General before the Court of Criminal Appeal of Northern Ireland, there was not, in my opinion, any evidence of insanity; at the most, evidence only of self-imposed drunkenness. I will assume the respondent was an aggressive psycopath, but no one suggested that such a condition of itself amounted to insanity. I will assume that, on one who suffers from that mental condition, alcohol can have an explosive effect. This means no more than that drink would, or at most might, result in a loss of self-control. But to admit that as a defence would be to allow self-imposed intoxication to be set up as a defence of insanity, a proposition which was emphatically negatived by this House in Director of Public Prosecutions v. Beard (6). Moreover, there was no evidence whether the respondent consumed the whisky before or after he attacked his wife. No one suggested that, at the time of his trial, he was insane; he gave a reasonably coherent account of what he had done and why he did it directly or very soon after the killing, but he gave no evidence at his trial and has never suggested that he did not know what he was doing when he killed his wife. In my opinion, there was no misdirection by the Lord Chief Justice (LORD MACDERMOTT); it was most important to consider what the mental state of this man was when he set out in the morning to visit his wife, and equally important to consider his condition after he had killed her. When

(6) [1920] All E.R. Rep. 21; [1920] A.C. 479.

A a defence of insanity is raised, there is seldom evidence of witnesses who saw the killing; it has to be inferred in so many cases from the history of the accused before and after the actual deed. The defence could only rely on the evidence of Dr. Dawson, who to his credit was careful to emphasise that he could not be positive. In my opinion, his evidence does not support the onus which was on the respondent to establish insanity.

B The other matter which was argued on the appeal, whether this House is confined merely to answering the question submitted as one of general public importance has, I admit, caused me some difficulty. Reading sub-s. (2) of s. 1 alone of the Administration of Justice Act, 1960, would seem to support the view that the House is confined to a consideration of the point certified by the court below. But sub-s. (2) requires the House to dispose of the appeal and C enables it to exercise any powers of the court below. It may well be in many cases that the answer to the specific question will dispose of the appeal, as in the case of the appeal recently before the House (7) where the question submitted was whether there is still such an offence as misprision of felony. An answer in the affirmative upheld the decision of the trial court and no further question arose or could arise. But, for the reasons given by my noble and learned D friend, LORD REID, it is clear that this may not be always the case, yet the House must dispose not merely of the question certified but of the appeal, and, if to enable this to be done it becomes necessary to consider other matters, in my opinion they must have power to do so.

I would add that this case affords a striking illustration of what may result from the Court of Criminal Appeal in Northern Ireland, as in England, having E no power to order a new trial in an appropriate case. Had it not been possible for the court to certify that a point of law of general importance arose in the case and for this House to hold that it was fit for their consideration, a man who had brutally murdered his wife and whom a jury had declined to find was insane would have had to be set at liberty free of any consequence of his crime.

F LORD TUCKER: My Lords, I agree that, once the court from which the appeal is brought has certified that a point of law of general public importance is involved in the decision, and leave to appeal has been given, either by that court, or this House, the jurisdiction of this House to hear the appeal is established, and there is nothing in the Administration of Justice Act, 1960, in any way limiting its jurisdiction. It will always be a matter for the exercise of G its discretion whether to allow a point in no way connected with the certified point of law to be argued on the appeal, and it is not to be assumed from the decision in this case that an appellant can, as a matter of right, raise any such point. In the present case, I consider the point certified of necessity requires an examination of the decision of the Court of Criminal Appeal, and, when this decision is looked at, it becomes clear that, in order to dispose of the appeal, the H direction of the Lord Chief Justice (LORD MACDERMOTT) to the jury on the law with regard to the defence of insanity, as applied to the evidence given at the trial, must be considered.

The appeal is brought by the Attorney-General for Northern Ireland under the provisions of s. 1 and s. 2 of the Administration of Justice Act, 1960, against the order of the Court of Criminal Appeal of Northern Ireland dated Apr. 5, 1961, whereby it was ordered that the respondent's appeal from his conviction for I murder be allowed and judgment and verdict of acquittal be entered on the indictment whereon he was convicted. That the respondent killed his wife is beyond all question, and in the Court of Criminal Appeal and in this House it was common ground that the only possible verdicts were (i) guilty of murder; (ii) guilty of manslaughter; (iii) guilty but insane. A verdict of acquittal, i.e., not guilty, is the one verdict which no reasonable jury could have returned, yet this is the verdict which the Court of Criminal Appeal has directed to be entered on the indictment. This involves no criticism of the Court of Criminal Appeal, but serves to expose the absurd and disastrous consequences which may result from the restrictions which Parliament has imposed on the powers of the Courts of Criminal Appeal in Northern Ireland and in England. The language of the relevant statutes is identical, and does not in any case permit an order for a new trial nor, in a case such as the present, give the court any discretionary powers with regard to verdict or sentence.

(7) Sykes v. Director of Public Prosecutions, ante, p. 33.

At the trial before the Lord Chief Justice of Northern Ireland and a jury at the winter assizes in Belfast from Jan. 30 to Feb. 2, 1961, the respondent was indicted for the murder of his wife Rose Gallagher on Sept. 7, 1960. He pleaded not guilty, and, though, of course, no admission was or could be made, there was no attempt to challenge the evidence of the prosecution to the effect that the respondent killed his wife. The defence relied on was that he was insane at the time within the meaning of the M'Naghten rules (8) or, in the alternative, was, by reason of drink, incapable of forming the intent necessary to constitute murder and, therefore, guilty only of manslaughter. The defence of diminished responsibility is not available in Northern Ireland (9). The following is an outline of the facts proved by the uncontradicted evidence of witnesses or from admissions made by the respondent in statements to police or other persons. The respondent and his wife had been married for about sixteen years, during which time there were frequent quarrels, generally when he had taken drink, and on occasions he used violence towards her. In 1957, she obtained a separation order against him and he went to England. He was injured at work there, and in 1959 returned to Ireland and lived again with his wife and family near Omagh. His drinking habits increased and there were further quarrels. On May 26, 1960, there was a serious quarrel. A doctor was sent for who persuaded him to go for treatment to a mental hospital in Omagh, where he was admitted as a temporary patient. On June 8 he was allowed to go home on a ninety-day trial. He again started drinking and assaulted his wife. On July 19 she refused to let him in and he went to his father's house. The doctor (Lagan) visited him there and arranged for his readmission to the mental hospital. By mid-August his condition had improved and he was allowed to go into Omagh. On Aug. 15 his wife obtained an order for maintenance against him for £3 a week. On Sept. 6 he was seen by Dr. Gray at the hospital, when he appeared to be cheerful and perfectly normal. On Sept. 7 Mrs. Gallagher was alone in the house after the children left for school. At 9.45 the respondent left the hospital and went into Omagh where he bought a "Sky-line" knife. He then entered a public house where he bought a bottle of Guinness and a bottle of Power's whisky. Shortly after this, he was seen riding a cycle along a road which was one of the routes leading to his wife's house to reach which would take him about half an hour. At 1.30 p.m., Miss Aitken and Mrs. Speers, who lived next door to Mrs. Gallagher, heard a noise and saw the respondent collapsing on the kitchen floor. He had blood on his clothes and hands and was drunk. They threw water on him. When he had recovered, they asked him what had happened to him. He said that he had killed his wife. One of them said "Oh, no, you didn't", and he replied: "Come round and see". They went to the house and found Mrs. Gallagher's body in the bed covered with bedclothes up to her neck and blood on the floor. They took the respondent back to their house, locked the door of Mrs. Gallagher's house and sent for the police. When the police arrived, they found Mrs. Gallagher's body naked except for a pair of shoes. There were terrible injuries to her head and body. The head and face were covered in blood and the sheets saturated. A "Sky-line" knife with a seven-inch blade stained with blood to the hilt was found in the room. On the floor beneath the bed was an old hammer, the head of which was stained with blood. On the chest of drawers was a bottle of Power's whisky containing about two

(8) (1843), 10 Cl. & Fin. 200. (9) See the Homicide Act, 1957, s. 2, s. 17 (3).

A glasses. There were blood stains on the cellophane with which the bottle was wrapped. At about 4.15 p.m., the respondent at Omagh Police Station said to Sergeant Coyle: "I have no regrets: she gave me a hell of a life these past three years". Later, after caution, he said: "I made up my mind to kill her about a fortnight or three weeks ago". Shortly after 7 p.m., he said: "I am going to open up my mind to you". He was told: "You don't have to" and B again cautioned. He said:

> "I will tell you all. I left hospital this morning about half past nine on parole given to me by Dr. Johnson. I went into Wellworth's and bought a knife at five and three and a bottle of aspirins. After I had killed the wife I was going to do myself in by first taking the aspirins to deaden the pain and then use the knife on myself. I went into Yarrow's pub in C Bridge Street and drank a bottle of Guinness and bought a bottle of whisky for £2. I went out on the bicycle and hid it. You fellows will have bother getting it. I went into the house at almost half past eleven and the wife was on her own. I asked her to take me back but she wouldn't. I then drank half of the whisky."

D The medical evidence showed that sexual intercourse had taken place which could have occurred at any time from a day or two before death until after death.

My Lords, I have found it necessary to set out this evidence in some detail, as it will be observed that nowhere does the respondent suggest that at any time he did not know the nature and quality of the act which he did or that he did E not know it was wrong. Nor does he ever say that he was drunk when he did it or show any regret for that which he had done. He gave no evidence at his trial. None the less the defence was that he was

> "labouring under such a defect of reason, from disease of the mind, as not to know the nature and quality of the act he was doing, or if he did know it, that he did not know what he was doing was wrong."

F

It was sought to establish this defence by expert medical evidence directed to prove that the respondent is what is called "a psychopath", the characteristics of which are "emotional immaturity and instability; they live in themselves and lack social sense; they tend to yield to their instincts readily and lack self-control". There are different types of psychopaths, and the respondent is said G to be of the aggressive type, i.e., one who with provocation or on taking alcohol is apt to have a severe aggressive reaction or emotional outburst which may result in loss of control. Some of the medical witnesses for the prosecution had found no signs of psychopathy in the respondent, but they were all prepared to agree either that he was probably a psychopath or that he might possibly be one. One witness thought he was probably an "inadequate psychopath" rather H than an "aggressive psychopath", but the vital difference between the expert medical witnesses for the prosecution and Dr. Dawson for the defence was whether a man suffering from this type of disease of the mind, when he has one of these emotional outbursts, does or does not know the nature and quality of his acts or, assuming such acts to be criminal, that they are wrong. The prosecution's evidence was that this type of disease of the mind merely produces lack I of self-control and does not impair a man's appreciation of the nature of his acts or knowledge that they are wrong. Dr. Dawson for the defence was not prepared to say positively that such a disease does produce this result, but expressed a doubt whether a man suffering from this disease would, in one of these outbursts, know the nature of his acts or that they were wrong. Assuming for the moment that such a doubt, if accepted by the jury in preference to the positive assertions to the contrary by the prosecution witnesses, would suffice to establish the defence, the fact remains that, if the jury rejected the defence evidence as to the nature of the mental disease and accepted the evidence for the prosecution that the respondent was never suffering from a disease of the mind which would produce anything more than lack of control, the defence would fail in limine. The defence have not shown that the disease of the mind proved is of the kind which will produce the required results from their point of view. It was, I think, with this in mind that the Lord Chief Justice, having regard to the nature of the evidence, focussed the attention of the jury on the respondent's mental condition at 9.45 a.m. when he left the hospital. Assuming that he was then an aggressive psychopath likely to have an explosive outburst under certain circumstances, would such outburst produce nothing more than lack of self-control? If so, he would for present purposes be regarded as a normal being responsible in law for his actions who could not improve his case by the consumption of alcohol, unless such alcohol brought about some quite different type of disease such as delirium tremens, of which there was no evidence in the present case.

It may be convenient, before turning to the summing-up which the Court of Criminal Appeal have held to contain misdirections, to refer quite shortly to a few passages in the evidence of the medical witnesses which summarise the effect of their evidence. The evidence of these witnesses was dealt with by the Lord Chief Justice in his summing-up in detail, and it is not suggested that he did not place before the jury a clear and accurate assessment of its effect. The evidence of Dr. Lagan, who is not a mental expert, was summarised by the Lord Chief Justice as follows:

> "Now, his evidence would seem to me to amount, in general words, to this: That this man is a man who has been subject to violence for no apparent reason; he's liable to something that might be called a brain storm; and Dr. Lagan added that he thought that he would have little knowledge of what he was doing at the time. He added that he was always sorry afterwards; and it's quite obvious from the doctor's evidence as to the position on earlier occasions . . . that he regarded him as 'mental'—at least in some degree—not just a drunkard—but a man 'mental' in some degree."

Dr. Gray had had long experience in mental institutions. He first saw the respondent on May 26, 1960. He found him mildly depressed, quite rational and rather emotional. He subsequently saw him quite often and found no signs of mental abnormality. In cross-examination, he said: "He possibly is a case of an aggressive psychopathic personality". He added:

> "In my opinion, leaving out of account any question of alcohol, the [respondent] would have known what he was doing when he struck these blows. If he knew what he was doing, he would have known that it was wrong."

He added that he had never seen him in a violent state and couldn't say what his condition would be when committing violence. Dr. Johnston was the resident medical superintendent of the mental hospital in Omagh. He saw the respondent at irregular intervals in the course of his routine work. He had allowed him out on parole, and at that time saw no evidence of mental defect. In cross-examination, he agreed that he was "probably" or "possibly" a psychopath. His intellectual age would be about nine or ten, the maximum in this scale being fifteen. He said his experience of an aggressive psychopath was that they are clear as to what happened during the outburst. He added that, if a psychopath was under the influence of drink, it would be more probable that his appreciation of what he was doing would be more limited. He concluded:

> "Knowing this man and having heard the circumstances of this case and assuming he did these things to his wife, my opinion is that he knew what he was doing; in my opinion he knew what he was doing was wrong."

It may be convenient to refer at once to the passage in the summing-up which followed the Lord Chief Justice's reading of this last passage to the jury—which

A he had called the test questions. These questions and the doctor's answers were clearly directed to the state of the respondent's mind at the moment of killing. The learned judge said:

> "Now, if you accept that, it is the end of this defence of insanity, because if you accept that, the man doesn't qualify, according to the rules which have been laid down. He may be a psychopath; he may be abnormal; B he may be mentally defective—but if you accept that opinion of Dr. Johnston's, he is not entitled to succeed in the defence of insanity which we are now discussing."

The effect of the evidence of Dr. Dawson on which the defence of insanity rested is summarised in the following passages:

C "Q.—On that date [i.e., Sept. 7, 1960] what is your opinion about the state of the [respondent's] mind?

"A.—. . . From the description of him when he was found, from the description of the terrible injuries received by his wife, it could be explained by a severe explosive reaction in an aggressive psychopath, probably to some extent, at least, under the influence of drink.

D "Q.—What, in your opinion, was his mental state prior to and at the time of killing her?

"A.—Well—this is presumption purely on what I've heard, and the nature of the injuries, and what I know of the man and of his state when he was discovered—therefore I can't quite honestly go beyond probabilities —but I do feel it is probable that this alleged attack on his wife was carried E out while in one of these explosive reactions. It would seem to me to fit what I have heard. I couldn't go further than that."

In the course of his answer to a further question as to the state of the respondent's mind during the explosive outburst, he said:

> "Assuming I am right in considering that he might be subject to the short-circuit and bomb-like type of reaction; and assuming also, my Lord, F that he may have been under the influence of alcohol, I can only express a very real doubt, either to his having an appreciation of what he was doing, or that even it was wrong—on those assumptions, my Lord, I have given this question, which I knew would be asked, very anxious thought."

Asked to explain the difference between the presence and absence of alcohol he G said:

> "Well, the only distinction I can draw, my Lord, is alcohol would make it still more doubtful as to whether he knew the nature and quality of his act; but even if he hadn't alcohol and was acting under provocation, with an extreme emotional reaction to that provocation, I would still have to express a doubt as to his appreciation of the nature and quality of his act— H a doubt, my Lord."

This is the passage which the Lord Chief Justice in his charge to the jury described as the high-water mark of his evidence. He said:

> "That's as far as he can put it, he says so very fairly. He can't be positive; he can't tell you that this man, in his opinion, didn't know what he was doing or didn't know that it was wrong. He says that for him there's I doubt . . . Alcohol would make it still more doubtful."

These are the conflicting medical views. There is some difference of opinion whether the respondent is in fact an aggressive psychopath. Dr. Dawson says he was, some of the others are prepared to accept that he might be, but the real conflict was whether these explosive reactions or outbursts in the case of an aggressive psychopath merely diminish or destroy the power of self-control, or whether they prevent him having any knowledge of the nature and quality of his act or that it is wrong. It was a conflict with regard to the nature of the disease of the mind from which the respondent was suffering, assuming he had the disease. If the witnesses for the prosecution were right, this disease does not even under provocation or the stimulus of alcohol produce anything more than lack of self-control. If this was the true nature of the disease from which the respondent was suffering at 9.45 a.m. on Sept. 7, 1960, and presumably still suffers today, the defence of insanity fails at the outset. It was, accordingly, in my view, not only permissible but right and proper for the Lord Chief Justice to direct the jury to consider the condition of the man at that time and to tell them, in effect, that the subsequent consumption of alcohol could not assist the defence of insanity. This does not mean that a man can never produce in himself a disease of the mind by the excessive consumption of alcohol, e.g., delirium tremens, and in such a case the question will arise whether the disease so produced results in insanity within the M'Naghten rules (10). This was not such a case. It was not suggested that the respondent became an aggressive psychopath as a consequence of the consumption of alcohol. He was, it was said, an aggressive psychopath liable to outbursts of violence on provocation or under the influence of alcohol or any other exciting cause.

With these observations I turn to the judgment of the Court of Criminal Appeal. They said:

> "The main criticism on behalf of the [respondent] of the Lord Chief Justice's directions to the jury was that he directed them to apply the M'Naghten test (10) not to the time when the [respondent] killed his wife but to the morning of that day before he opened the bottle of whisky. It is pointed out that he so directed the jury both in the early part of his summing-up and also again nearer the end. This is at variance with the specific terms of the M'Naghten rules (10) which definitely fix the crucial time as the time of committing the act. The insanity sought to be relied on in the present case is a very special form of mental aberration. A jury would be entitled, if they accepted Dr. Dawson's evidence, to find that the [respondent] suffered from a disease of the mind which was episodic and that it could only affect the [respondent's] reason during one of the explosive outbursts to which Dr. Dawson referred. If their consideration was directed away from the actual time of the killing to some earlier period in the day when the disease was quiescent they might easily come to the conclusion that the [respondent] was not then suffering from the type of affliction which was being relied on by the defence. As against this it is pointed out that time and time again throughout the summing-up the Lord Chief Justice recurs to the questions 'Did the [respondent] know what he was doing and did he know that what he was doing was wrong?', and that on every occasion he relates these questions to the time of the fatal acts. This would be a conclusive answer if we could be sure that the jury in deciding the issue of insanity addressed themselves to these questions. No one can say what happened in the jury room. If the jury followed in their deliberations the order in which the M'Naghten test (10) was placed before them in the summing-up it is conceivable that they may first have chosen to consider whether the [respondent] was suffering from a mental disease—relating this question to the morning of the crime—and having considered that the answer to this question was in the negative, may have concluded that the defence of insanity failed."

The passages referred to are as follows:

> "Now, the next question I want to take up with you is in some ways, perhaps, the most difficult aspect—at all events for me—of this unfortunate case: When do you apply that M'Naghten test (10) in this case? We have heard a lot here during the course of this trial about intoxication, about (10) (1843), 10 Cl. & Fin. 200.

A brain storms, about explosions, about sudden reactions, and it's very important, as I understand the situation, that we should get a pretty clear notion not only what the test is, but when it's applied.

"There is a question of the man's intoxication—which I will come to presently—and it raises an issue in itself; it also complicates the question of insanity. But, gentlemen, the whole tenor, the whole weight, of the B evidence in this case, as I have found it, is to the effect that if this man was suffering from a disease of the mind, it wasn't of a kind that is produced by drink. Sometimes we got cases where a man has become so sodden with drink that his mind becomes diseased; but that's not this case. There is clear evidence here—and it hasn't been disputed—that such mental peculiarities as he had may have existed when he wasn't taking drink. C There's the evidence of Dr. Johnston, as well as Dr. Gray, that his mind hadn't deteriorated. There's every reason to come to the conclusion that if this man was insane, it wasn't because of drink. I didn't understand that was challenged; and it seems to me that in view of that, and in view of all the circumstances of the case, you have to regard his condition on the 7th of last September, before he touched a drop—on this question of insanity— D later we have to come to another state of affairs—but on this question of insanity, my direction to you is that, in point of law, you must come to your conclusion without reference to the drink that the [respondent] took on Sept. 7; and that you should direct your attention to the state of his mind on that morning before he opened the bottle of whisky.

"This defence of insanity in this case cannot be made good with the aid E of that bottle of whisky. If the [respondent] was responsible for his actions before drinking that morning, he did not, in the eyes of the law, bring himself within the category of insanity which makes a man not responsible for his actions simply by making himself drunk. In other words, if a man is answerable for his acts, he can't bring himself over the line and be deemed not answerable by taking drink."

F And towards the end of his charge:

"Now, apply this test which I have described to you, I am afraid, on several occasions now, in the light of all that evidence, of your own good sense, of what the medical men, out of their experience and skill, have told you, of all the circumstances of the case, and apply it to the situation as it existed that morning before the man started on the whisky bottle. If you come G to the conclusion that, on the balance of probabilities, this man . . . didn't know that what he was doing was wrong, then you should find him guilty, but insane. On the other hand, if you come to the conclusion, remembering that the burden is on him of proving this defence of insanity, that he did know what he was doing when he killed his wife . . . then you should find him guilty on this evidence. Remember the test, again. First of all, was he H suffering from some disease or infirmity of mind? Is it such that he didn't know that what he was doing was wrong; or, if he did know, that he didn't know it was wrong—I'm sorry—I'll put that again. Is he suffering from a disease of the mind? As a result of that, was he prevented from knowing what he was doing; or, if he did know what he was doing, that it was wrong?"

I

My Lords, these passages, or parts of them, taken in isolation and quoted in a text-book on crime might be open to some criticism, but they must be considered in the context of a careful and detailed summing-up dealing with the medical evidence in relation to the particular kind of mental disease relied on by the defence. What the jury were being told was that they should consider whether the particular mental disease from which he was said to be then suffering was of the nature described by Dr. Dawson, namely one in which violent outbursts will produce absence of knowledge of the nature and quality of the act or its wrongness, or merely lack or loss of self control as stated by the prosecution doctors. Reading the summing-up as a whole, this was, in my view, made abundantly clear. If, however, I am wrong in the interpretation I have placed on the summing-up taken as a whole, and if it is to be read in the sense impliedly attributed to it in the grounds on which the Court of Criminal Appeal certified that their decision involved a point of law of general public importance, I would have no hesitation, in view of the overwhelming nature of the evidence, consisting largely of the respondent's own statements, in holding that there had been no miscarriage of justice, and that the proviso to s. 3 (1) of the Criminal Appeal (Northern Ireland) Act, 1930 (11), should be applied.

For these reasons, I would allow the appeal and restore the verdict and sentence passed at the trial.

LORD DENNING: My Lords, every direction which a judge gives to a jury in point of law must be considered against the background of facts which have been proved or admitted in the case. In this case the respondent did not give evidence himself. And the facts proved against him were:—He had a grievance against his wife. She had obtained a maintenance order against him and had been instrumental in getting him detained in a mental hospital. He had made up his mind to kill his wife. He bought a knife for the purpose and a bottle of whisky—either to give himself Dutch courage to do the deed or to drown his conscience after it. He did in fact carry out his intention. He killed his wife with the knife and drank much of the whisky before or after he killed her. There were only two defences raised on his behalf: (i) Insanity; (ii) Drunkenness.

The Lord Chief Justice (LORD MACDERMOTT) directed the jury that the time when they had to consider whether he was insane or not (within the M'Naghten rules (12)) was before he started on the bottle of whisky. "You should direct your attention", he said to them, "to the state of his mind before he opened the bottle of whisky." If he was sane at that time, he could not make good the defence of insanity "with the aid of that bottle of whisky". Immediately after the jury retired, counsel for the respondent took up this point of time. He suggested that it was inaccurate and inconsistent with the M'Naghten rules (12). But the Lord Chief Justice adhered to his view. He declined to modify his charge to the jury on the matter. "If I'm wrong", he said, "I can be put right". It was on this very point of time that the Court of Criminal Appeal reversed him. His direction was, they said, "inconsistent with the M'Naghten rules (12)", which fix the crucial time as "the time of the committing of the act", that is, the time of the killing and not at an earlier time. The question is whether the direction of the Lord Chief Justice as to the time was correct. At least that is how I read the question posed by the Court of Criminal Appeal. It is complicated by the fact that, according to the medical evidence, the respondent was a psychopath. That does not mean that he was insane. But it sharpens the point of the question. He had a disease of the mind. It was quiescent before he started on the whisky. So he was sane then. But the drink may have brought on an explosive outburst in the course of which he killed her. Can he rely on this self-induced defect of reason and put it forward as a defence of insanity?

My Lords, this case differs from all others in the books in that the respondent, whilst sane and sober, before he took to the drink, had already made up his mind to kill his wife. This seems to me to be far worse—and far more deserving of condemnation—than the case of a man who, before getting drunk, has no intention to kill, but afterwards in his cups, whilst drunk, kills another by an act which he would not dream of doing when sober. Yet, by the law of England, in this latter case his drunkenness is no defence even though it has distorted his reason and his will-power. So why should it be a defence in the present case? And is it made any better by saying that the man is a psychopath? The answer

(11) Cf. the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907, s. 4 (1), proviso.
(12) (1843), 10 Cl. & Fin. 200.

A to the question is, I think, that the case falls to be decided by the general principle of English law that, subject to very limited exceptions, drunkenness is no defence to a criminal charge nor is a defect of reason produced by drunkenness. This principle was stated by SIR MATTHEW HALE in his PLEAS OF THE CROWN, Vol. 1, p. 32, in words which I would repeat here:

B "This vice [drunkenness] doth deprive men of the use of reason, and puts many men into a perfect, but temporary phrenzy . . . by the laws of England such a person shall have no privilege by this voluntary contracted madness, but shall have the same judgment as if he were in his right senses."

This general principle can be illustrated by looking at the various ways in which drunkenness may produce a defect of reason: (a) It may impair a man's powers of C perception so that he may not be able to foresee or measure the consequences of his actions as he would if he were sober. Nevertheless, he is not allowed to set up his self-induced want of perception as a defence. Even if he did not himself appreciate that what he was doing was dangerous, nevertheless, if a reasonable man in his place, who was not befuddled with drink, would have appreciated it, he is guilty; see R. v. Meade (13), as explained in Director of Public Prosecutions D v. Beard (14). (b) It may impair a man's power to judge between right or wrong, so that he may do a thing when drunk which he would not dream of doing while sober. He does not realise he is doing wrong. Nevertheless, he is not allowed to set up his self-induced want of moral sense as a defence. In Beard's case (15) LORD BIRKENHEAD, L.C., distinctly ruled that it was not a defence for a drunken man to say he did not know he was doing wrong. (c) It may impair a man's power E of self-control so that he may more readily give way to provocation than if he were sober. Nevertheless, he is not allowed to set up his self-induced want of control as a defence. The acts of provocation are to be assessed, not according to their effect on him personally, but according to the effect they would have on a reasonable man in his place. The law on this point was previously in doubt (see the cases considered in Beard's case (16)), but it has since been resolved by R. v. F McCarthy (17), Bedder v. Director of Public Prosecutions (18) and s. 3 of the Homicide Act, 1957.

The general principle which I have enunciated is subject to two exceptions: (i) If a man is charged with an offence in which a specific intention is essential (as in murder, though not in manslaughter), then evidence of drunkenness, which renders him incapable of forming that intent, is an answer; see Beard's G case (19). This degree of drunkenness is reached when the man is rendered so stupid by drink that he does not know what he is doing (see R. v. Moore (20)) as where, at a christening, a drunken nurse put the baby behind a large fire, taking it for a log of wood (18 GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE, 1748, p. 570); and where a drunken man thought his friend (lying in his bed) was a theatrical dummy placed there and stabbed him to death ("The Times" Jan. 13, 1951). In each of those H cases it would not be murder. But it would be manslaughter. (ii) If a man by drinking brings on a distinct disease of the mind such as delirium tremens, so that he is temporarily insane within the M'Naghten rules (21), that is to say, he does not at the time know what he is doing or that it is wrong, then he has a defence on the ground of insanity; see R. v. Davis (22), and Beard's case (23).

Does the present case come within the general principle or the exceptions I to it? It certainly does not come within the first exception. The respondent was

(13) [1909] 1 K.B. 895.
(14) [1920] All E.R. Rep. at pp. 29, 30; [1920] A.C. at pp. 502-504.
(15) [1920] All E.R. Rep. at p. 31; [1920] A.C. at p. 506.
(16) [1920] All E.R. Rep. at pp. 25, 26; [1920] A.C. at pp. 495-497.
(17) [1954] 2 All E.R. 262; [1954] 2 Q.B. 105.
(18) [1954] 2 All E.R. 801.
(19) [1920] All E.R. Rep. at pp. 28, 30; [1920] A.C. at pp. 501, 504.
(20) (1852), 3 Car. & Kir. 319.
(21) (1843), 10 Cl. & Fin. 200.
(22) (1881), 14 Cox, C.C. 563.
(23) [1920] All E.R. Rep. at pp. 28, 29; [1920] A.C. at pp. 500, 501.

not incapable of forming an intent to kill. Quite the contrary. He knew full well what he was doing. He formed an intent to kill, he carried out his intention and he remembered afterwards what he had done. And the jury, properly directed on the point, have found as much, for they found him guilty of murder. Then does the case come within the second exception? It does not to my mind; for the simple reason that he was not suffering from a disease of the mind brought on by drink. He was suffering from a different disease altogether. As the Lord Chief Justice observed in his summing-up: "If this man was suffering from a disease of the mind, it wasn't of a kind that is produced by drink". So we have here a case of the first impression. The man is a psychopath. That is, he has a disease of the mind which is not produced by drink. But it is quiescent. And, whilst it is quiescent, he forms an intention to kill his wife. He knows it is wrong, but still he means to kill her. Then he gets himself so drunk that he has an explosive outburst and kills his wife. At that moment he knows what he is doing but he does not know it is wrong. So in that respect—in not knowing it is wrong—he has a defect of reason at the moment of killing. If that defect of reason is due to the drink, it is no defence in law. But, if it is due to the disease of the mind, it gives rise to a defence of insanity. No one can say, however, whether it is due to the drink or to the disease. It may well be due to both in combination. What guidance does the law give in this difficulty? That is, as I see it, the question of general public importance which is involved in this case.

My Lords, I think the law on this point should take a clear stand. If a man, whilst sane and sober, forms an intention to kill and makes preparation for it, knowing it is a wrong thing to do, and then gets himself drunk so as to give himself Dutch courage to do the killing, and whilst drunk carries out his intention, he cannot rely on this self-induced drunkenness as a defence to a charge of murder, nor even as reducing it to manslaughter. He cannot say that he got himself into such a stupid state that he was incapable of an intent to kill. So, also, when he is a psychopath, he cannot by drinking rely on his self-induced defect of reason as a defence of insanity. The wickedness of his mind before he got drunk is enough to condemn him, coupled with the act which he intended to do and did do. A psychopath who goes out intending to kill, knowing it is wrong, and does kill, cannot escape the consequences by making himself drunk before doing it. That is, I believe, the direction which the Lord Chief Justice gave to the jury and which the Court of Criminal Appeal found to be wrong. I think that it was right, and for this reason I would allow the appeal. I would agree, of course, that if, before the killing, he had discarded his intention to kill or reversed it—and then got drunk—it would be a different matter. But when he forms the intention to kill and without interruption proceeds to get drunk and carry out his intention, then his drunkenness is no defence, and none the less so because it is dressed up as a defence of insanity. There was no evidence in this case of any interruption, and there was no need for the Lord Chief Justice to mention it to the jury.

I need hardly say, of course, that I have here only considered the law of Northern Ireland. In England, a psychopath such as this man might now be in a position to raise a defence of diminished responsibility under s. 2 of the Homicide Act, 1957.

My Lords, I have thus dealt with the case by considering the point raised by the Court of Criminal Appeal; and by dealing with it, I think it is possible to dispose of the appeal. If it were necessary to consider any other point in order to dispose of the appeal, I would certainly be prepared to do so; for I take the view that, once leave to appeal is given to your Lordships' House, all points are open as well as the point stated; and that it is not correct for the Court of Criminal Appeal to limit the appeal to the point which they consider to be of general public importance. Your Lordships will be well able, of course, to prevent any abuse of this power.

I would allow this appeal and restore the conviction of murder.

A LORD MORRIS OF BORTH-Y-GEST: My Lords, the Court of Criminal Appeal of Northern Ireland have certified that a point of law of general public importance was involved in their decision. Their decision, shortly stated, was that the conviction of the respondent ought to be set aside because the jury were wrongly directed. The point of law as defined in the certificate of the Court of Criminal Appeal can only have relevance and significance if it is related to B their decision that the summing-up was open to criticism on the ground that there was misdirection. As the point of law stated by the Court of Criminal Appeal is not a theoretical one but a practical one, it must be taken to postulate that there was evidence from which the jury could have held that the respondent had been in a psychopathic condition, that such condition was quiescent, that he voluntarily consumed intoxicating liquor, and afterwards had an " explosive outburst ", C and to raise the question whether, on such basis, the jury was incorrectly directed as to the application of the rules in M'Naghten's Case (24). The submission of the Crown was that there was no misdirection.

On the part of the case dealing with insanity, the issue before the jury was whether the respondent at the time of the killing was suffering from a disease of the mind, which disease had the effect of producing a defect of reason so that D either he did not know the nature and quality of the act he was doing or that he did not know that it was wrong. If he had any disease of the mind, he had it prior to and on the morning of Sept. 7; it was immaterial how it was caused, though, if the respondent had any disease of the mind, it was not of a kind that was caused by drink. If he had a disease of the mind in the morning, I do not read the medical evidence as suggesting that some later consumption of alcohol E altered the nature of the disease. Nor do I read the medical evidence as suggesting that any disease of the mind originated during the day. It was said that the respondent had a disease of the mind which was " episodic ", in that it made him liable to have outbursts. If there was some explosive outburst resulting either in his not knowing what he was doing or not knowing that it was wrong, there would only be applicability of the M'Naghten rules (24) if such explosive outburst F was a manifestation of, or a result of some disease of the mind which existed in the morning. If there was some explosive outburst which resulted from drink and not from a disease of the mind, then the M'Naghten rules (24) would not be applicable. It was for the respondent at the trial to show that his actions at the time of the killing were manifestations of a disease of the mind and not manifestations of being under the influence of alcohol.

G Since, in the present case, it was not suggested that, if the respondent had some disease of the mind, it had not existed at the start of the day and throughout the day, a consideration whether such disease existed in the morning was equally a consideration whether it existed " at the time of the committing of the act ". When the learned Lord Chief Justice (LORD MACDERMOTT) told the jury in his summing-up that they should come to their conclusion without reference to the H drink that the respondent took on Sept. 7, and should direct their attention to the state of his mind in the morning before he opened the bottle of whisky, he was helpfully reminding them that, for the M'Naghten rules (24) to apply, the defect of reason producing a condition of either not knowing the nature and quality of the act being done or of not knowing that it was wrong must be the result of a disease of the mind and not the result of being under the influence of I drink. The learned Lord Chief Justice was pointing the difference between the possible case where a psychopath does something because he is drunk and the possible case where a psychopath does something because he is a psychopath. The many references in the summing-up to the tests in regard to the knowledge of the respondent (i.e., his knowledge as to the nature and quality of the act he was doing or whether it was wrong) must, in the nature of things, have had reference to the moment of time of the act (i.e., the killing) which was in question. The learned Lord Chief Justice summarised all the medical evidence very carefully. The most that Dr. Dawson could say in regard to the respondent's knowledge was that, assuming that the respondent " may have been under the influence of alcohol ", he (Dr. Dawson) expressed a " very real doubt " as to the respondent's knowledge in the material respects; if it were assumed that the respondent had not had alcohol Dr. Dawson expressed " a doubt " as to the respondent's knowledge. If the jury thought that the respondent did have a disease of the mind, then such disease of the mind existed on the morning of Sept. 7 and before the defence of insanity could succeed the jury would have had to have been of the opinion that that disease of the mind was of such a kind that it could produce and that it did produce a defect of reason which had the result that the respondent either did not know what he was doing or did not know that it was wrong.

(24) (1843). 10 Cl. & Fin. 200.

Having these considerations in mind it seems to me that, read as a whole, the summing-up did not wrongly direct the jury in their consideration of the issue of insanity.

I would allow the appeal.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Linklaters & Paines, agents for Chief Crown Solicitor, Ulster (for the Crown); J. Tickle & Co., agents for David Gordon, Belfast (for the respondent).

[Reported by G. A. Kidner, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re BLACK BOLT AND NUT ASSOCIATION OF GREAT BRITAIN'S AGREEMENT (No. 2).

[Restrictive Practices Court (Diplock, J., Sir Stanford Cooper, Mr. W. L. Heywood and Mr. W. G. Campbell), June 29, July 27, 1961.]

Restrictive Trade Practices—Agreement—New agreement—Test whether new agreement is " to the like effect " to another agreement in respect of restrictions declared to be contrary to the public interest—" Effect "—Test to be applied where court has given reasoned judgment on reference of original agreement—Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956 (4 & 5 Eliz. 2 c. 68), s. 20 (3).

The test whether an agreement is " to the like effect " under s. 20 (3) of the Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956, to another agreement in respect of restrictions declared contrary to the public interest under s. 21 (1) of that Act is—" Do the parties by the new agreement agree that one or more of them shall do or refrain from doing acts like those which it was agreed should be done or not done by those provisions of that other agreement which contained restrictions declared to be contrary to the public interest? " (see p. 320, letter G, post).

The test to be applied whether a restriction in a new agreement is " like " a restriction in an agreement which has been declared contrary to the public interest where the Restrictive Practices Court has given a reasoned judgment on the reference of the original agreement is—" In the absence of any fresh evidence other than the terms of the new agreement, would the reasoning expressed in the judgment of the court on the original reference in which it was held that the respondents had failed to satisfy the court under s. 21 of the Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956, that acts which the parties to the original agreement had by the provisions thereof which contained restrictions agreed should be done or not done were not contrary to the public interest, necessarily lead the court to the conclusion that the acts which the person subject to the injunction has by entering into the new agreement agreed should be done or not done must also be deemed under that section to be contrary to the public interest ?" If the answer to this question is " Yes ", the new agreement is to " the like effect " to the original agreement

A in respect of the restrictions declared by the court to be contrary to the public interest (see p. 321, letter F, post).

In determining whether this test is satisfied, the court cannot look at any material other than (a) the terms of the new agreement or arrangement, (b) the terms of the restrictions declared to be contrary to the public interest in the original reference, and (c) the pleadings and the reasons for judgment B in the original reference and any documents specifically incorporated by reference therein (see p. 321, letter I, post).

[For the Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956, s. 20, see 36 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 952.]

Case referred to:

Black Bolt and Nut Assocn. of Great Britain's Agreement, Re, [1960] 3 All E.R. C 122; L.R. 2 R.P. 50; [1960] 1 W.L.R. 884; 3rd Digest Supp.

Application.

Application by the Registrar of Restrictive Trading Agreements for a declaration and an injunction under s. 20 (3) of the Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956. The facts are set out in the judgment of the court.

D B. J. M. MacKenna, Q.C., and W. Gumbel for the Black Bolt and Nut Association of Great Britain.

Arthur Bagnall, Q.C., for the Registrar.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 27. DIPLOCK, J., read the following judgment of the court: This is an application on the part of the Registrar for a declaration that a proposed E agreement to come into effect on July 31, 1961, entered into by the persons who were respondents to the reference to this court (which we will call "the original reference") entitled Re Black Bolt and Nut Assocn. of Great Britain's Agreement (1) is an agreement or arrangement to the like effect to the agreement which was the subject-matter of the order made by the court in the original reference in respect of the restriction (that is to say, No. 4) which was declared by such order to be F contrary to the public interest. The Registrar also asks for an injunction restraining the Association from entering into the proposed agreement. The actual terms of the restrictions contained in the agreement (which we will call "the original agreement") referred to this court in the original reference are hereinafter referred to as "the original restrictions" (2). It is sufficient at this stage to observe that, by the original restrictions, a distinction was drawn between the G supplies of goods to government departments, railways and other large users (other than inquiries for day-to-day requirements) on the one hand, and other kinds of supplies on the other hand. The latter (which we will call "ordinary supplies") could only be sold by members of the Association at fixed prices contained in, or ascertainable from, the Association's price list; the former (which we will call "large-user supplies") were required by restriction No. 4 H to be sold at a price not less than a minimum price notified to members by the secretaries. In fact, as was stated somewhat elliptically (3) the arrangement between the members as to the minimum price notified by the secretaries under the original agreement was that each member proposing to tender for supplies to any large user should report his proposed quotation to the secretaries and the lowest price of the proposed quotations was then notified to all members as the minimum I price which could be quoted. The agreement or arrangement in respect of "large-user supplies" was thus quite different from that in respect of ordinary supplies. There were no fixed prices for large-user supplies, but merely an arrangement which prevented a Dutch auction among members making tenders for large-user supplies. On the reference, the court declared that the original restrictions in respect of ordinary supplies (other than a restriction relating to quantity discounts) were not contrary to the public interest, but that all the original restrictions relating to large-user supplies (that is, restriction No. 4 and ancillary restrictions) were contrary to the public interest. The original agreement thereupon became void in respect of restrictions relating to large-user supplies, with the consequence that all members became free to deal with large-user supplies on whatever terms they thought fit.

(1) [1960] 3 All E.R. 122; L.R. 2 R.P. 50.
(2) See [1960] 3 All E.R. at pp. 129, 130, 136; L.R. 2 R.P. at pp. 62-64, 91, 92.
(3) [1960] 3 All E.R. at p. 140; L.R. 2 R.P. at p. 98.

What they have now mutually agreed to do by the new agreement to come into effect on July 31, 1961, is to subject large-user supplies to restrictions identical with those applicable to ordinary supplies. These new restrictions are in general the same as those which the court declared on the original reference to be not contrary to the public interest when applied to ordinary supplies; but with an alteration designed to permit members to supply goods at a price lower than the fixed price to an amount commensurate with any special saving in cost of production resulting from the special nature or circumstances of the order. It is desirable to emphasise that, on this application, we are in no way concerned with whether this proposed new or amended agreement is or is not contrary to the public interest either in respect of ordinary supplies or in respect of large-user supplies. It will be subject to registration under s. 9 and s. 10 of the Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956, and can be referred to the court by the Registrar if he thinks fit, under sub-s. (1) of s. 20 of the Act. On such a reference, and only on such a reference, would we have jurisdiction to determine whether any of the new or amended restrictions are contrary to the public interest.

The jurisdiction which we are called on to exercise on the present application is not a jurisdiction under sub-s. (1) of s. 20, but a jurisdiction under sub-s. (3) of that section, ancillary to the jurisdiction in respect of the original agreement which we have already exercised under sub-s. (1) in the original reference. Subsection (3) is in the following terms:

> " Where any such restrictions [that is restrictions in the original agreement] are found by the court to be contrary to the public interest, the agreement [scilicet, the original agreement] shall be void in respect of those restrictions; and without prejudice to the foregoing provision the court may, upon the application of the Registrar, make such order as appears to the court to be proper for restraining all or any of the persons party to the agreement who carry on business in the United Kingdom—(a) from giving effect to, or enforcing or purporting to enforce, the agreement in respect of those restrictions; (b) from making any other agreement (whether with the same parties or with other parties) to the like effect."

This subsection deals with the consequences of a declaration made by the court in the exercise of its jurisdiction under sub-s. (1) that restrictions are contrary to the public interest. The consequences are twofold: the first is automatic, namely, that the agreement becomes void in respect of those restrictions; the second is that the court acquires an ancillary jurisdiction to grant in aid (or, in the language of s. 22 (1) " in pursuance ") of its declaration such injunctions as are specified in para. (a) and para. (b) of s. 21 (1).

The parties to the new or amended agreement are the same as the parties to the original agreement, and the crucial question on this application is whether the new or amended agreement falls within the words " any other agreement . . . to the like effect " in s. 20 (3) (b). If it does not, we have no jurisdiction to grant any injunction on the present application. One must approach the construction of these words in the light of the general scheme of the Act. The agreements to which the Act applies are agreements under which restrictions of certain kinds specified in s. 6, as qualified by s. 7 and s. 8, are accepted by two or more parties; that is to say, agreements under which the parties agree that one or more of them shall do or refrain from doing certain acts. All such agreements are prima facie contrary to the public interest, but the only immediate consequence of this

A is that they become registrable under s. 9 and liable to be referred to the court. The court's primary jurisdiction in respect of any such agreement which is referred to it is to declare whether any restrictions which the parties have so accepted are contrary to the public interest. This is the jurisdiction which is conferred by sub-s. (1) of s. 20. The only automatic legal consequences of a declaration that any restrictions are contrary to the public interest is that im-
B posed by the first part of sub-s. (3), namely, that the agreement is void in respect of those restrictions. This of itself merely prevents the agreement from having any legal effect so far as restrictions are concerned. It does not make the agreement illegal, nor does it of itself prevent parties to the agreement from continuing voluntarily to act in precisely the same way as before the restrictions were declared contrary to the public interest.

C Parliament, no doubt, assumed that respondents to references would in general behave like responsible citizens and refrain from acting in a manner which had been declared contrary to the public interest, and the Act, accordingly, provides no automatic sanction to ensure that they will so refrain. It leaves it to the court to determine in each individual case whether or not such a sanction should be imposed. The only sanction which the court can impose is an injunction of the D kind specified in para. (a) and para. (b) of s. 20 (3). Once it has made such an injunction, the court's jurisdiction to discharge or to modify it is governed by the provisions of s. 22. The court may only discharge an injunction or replace it by an injunction in different terms on an application made in accordance with that section with the leave of the court, and the court may only grant such leave "upon prima facie evidence of a material change in the relevant circum-
E stances": scilicet—the circumstances specified in s. 21 of which the court must be satisfied if it is to declare that the restrictions are not contrary to the public interest. On an application made under s. 22, the whole matter is re-opened, and the court can hear further evidence directed to showing that the consequences of restrictions of the kind previously declared to be contrary to the public interest have become different as a result of the changed circumstances. This is the section
F which provides the machinery for dealing with changes in circumstances which alter the economic or other relevant consequences of restrictions, which have previously been the subject of declarations and ancillary injunctions by the court.

It is in the light of this general scheme of the Act that the words of sub-s. (3) of s. 20,

G "... order ... for restraining all or any of the persons party to the agreement who carry on business in the United Kingdom—(a) from giving effect to, or enforcing or purporting to enforce, the agreement in respect of those restrictions; (b) from making any other agreement (whether with the same parties or with other parties) to the like effect", fall to be construed. "Giving effect to ... the agreement in respect of those H restrictions" means doing or refraining from doing those acts which, by accepting the relevant restrictions, the parties to the agreement agreed should be done or not done. But an injunction in terms of para. (a) would not in itself be effective to prevent the persons against whom it was made from continuing to act in that manner which has been declared contrary to the public interest. They could cancel the existing agreement in respect of the restriction declared to be contrary

I to the public interest and enter into and give effect to a new agreement, not necessarily with the same parties as those who were parties to the original agreement, under which they accepted similar restrictions. It is against this kind of conduct that para. (b) is aimed. The agreement with which the "other agreement" referred to in para. (b) has to be compared to see whether it is "to the like effect" is the original agreement in respect of the restrictions declared to be contrary to the public interest. The meaning of the expression "effect" in relation to an agreement may vary with the context in which it appears. Prima facie, it means those acts which the parties to the agreement thereby agree that one or more of them shall do or refrain from doing, but it is capable in the appropriate context of a wider meaning and of embracing the remoter consequences, including the economic consequences, of doing or refraining from doing those acts. In our view, both the immediate context of the subsection and the wider context of the Act require the word " effect " in para. (b) of the subsection to be given its prima facie and narrower meaning. The word appears also in para. (a) in the context " giving effect to . . . the agreement ", where it clearly has the narrower meaning. It is used in both paragraphs to define the terms of an injunction, breach of which exposes the persons subject to the injunction to penalties for contempt of court. The economic consequences of doing or refraining from doing acts, the doing or refraining from doing of which amounts to a restriction within the meaning of the Act, must vary with the general economic conditions in which the relevant agreement is from time to time operating and, if these consequences were what was meant by the " effect " of the new agreement, it would be impossible for the persons subject to the injunction to know at the time of entering into the new agreement whether they were in breach of the injunction or not. On the one hand, an agreement identical in terms with one declared to be contrary to the public interest might, as a result of changes in general economic conditions, have wholly different economic consequences from those of the original agreement at the time that it was declared to be contrary to the public interest, while on the other hand an agreement which required the parties to do or refrain from doing acts quite different from those which they were required to do or refrain from doing by the agreement declared contrary to the public interest might, as a result of changed general economic conditions, have economic consequences identical with those of the original agreement at the time that it was declared to be contrary to the public interest.

We should lean heavily against any construction of the Act which placed persons subject to an injunction in such a position. Our view that the word " effect " in para. (b) of the subsection does not bear this wide meaning is reinforced by the fact to which we have already drawn attention, that the Act, by s. 22 lays down a procedure which can be invoked by persons subject to an injunction who contend that there has been a change in general economic conditions which alter the remoter consequences of an agreement which entitle the court to declare that restrictions accepted by the parties to the agreement which were previously declared to be contrary to the public interest are no longer contrary to the public interest.

In our view, the test whether an agreement is " to the like effect " to another agreement in respect of restrictions declared to be contrary to the public interest is:

> " Do the parties by the new agreement agree that one or more of them shall do or refrain from doing acts like those which it was agreed should be done or not done by those provisions of that other agreement which contained restrictions declared to be contrary to the public interest? ".

This brings us to the final question: " How like is like? ". The word " like " is imprecise. At one extreme it can be said that the earth is like an orange; at the other that one pea is like the proverbial other pea in the same pod. To say that one thing is " like " another means no more than that the one thing bears to the other a resemblance relevant to the comparison sought to be made. When the court is granting an injunction in pursuance of a declaration that certain restrictions are contrary to the public interest, the purpose of the injunction is to prevent, until there has been a material change in relevant circumstances justifying re-consideration of the matter by the court under s. 22, any continuation by the persons subject to the injunction of conduct of a kind which has been declared contrary to the public interest. The resemblance relevant to the comparison sought to be made is in those characteristics of the restrictions which caused the court to declare them contrary to the public interest.

A It is true that the characteristics which cause the court to declare any restriction to be contrary to the public interest are in a sense negative, for the onus lies on respondents to satisfy the court that a restriction complies with one or more of the requirements specified in para. (a) to para. (g) of s. 21 (1) and with the requirement of the balancing clause at the end of that subsection; and in the broadest sense it might be said that the characteristic of any agreement by which B parties accept restrictions which causes the court to declare the restrictions to be contrary to the public interest is simply that the agreement is one to which Part 1 of the Act applies. But this is to ignore the reality that the court's real decision is not that the agreement is one to which Part 1 of the Act applies; for it has no jurisdiction with respect to agreements to which Part 1 of the Act does not apply. Its real decision is that, the agreement being one to which C Part 1 of the Act applies, the restrictions thereby accepted by the parties are not justified by the existence of any of the circumstances specified or, if any of those circumstances exist, the restrictions are, nevertheless, not justified under the balancing clause.

Where, after hearing argument and evidence in justification of particular restrictions, the court have, as in the present case, given a reasoned judgment D why the attempted justification has failed, they will usually have indicated those characteristics of the restrictions which have led them to the conclusion that the attempted justification fails and in the absence of which they might not necessarily have arrived at the same conclusion. In such a case, there should be little difficulty in determining whether a new agreement entered into by a respondent either with the same parties or with different parties has characteristics which, E if the new agreement had also been the subject-matter of the original hearing and not supported by evidence other than that called at the original hearing, would have led the court to the conclusion that the justification of the new agreement also failed. Accordingly, the test to be applied in a case where the court has given a reasoned judgment on the original reference is this:

F "In the absence of any fresh evidence other than the terms of the new agreement, would the reasoning expressed in the judgment of the court in the original reference in which it was held that the respondents had failed to satisfy the court under s. 21 of the Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956, that acts which the parties to the original agreement had by the provisions thereof which contained restrictions agreed should be done or not done were not contrary to the public interest, necessarily lead the court to the G conclusion that the acts which the person subject to the injunction has by entering into the new agreement agreed should be done or not done must also be deemed under that section to be contrary to the public interest?"

If the answer to this question is "Yes", the new agreement is to "the like effect" to the original agreement in respect of the restrictions declared by the H court to be contrary to the public interest, and to enter into the new agreement is a breach of an injunction made in the terms authorised by para. (b) of s. 20 (3) of the Act. This sort of test is one which is familiar to any lawyer brought up in a system of law in which the doctrine of stare decisis is applied. We are conscious that it calls for precision and clarity of reasoning in the judgments of the court, but, to the extent that any judgment is defective in these respects, the consequence I can only be to make it more difficult to establish that a new agreement is "to the like effect" to a previous agreement in respect of any restriction.

In determining whether the test is satisfied, the court cannot look at any material other than (a) the terms of the new agreement or arrangement, (b) the terms of the restrictions declared to be contrary to the public interest in the original reference, and (c) the pleadings and the reasons for judgment in the original reference and any documents specifically incorporated by reference therein. It would be wrong to refer to the evidence in the original reference, for, unless it otherwise appears from the reasons for judgment, the court may not have accepted that evidence or may not have been influenced by it in reaching their decision. Parties who are subject to an injunction must in justice be in a position to know with reasonable certainty what sort of conduct on their part will subject them to penalties for contempt of court. It is also irrelevant, for reasons which we have already discussed, to consider whether, at the time at which the new agreement was entered into, there had been some change in circumstances affecting the economic consequences of giving effect to the agreement. These matters are only relevant on an application to discharge or vary the injunction under s. 22 of the Act.

No doubt the test which we have laid down cannot be applied where there has been a consent order on the original reference. In such cases no reasons are given. The grounds on which the court's declaration is made—and the only basis on which the court has the jurisdiction to make it—is that, the respondents having called no evidence, the court applies the statutory presumption in s. 21 (1) that the restrictions are contrary to public interest. It may well be that the draftsman of the Act did not foresee the wide use which would be made of consent orders. The problem of what is the appropriate test when there has been a consent order on the original reference may raise difficulties, but these may be left to be dealt with when such a case arises.

There are no such difficulties in the present case where the court gave a fully reasoned judgment. It is true that the restrictions in the original agreement relating to large-user supplies which were declared invalid, were dealt with briefly, for no serious attempt was made by the Association to justify them. On the other hand, the grounds on which the restrictions relating to ordinary supplies were held to be not contrary to the public interest were stated in considerable detail, and particular stress was laid, in the peculiar circumstances of this industry, on the advantage to the purchaser of a readily ascertainable fixed price for each of the enormous variety of products, as this obviated the trouble and expense of making multifarious inquiries from a number of different manufacturers. The original restrictions relating to large-user supplies did not provide for a fixed price for any product, and did not obviate the necessity of the purchasers making inquiries from a number of manufacturers. Those restrictions were, as pointed out at the outset of this judgment, quite different from those relating to ordinary supplies and different in those characteristics mentioned above, which caused the court to declare the latter to be not contrary to the public interest. It must, therefore, follow that the reasoning which led the court to conclude that the restrictions in the original agreement relating to large-user supplies were contrary to the public interest, would not necessarily lead it to the conclusion that new restrictions relating to large-user supplies similar to those which, in relation to ordinary supplies have already been held to be justified, were contrary to the public interest.

The new agreement is, accordingly, not in our view " to the like effect " to restriction No. 4 of the original agreement, and we have no power to restrain the Association from entering into it. This does not mean that we are in any way prejudging whether or not the new agreement will be contrary to the public interest, either in respect of the new restriction relating to large-user supplies, or the modified restriction relating to ordinary supplies. That question is not before us.

Solicitors: Allen & Overy (for the Black Bolt and Nut Association of Great Britain); Treasury Solicitor.

[Reported by G. A. Kidner, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

A

OLIVER AND OTHERS v. ASHMAN AND ANOTHER.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Holroyd Pearce, Willmer and Pearson, L.JJ.), June 28, 29, 30, July 3, 1961.]

B Negligence — Damages — Personal injury — Measure of damages — Loss of amenities of life—Loss of future earning capacity—Child aged twenty months—Mental defective as result of injury—Expense of home help and child's entering private institution in the first instance—Probability that child would spend most of his life in state institution—Total award unlikely to be used by or on behalf of child.

In assessing damages for personal injuries involving loss of a period of C expected life, loss of earnings during that period should not be valued as a separate head of damage, but, whether the injured person is living or has died, the damages for his loss of expectation of life should be assessed at the conventional sum (in the region £200) which should be regarded as covering all the elements of the lost expectation, including the opportunity of enjoying what would have been earned during the lost period (see p. 332, letter D, D p. 338, letter G, and p. 341, letter C, post).

Observations of LORD ROCHE in Rose v. Ford ([1937] 3 All E.R. at pp. 380, 381) and of VISCOUNT SIMON, L.C., in Benham v. Gambling ([1941] 1 All E.R. at p. 13) applied.

Harris v. Bright's Asphalt Contractors, Ltd. ([1953] 1 All E.R. 395) approved.

E Pope v. D. Murphy & Son, Ltd. ([1960] 2 All E.R. 873) overruled.

Per HOLROYD PEARCE, L.J.: although there is no distinction between damages for loss of expectation of life awarded to a living plaintiff and those awarded to the executors of a dead man, yet in the former case the plaintiff can obtain, in addition to damages for loss of expectation of life, substantial F damages for the constant pain and disappointment of knowing that his life has been shortened (see p. 332, letter E, post).

The infant plaintiff, a boy aged twenty months, sustained in February, 1958, severe injuries in a road accident for which the defendants admitted liability. These injuries damaged his brain and, as a result, he became mentally defective, unable to talk or to understand what was said to him. G He did not, apparently, have sustained feeling, and so did not have prolonged pain and suffering in consequence of the accident. The medical evidence was that a slight improvement in his condition might occur and that education of a very limited character might be possible, but that for the rest of his life he would require constant care and attention. For some three or four years his parents might have to employ a nanny to look after him. H Though the infant plaintiff might go to a private institution in the first instance, yet in a few years' time he would probably have to go into a state institution for mental defectives. He would never be able to earn his living. His expectation of life had been rendered by the accident a good deal less than normal; possibly thirty rather than sixty years. He had a younger brother who was normal and who would progress in advance of him. The father of I the infant plaintiff was an executive earning £1,250 a year. The damages of the infant plaintiff were assessed at £11,000. In assessing them the trial judge took into account loss of earnings during the period of loss of expectation of life, and treated as irrelevant the prospect that the infant might not be able to use the money awarded as damages, e.g., while he might be maintained by the state in a health service institution.

Held: in the special circumstances of the case the award of £11,000 was not one with which the Court of Appeal would interfere for the following reasons—

(i) although the trial judge had erred in taking into account the loss of earnings during the period for which expectation of life was lost, yet that factor must have been small having regard to the remoteness of the period.

(ii) (per HOLROYD PEARCE and WILLMER, L.JJ.); there was no certainty that the infant would not both need and spend the damages awarded (see p. 328, letter C, and p. 336, letter H, post).

Per PEARSON, L.J.: the extent of the infant's financial need arising from the accident was a relevant matter which could properly be taken into consideration in assessing damages (see p. 339, letter I, to p. 340, letter A, post).

Decision of LORD PARKER, C.J. ([1960] 3 All E.R. 677), affirmed for reasons partly different.

[As to the measure of damages for personal injury, see 11 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 255, para. 427; as to damages for loss of earnings, see ibid., 258, para. 430; and for cases on the measure of damages for personal injury, see 36 DIGEST (Repl.) 200, 1053-1057.]

Cases referred to:

Admiralty Comrs. v. Susquehanna (Owners), The Susquehanna, [1926] All E.R. Rep. 124; [1926] A.C. 655; 95 L.J.P. 128; 135 L.T. 456; 17 Asp. M.L.C. 81; 41 Digest 802, 6624.

Benham v. Gambling, [1941] 1 All E.R. 7; [1941] A.C. 157; 110 L.J.K.B. 49; 164 L.T. 290; 36 Digest (Repl.) 231, 1227.

British Transport Commission v. Gourley, [1955] 3 All E.R. 796; [1956] A.C. 185; [1956] 2 W.L.R. 41; 3rd Digest Supp.

Davies v. Smith, (Jan. 30, 1958), "The Times", Jan. 31, 1958.

Flint v. Lovell, [1934] All E.R. Rep. 200; [1935] 1 K.B. 354; 104 L.J.K.B. 199; 152 L.T. 231; 36 Digest (Repl.) 200, 1055.

Halliday (or Reid) v. Lanarkshire Traction Co., 1934 S.C. 79.

Harris v. Bright's Asphalt Contractors, Ltd., [1953] 1 All E.R. 395; [1953] 1 Q.B. 617; [1953] 1 W.L.R. 341; 24 Digest (Repl.) 1077, 334.

Liffen v. Watson, [1940] 2 All E.R. 213; [1940] 1 K.B. 556; 109 L.J.K.B. 367; 162 L.T. 398; 36 Digest (Repl.) 201, 1067.

Phillips v. London & South Western Ry. Co., (1879), 5 Q.B.D. 78; 41 L.T. 121; 43 J.P. 749; subsequent proceedings, (1879), 5 C.P.D. 280; 49 L.J.Q.B. 223; 42 L.T. 6; 44 J.P. 217; 17 Digest (Repl.) 190, 860; 36 Digest (Repl.) 198, 1045.

Pope v. D. Murphy & Son, Ltd., [1960] 2 All E.R. 873; [1960] 2 W.L.R. 861; 3rd Digest Supp.

Richards v. Highway Ironfounders (West Bromwich), Ltd., [1955] 3 All E.R. 205; [1955] 1 W.L.R. 1049; 24 Digest (Repl.) 1072, 313.

Roach v. Yates, [1937] 3 All E.R. 442; [1938] 1 K.B. 256; 107 L.J.K.B. 170; 36 Digest (Repl.) 200, 1056.

Rose v. Ford, [1937] 3 All E.R. 359; [1937] A.C. 826; 106 L.J.K.B. 576; 157 L.T. 174; 36 Digest (Repl.) 229, 1210.

Slater v. Spreag, [1935] All E.R. Rep. 900; [1936] 1 K.B. 83; 105 L.J.K.B. 17; 153 L.T. 297; 36 Digest (Repl.) 229, 1209.

Appeal.

This was an appeal by the infant plaintiff from the judgment of LORD PARKER, C.J., given on Nov. 3, 1960, and reported [1960] 3 All E.R. 677. The appeal was on the ground that the sum awarded to the infant plaintiff as damages, viz., £11,000, was, on the facts proved, unreasonably low. The defendants served a cross-notice asking that the judgment should be varied by reducing the sum awarded on the grounds (i) that on the facts found the damages were unreasonably high, (ii) that the learned Lord Chief Justice misdirected himself in that he did not take sufficiently into account the fact that the infant plaintiff would be in a position where he could not use or require much money.

A N. R. Fox-Andrews, Q.C., and J. D. Stocker for the infant plaintiff.
D. P. Croom-Johnson, Q.C., and E. W. Eveleigh, Q.C., for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 3. The following judgments were read.

HOLROYD PEARCE, L.J.: On Feb. 24, 1958, the infant plaintiff, who was B then twenty months old, was on his mother's knee in a car driven by the father. The defendants' negligence caused a collision in which the child's skull was fractured. At the time of the trial, the child was four years and four months old. The tragic results of the accident are summarised in the very clear and concise finding of LORD PARKER, C.J., who saw the child in his room for a quarter of an hour or so in the presence of the father and the mother. In his judgment he refers to C the fact that the child's mental condition deteriorated after the accident. He says:

> "Gradually he lost all power of speech and at present he is completely mute except that he does try to formulate the word 'daddy' and, I think, the name of his young brother, Angus."

D LORD PARKER, C.J., then refers to the epileptic fits which were frequent, but were reduced by drugs, so that they now occur only about once every week, but on the other hand are longer when they occur. He says:

> "Further, as time went by it became clear that his brain was very seriously affected. He cannot do anything for himself, dressing or undressing. He can feed himself after a fashion with his left hand and a spoon but is clearly E clumsy in doing it. He entails constant attention and it is right to say that his mother has managed to look after him in effect for twenty-four hours of the day. He is highly emotional, he emits most curious screams from time to time and on top of that, he is very easily upset and cries for long periods; when he does cry it is difficult to stop him. He is quite unmanageable in the ordinary way, although his mother does exercise some control over him. F He does not understand orders except that she can make him come to her by inducing him with a sweet, but to all intents and purposes he is not responsive to any commands or instructions. He has curious jerking movements. He bites anything and everything—books, pencils, his young brother—and is clearly subject to violent emotions although, of course, he is in no sense vicious."

G The Lord Chief Justice then refers to the medical evidence, as to which there was no real contest. That shows that there is (1):

> ". . . grave impairment of the intelligence, the child now being imbecile with severe traumatic epilepsy, and is not capable of talking. There will be a definite limit to the amount of improvement this child is capable of making in future. A little further improvement may occur but he will H remain always of gravely diminished intelligence. Epilepsy may become less marked with the passage of time, but it is impossible to be definite about this. The presence of such frequent attacks is regarded at present as shortening the expectation of life. All his life he will stand in need of constant care and attention and prove ineducable."

I The expectation of life was said by Sir Russell Brain, who was called on behalf of the defendants, to be about half that of normality. That is to say, his expectation of life would then be thirty years instead of sixty. The learned Lord Chief Justice then says this (2):

> "The prognosis as I find it is that it is unlikely that the infant plaintiff will be able to regain anything for practical purposes, at any rate in speech, and that as far as education is concerned it can only be of a very, very limited character. All the doctors agree that what this child needs is affectionate care and control all the time; secondly, constant medical supervision, in particular for the epileptic fits; thirdly, such attempts as can be made towards re-education. There is some conflict of evidence how that can best be achieved. All are agreed, at any rate, that as long as it is possible to retain him in the home under the constant care of his mother, the better, but the parents, who are very sensible people, have now resigned themselves to the fact that the child will have to leave home at some time in the future. He will be getting too big to be properly controlled by his mother and, in addition, there is the difficulty of bringing him up with the younger brother, a perfectly normal child."

(1) [1961] 1 Q.B. at p. 341. (2) [1960] 3 All E.R. at p. 678; [1961] 1 Q.B. at p. 342.

He then discusses what is to be done with the child when he becomes too big to be managed at home. He refers to the parents' reasonable desire that he should be educated in some private institution, and in particular a Rudolph Steiner school. He then accepts Sir Russell Brain's evidence to the effect that today, provided that one goes to a first-class state institution, the chances are that the child will have better care and better medical attention and education than in a private establishment. The learned Lord Chief Justice continues (3):

"He agrees, naturally, that some regard must be had to the parents' wishes and quite clearly, if the Rudolph Steiner schools will take the child—and it is too early to tell that yet—or some other private institution, it would no doubt be right to try that first, but Sir Russell Brain is clearly of the view that sooner or later this child will have to go to a state institution and what is more, that there he will remain for the rest of his natural life, subject to visits home."

The learned Lord Chief Justice then turns to the question of damages and says (3):

"He [the child] must be compensated in money for such expenditure as will have to be incurred on his behalf by having some extra help in the home so long as he remains at home. It looks, on that basis, as if his parents on his behalf will have to employ a nanny for some moderate number of years, say three or four years. Also it looks as if they will have to expend, and rightly expend, money in sending him to some private institution in the first instance, if any private institution will take him. And when he goes to a state institution, they may well require extra help in the home in the periods when he comes out of the state institution and comes home. In respect of these matters, the child is clearly entitled to compensation.

"So far as damages for pain and suffering are concerned, any award must be small and possibly nil because the general view is that this child really does not feel pain and suffering. If he does, it is purely momentary . . . The more difficult question is what the child is entitled to receive as a result of what he has lost through his injuries. He has lost the opportunity, to use quite general terms, of living, marrying, having children and enjoying life. He has also lost the opportunity of earning a living and obtaining such amenities as his earnings could buy. As against this, he will be kept, on one view, for the rest of his natural life at the expense of the state. Now, as to the loss of opportunity to enjoy life, this is not the case of a person who has known the enjoyment of life and has been deprived of it . . . At the same time, I am quite unable to accept the contention put forward by counsel for the defendants that this is purely what I may call a Benham v. Gambling (4) case. The infant plaintiff is, I think, entitled to something for what he has lost, whether he knows he has lost it or not, albeit that the amount may well be less than in the case of a person who has enjoyed life and

(3) [1960] 3 All E.R. at p. 679; [1961] 1 Q.B. at p. 343.
(4) [1941] 1 All E.R. 7; [1941] A.C. 157.

A amenities and knows that he has lost them. The trouble, however, is to put that into money."

Counsel for the plaintiff cannot really criticise what one may call the summing-up of the Lord Chief Justice. It is the verdict, the sum awarded, of which counsel complains. Indeed, no judgment could set out more clearly and fairly the evidence and the conclusions on the relevant matters, but the sum awarded, B it is argued, is so inadequate as to make it a wholly erroneous estimate. That is a difficult argument to make good in a case that both counsel describe as unique—no comparable case has been cited to us. Counsel for the plaintiff urges that the plaintiff has been robbed of his human intelligence and all the normal pleasures of life. He will never know a home and a wife and family, or work, or holidays or hobbies. On any normal standards, counsel argues, C the figure awarded would be barely apt for his injuries and loss of the amenities of life, without considering the expense of some thousands of pounds which the next few years will entail before he gets into a state institution, and without considering his loss of future earnings. Though the child is spared the added pain of knowing what he has lost, it is, it is argued, still a vast loss which would by itself amply support the award of £11,000.

D Counsel for the defendants, on his cross-appeal, contends that the figure of £11,000 is too high in that the learned Lord Chief Justice erred in the plaintiff's favour on two points of law. First, it is said, he declined to reduce the damages by virtue of the fact that the plaintiff would in all probability have no opportunity of spending the sum awarded to him. He considered that that fact was irrelevant. Secondly, he held that he was entitled to take into account as a E head of damage the loss of earnings during the period by which the plaintiff's life had been shortened. If the defendants cannot reduce the damages by virtue of these two points, they seek to use them in support of the judgment if this court thinks that otherwise the figure is too low.

On the first point the learned Lord Chief Justice said this (5):

F "In awarding such a sum, I am conscious of the fact that it may well be —indeed, I think that the overwhelming probabilities are—that a large part of this money will never be expended by or on behalf of the infant plaintiff. It will, I think, to a large extent remain untouched and left to his next of kin, or it may well be that the parents, if a receiver were appointed, might obtain some use of the money, but I think these considerations are entirely G irrelevant. It seems to me entirely irrelevant to the damages whether the plaintiff will ever be able to use the money. Of course, on the view that it may be that he can and will live at any rate for a time in a private institution, then that sum will enable him to do so."

No authority was cited in support of the defendants' proposition. The observations of GODDARD, L.J., in Liffen v. Watson (6) tend against it. In that case H the court held that a plaintiff could maintain a loss in respect of board wages although in fact she was receiving board and lodging free from a relative. GODDARD, L.J., there said (7):

"The only consideration is, what has [the plaintiff] lost? She has lost the value of her board and lodging, just the same as she has lost her wages. Therefore, she is entitled to be compensated for that loss. What she does I with the compensation when she gets it is a matter for her, and not for anybody else."

It was argued that if a jury think that the right figure would be £10,000 but are satisfied that the plaintiff cannot spend more than £5,000, they should award only £5,000 as damages or alternatively take into account the inability to

(5) [1960] 3 All E.R. at p. 680; [1961] 1 Q.B. at p. 344.
(6) [1940] 2 All E.R. 213; [1940] 1 K.B. 556.
(7) [1940] 2 All E.R. at p. 219; [1940] 1 K.B. at p. 558.

spend and make some imprecise abatement. For the plaintiff is only entitled to damages, it is argued, as compensation and he can only have them if they can be used to compensate. But what warranty is there for such a proposition? The plaintiff having made out his cause of action in negligence and proved his damages is entitled to his judgment. There is no condition that he should spend or use the damages. They are his to save or to spend or to dissipate in any useful or useless manner that he may choose. His needs or his ability to use his damages are, as it seems to me, irrelevant to their assessment. It would be undesirable to introduce the suggested principle into the law of tort. If that were done, an attempt would no doubt be made to extend it to cases where the plaintiff was rich so that he could never need the damages to which he was entitled. However, we are told that there is a case pending before us in which this point is to be argued and in which a large sum depends on it. I prefer, therefore, not to conclude the point since in this case it can sufficiently be met by the fact that here there is no certainty that the child will not both need and spend the money and it has not been so found. He will need a substantial portion during the next few years and something for holidays thereafter. It is not impossible, though it is extremely unlikely, that the child will defeat the pessimistic prognosis, to a sufficient extent to enjoy outside an institution a harmless and not inexpensive life.

On the second point the learned Lord Chief Justice said this (8):

> "I would also like to say that in awarding this sum I have followed the decision of STREATFEILD, J., in Pope v. D. Murphy & Son, Ltd. (9) and in making this assessment have ignored the undoubted fact that in this case the expectation of life has been reduced. Accordingly, doing the best I can, I would give judgment in this case for Robin Oliver for £11,000."

In that case STREATFEILD, J., declined to follow Harris v. Bright's Asphalt Contractors, Ltd. (10), in which SLADE, J., held that no damages can be recovered in respect of lost earnings during the period in which the plaintiff would have lived had it not been for the defendants' negligence. STREATFEILD, J.. however, held that such damages could be recovered. Both judges answered differently a question to which there is no wholly satisfactory solution. Each view can produce in certain circumstances common-sense results and each can produce apparent injustices. That of STREATFEILD, J., would seem, perhaps, more apt for the case of a living plaintiff, that of SLADE, J., for an action by executors.

The earlier authorities are in accord with Pope's case (9) although the point was never argued. In Phillips v. London & South Western Ry. Co. (11), there is no specific mention of the plaintiff's life having been shortened. FIELD, J., told the jury to take into account what the plaintiff would have earned. He said (12):

> "The consequences of the wrongful act here are undoubtedly that Dr. Phillips has been and is prevented from earning such a sum of money as you think he would have been likely to earn if this accident had not happened."

He referred to "the prospect of a speedy death" (13) and the tenor of the judgment indicates (14) that he is telling the jury to take into account the loss of earnings during years that will now be lost to the plaintiff. JAMES, L.J., on appeal (15) said:

> ". . . you are to consider what his income would probably have been, how long that income would probably have lasted, and you are to take into consideration all the other contingencies to which a practice is liable."

(8) [1961] 1 Q.B. at p. 345; [1960] 3 All E.R. at p. 680.
(9) [1960] 2 All E.R. 873.
(10) [1953] 1 All E.R. 395; [1953] 1 Q.B. 617.
(11) (1879), 5 Q.B.D. 78.
(12) (1879), 5 Q.B.D. at p. 82.
(13) (1879), 5 Q.B.D. at p. 80.
(14) (1879), 5 Q.B.D. at pp. 80, 81.
(15) (1879), 5 Q.B.D. at p. 87.

A There is no suggestion that the consideration should be limited to the shortened span of life which the plaintiff would have as a result of his injury. It must be remembered that the appeal was against an inadequate verdict and that the point was whether the trial judge had put the case too low for the plaintiff, not whether he had put it too high. By the date of the second trial, the possibility of a speedy death seems to have receded, and nothing bearing on this B point was said (16). It is fair, however, to deduce from the first trial, as STREATFEILD, J., deduced, that the judge and counsel and the Court of Appeal assumed without argument that it was correct to take into account in the assessment of damages the lost earnings during the lost years. That view might seem prima facie to be in accord with ordinary common law principles.

SLESSER, L.J., accepted this view in Roach v. Yates (17), and said:

C

> "First, then, the plaintiff's loss of wages may be noticed . . . Speaking for myself, I see no justification for approaching that problem by starting with the assumption that he would only have lived so long as the accident has now allowed him to live. I think the proper way of approaching the problem is that which was followed in Phillips v. London & South Western Ry. Co. (18), the leading case on this matter—namely, first to consider what sum he would have been likely to make during his normal life if he had not met with the accident."

D

However, the analysis of that case by SLADE, J., shows (19) that GREER, L.J., said nothing on this point; that MACKINNON, L.J., merely concurred; and that the observations of SLESSER, L.J., should be regarded as dicta.

E The Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934, provided that on the death of any person all causes of action vested in him shall survive for the benefit of his estate. That brought the problem into sharper focus. For nearly a century the dependants of a deceased man had had a right to damages for his lost earnings during lost years but under a different guise. The Fatal Accidents Act, 1846, had given them a right of compensation for loss of benefits that they F would have derived from his earning power. Such benefits were not the earnings which he lost during the lost years but certain resulting benefits which the dependants would have enjoyed had he continued to live and earn and support himself, and had he continued out of the surplus to provide for them.

With the passing of the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934, the deceased himself, through his executors, could for the first time claim what G he had lost. But, whereas in terms of money it was clear what the dependants had lost (so far as reasonable forecast could ascertain it), it was far from clear what in terms of money the deceased himself had lost. Life had been taken from him and death had been put on him. If part of the loss of the deceased was his lost wages during the lost years then there would be an overlap between claims by the estate and claims by the dependants. Where the estate was left H to the dependants the claims under the Fatal Accidents Act and the Law Reform Act could be set off; but if the beneficiary of the estate was some person other than his dependants, there might be a double claim in respect of part of the benefit of the lost earnings.

In Rose v. Ford (20), LORD WRIGHT (21) saw this difficulty and suggested a common-sense solution of it. In that case the House of Lords had to consider I what the executors could claim on behalf of the estate since the passing of the Act of 1934. LORD ATKIN there said (22):

---

(16) (1879), 5 C.P.D. 280.
(17) [1938] 1 K.B. at p. 268; [1937] 3 All E.R. at p. 447.
(18) (1879), 5 Q.B.D. 78.
(19) In Harris v. Bright's Asphalt Contractors, Ltd., [1953] 1 All E.R. 395; [1953] 1 Q.B. 617.
(20) [1937] 3 All E.R. 359; [1937] A.C. 826.
(21) [1937] 3 All E.R. at p. 375; [1937] A.C. at p. 853.
(22) [1937] 3 All E.R. at p. 363; [1937] A.C. at p. 835.

> "Can the damages include a calculation of loss of income which the deceased would have received during normal expectation of life, but would not have saved so as to increase his estate?"

Those words seem by implication to suggest that he could at least claim such sums as he would have saved during the lost years. LORD ROCHE (23), however, pointed out the undesirability of detailed analysis and concluded that the right method of assessing loss of expectation of life was to leave the point broadly to the jury. He said this (24):

> "A rich miser living in squalor, or a very poor man deeply sunk in misery, might require special treatment, but, ordinarily, a person may be assumed to have, or to be able to earn, enough to live his or her life, and to enjoy it. Earnings or income are otherwise, and to an extent beyond this, irrelevant."

In Rose v. Ford (25) the House decided that this court had been right in recognising in Flint v. Lovell (26), the validity of a claim made by a living person for damages in respect of the prospective shortening of his life by the defendant's negligence. It further held that such a claim for loss of expectation of life was not confined to living plaintiffs, but was equally admissible where the action was brought by the personal representatives. The opinions make it clear that the claim made by the personal representatives is in such cases the same claim that the plaintiff would have made had he been alive to make it, the claim that would have died with him had not life been kept in it by the Law Reform Act of 1934 (see particularly LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN (27) and LORD WRIGHT (28)). Those opinions leave no room for distinguishing between a claim brought by a living plaintiff and a claim brought on behalf of a dead plaintiff in respect of the loss of earnings during the years of which he has been deprived. This is perhaps unfortunate, since otherwise there would be much to be said for applying the reasoning of Pope v. Murphy, Ltd. (29) to a living plaintiff and that of Harris v. Bright's Asphalt Contractors, Ltd. (30) to the executors who bring an action for the estate of a deceased man. However, since it is the cause of action of the living man which passes to his executors, it is only a claim in respect of his lost expectation of life. It is not a claim in respect of his actual death or its actual consequences.

After Rose v. Ford (25) the courts had a difficult task in assessing the value of the lost expectation of life. Some may remember how on such claims one investigated in detail the temperament and health of the deceased, his family life, his expectations of happiness, his expectations of material prosperity, and how impossible it was to forecast the result. Widely divergent assessments were produced by different tribunals. On one view of the matter there is no loss of earnings when a man dies prematurely. He is no longer there to earn them, since he has died before they could be earned. He has merely lost the prospect of some years of life which is a complex of pleasure and pain, of good and ill, of profits and losses. On the other view, he has in addition to losing a prospect of the years of life, lost the income that he would have earned, and the profits that would have been his had he lived.

In that difficult state of the law Benham v. Gambling (31) came to be decided. The House there held that a judgment of £1,200 given in respect of the death of an infant child should be reduced from £1,200 to £200. VISCOUNT SIMON, L.C., dealt with the difficulty of assessing all that makes up "life's fitful fever" and said (32):

(23) [1937] 3 All E.R. at p. 379; [1937] A.C. at p. 860.
(24) [1937] 3 All E.R. at p. 380; [1937] A.C. at p. 861.
(25) [1937] 3 All E.R. 359; [1937] A.C. 826.
(26) [1934] All E.R. Rep. 200; [1935] 1 K.B. 354.
(27) [1937] 3 All E.R. at p. 366; [1937] A.C. at p. 838.
(28) [1937] 3 All E.R. at p. 369; [1937] A.C. at p. 843.
(29) [1960] 2 All E.R. 873. (30) [1953] 1 All E.R. 395; [1953] 1 Q.B. 617.
(31) [1941] 1 All E.R. 7; [1941] A.C. 157.
(32) [1941] 1 All E.R. at p. 12; [1941] A.C. at p. 166.

A "The question thus resolves itself into that of fixing a reasonable figure to be paid by way of damages for the loss of a measure of prospective happiness."

He said that it was necessary before damages could be given under that head for the court to be satisfied (33):

B ". . . that the circumstances of the individual life were calculated to lead, on balance, to a positive measure of happiness, of which the victim has been deprived by the defendant's negligence."

He then said this (34):

"I would further lay it down that, in assessing damages for this purpose, the question is not whether the deceased had the capacity or ability to appre-
C ciate that his further life on earth would bring him happiness. The test is not subjective, and the right sum to award depends on an objective estimate of what kind of future on earth the victim might have enjoyed, whether he had justly estimated that future or not. Of course, no regard must be had to financial losses or gains during the period of which the victim has been deprived. The damages are in respect of loss of life, not of loss of future
D pecuniary prospects."

If the two latter sentences meant that in the particular case before the House no claim in respect of pecuniary loss was made, they leave the matter open. If they were meant to apply to every case of loss of expectation of life they are conclusive or at the least a very powerful obiter dictum in favour of the view expressed by SLADE, J.

E In my judgment, however, there are three matters which together make it clear that the House was saying that no regard should ever be had to financial gains or losses in such cases. First the speech of LORD ROCHE in Rose v. Ford (35) had been referred to in argument. So, too, had Halliday (or Reid) v. Lanarkshire Traction Co. (36), where the court had held that loss of future wages during the lost years was but an ingredient in the loss of expectation of life and did not
F fall to be valued as an item on its own. Secondly, the words used by LORD SIMON, and especially the words "of course", seem to show that the sentence was intended to be of general application. Otherwise one would expect some such words as "on the pleadings in this case". Thirdly, LORD SIMON ended by saying (37):

"I trust that the views of this House, expressed in dealing with the G present appeal, may help to set a lower standard of measurement than has hitherto prevailed for what is in fact incapable of being measured in coin of the realm with any approach to real accuracy."

It is clear that the House was intending to settle once and for all a difficult problem in clear and careful terms meant to be of general application. Probably that is why on an interesting and difficult subject the noble and learned Lords
H spoke with only one voice. I find it impossible to believe that they were intending to leave unanswered an obvious argument which Reid v. Lanarkshire Traction Co. (36) and LORD ROCHE'S speech in Rose v. Ford (35) must have brought to their notice (in the utterly improbable event of their not having perceived it), an argument which is, if good, implicit in almost every claim for damages for loss of expectation of life, namely, the argument that would include as a head of
I damage the lost earnings during the lost years. Had they left such an argument unanswered the declared purpose of LORD SIMON'S speech would have been defeated.

In my judgment, therefore, the matter is concluded in this court by Benham v. Gambling (38) and the decision of SLADE, J., in Harris v. Bright's Asphalt

(33) [1941] 1 All E.R. at p. 12; [1941] A.C. at p. 166.
(34) [1941] 1 All E.R. at p. 13; [1941] A.C. at p. 167.
(35) [1937] 3 All E.R. at p. 375; [1937] A.C. at p. 853. (36) 1934 S.C. 79.
(37) [1941] 1 All E.R. at p. 14; [1941] A.C. at p. 168.
(38) [1941] 1 All E.R. 7; [1941] A.C. 157.

Contractors, Ltd. (39) was correct. That was the view clearly expressed by SIR RAYMOND EVERSHED, M.R. (with which JENKINS, L.J., and PARKER, L.J., agreed) in Richards v. Highway Ironfounders (West Bromwich), Ltd. (40). That view was obiter since in that case, while holding that the head of damages had been wrongly included, this court ordered a re-trial on liability. Thus, the decision on damages is obiter. Nevertheless, it is directly in point and of great weight.

Counsel for the plaintiffs forcibly argued that we should distinguish between the assessment of damages (as opposed to the cause of action) in the case of a living plaintiff and a dead man's estate, by holding that Benham v. Gambling (41) only binds us in the latter case. They relied on the opinion of MACKINNON, J., in Slater v. Spreag (42), where he indicated that it was the wording of s. 1 (2) (c) of the Act of 1934 which made it impossible to recover loss of future earnings during the lost years of life. But Benham v. Gambling (41) contains no trace of such reasoning. In my judgment we are not entitled in this court to draw such a distinction.

Thus the courts have decided that lost wages during the lost years can only be taken into account as one of the threads in the variegated tapestry of life. When the tapestry is severed there is but one sum recoverable in respect of that severance. What is lost is an expectation, not the thing itself. The House of Lords have laid down that on an objective and artificial valuation, the sum at which the loss of expectation is to be assessed must be a moderate one on the scale indicated in Benham v. Gambling (41).

Although, however, there is no distinction between damages for loss of expectation of life awarded to a living plaintiff and those awarded to the executors of a dead man, yet in the former case the plaintiff can in addition to damages for loss of expectation of life obtain substantial damages for the constant pain and disappointment of knowing that his life has been shortened. I can find nothing in Benham v. Gambling (41) to prevent such damages and in many cases justice requires it. In the present case the point is irrelevant since this child will never be aware that his life has been shortened.

In the present case, therefore, the learned Lord Chief Justice erred in the plaintiff's favour in so far as he took into account apart from the diminished expectation of life the loss of earnings during the years by which the child's life had been shortened. The figure which he put on that aspect of damage cannot have been negligible since he expressly referred to it. Nevertheless, it cannot have been very substantial. It was an estimate of earnings unknown in character or amount which, subject to the vicissitudes of life, would have started to run some twenty-six years hence and would have continued to run for some thirty years thereafter. It was a small imponderable among several large imponderables. In my judgment, we should certainly not reduce the figure awarded and the cross-appeal fails.

The appeal is more difficult. The ingredients that go to make the final figure have been scrupulously weighed in the judgment. We can only alter it if we are satisfied that it is a wholly erroneous estimate of the damage, if we are satisfied that, broadly speaking, there is only one reasonable answer to the problem and that the learned judge has failed to give it. One cannot seek for precision or certainty in many cases which are tried by the courts in their anxious task of weighing imponderables. Often, there is a norm, whether established by common sense or reason or the convention of the courts. Then one can decide how great a departure from it justifies the description " wholly erroneous ". Here there is no such norm. Both counsel of great experience describe the case as unique. They can cite no comparable case among the many strange and unhappy injuries that have come before the courts.

(39) [1953] 1 All E.R. 395; [1953] 1 Q.B. 617. (40) [1955] 3 All E.R. 205.
(41) [1941] 1 All E.R. 7; [1941] A.C. 157.
(42) [1935] All E.R. Rep. 900; [1936] 1 K.B. 83.

A The unusual features are these. There has been a complete and painless destruction of all the higher attributes of man. There is no consciousness of what is lost, no anguish of remembered happiness. The deprivation is so complete that in a few years the only possible solution will be for the child to become an inmate of a National Health institution. Thereafter, the state will shoulder the burden of care and expense. The loss of earnings is many years B distant and problematical. If counsel for the plaintiff's powerful argument is right, namely, that the sum awarded is barely sufficient to compensate for the injuries alone without taking into account the material things, the loss of earnings and the expenses of the next few years, the amount awarded must be inadequate. But is it right? Large sums have been awarded in cases where physical havoc is tragic and widespread. In such cases there have been pain C and the knowledge of what is lost, the expenses of the nursing of a physical wreck and a permanent loss of earnings. Here these features are absent, and their absence destroys comparison. Any compensation for the child's painless loss of humanity must be artificial. No sum can compensate or make an appreciable difference. But one must award such a sum as represents artificially the gravity of the loss. It is hard to give cogent reasons for this figure or for that. One D can merely assert.

I myself would feel inclined towards a larger figure, but the learned Lord Chief Justice and my brethren all think otherwise. I can give no adequate reason to support a higher figure or to show that one figure is more right than the other. There is no norm by which one can say that this figure is right and the other wrong. To say in SHELLEY'S words "I cannot argue I can only E feel" may be permitted in a juryman but it is rarely a sound foundation for a judgment. Here, the Lord Chief Justice has impeccably balanced all the relevant matters with sympathy and anxious consideration and arrived at a conclusion. One certainly cannot say that it was wholly erroneous. I would therefore somewhat regretfully agree with my brethren's view that the appeal must be dismissed.

F WILLMER, L.J.: I have found this an exceedingly difficult case, for the situation in which the court is called on to award damages is of a most exceptional kind. I should like to start by expressing my appreciation of the help I have derived from the arguments of counsel on both sides.

The difficulty is largely due to the fact that the court is called on to award G now a once-for-all sum which will compensate the plaintiff for consequences which may stretch far into the future. It might be better if, in exceptional cases such as this, the court were enabled to make a provisional award, with power to adjust it hereafter in the light of circumstances as they in fact develop. However, no such power exists, and we therefore have to do our best now to award such a sum as will be appropriate to take care of all likely contingencies.

H Counsel for the plaintiffs has accepted the correctness of the Lord Chief Justice's reasoning—except possibly for one sentence of the judgment. The appeal is founded on the contention that, even allowing for the correctness of the reasoning, the sum awarded is too small, and so much too small that this court ought to interfere. In particular, it is contended that the sum awarded is no more than sufficient to cover compensation for the actual physical injuries sustained by the plaintiff and the loss of all life's amenities. It contains no room I for any allowance for the considerable expenses likely to be expended for the benefit of the plaintiff during the next few years, e.g., in providing a nanny and sending him to a special school. Furthermore, it is said, it contains no room for any, or any sufficient, allowance for the total loss of the plaintiff's future earning capacity. To make proper allowance for these considerations it is contended that the award ought to be substantially increased.

On the other side the defendants contend that, if the Lord Chief Justice's reasoning is accepted as sound, the amount awarded is a proper and appropriate sum which should not be disturbed. It is, however, complained that the learned Lord Chief Justice misdirected himself in two material respects, and that these misdirections resulted in his awarding too large a sum. It is said that he misdirected himself, first, in saying that the fact that in all probability a large part of the money will never be used is entirely irrelevant; and, secondly, in following the decision of STREATFEILD, J., in Pope v. D. Murphy & Son, Ltd. (43), so far as concerns loss of earnings during the period by which the plaintiffs' expectation of life has been shortened.

There are thus four main issues which arise for consideration: (i) Does the award make sufficient allowance for expenses likely to be incurred for the benefit of the plaintiff? (ii) Does the award make sufficient allowance for the plaintiff's probable loss of future earnings? (iii) Is the fact that a large part of the money will probably never be used relevant? (iv) Was it right to follow Pope v. Murphy (43)—and assuming it was wrong, and that the learned Lord Chief Justice misdirected himself in that respect, does the error afford any good ground for reducing the award?

I can deal with the first point quite shortly. The probability seems to be that for a matter of some three or four years in the near future a nanny will have to be employed. There is a further probability that, following that, the child will have to be sent to some special school or institution where his education will have to be paid for. I cannot regard the expenses likely to be incurred in these respects as forming any substantial part of the sum awarded by the learned Lord Chief Justice. Indeed, it seems to me extremely probable that any expenses which are likely to be incurred over the next few years can be defrayed, for the most part if not wholly, out of the interest on the capital amount which has been awarded. This means that, at the end of such period of education as this child is capable of receiving in a school for which payment has to be made, the capital sum awarded will remain substantially intact and will thereafter presumably go on increasing in value with the accretion of interest. In these circumstances, I do not find it possible to say that any very substantial allowance ought to be made in respect of the foreseeable expenses likely to occur in the next few years. After the lapse of these next few years the unhappy probability is that the child will spend the rest of his days in a National Health institution, and no question of spending money on him or for his benefit will arise.

With regard to the second question, namely, whether the award makes sufficient allowance for the plaintiff's probable loss of future earnings, I would venture once again to emphasise that this is a wholly exceptional case. In the ordinary case that comes before the court a plaintiff normally has to go on supporting himself, and in those circumstances the loss of earnings to which he is subjected is properly regarded as a total loss. The award of damages in such cases is properly based directly on the loss of earnings. This loss, of course, has to be substantially discounted, having regard to the various chances of life and other imponderables, and having regard also to the fact of getting the money now in one lump sum. But here the circumstances are totally different, because (apart from the short period of education to which I have already referred) the probability is that throughout the whole of what would have been this child's normal span of life there will be no spending. He will never have the expense of maintaining a home, whether for himself alone or for himself and dependants. He will never have to bear the cost of food and clothing, light, heat, and so forth. Throughout the greater part of his life there will be no cause for expenditure. In those circumstances it would seem prima facie quite wrong to have regard to any probable future loss of earnings without also having regard on the other side of the account, to the probable saving of what would ordinarily be the expenses of life.

Oddly enough this is not a matter on which there seems to be any great wealth of authority. Reference was made to Liffen v. Watson (44), but I do not think (43) [1960] 2 All E.R. 873. (44) [1940] 2 All E.R. 213; [1940] 1 Q.B. 556.

A that that is at all a parallel case. There, the victim was fortunate enough to find a relative who was prepared to house her free of cost, and the court held, in my judgment properly, that that was not a matter to be taken into consideration for the purpose of reducing the award of damages. That seems to me to be a wholly different case from that of this plaintiff, who, so far as can be foreseen, will be detained for the rest of his life in a National Health institution. The B point was touched on by LORD ATKIN in Rose v. Ford (45) in the passage of his speech to which HOLROYD PEARCE, L.J., has already made reference. LORD ATKIN left the question unsolved; but at least what he said does give ground for thinking that he saw a distinction between earnings which would have been saved and earnings which would not.

Possibly more help is to be derived from what was said by LORD REID in C British Transport Commission v. Gourley (46). LORD REID there said (47):

> "... No one would suggest that it is improper to take into account expenditure genuinely and reasonably incurred, or that the plaintiff's damages should be assessed on the fees which he would have continued to receive without regard to the outgoings which he would have continued to incur."

D Gourley's case (46) is, of course, a very different case from this, but so far as it goes that expression of view is in accord with what I should myself have conceived to be the right principle.

In those circumstances, it seems to me that the Lord Chief Justice was quite right when, in taking into account the possible future loss of earnings of this child, he expressed the view that the saving of the normal expenses of life should E be set off against such loss, bearing in mind that for most of this unfortunate child's life there will in fact be nothing on which to spend the money.

What the future earnings of the child would have been had he not met with this accident must remain completely speculative; so also must the question how far such earnings would have exceeded what he would have been likely to spend on living and providing a home for himself and any dependants that he might F have. Moreover, there is a further difficulty in weighing any possible loss under this head, due to the fact that it lies so far in the future. Even now the child is but five, and presumably would not in any case have started earning for at least another ten years. It follows, I think, that any loss of earnings would in this case have to be more than usually discounted, having regard to the benefit of receiving the money now. What is left after discounting for these items, and G after allowing for the expenses which will be saved, seems to me to amount to no more than an element to be taken into consideration in assessing the loss of the ordinary pleasures and amenities of life.

Furthermore, as HOLROYD PEARCE, L.J., has pointed out, it is to be remembered that in this case we are dealing with a plaintiff who is quite incapable of appreciating what he has lost. It is not suggested that he has undergone, or will H undergo, any pain and suffering. He has never known what are the joys and sorrows of ordinary adult human life, and he cannot ever know what he has been deprived of. I think that it must be obvious that where a man has known these pleasures of ordinary life, the award of damages must be greater than in the case of one who has never known them and who never will. This plaintiff, in so far as that matter is concerned, is (most unhappily) in the same position I substantially as if he had actually been killed in the accident.

The upshot is that we are left with the sum of £11,000 awarded by the learned Lord Chief Justice which, for the reasons which I have given, seems to be likely to remain substantially intact, even allowing for the payment of education expenses during the forthcoming few years. It is to be borne in mind that the damages awarded in an action of this sort are compensatory and not punitive.

(45) [1937] 3 All E.R. at p. 363; [1937] A.C. at p. 835.
(46) [1955] 3 All E.R. 796; [1956] A.C. 185.
(47) [1955] 3 All E.R. at p. 808; [1956] A.C. at p. 213.

This being so, how can it be said (assuming that I have correctly summed up the position) that this plaintiff is insufficiently compensated? Would he be any better compensated if a larger sum of money had been awarded?

In the well-known case of Admiralty Comrs. v. Susquehanna (Owners), The Susquehanna (48) VISCOUNT DUNEDIN said:

> " (iii) If the damage be general, then it must be averred that such damage has been suffered, but the quantification of such damage is a jury question. (iv) For a jury question no rigid rules, or rules that apply to all cases, can be laid down . . ."

Approaching this, therefore, as a jury question, I have to ask myself whether the award of £11,000 is a proper award on the basis of the learned Lord Chief Justice's reasoning. This is a case in which, as it seems to me, the question of quantum was more than usually at large. I emphasise again what HOLROYD PEARCE, L.J., has said, that counsel on both sides have described it as a unique case. Clearly it is a case in which there is room for widely differing estimates. In those circumstances, I find it quite impossible to say that, assuming there was no misdirection of himself by the Lord Chief Justice, the quantum of damage at which he arrived amounted to a wholly erroneous estimate. That is sufficient to dispose of the appeal.

So far as the cross-appeal is concerned, the first question which arises is the relevance of the fact that a large part of the money will probably never be used. I think counsel for the defendants' argument on that point was very neatly summed up in the phrase that he used when he said: " What cannot ever be used cannot be compensation ". So stated it seems to me that the point has no little force. Certainly I think that it would be a point of considerable force in a case in which it could be said as a matter of practical certainty that the money never would be used. I do not find it necessary to reach any concluded opinion on that point, and it is better that I should say no more about it, having regard to the fact that we are told that another case is likely to reach this court quite soon in which the point will be of some importance. In the present case it seems to me that the submission fails on the facts so far as they are known. For this is not a case in which there can be anything approaching certainty as to the future. I have already discussed in the course of this judgment the expenditure which is likely to be incurred over the next few years, in minding the child at home, engaging a nanny, and sending the child possibly thereafter to some special school. Those expenses are more or less readily foreseeable. What lies beyond is really in the dark. The probability, I agree, on the evidence is that the child will live the rest of his life, no one knows how long, in some sort of public institution. But we can only assess probabilities; we cannot deal with certainties, or anything approaching certainties, in this case; and we must not forget that the sum awarded is one which must take care of all the contingencies of what may turn out to be quite a prolonged life. The one thing to which, as it seems to me, this plaintiff is entitled is adequate security—such an award as will ensure that all foreseeable, or even possible, expenses to be incurred on his behalf in the future are adequately covered by the sum awarded. In those circumstances I find it impossible to say that the fact that we now think, as a matter of probability, that a large part of the sum will never be used is a reason—on the facts of the present case—for diminishing the quantum of damages awarded.

The second respect in which it is alleged that the learned Lord Chief Justice misdirected himself is that he followed the decision of STREATFEILD, J., in Pope v. Murphy (49), and in considering the prospective loss of future earnings ignored the fact that the child's expectation of life has been shortened. This raises a further question, namely, whether, assuming the learned Lord Chief Justice was wrong, the error is such as ought to lead this court to vary the amount

(48) [1926] All E.R. Rep. at p. 127; [1926] A.C. at p. 661; 17 Asp. M.L.C. at p. 83.
(49) [1960] 2 All E.R. 873.

A awarded, bearing in mind that the assessment of general damages in a case such as the present is essentially a jury question, and not a matter or arithmetical calculation.

In my judgment the learned Lord Chief Justice did fall into error in following the decision in Pope v. Murphy (50), which must, in my view, be held to have been wrongly decided so far as this point is concerned. I reach that conclusion both as a B matter of principle and as a matter of authority. So far as authority is concerned, I think that we are concluded by what VISCOUNT SIMON, L.C., said in Benham v. Gambling (51), bearing in mind that all the other noble Lords concurred in what he said. LORD SIMON's words, are categorical (52):

> "Of course, no regard must be had to financial losses or gains during the period of which the victim has been deprived. The damages are in C respect of loss of life, not of loss of future pecuniary prospects."

It is said that Benham v. Gambling (51) is not a governing authority in the present case, for there the infant was already dead, whereas here we are concerned with the prospects of an infant who is still alive. In so far as we are invited to consider what his prospects would have been during a period when ex hypothesi he will D be dead we are, as I see it, in exactly the same position as a court considering the case of one who is already in fact dead. It is further objected that the precise point now under discussion was not before the House of Lords in Benham v. Gambling (51). I cannot accept this. In 1941, when Benham v. Gambling (51) was before the House of Lords, the point was one which already had a history behind it. It had been considered in Scotland in Halliday (or Reid) v. Lanarkshire Traction Co. (53), where the Lord Ordinary (LORD WARK) said: E

> "Nor would they [the jury] be entitled to give a sum based on the shortening of his expectation of life, with subsequent earlier cessation of earning capacity, less the anticipated diminution in the cost of maintenance during the period between the anticipated earlier date of death and the date of his expectation had the accident not taken place. What, in my view, F they would have been entitled to consider would have been the additional handicap on his enjoyment of life due to the anticipation of earlier death—in effect an additional award of solatium."

When that case was considered by the Inner House on appeal this precise point was not specifically dealt with. It is, however, to be inferred from the fact that the members of the Inner House expressed general approval of the Lord Ordinary's G judgment, and did not vary his award, that they found no reason to quarrel with what he had said on this particular point. In 1937 Rose v. Ford (54) was before the House of Lords. It may be remarked that, if the point now contended for were a good one, it is surprising that it was not the subject of strenuous argument in that case. For the deceased in that case, at the time when she received the injuries which proved fatal, was a healthy young woman, earning her living, and H with the expectation of a long earning life before her. In that case LORD ROCHE was the only member of the House who dealt with the point now under consideration. What he said was of no little significance, especially as Halliday (or Reid) v. Lanarkshire Traction Co. (55) had been called to the attention of the House. LORD ROCHE said (56) that the element of shortening of the normal expectation of life

> I ". . . was obviously and rightly arrived at without regard to the question of the amount of future earnings, and solely on the basis of what life was going to be worth to a healthy young woman, earning her own living . . ."

A few sentences later, he continued (57):

(50) [1960] 2 All E.R. 873. (51) [1941] 1 All E.R. 7; [1941] A.C. 157.
(52) [1941] 1 All E.R. at p. 13; [1941] A.C. at p. 167. (53) 1934 S.C. at p. 81.
(54) [1937] 3 All E.R. 359; [1937] A.C. 826. (55) 1934 S.C. 79.
(56) [1937] 3 All E.R. at p. 380; [1937] A.C. at p. 861.
(57) [1937] 3 All E.R. at p. 381; [1937] A.C. at p. 861.

A

> " . . . ordinarily, a person may be assumed to have, or be able to earn, enough to live his or her life, and to enjoy it. Earnings or income are otherwise, and to an extent beyond this, irrelevant."

Thus LORD ROCHE was clearly expressing the view that the loss of the prospect of earning after the date of accelerated death could not be the subject of a separate head of claim, but was merely a matter to be taken into consideration in assessing the loss of expectation of life. I do not understand LORD SIMON in Benham v. Gambling (58) to be saying anything different from what had already been said by LORD ROCHE in Rose v. Ford (59).

B

Since that date, the view expressed by LORD SIMON has been followed by SLADE, J., in Harris v. Bright's Asphalt Contractors, Ltd. (60), which was specifically approved by this court, albeit obiter, in Richards v. Highway Ironfounders (West Bromwich), Ltd. (61). It has also been followed by LORD GODDARD, C.J., and MORRIS, L.J., with whose judgments VAISEY, J., concurred, in Davies v. Smith (62) referred to in KEMP & KEMP, THE QUANTUM OF DAMAGES (2nd Edn., Vol. 1, at p. 353 et seq.).

C

I do not think that anything said in the course of the various hearings in Phillips v. London & South-Western Ry. Co. (63) can be regarded as any authority for the contrary view. For it does not appear from the reports of that case that this point was ever really considered. Reliance has also been placed on what was said by SLESSER, L.J., in Roach v. Yates (64). Though it cannot be suggested that what SLESSER, L.J., said was obiter, it is to be remarked that the other two members of the court managed to arrive at the same figure of general damages to be awarded without finding it necessary to express any opinion on the point. I cannot, therefore, regard the observations of SLESSER, L.J., as having any great weight when set against the very clear and precise statement of principle enunciated by LORD SIMON in Benham v. Gambling (58).

D

E

Even apart from authority, I should arrive at the same conclusion as a matter of principle. The prospective earnings which a person might have earned during a period when ex hypothesi he will already be dead strike me as far too speculative to be capable of assessment by any court of law. Nor do I think that that would be a relevant inquiry. For what has been lost by the person assumed to be dead is the opportunity to enjoy what he would have earned, whether by spending it or saving it. Earnings themselves strike me as being of no significance without reference to the way in which they are used. To inquire what would have been the value to a person in the position of this plaintiff of any earnings which he might have made after the date when ex hypothesi he will be dead strikes me as a hopeless task. All that one can say is that he has lost the opportunity of enjoying what he would have earned during the remainder of his normal expectation of life; and this, as it seems to me, is merely one of the factors to be considered in making what I may call a Benham v. Gambling (58) award of damages for loss of expectation of life.

F

G

For that reason I am unable to accept that the learned Lord Chief Justice directed himself correctly in following the decision in Pope v. Murphy (65). But I am equally unable to take the view that this error can have the slightest effect on the amount of the award. Had I come to the conclusion that potential earnings after the probable date of the plaintiff's death ought to be taken into consideration, I should also have held that these would have to be balanced against what he would have spent in maintaining himself and providing himself with a home suitable to his station in life. The result of striking that balance is

H

I

(58) [1941] 1 All E.R. 7; [1941] A.C. 157.
(59) [1937] 3 All E.R. 359; [1937] A.C. 826.
(60) [1953] 1 All E.R. 395; [1953] 1 Q.B. 617.
(61) [1955] 3 All E.R. 205.
(62) (Jan. 30, 1958), "The Times", Jan. 31, 1958.
(63) (1879), 5 Q.B.D. 78, and 5 C.P.D. 280.
(64) [1937] 3 All E.R. at p. 447; [1938] 1 K.B. at p. 268.
(65) [1960] 2 All E.R. 873.

A so speculative, and the inquiry relates to a period so far in futuro, that any figure arrived at would have to be so heavily discounted as to be reduced almost to vanishing point. When compared with the amount of £11,000 already awarded as general damages I could only regard the result as minimal. The only consequence of correcting what I conceive to be the Lord Chief Justice's error is to supply an additional reason for not increasing the award. I certainly cannot regard B it as a reason for reducing the award.

I do not think, therefore, that either point argued in support of the cross-appeal is valid, and accordingly I agree that both appeal and cross-appeal should be dismissed.

PEARSON, L.J.: This is a terrible case, in which injuries caused by the C defendants' negligence have reduced the infant plaintiff, previously a normal child, to the state of a low-grade mental defective, incapable of speech and incapable of looking after himself and not expected to recover. The damages have been assessed at the sum of £11,000. The plaintiff contends that the sum is substantially too low. The defendants, who have served a cross-notice of appeal, contend that the sum is substantially too high.

D As a matter of first impression having regard to the general level of assessments of damages in cases where a high degree of incapacity has been caused, and taking into account the depreciation in the value of money since some of these assessments were made, I should be inclined to consider this assessment of £11,000 as on the low side. There are, however, certain special features emerging from the evidence and findings in this case and tending to distinguish it from E many of the others.

First there is, so far as can be determined, the absence of any substantial pain or suffering, physical or mental. In particular, the infant plaintiff seems to have little if any realisation of his own disability and deprivation of the opportunity of leading and enjoying a normal and full life. The fact of such disability and deprivation is a major element in the assessment and requires a large figure for F compensation, but it is not in this case accompanied and aggravated by the presence of pain and suffering to any substantial extent.

Secondly, there is the probable expectation that, after being kept at home for a few years and after having probably a rather short stay in a private institution, the infant plaintiff will go to a state institution and be kept there free of charge for the rest of his life. That greatly diminishes the probable maintenance liability G and provides an important offset to the loss of earning capacity, which in any case has to be discounted because the earnings would not have begun for many years.

Thirdly, there is a matter to which I have a different line of approach from that which has been adopted by the Lord Chief Justice and HOLROYD PEARCE, L.J. The Lord Chief Justice said (66):

H "Doing the best I can in all the circumstances, I would award to this child a sum of £11,000. In awarding such a sum, I am conscious of the fact that it may well be—indeed, I think that the overwhelming probabilities are—that a large part of this money will never be expended by or on behalf of the infant plaintiff. It will, I think, to a large extent remain untouched and left to his next of kin, or it may well be that the parents, if a receiver I were appointed, might obtain some use of the money, but I think these considerations are entirely irrelevant. It seems to me entirely irrelevant to the damages whether the plaintiff will ever be able to use the money. Of course, on the view that it may be that he can and will live at any rate for a time in a private institution, then that sum will enable him to do so."

It seems to me, however, that the extent of the infant plaintiff's financial need arising from the accident is a relevant matter which can properly be taken into consideration on both sides of the account. Where a plaintiff has been rendered helpless by his injuries, which have been caused by the defendants' negligence, the sum awarded as compensation should be sufficient to ensure that he will be properly looked after by others in any situation which can reasonably be foreseen, so that even rather improbable contingencies will be covered. On this basis, I regard the sum of £11,000 as a sufficient, but not excessive sum. If the situation develops favourably, so that substantial sums can be spent for the infant plaintiff's benefit, the bulk of the money will be used up in that way. If the situation does not develop favourably, so that the infant plaintiff enters and remains permanently in a state institution and very little money can be spent for his benefit, there will be a large surplus to descend to his next of kin. If his next of kin at the time of his death should happen to be his parents, nobody would think it morally wrong, or in a broad sense unjust, that they should in the end receive some solatium for the sorrow, anxiety and trouble which the accident and their child's injuries have brought on them. But the next of kin at the time of his death may not be his parents, nor even brothers or sisters. They may be more distant relatives inheriting the surplus as a fortuitous windfall. In any case the only proper object of the assessment of damages for the infant plaintiff is to provide compensation for him, and the provision of money which in certain contingencies will descend to the next of kin is only an incidental result. Suppose there were a jury trial. Having in their deliberations arrived at a sum sufficient to cover the foreseeable financial needs of the plaintiff, the jury might reasonably be reluctant to add more money merely for the purpose or with the probable effect of increasing the surplus which would eventually descend to his next of kin whoever they might happen to be at the time of his death. In my view, that is a relevant factor which the jury may at any rate take into account to such extent as they think appropriate in the particular case. The jury have the task of fixing a sum which is in all the circumstances fair and reasonable compensation for the plaintiff. It is a difficult task, and it is not easy for the judge to give them any very definite guidance. They probably do not know much about other awards in broadly similar cases (although of course a judge acting as a jury can have that advantage). The jury's task would become more difficult than ever, if the scope of permissible considerations which they are allowed to take into account had to be severely restricted. It is not desirable to say more about this point in the present case, because, as counsel have informed us, there is under appeal another case in which this point is of central and crucial importance.

(66) [1960] 3 All E.R. at p. 680; [1961] 1 Q.B. at p. 344.

Fourthly, the Lord Chief Justice has included in his assessment of damages a sum in respect of the loss of prospective earnings during the period between the end of the infant plaintiff's expected life as shortened by the accident and the end of his expected life as it would have been if the accident had not occurred. For the sake of brevity I will refer to that period as " the lost period ". A claim of this kind had been rejected by SLADE, J., in Harris v. Bright's Asphalt Contractors, Ltd. (67). On the other hand, a claim of this kind had been upheld by STREATFEILD, J., in Pope v. D. Murphy & Son, Ltd. (68). STREATFEILD, J., gave a conventional sum of £250 (a sum in the region of £200) for loss of expectation of life, applying the principle of the decision of the House of Lords in Benham v. Gambling (69). He gave, in addition, £5,000 for the loss of earning capacity over the total period of time that the plaintiff otherwise (that is to say, if the accident had not occurred) might reasonably have expected to earn, and of that £5,000 one-half (i.e., £2,500) was attributable to the lost period. In the present case, the Lord Chief Justice said that in awarding the sum of £11,000 he had followed the decision of STREATFEILD, J., in Pope v. D. Murphy & Son, Ltd. (68) and in making the assessment he had ignored the undoubted fact that in the present

(67) [1953] 1 All E.R. 395; [1953] 1 Q.B. 617. (68) [1960] 2 All E.R. 873.
(69) [1941] 1 All E.R. 7; [1941] A.C. 157.

A case the expectation of life had been reduced. That means that he used the same method as STREATFEILD, J., had used, estimating the loss of earnings for the total period of time that the plaintiff might reasonably have expected to earn if the accident had not occurred. Some part has to be attributed to the lost period, although by reason of the long postponement there would be a heavy discounting.

On this question, whether it is right to award as a separate head of damage a B sum of money in respect of the loss of earnings for the lost period, I agree with the judgments which have been delivered. One has to take into account the judgment of the Lord Ordinary (LORD WARK) and the judgments of the Inner House of Session in Halliday (or Reid) v. Lanarkshire Traction Co. (70), the speech of LORD ROCHE in Rose v. Ford (71), the speech of VISCOUNT SIMON, L.C., with which the other noble and learned Lords concurred, in Benham v. Gambling (72), C the reasoning of SLADE, J., in Harris v. Bright's Asphalt Contractors, Ltd. (73), and the judgment of SIR RAYMOND EVERSHED, M.R., with which JENKINS, L.J., and PARKER, L.J., concurred, in Richards v. Highway Ironfounders (West Bromwich), Ltd. (74). There are also other authorities, which have been mentioned. In my view the conclusion, shortly stated, is that the conventional sum in the region of £200 which is to be awarded for loss of expectation of life should be regarded D as covering all the elements of it—e.g., joys and sorrows, work and leisure, earning and spending or saving money, marriage and parenthood and providing for dependants—and should be regarded as excluding any additional assessment for any of those elements.

Having regard to the special features that I have mentioned, I am satisfied that the assessment of the damages in this case at £11,000 is not too low. On E the other hand, having regard to the terrible nature of the injuries and their consequences and the possible need for money to be spent for the benefit of the infant plaintiff, I cannot consider the assessment too high. I agree therefore that the appeal and cross-appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal and cross-appeal dismissed. Leave to appeal to the House of Lords granted.

Solicitors: G. Howard & Co. (for the infant plaintiff); L. Bingham & Co. (for the defendants).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

---

(70) 1934 S.C. 79. (71) [1937] 3 All E.R. at p. 380; [1937] A.C. at p. 861.
(72) [1941] 1 All E.R. at p. 13; [1941] A.C. at p. 167.
(73) [1953] 1 All E.R. at pp. 399-402; [1953] 1 Q.B. at pp. 629-634.
(74) [1955] 3 All E.R. 205.

GARLAND & FLEXMAN (a firm) AND ANOTHER v. WISBECH CORPORATION.

A

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION (Diplock, J.), July 10, 11, 1961.]

Harbour—Quay—Cranes—Undertakers providing cranes for public use—Stevedores using cranes—Undertakers subsequently themselves undertaking stevedoring services—Whether undertakers entitled to refuse use of cranes to public, including stevedores—Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 27), s. 22, s. 33.

B

The defendant corporation had for some years provided cranes and crane-drivers for the use of the public at a quay constructed by them under the Wisbech Corporation Act, 1889, which incorporated the Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847. The plaintiffs, whose business included that of stevedores, had used the cranes on payment of the appropriate charges. By s. 30 of the Act of 1889, the corporation were empowered not only to provide cranes for public use, but also to provide stevedoring services. In 1960 the corporation themselves began to undertake stevedoring business at the quay and, to promote this business, refused to allow the plaintiffs and other members of the public to use the cranes. The plaintiffs, relying on s. 22* and s. 33† of the Act of 1847, sought a declaration that on payment of the appropriate rates they were entitled at all reasonable times to be allowed the use of the cranes.

C

D

Held: (i) although the corporation were not obliged to provide cranes, yet s. 22 of the Act of 1847 required them, if they chose to provide cranes, to provide also servants and labourers to work the cranes and to make both available at all reasonable times for the use of the public (see p. 346, letter H, to p. 347, letter B, post).

E

(ii) section 33 of the Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847, on its true construction merely gave a right of access to the installations on the quay and did not deal with the right to use cranes on the quay (see p. 346, letter H, post).

F

Dictum of LORD MACMILLAN in London & North Eastern Ry. Co. v. British Trawlers' Federation, Ltd. ([1934] All E.R. Rep. at p. 589) followed.

[As to the provision of warehouses, works, cranes, etc., at harbours, see 33 HALSBURY'S LAWS (2nd Edn.) 582, para. 1007.

For the Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847, s. 22, s. 33, see 23 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 1129, 1132.]

G

Case referred to:

London & North Eastern Ry. Co. v. British Trawlers' Federation, Ltd., [1934] All E.R. Rep. 580; [1934] A.C. 279; 103 L.J.K.B. 311; sub nom. British Trawlers' Federation v. London & North Eastern Ry. Co., 150 L.T. 461; Digest Supp.

H

Action.

In this action the plaintiffs who were ship-brokers carrying on business at the port of Wisbech in the county of Cambridge, sought a declaration against the defendants, Wisbech Corporation, that on payment of the appropriate rate the plaintiffs, at all reasonable times and in common with other members of the public, were entitled to be granted the use of the cranes provided by the corporation at the port of Wisbech to enable the plaintiffs to load and unload goods onto or from vessels in respect of which they had been engaged to provide stevedoring services. Whether the plaintiffs were entitled to the declaration depended inter alia on the true construction of the Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847. The facts and the relevant provisions of the Act are set out in the judgment.

I

* Section 22 of the Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847, is printed at p. 345, letter B, post.

† Section 33 of the Act of 1847 is printed at p. 345, letter C, post.

A H. I. Willis, Q.C., and M. Mann for the plaintiffs.
Desmond Ackner, Q.C., and R. I. Threlfall for the defendant corporation.

DIPLOCK, J.: The question whether the plaintiffs are entitled to a declaration depends solely, I think, on the true construction of the Wisbech Corporation Act, 1889, which I shall refer to as the Special Act, and the Harbours, Docks, and B Piers Clauses Act, 1847, which I shall refer to as the Clauses Act. It is convenient that I should at the outset refer to certain of the sections of those Acts on which the plaintiffs' rights, if they have any, to the use of the cranes depend.

The quay at Wisbech on which the cranes are now used was constructed by the corporation under the powers conferred on them to construct a quay or river wall by the Special Act. Section 3 of that Act defines the quay or river wall C as meaning "the quay or river wall and the works connected therewith by this Act authorised". Section 5 incorporates among other Acts the Clauses Act, so far as it is applicable for the purposes of and not varied by or inconsistent with the Special Act. Section 6 describes the situation of the quay or river wall, and s. 9 deals with the power of the corporation to make subsidiary works. It provides, so far as is relevant:

D "The corporation . . . may subject to the provisions of this Act from time to time make and maintain in connexion with the above-mentioned works to be executed by them . . . [i.e., the quay or river wall] all necessary and convenient wharves . . . cranes . . . and other works buildings and conveniences."

E Section 22 of the Special Act deals with the power to lease warehouses and cranes, and so far as is relevant reads as follows:

"Notwithstanding anything contained in the Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847, the corporation may from time to time lease or grant the use or occupation of . . . cranes . . . acquired or provided by them for the purposes of this Act or of any of the recited Acts for such period or periods F not exceeding in any case seven years at such rents and on such terms and conditions as shall be agreed between the corporation and the corporations companies or persons taking the same."

The reference at the outset of s. 22 to the Clauses Act is a reference to s. 23 of that Act which gives a power to undertakers to "lease or grant the use or occupation of [inter alia] cranes . . . at such rents, and upon such terms and conditions G as shall be agreed upon", but limits such leases to three years instead of the seven years provided for by the Special Act.

Section 30 of the Special Act, which I must read in detail for the corporation relies strongly on it, is as follows:

"The corporation from time to time may (subject as hereinafter mentioned) make such reasonable charges as they think fit for services rendered by them H in respect of shipping unshipping landing relanding [and a number of other works relating to loading and unloading of ships which clearly cover the provision of stevedoring services] and for any other service with respect to goods shipped or unshipped or warehoused or deposited at the quay or river wall by this Act authorised or the existing quay or river wall . . ."

I So far s. 30 deals with and confers on the corporation a right to charge for their services. The section then goes on:

". . . and the corporation may render any such services when they think proper . . ."

That empowers the corporation to render the services for which the early part of the section authorises them to charge. The section continues:

". . . and may provide all such trucks planks gear machinery and appliances and labour as may be necessary to effect the purposes aforesaid."

The third portion of s. 30 therefore gives the corporation the right to acquire whatever machinery or plant may be needed for the purposes of the services authorised to be rendered and charged for. Then follow two provisos: A

> "Provided that as regards the articles mentioned in Sch. 4 to this Act the corporation shall not demand or take for the use of their cranes any sums exceeding those specified in that Schedule. Provided further that any person shall be at liberty to perform any of the services matters and things in this section mentioned with respect to all goods belonging to him without any interference by the corporation and without being liable to pay any charge to them in respect of such services matters or things." B

It is evident from the reference in the proviso to the use of cranes that the draftsman of the Act regarded the provision of the use of cranes as being one of the services with which s. 30 deals. C

It is, I think, desirable to look very briefly at Sch. 4, where one finds the heading,

> "Craneage rates. Rates of craneage on heavy machinery etc. For lifting shipping or unshipping from or to the quay boilers cylinders engines locomotives machinery and other packages or articles by the corporation's cranes including the use of slings and the necessary labour." D

Then are set out the various rates per ton which represent the maximum which the corporation can charge under s. 30 for use of the cranes for lifting the various materials including the use of slings and the necessary labour.

Those I think are the relevant provisions of the Special Act, and I turn next to the Clauses Act to look at certain of the sections which are relevant to the matter which I have to decide. Section 1 deals with the incorporation of the Clauses Act in the Special Act. It reads as follows: E

> "This Act shall extend only to such harbours, docks, or piers as shall be authorised by any Act of Parliament hereafter to be passed which shall declare that this Act shall be incorporated therewith; . . ." F and the Special Act falls within that category—

> ". . . and all the clauses of this Act, save so far as they shall be expressly varied or excepted by any such Act shall apply to the undertaking authorised thereby, so far as they are applicable to such undertaking, and shall, with the clauses of every other Act incorporated therewith, form part of such Act, and be construed therewith as forming one Act." G

Section 2, which deals with interpretations, provides:

> "The expression 'the special Act' used in this Act shall be construed to mean any Act which shall be hereafter passed authorising the construction or improving of an harbour, dock, or pier, and with which this Act shall be incorporated; [and] . . . the expression 'the harbour, dock, or pier' shall mean the harbour, dock, or pier, and the works connected therewith, by the special Act authorised to be constructed . . ." H

I can go from there straight to s. 21 of the Clauses Act which forms part of the fasciculus of sections dealing with warehouses, cranes, and like buildings or machines and conveniences. Section 21 reads as follows: I

> "The undertakers may, as well upon the said lands as upon any other lands acquired by them under the provisions of this and the special Act, construct such warehouses, storehouses, sheds, and other buildings and works as they may deem necessary for the accommodation of goods shipped or unshipped within the harbour, dock, or pier, and may erect or provide such cranes, weighing and other machines, conveniences, weights, and measures as they think necessary for loading, unloading, measuring, and weighing such goods."

A That section seems to draw a distinction between buildings and works on the one hand dealt with in the first part of the section, and cranes, weighing and other machines, conveniences, weights and measures dealt with in the second part of the section.

Section 22—on the plaintiffs' case this is the vital section in the Clauses Act—is as follows:

B "The undertakers or their lessees shall provide proper servants and labourers for working such cranes at all reasonable times for the use of the public."

Section 33, which forms part of a fasciculus of sections relating to the rates to be taken by the undertakers, reads:

C "Upon payment of the rates made payable by this and the special Act, and subject to the other provisions thereof, the harbour, dock, and pier shall be open to all persons for the shipping and unshipping of goods, and the embarking and landing of passengers."

Finally, s. 83, which confers the bye-law-making power on the corporation, deals with a number of different subjects with respect to which bye-laws may be D made. One of those specific subjects is

"For regulating the use of the cranes, weighing machines, weights and measures belonging to the undertakers, and the duties and conduct of all weighers and meters employed by them."

That, it is to be observed, follows the latter half of s. 21 of the Act, the part which E deals with the provision of cranes. There are several other headings under which bye-laws may be made, of which the first is "For regulating the use of the harbour, dock, or pier", an expression which includes the works connected therewith.

The Wisbech harbour, which has existed since its construction under the Special Act in 1889, and indeed existed in some other form for centuries before that, F used until the war to be used for unshipping of goods with the use of ships' own tackle, and no cranes, I understand, were at that time provided by the corporation under the permissive powers to which I have referred. In about 1946 the quay was rebuilt at a greater height from the water level, and as a result it became necessary, if various kinds of cargo were to be loaded and unloaded, that cranes should be provided. At intervals between 1947 and 1954 the corpor- G ation acquired seven cranes for use at the quay. Those cranes were acquired with borrowed money and the borrowing required authorisation. In the case of two of the cranes the corporation when invited, as they were by the relevant government department, to state statutory authority under which the purchase was to be made, referred in two cases to s. 9 of the Special Act and s. 30 of the Special Act, and in the other five cases merely to their general powers without specifying H the section. At the date of those acquisitions of cranes the corporation had no intention of engaging itself in the stevedoring or ships' agency business, or of rendering any other services than that of providing cranes for the use of the public.

The plaintiffs, as I have said, are shipbrokers and ships' agents who have carried on in business for many years past, and used to undertake as part of their ships' I agency business stevedoring. They used the cranes provided by the corporation at fixed hourly charges for the use of the cranes, plus the wages of the driver, which were also fixed, I think, under some agreement negotiated by the trade union or by the National Dock Labour Board. In 1960, however, the corporation decided to enter into the stevedoring and ships' agency business on their own account, relying on the powers conferred on them by s. 30 of the Special Act. In the course of that business, and to promote that business, they decided to refuse the use of the cranes to anyone but themselves. The object of that—and it was a natural enough object—was to try to acquire for themselves at the expense of the plaintiffs among others such stevedoring business as was available from ships using the port. A

The plaintiffs claim in this action that the corporation has no power to do this. They concede that the corporation is entitled to embark on stevedoring business and perform the services appropriate to stevedores under s. 30 of the Special Act; but, say the plaintiffs, the corporation must give the public, as well as the corporation themselves, opportunity to use the cranes for stevedoring business, at any rate at a time when the cranes are not in use by the corporation for the purpose of loading or unloading ships. The plaintiffs' claim is based on s. 22 or alternatively on s. 33 of the Clauses Act. It seems to me that their case really stands on s. 22, which deals specifically with the working of cranes, rather than on s. 33, which appears to me to be primarily an access section. B

On its true construction, s. 33, which says, C

> "Upon payment of the rates made payable . . . the harbour, dock, and pier shall be open to all persons for the shipping and unshipping of goods, and the embarking and landing of passengers" is dealing with the question of access to the installations in the geographical areas of the harbour or pier. It means that the public can go on to those premises for the purpose of doing and there do the things specified in the section, that is to say shipping and unshipping of goods and embarking and landing of passengers, much in the same way as the public have access to a public highway for the purpose of proceeding to and fro thereon. I am fortified in that view by the speech of LORD MACMILLAN in London & North Eastern Ry. Co. v. British Trawlers' Federation, Ltd. (1) where he says: D E

> "The harbour is to be open to all for the purpose of unshipping goods. It is manifest that this must include the consequential purpose of removing the goods unshipped and such removal necessitates the employment of the appropriate vehicles."

Then he deals with the contention of the appellants in that case. He goes on (2): F

> "The answer is that the right of access conferred by s. 33 of the [Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847] includes, by virtue of the definition in s. 2, access to the authorised works connected with the harbour, and the fish markets are among the harbour works which Parliament has authorised . . . Accordingly, so long as the appellants carry on these fish markets as part of their harbour undertaking they have no more power to restrict the access of appropriate vehicles to these markets for the removal of fish purchased there than they have to restrict the access of appropriate vehicles to the ship's side for the removal of goods unloaded, always subject, of course, but subject only, to the rights of regulation by bye-law which they possess." G

Thus s. 33 is primarily an access section, and the right of use of cranes is specifically dealt with by s. 22 of the Clauses Act. H

The effect, in my judgment, of s. 21 and s. 22 of the Clauses Act is that the undertakers are not under any obligation to provide cranes; s. 21 is an authorising section; but if they do provide cranes then s. 22 requires them to provide proper servants and labourers for working such cranes at all reasonable times for the use of the public. There may well be alternative ways by which undertakers can fulfil this obligation; it may well be they can fulfil it by providing the corporation's own servants to operate the cranes, retaining those servants under their own control, in which case no doubt the corporation provide a service in relation to the cranes. It may be, however, that they would fulfil the obligation in s. 22 by making arrangements with an independent contractor I

(1) [1934] All E.R. Rep. at p. 589; [1934] A.C. at p. 301.
(2) [1934] All E.R. Rep. at p. 589; [1934] A.C. at p. 302.

A to be employed by any member of the public wanting to work the crane, in which case it might be doubtful whether it could properly be said that the corporation were performing themselves a service in relation to the crane. In whichever way the obligation is fulfilled, however, s. 22 of the Clauses Act in my view, unless it is inconsistent with the Special Act, places on the corporation the obligation to make cranes available with drivers at all reasonable times for the use of the B public, including the plaintiffs, and they have no right so long as cranes are provided to restrict their use to the corporation themselves for the purpose of carrying on stevedoring activities. I see no inconsistency in the Special Act with those provisions of s. 21 and s. 22 of the Clauses Act.

The corporation rely strongly on s. 30 of the Special Act, to which I have already referred, and contend that that section gives the corporation a discretion C whether to render services and to provide gear, machinery, appliances and labour; that that discretion relates also to the use of cranes, and that it is therefore inconsistent with the obligation which s. 22 of the Clauses Act in my view imposes—to provide the use of cranes to the public for the purpose of undertaking their own unloading activities. Section 30 is an enabling section dealing with all kinds of services, wide enough, I agree, as the proviso shows, to include providing D cranes and drivers for the use of the public. No doubt s. 30 assumes that the corporation are under no obligation to provide cranes or to render the services, and there is no obligation on the corporation to provide cranes under s. 9 of the Special Act or s. 21 of the Clauses Act. It is in their option whether they provide them or not. What in my view s. 22 of the Clauses Act does require is that if the corporation choose to provide or erect cranes, then they must make them avail- E able for the use of the public at all reasonable times, although, no doubt, exercising their powers under s. 30, they can themselves use the cranes for their stevedoring services.

What the corporation is claiming to do is, although the cranes are not needed by the corporation themselves for carrying out stevedoring services, to refuse other persons, including the plaintiffs, the right to use the cranes. I do not F think that Act gives them that power. I think it is contrary to the requirements of s. 22 of the Clauses Act, and that there is no inconsistency between s. 22 of the Clauses Act and s. 30 of the Special Act.

It seems to me that it is quite immaterial whether the corporation bought the cranes under s. 9 of the Special Act, s. 21 of the Clauses Act or s. 30 of the Special Act; once having provided them, and as long as they are there, they are gov- G erned by the requirements of s. 22. It seems to me therefore that the plaintiffs are entitled to the declaration for which they ask (3).

Declaration accordingly.

Solicitors: Edward & Butler (for the plaintiffs); Sharpe, Pritchard & Co. (for the defendant corporation).

[Reported by WENDY SHOCKETT, Barrister-at-Law.]

---

(3) See p. 342, letter H, ante.

McKIE (INSPECTOR OF TAXES) v. WARNER.

A

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Plowman, J.), July 6, 7, 1961.]

Income Tax—Income—Accommodation provided for employee—Employee charged only part of rent—Whether difference income of employee—Income Tax Act, 1952 (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2 c. 10), s. 161 (1).

Income Tax—Deduction in computing profits—"Expenses incurred wholly, exclusively and necessarily in the performance of . . . duties"—Excess of rent of living accommodation provided by company over taxpayer's contribution—Residence required in London flat—Entertainment of customers there—Income Tax Act, 1952 (15 & 16 Geo. 6 & 1 Eliz. 2 c. 10), Sch. 9, Rules applicable to Sch. E, r. 7.

B

On appointing one of their employees, the taxpayer, as their export sales supervisor, a company considered it essential that he should reside in London to be able to carry out his duties satisfactorily and told him to look for a flat that suited him. One being found, they took a lease of it at a yearly rent of £500 plus excess rates over £64 6s. 9d. a half year, and charged the taxpayer £150 per annum for the flat, that being the sum which they considered proper having regard to the salary that he was receiving. The company thus bore expense of some £350 per annum in respect of the flat. It was part of the taxpayer's duties to entertain at the flat foreign buyers visiting the country, and a room was available for visitors wishing to sleep there overnight, although it was also used from time to time by a member of the taxpayer's family.

C

D

Held: the taxpayer was chargeable to tax in respect of the £350 per annum difference between the rent paid by the company and the sum received from the taxpayer for the following reasons—

E

(i) the expense so incurred by the company in the provision of living or other accommodation for the taxpayer was within s. 161 (1) of the Income Tax Act, 1952, as a matter of the construction of that subsection, irrespective of what the facts relating to the accommodation so provided were; accordingly the £350 p.a. was deemed to have been an expense incurred by the taxpayer and repaid to him by the company.

F

(ii) the expense (£350 p.a.) thus notionally incurred by the taxpayer was not deductible from his emoluments as notionally increased by its reimbursement since (a) the notional expense was not an expense "necessarily" incurred (viz., incurred by reason of the necessities of the work) within r. 7 of Sch. 9 to the Income Tax Act, 1952; and (b) neither was the notional expense incurred wholly or exclusively in the performance of the taxpayer's duties, within the meaning of r. 7, as the flat was also his home when not on duty.

G

Nolder v. Walters ((1930), 15 Tax Cas. 380) distinguished.

[As to expenses allowances and benefits in kind to holders of an office, employment, etc., see 20 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 314-316, paras 577, 578; and for cases on the subject, see 28 DIGEST (Repl.) 242-247, 1059-1099.

H

For the Income Tax Act, 1952, s. 161 and Sch. 9, Rules applicable to Sch. E, r. 7, see 31 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 156, 524.]

Cases referred to:

Brown v. Bullock, ante, p. 129.

Durbidge v. Sanderson, [1955] 3 All E. R. 154; 36 Tax Cas. 239; [1955] 1 W.L.R. 1087; 28 Digest (Repl.) 244, 1072.

I

Nolder v. Walters, (1930), 15 Tax Cas. 380; 28 Digest (Repl.) 244, 1074.

Ricketts v. Colquhoun, [1926] A.C. 1; 95 L.J.K.B. 82; 134 L.T. 106; 90 J.P. 9; 10 Tax Cas. 118; 28 Digest (Repl.) 242, 1059.

Case Stated.

The respondent taxpayer appealed to the General Commissioners of Income Tax for St. George, Hanover Square, Middlesex, against assessments made on A him under Sch. E to the Income Tax Act, 1952, in respect of his emoluments as export sales supervisor of Jack Olding & Co., Ltd. for the years ended Apr. 5, 1953, to Apr. 5, 1957, inclusive. The questions for determination by the commissioners were: (i) whether certain expenses incurred by the company in connexion with the provision of a flat for the taxpayer fell to be included in the emoluments of his employment under Ch. II of Part 6 of the Act, and B (ii) if so, whether those expenses or any part of them were allowable as a deduction in computing the taxpayer's emoluments to be assessed to tax under para. 7 of Sch. 9 to the Act. The company had considered it essential that the taxpayer should reside in London to carry out his duties satisfactorily and rented the flat at £500 (plus rates in excess of £64 6s. 9d. a half year) charging the taxpayer £150 a year for his occupation. It was part of the taxpayer's duties to entertain C foreign buyers visiting this country at the flat, a bedroom being available for their accommodation, although used also from time to time by a member of the taxpayer's family. As from Sept. 1, 1952, the taxpayer was paid £250 per annum as a contribution towards his expenses of entertaining and accommodating buyers (which exceeded that figure).

The taxpayer contended: (i) that his occupation of the flat was not a benefit D to him and that accordingly the expense incurred by the company in providing it did not fall within s. 161 (1) of the Act of 1952; (ii) that the flat was part of the company's business premises and the expense incurred by the company in the provision of living accommodation for the taxpayer was exempt from s. 161 (1) by s. 161 (3); and (iii) alternatively, if the company did incur expense in the provision of a benefit for the taxpayer within the meaning of the section, E that expense if incurred by the taxpayer would have been money incurred necessarily in the performance of his duties within the meaning of para. 7 of Sch. 9 to the Act. The Crown contended inter alia: (i) that the expense incurred by the company in the provision of the flat for the taxpayer in so far as not made good by him to the company fell to be included in the emoluments of his employment pursuant to s. 161 of the Act; (ii) that the flat was not part of the com- F pany's business premises and s. 161 (3) therefore did not apply; and (iii) that no deduction in respect of the expense incurred by the company fell to be made from the emoluments under para. 7 of Sch. 9. The commissioners held that the difference between the amount paid by the company and the £150 paid by the taxpayer in respect of the flat was properly assessed and was not exempted by s. 161 (3); but that that difference was allowable under para. 7 of Sch. 9 as an G expense wholly, exclusively and necessarily incurred by the taxpayer in the performance of his duties. The Crown appealed by way of Case Stated to the High Court.

R. W. Goff, Q.C., and A. S. Orr for the Crown.
Heyworth Talbot, Q.C. and H. M. Allen for the taxpayer.

H PLOWMAN, J.: Mr. J. P. F. Warner, the respondent taxpayer in this appeal, was assessed to tax under Sch. E to the Income Tax Act, 1952, in respect of his emoluments as export sales supervisor of a company called Jack Olding & Co., Ltd., for the years ended Apr. 5, 1953, to Apr. 5, 1957, inclusive. He appealed against those assessments to the General Commissioners of Income Tax, and the questions for their determination were, first of all, whether certain I expenses incurred by the company in those years in connexion with the provision of a flat for the taxpayer fell to be included in the emoluments of his employment taxable under Sch. E, and, secondly, if so, whether they were allowable as a deduction in computing his taxable emoluments under that Schedule. The General Commissioners answered both those questions in the affirmative, and the taxpayer in effect appeals against their answer to the first question, and the Crown appeals against their answer to the second question.

The facts found by the commissioners can be summarised as follows. In 1950 the taxpayer, who was then already in the company's employment, was appointed export sales supervisor to assist the manager of a department then newly formed to deal with the export of Vickers tractors, of which the company had just recently been appointed world-wide distributors. That department was run from premises at 141, Park Lane. At that time, the taxpayer was living at Little Hadham, in Hertfordshire, with his wife and children; and the company considered it essential that he should reside in London to enable him to carry out his duties satisfactorily. So they told him to look for a flat that suited him. His wife in fact found a flat of comparable size to their house at Little Hadham, and the flat so found was flat 17 at 169, Queensgate, London, S.W.7. On Dec. 12, 1950, the company took a lease of that flat.

The terms of the lease, so far as material, were these. The term was one year certain and thereafter quarterly at a yearly rent of £500 and an additional rent equal to the excess of the rates over a sum of £64 6s. 9d. per half year. The lease contained a covenant by the company not to use or occupy the premises for any other purposes than as a private residence for the occupation of the taxpayer and members of his family only, and such other persons as might be approved by the landlords. It follows from that that, so far as the provisions of the lease were concerned, the use of the premises for business purposes was prohibited. The lease also contained an absolute covenant by the company against assigning, underletting or parting with possession of the premises.

The taxpayer agreed with the company to pay to it £150 a year for his occupation of the flat plus the cost of gas, electricity and other services at the premises. This sum of £150 per annum was the sum that the company thought proper having regard to the salary that the taxpayer was then earning. If his salary had been greater, the contribution which he would have been required to make might have been larger. This agreement about paying the company £150 a year was embodied in a letter dated Dec. 18, 1950, and addressed by the taxpayer to the company, which was in these terms:

> "Re flat 17-169, Queensgate, South Kensington: I hereby acknowledge that the above flat is let to me in consequence of my employment with you as an export sales supervisor from Dec. 25, 1950, until the expiration of three months' notice in writing given by either of us to the other. I am to pay or contribute to you a sum at the rate of £150 per annum for my occupation of the flat. Gas, electricity, etc., will be my responsibility and I will pay any such accounts direct to the companies concerned. I agree that during my occupation of the flat I will not do permit or suffer to be done anything which may constitute or lead to a breach of any of the agreements on your part contained in the tenancy agreement under which you hold the flat."

His tenancy from the company, or occupancy with the permission of the company, is not necessarily conterminous with his employment.

In due course, the taxpayer and his family moved into the flat, and they moved not because he wanted to leave Little Hadham, but because the company wished him to do so. It was part of the taxpayer's duties to entertain at his flat foreign buyers who were on a visit to this country, to meet them on their arrival, accompany them to their point of departure and generally look after them during their stay in London, and a room was available in the flat for any of such visitors who wished to sleep there overnight, as did sometimes happen. But the room was also used from time to time by a member of the taxpayer's family. Then, as from Sept. 1, 1952, the company paid him an entertainment allowance of £250 a year.

The first question which fell to be determined by the commissioners was, in effect, whether the difference between the £500 a year which the company was paying for the flat and the £150 a year which the taxpayer was paying the company—i.e., the sum of £350 a year—fell to be included in his emoluments. The commissioners decided that it did, and I have to decide whether they were right.

A The matter turns on the true construction of s. 161 (1) of the Income Tax Act, 1952. That subsection is as follows:

> "Subject to the following provisions of this Chapter, where a body corporate incurs expense in or in connexion with the provision, for any of its directors or for any person employed by it in an employment to which B this Chapter applies, of living or other accommodation, of entertainment, of domestic or other services or of other benefits or facilities of whatsoever nature, and, apart from this section, the expense would not be chargeable to income tax as income of the director or employee, paras. 1 and 7 of Sch. 9 to this Act, and s. 27 of this Act, shall have effect in relation to so much of the said expense as is not made good to the body corporate by the C director or employee as if the expense had been incurred by the director or employee and the amount thereof had been refunded to him by the body corporate by means of a payment in respect of expenses."

The submission of counsel for the taxpayer on the construction of that subsection is this, that, having regard to the use of the words "or of other benefits or facilities" in the context in which I have just read them, a limitation must be put on the D generality of the earlier part of the subsection which deals with the provision of living or other accommodation and certain other matters, and that the limitation to be put on it is one which would confine it to a case in which such living or other accommodation in fact provided a benefit for the employee in question. Then counsel went on to address argument to me on the question of fact which he said so arose. In my judgment, this question is purely one of the construction E of the section, and no question of fact arises at all. When the section speaks of a body corporate incurring expense in the provision for any person employed by it of living or other accommodation or of other benefits or facilities, it seems to me to follow as a matter of construction that living or other accommodation provided by the body corporate must be a benefit within the meaning of the subsection irrespective of what the facts relating to it are. Therefore, on the F first question which I am called on to decide, I hold that the commissioners were right in concluding that the provision of this flat was a benefit for the taxpayer within the meaning of s. 161 (1).

The General Commissioners, having answered that question in the affirmative, then had to consider whether this £350 a year was allowable to the taxpayer as a deduction against his taxable emoluments, and that question turns on the G true construction of r. 7 of Sch. 9 to the Act of 1952, which is as follows:

> "If the holder of an office or employment of profit is necessarily obliged to incur and defray out of the emoluments thereof the expenses of travelling in the performance of the duties of the office or employment, or of keeping and maintaining a horse to enable him to perform the same, or otherwise H to expend money wholly, exclusively and necessarily in the performance of the said duties, there may be deducted from the emoluments to be assessed the expenses so necessarily incurred and defrayed."

It has been pointed out many times, and it is unnecessary for me to refer to any of the occasions because it is notorious, that it is very difficult for a taxpayer I under Sch. E to bring his expenses within this paragraph. In order to succeed in a claim under the rule, the taxpayer has to prove, first of all, that the expense is one which he was necessarily obliged to incur and, secondly, that it was incurred wholly, exclusively and necessarily in the performance of his duties.

As regards the first of those two requirements, the authorities show that the word "necessarily" in the expression "necessarily obliged to incur" refers to the necessities of the office or the employment. In order to qualify, the expense must have been necessitated by the duties of the employment. The fact that it was required by the employer is not sufficient, nor is the fact that it was thought to be necessary by the employee. In this connexion, I need only refer to a sentence taken from the judgment of DONOVAN, L.J., in the recent case of Brown v. Bullock (1), which was in the Court of Appeal for judgment on June 26 of this year, where he said in connexion with r. 7 that the General Commissioners accepted a contention which in his view was not correct, and then he proceeded to enunciate the test (2):

> " The test is not whether the employer imposes the expense, but whether the duties do, in the sense that, irrespective of what the employer may prescribe, the duties cannot be performed without incurring the particular outlay."

Then, as regards the second requirement, the authorities show that the expression " in the performance of the said duties " is a very stringent one; it has quite a different connotation from what I might call the corresponding provision in s. 137 of the Act relating to expenses for purposes of Sch. D, where the relevant words are " for the purposes of "; and in r. 7, the necessity for expenditure " in the peformance of the duties " means that the sum in question must be defrayed in the actual discharge of the duties—" in doing the work of the office " is the expression which ROWLATT, J., used in Nolder v. Walters (3). But, even if the expenditure was necessarily incurred in doing the work of the office, it must also have been defrayed wholly in discharge of the duties and exclusively in discharge of the duties.

Counsel for the Crown has submitted that this sum of £350 a year which I am considering fails to qualify under either limb of r. 7. As regards the first limb, he submits that the function of export sales supervisor did not necessarily involve residence in this flat nor, indeed, in any particular place; in other words, the taxpayer was not employed to live in the flat, but he lives in the flat because he is employed. He lives there because the company considered it essential and not because the job necessitated it. Counsel also pointed out that it was not even a term of his employment that he should reside there and that, as already mentioned, his occupation of the flat is not tied to the term of his employment.

As regards the second limb, counsel for the Crown submits that the taxpayer is not performing the duties, not doing the job, of export sales supervisor by living in the flat, so that he cannot be taken to be incurring the expense of £350 " necessarily in the performance of the said duties ", and still less, continues the argument, is the expense " wholly " or " exclusively " incurred in the performance of his duties, because there is an element of expense which has no connexion with the business at all. There are days and nights when the taxpayer is off duty and the flat is simply his home, the place where he ceases to be export sales supervisor and becomes simply a husband and a father.

In answer to those contentions, counsel for the taxpayer founds himself mainly on the finding of the commissioners that it was part of the taxpayer's duties to entertain at this flat. I may say that, apart from this question of entertainment, it would appear to me that the argument of counsel for the Crown is obviously right and amply justified. Apart from this question of entertainment, it seems to me that the taxpayer fails to bring himself within either limb of r. 7 of Sch. 9.

The question then is, does this question of entertainment really make all the difference? I need not repeat the facts found by the commissioners in relation to the matter, because I have already cited them. Counsel for the taxpayer cited the decision of ROWLATT, J., in Nolder v. Walters (4). The headnote of that case sufficiently states the facts:

---

(1) Ante, p. 129. (2) Ante, at p. 133. (3) 15 Tax Cas. at p. 387.
(4) 15 Tax Cas. 380.

A "An aeroplane pilot employed by a limited company claimed deductions in the assessment of his remuneration to income tax under Sch. E in respect of various items of expenditure, Held, that no deduction could be allowed in respect of (a) the upkeep of a motor car to convey the pilot between the aerodrome and his home, or (b) a telephone at his home: but that a decision of the General Commissioners allowing a deduction for an excess of actual B subsistence expenses when away from home on duty over subsistence allowance granted by the company could not be disturbed as being erroneous in law."

That was a decision on the question of the difference between the pilot's actual subsistence expenses and his subsistence allowance, which, as WYNN-PARRY, J., pointed out in Durbidge v. Sanderson (5), ROWLATT, J., had reached with some C hesitation. WYNN-PARRY, J., said (6):

"In the judgment in each of those cases [of which Nolder v. Walters (7) was one], there is clearly a suggestion that judges who are invited to follow them should only do so with considerable hesitation. I share that view, particularly after the detailed analysis which counsel for the Crown made of the various judgments and opinions in Ricketts v. Colquhoun (8)."

D

But, accepting the decision in Nolder v. Walters (7) as it is, it seems to me that it is quite a different case from the present one. In Nolder v. Walters (7) the pilot was on duty all the time he was travelling, and ROWLATT, J., as I understand it, said that, because he was travelling on duty, he was entitled to claim the difference between the two sums that I have mentioned. That might provide E an analogy, possibly, to the present case if the taxpayer were on duty all the time he was at the flat, but quite clearly, in my judgment, he was not on duty all the time he was at the flat. There were occasions, no doubt, when his duty was to entertain customers or potential customers of his company, but for a great deal of the time he was not doing the work of his employment by living in the flat at all. Therefore, it does not seem to me that Nolder v. Walters (7) stands F in the way of what I consider to be the proper conclusion from the facts found in this case, which is that these expenses were not expenses deductible under r. 7 of Sch. 9.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Solicitor of Inland Revenue; B. Hazell Smith (for the taxpayer).

[Reported by F. A. AMIES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

---

(5) [1955] 3 All E.R. 154; 36 Tax Cas. 239.
(6) [1955] 3 All E.R. at p. 159; 36 Tax Cas. at p. 244.
(7) 15 Tax Cas. 380.
(8) [1926] A.C. 1; 10 Tax Cas. 118.

A

Re BRISTOL SOUTH EAST PARLIAMENTARY ELECTION.

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION (Gorman and McNair, JJ.), July 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 28, 1961.]

Peerages—Inalienability—Inability to renounce or surrender.

Elections—Parliamentary—Disqualification of candidate—Peer—Disqualification attributable to status and not dependent on receiving writ of summons to House of Lords—Disqualification made known to electors before votes cast—Majority of votes cast for disqualified candidate—Validity of election of sole opponent.

B

Elections—Election court—Jurisdiction—Succession to peerage—Election petition alleging disqualification of candidate for election to Parliament—Jurisdiction to determine succession to peerage.

C

A peer cannot alienate, renounce, surrender or extinguish his peerage (see p. 361, letter F, and p. 362, letter I, post).

Norfolk (Earldom) Case ([1907] A.C. 10) and dicta of VISCOUNT BIRKENHEAD, L.C., and LORD WRENBURY in Viscountess Rhondda's Case ([1922] 2 A.C. at pp. 362, 393) followed.

D

By the common law of Parliament the disqualification of a peer of the United Kingdom for membership of the House of Commons is imposed by his status as a peer and not by any incompatibility between duties arising from a writ of summons to attend the House of Lords and duties of service in the House of Commons (see p. 370, letter E, post); accordingly, in the case of conferment of a peerage by letters patent or of succession to a peerage by inheritance, the disqualification arises on the creation of or succession to the peerage and does not depend on the issue of a writ of summons to the House of Lords (see p. 371, letter I, post).

E

Earl of Beauchamp v. Madresfield ((1872), L.R. 8 C.P. 245) considered and applied.

Dictum of LORD WRENBURY in Viscountess Rhondda's Case ([1922] 2 A.C. at p. 393) applied.

F

Bedford (Borough) Case, Marquis of Tavistock's Case ((1833), Per. & Kn. 143) explained, distinguished and doubted.

Observations on the expressions "lord of parliament" and "peer of the realm", appearing in early authorities (see p. 364, letter A, post).

Although a question of disturbance of a dignity was outside the cognisance of a court of law, yet the fact that a candidate for election to the House of Commons had succeeded by inheritance to a peerage, so as to be disqualified for election, was determinable by the election court (see p. 373, letter B, post).

G

Earl Cowley v. Countess Cowley ([1901] A.C. 450) considered.

In 1942 William Wedgwood Benn was raised to the peerage of the United Kingdom under the title Viscount Stansgate by letters patent which granted the dignity to him and the heirs male of his body lawfully begotten and provided that his heirs male successively "may" have hold and possess a seat place and voice in the House of Lords. In 1959, the respondent, his eldest surviving son, was elected member of Parliament for the constituency of Bristol South East and duly took his seat. Lord Stansgate died on Nov. 17, 1960, and on Apr. 13, 1961, the House of Commons, confirming the report of its committee of privileges, resolved that the respondent had ceased to be a member of that House on succeeding to the Viscounty of Stansgate on Nov. 17, 1960, and further resolved that a writ should be issued for the election of a new member for Bristol South East. At the by-election held at Bristol South East on May 4, 1961, the respondent and the petitioner were the only candidates. The respondent received a majority of the votes recorded at the election and on May 5, 1961, was returned as the duly elected member of Parliament. Prior to the date of the by-election, the

H

I

A petitioner had sent out notices to all persons entitled to vote stating that the respondent was a peer of the United Kingdom, and had been so found by the House of Commons; that by reason of his status as a peer he was incapacitated and disqualified from being elected a member of Parliament and that all votes given for the respondent would therefore be thrown away and be null and void. Similar notices were published in newspapers B circulating in the constituency and were posted at the entrance to polling stations. Further, before the election the petitioner issued a notice to the press stating that the respondent had succeeded to the Viscounty of Stansgate on Nov. 17, 1960, and was consequently disqualified from membership of the House of Commons but that if the respondent gained the largest number of votes at the election the petitioner would present an election C petition seeking his return as the legitimate member. In reply to the petitioner's notice to all electors the respondent circulated notices to the press and another document in which he disputed the petitioner's claims. At the date of the by-election the respondent had neither applied for nor received a writ of summons to attend the House of Lords. On a petition to the election court,

D Held: on the evidence before the court, the facts which in law created the respondent's incapacity to be elected a member of Parliament were known to the electors before they cast their votes and the court was therefore bound to declare that the votes cast for the respondent had been thrown away and that the petitioner was duly elected as the member of Parliament for the constituency (see p. 379, letter E, post).

E Beresford-Hope v. Lady Sandhurst ((1889), 23 Q.B.D. 79) followed.

[As to the disabilities of peers, see 29 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 251, 252, paras. 520, 521; and as to the disqualification of peers for sitting in the House of Commons, see 28 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 337, para. 547.

As to jurisdiction in peerage claims, see 29 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 256, 257, paras. 533, 534.

F For cases on jurisdiction in peerage claims, see 37 DIGEST 42, 43, 210-237. For cases on persons disqualified for membership of the House of Commons, see 36 DIGEST (Repl.) 378, 379, 232-238.

As to votes given to a disqualified candidate, see 14 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 305, para. 549; and for cases on notice of disqualification in parliamentary elections, see 20 DIGEST 107, 108, 865-877.]

G

Cases referred to:

Abergavenny's (Lord) Case, (1610), 12 Co. Rep. 70; 3 Cru. Dig. 172; 77 E.R. 1348; 37 Digest 31, 18.

Beauchamp (Earl) v. Madresfield, (1872), L.R. 8 C.P. 245; 2 Hop. & Colt. 41; sub nom. Beauchamp (Earl) v. Madresfield Overseers, Salisbury (Marquis) H v. South Mimms Overseers, Salisbury (Marquis) v. Bontems, Salisbury (Marquis) v. Bulwer, 42 L.J.C.P. 32; 27 L.T. 606; 37 J.P. 39; 20 Digest 9, 29.

Bedford (Borough) Case, Tavistock's (Marquis) Case, (1833), Cockb. & Rowe 37, 95; Per. & Kn. 112, 143; 20 Digest 10, 31.

Beresford-Hope v. Sandhurst (Lady), (1889), 23 Q.B.D. 79; 58 L.J.Q.B. 316; I 61 L.T. 150; 53 J.P. 805; 20 Digest 132, 1057.

Cowley (Earl) v. Cowley (Countess), [1901] A.C. 450; 70 L.J.P. 83; 85 L.T. 254; 37 Digest 43, 211.

Cox v. Ambrose, (1890), 60 L.J.Q.B. 114; 55 J.P. 23; 20 Digest 132, 1058.

Etherington v. Wilson, (1875), L.R. 20 Eq. 606; revsd. C.A., (1875), 1 Ch.D. 160; 45 L.J.Ch. 153; 33 L.T. 652; 40 J.P. 164; 8 Digest (Repl.) 429, 1191.

Fermanagh and South Tyrone Election, The, (1955), 105 L.Jo. 594.

Gosling v. Veley, (1847), 7 Q.B. 406; 16 L.J.Q.B. 201; 8 L.T.O.S. 555; 11 J.P. 372; 11 Jur. 385; 115 E.R. 542; on appeal, (1853), 4 H.L. Cas. 679; 20 Digest 107, 865. A Grey de Ruthyn Case, (1640), Collins's Baronies by Writ, 195, 256; Cro. Car. 601; 79 E.R. 1117; 37 Digest 41, 179.

Hobbs v. Morey, [1904] 1 K.B. 74; 73 L.J.K.B. 47; 89 L.T. 531; 68 J.P. 132; 20 Digest 125, 1004. B

Jeffrey's Case, (1585), Petyt's Lex Parliamentaria, 185.

Launceston Case, Re, Drinkwater v. Deakin, (1874), L.R. 9 C.P. 626; 43 L.J.C.P. 355; 30 L.T. 832; 38 J.P. 808; 20 Digest 107, 876.

Norfolk (Earldom) Case, [1907] A.C. 10; 76 L.J.P.C. 9; 95 L.T. 682; 37 Digest 29, 8.

Onslow's Case, (1562), Petyt's Lex Parliamentaria, 184. C

Oxford (Earldom) Petitions, (1625), Collins's Baronies by Writ, 173; Co. Litt. 27a; sub nom. Willoughby of Eresby & Oxford (Earl) Case, W. Jo. 96; 82 E.R. 50; 37 Digest 40, 158.

Popham's Case, (1580), Petyt's Lex Parliamentaria, 185.

Purbeck's Case, (1678), Collins's Baronies by Writ, 293; Cruise on Dignities, 113; sub nom. R. v. Purbeck (Viscount), Show. Parl. Cas. 1; 1 E.R. 1; 37 Digest 41, 177. D

R. v. Boscawen, (1714), cited 2 Cowp. 537; 20 Digest 107, 867.

R. v. Hawkins, (1808), 10 East, 211; affd. sub nom. Hawkins v. R., (1813), 2 Dow. 124; 3 E.R. 810; 20 Digest 108, 877.

R. v. Monday, (1777), 2 Cowp. 530; 98 E.R. 1224; 20 Digest 137, 1115.

R. v. Parry, R. v. Phillips, (1811), 14 East, 549; 104 E.R. 712; 13 Digest (Repl.) 235, 595. E

R. v. Tewkesbury Corpn., (1868), L.R. 3 Q.B. 629; 37 L.J.Q.B. 288; 18 L.T. 851; 32 J.P. 580; 20 Digest 132, 1056.

R. v. Withers, (1735), cited 2 Cowp. at p. 537; 2 Burr. at p. 1020; 98 E.R. 1228; 20 Digest 132, 1053.

Rhondda's (Viscountess) Case, [1922] 2 A.C. 339; 92 L.J.P.C. 81; 128 L.T. 155; 37 Digest 36, 69. F

Taylor v. Bath Corpn., (1741), 3 Lud. E.C. 324; cited in 2 Cowp. at p. 537; 98 E.R. 1228; 20 Digest 132, 1054.

Ulster By-Election, The, (1955), 105 L.Jo. 482.

Election petition. G

By this petition presented on May 8, 1961, and amended on May 24, 1961, the petitioners Malcolm Archibald James St. Clair and John Malcolm Harris asked that it be determined that Anthony Neil Wedgwood Benn, hereafter referred to as the respondent, was not duly elected or returned as member of Parliament for the constituency of Bristol South East at the by-election held there on May 4, 1961, and that the first-named petitioner, Mr. St. Clair, was duly elected and ought to have been returned as member of Parliament for the constituency, and asked for such further or other relief as might be just. The petition alleged as follows: H

1. The first-named petitioner was a candidate at the parliamentary election for Bristol South East held on May 4, 1961, which was commenced by writ dated Apr. 18, 1961, and claimed to have a right to be elected and returned at the election; the second-named petitioner was an elector entitled to vote and who did vote at the election. I

2. At the election held on May 4, 1961, the first-named petitioner and the respondent, otherwise the second Viscount Stansgate of Stansgate in the peerage of the United Kingdom, were the only candidates, and on May 5, 1961, the returning officer declared as was the fact that the respondent had received 23,275 votes and the first-named petitioner had received 10,231 votes and returned the respondent to the Clerk of the Crown as having been duly elected.

A 3. The respondent is and was at all material times a peer of the United Kingdom.

4. On Apr. 13, 1961, the House of Commons resolved that it took note of the fact that the respondent on succession to the Viscounty of Stansgate on Nov. 17, 1960, ceased to be a member of the House and agreed with the Committee of Privileges in their report, ordered to be printed on Mar. 14, 1961. In their B report the committee concluded that, (a) the respondent was disqualified from membership of the House of Commons on Nov. 17, 1960, by succession to the Viscounty of Stansgate; (b) the instrument of renunciation executed by the respondent had no legal effect (a peer could not surrender or renounce his peerage); (c) the House of Commons Disqualification Act, 1957, did not give any option to the respondent to renounce the viscounty.

C 5. On Apr. 18, 1961, the House of Commons resolved that a warrant should be issued to make out a new writ for the election of a member to serve in Parliament for the constituency of Bristol South East in the room of the respondent who by the resolution of the House of Apr. 13, 1961, had ceased to be a member.

6. The petitioners say that the respondent is and was at all material times thereby incapacitated and disqualified from being elected a member of Parlia- D ment in the election held at Bristol South East on May 4, 1961.

7. The first-named petitioner or persons on his behalf took steps to bring the respondent's incapacity and disqualification to the notice of persons entitled to vote in the election in the following manner: (i) A notice (printed at p. 378, letter I, to p. 379, letter D, post) was sent with the first-named petitioner's election address to all persons entitled to vote in the election; (ii) a notice in similar terms E was published in certain newspapers circulating in the constituency, namely, in the "Bristol Evening Post" on Apr. 25, 1961, and in the "Western Daily Press and Times & Mirror" on Apr. 26, 1961; (iii) notices in similar terms were posted where they could be seen by persons entering the polling stations provided for the purposes of the election; (iv) the first-named petitioner referred to the respondent's incapacity and disqualification in various public speeches and state- F ments made in the constituency after Nov. 17, 1960, and prior to May 4, 1961.

8. The respondent's incapacity and disqualification was a matter of notoriety in the constituency at the time of the election and was well known to all persons entitled to vote in the election, and by reason of the notoriety and the steps taken by the first-named petitioner referred to in para. 7 the persons who voted for the respondent at the time of voting well knew of his incapacity and dis- G qualification.

9. By reason of the matters aforesaid all the votes given for the respondent were thrown away and were null and void.

The notice referred to in para. 7 (i) read:

"Parliamentary By-Election. Date of Election . . . Thursday, May 4, H 1961. Bristol South-East Constituency. Whereas Anthony Neil Wedgwood Benn, second Viscount Stansgate of Stansgate in the peerage of the United Kingdom, of Stansgate, Southminster, Essex and 12 Holland Park Avenue, London, W.11, a candidate at the election above-named and now about to be held, is a peer of the United Kingdom and was so found by the Committee of Privileges of the House of Commons on Mar. 22, 1961, and such I finding was confirmed by the House of Commons on Apr. 13, 1961: and whereas by reason of his status as a peer of the United Kingdom, the said Anthony Neil Wedgwood Benn, second Viscount Stansgate of Stansgate is by law incapacitated and disqualified from being elected a member of Parliament in the said constituency.

"Now take notice, that all votes given for the said Anthony Neil Wedgwood Benn, second Viscount Stansgate of Stansgate, at the said election will by reason of the said incapacity and disqualification be thrown away, and be null and void.

"Dated twenty-eighth this day of April 1961. (Signed) Malcolm A. J. St. Clair (Address) Upton House, Tetbury, Gloucestershire. (Description) Farmer. A candidate at the said election. (Signed) C. P. B. Moggridge (Lieutenant-Colonel). Election agent for Malcolm A. J. St. Clair of Upton House, Tetbury, Gloucestershire a candidate at the said election. To the electors of the Bristol South-East Constituency."

The facts appear in the judgment.

Sir Andrew Clark, Q.C., H. P. J. Milmo, Q.C., and D. G. Widdicombe for the petitioners.

The respondent appeared in person.

R. H. W. Dunn for the Director of Public Prosecutions.*

Cur. adv. vult.

July 28. GORMAN and McNAIR, JJ., shared the reading of the following judgment of the court: This is a petition under Part 3 of the Representation of the People Act, 1949, in respect of a parliamentary election for the constituency of South East Bristol, which was held on May 4, 1961. The relevant provisions of that statute are as follows:

"107. Method of questioning parliamentary election.—(1) No parliamentary election and no return to Parliament shall be questioned except by a petition complaining of an undue election or undue return (hereinafter referred to as a parliamentary election petition) presented in accordance with this Part of this Act.

"108. Presentation and service of parliamentary election petition.—(1) A parliamentary election petition may be presented by one or more of the following persons—(a) a person who voted as an elector at the election or who had a right so to vote; or (b) a person claiming to have had a right to be elected or returned at the election; . . . (2) The member whose election or return is complained of is hereinafter referred to as the respondent.

"110. Constitution of election court and place of trial.—(1) A parliamentary election petition shall be tried by two judges on the rota for the trial of parliamentary election petitions and the judges for the time being on that rota shall, unless they otherwise agree, try the election petitions standing for trial according to their seniority. The judges presiding at the trial of a parliamentary election petition are hereinafter referred to as the election court. (2) The election court shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, have the same powers, jurisdiction and authority as a judge of the High Court . . . and shall be a court of record.

"124. Conclusion of trial of parliamentary election petition.—(1) At the conclusion of the trial of a parliamentary election petition the election court shall determine whether the member whose election or return is complained of, or any and what other person, was duly returned or elected or whether the election was void, and shall forthwith certify in writing the determination to the Speaker, and the determination so certified shall be final to all intents and purposes."

The petition in this case was presented on May 8, 1961, and amended on May 24, 1961. [GORMAN, J., read the petition (see p. 356, letter H, to p. 357, letter G, ante) and continued:] On June 2, 1961, the respondent admitted certain facts for the purposes only of this petition:—1. Paragraph 1 of the amended petition. 2. Paragraph 2 of the amended petition subject to a reservation that the respondent denies that he is second Viscount Stansgate of Stansgate in the peerage of the United Kingdom. 3. Paragraph 4 of the amended petition subject to a reservation that the respondent denies that the House of Commons was correct in so resolving and that the Committee of Privileges was right in its conclusions. 4. Paragraph 5 of the amended petition. 5. Paragraph 7 of the amended petition subject to a

* See footnote (79), p. 380, post.

A reservation that the respondent denies that he was or is incapacitated and disqualified as alleged therein or at all. 6. That the allegation of and the respondent's denial of the incapacity and disqualification referred to in para. 8 of the amended petition were matters of notoriety and were well known as stated in para. 8. 7. That William Wedgwood Benn first Viscount Stansgate of Stansgate died on Nov. 17, 1960. 8. That on Nov. 17, 1920, the said William Wedgwood B Benn, first Viscount Stansgate of Stansgate, was married to Margaret Eadie Holmes. 9. That the said William Wedgwood Benn, first Viscount Stansgate of Stansgate contracted no other marriage during his lifetime. 10. That the first son of the said marriage, Michael Julius Wedgwood Benn, was killed in action on June 23, 1944. 11. That the said Michael Julius Wedgwood Benn died without ever having married. 12. That the respondent Anthony Neil Wedgwood Benn, C is the second son of the said marriage. 13. That at the time of the death of William Wedgwood Benn, first Viscount Stansgate of Stansgate, on Nov. 17, 1960, the respondent Anthony Neil Wedgwood Benn was his eldest surviving son lawfully begotten. The facts admitted in paras. 7 to 13 (inclusive) were also formally proved before us.

On the hearing before us, the respondent said: "I think it might be for the D convenience of the court if I explained that in my response to this petition I shall be making no issue whatsoever on the validity or otherwise of the instrument of renunciation, and no reference whatsoever to the application or non-application of the House of Commons Disqualification Act, 1957 . . . I think I cannot go beyond the point I have already made, that is, that I shall not be raising any question in my response to this petition as to whether the instrument of renun- E ciation is valid or not nor on the House of Commons Disqualification Act."

On Jan. 12, 1942, William Wedgwood Benn was raised to the peerage under the title of Viscount Stansgate of Stansgate. The letters patent were in terms:

> "George the Sixth by the Grace of God of Great Britain Ireland and the British Dominions beyond the Seas King Defender of the Faith to all lords spiritual and temporal and all other our subjects whatsoever to F whom these presents shall come greeting Know ye that we of our especial grace certain knowledge and mere motion do by these presents advance create and prefer our right trusty and well beloved counsellor William Wedgwood Benn Companion of Our Distinguished Service Order upon whom has been conferred the decoration of the Distinguished Flying Cross to the state degree style dignity title and honour of Viscount Stansgate G of Stansgate in our county of Essex and for us our heirs and successors do appoint give and grant unto him the said name state degree style dignity title and honour of Viscount Stansgate to have and to hold unto him and the heirs male of his body lawfully begotten and to be begotten willing and by these presents granting for us our heirs and successors that he and his heirs male aforesaid and every of them successively may have hold and H possess a seat place and voice in the Parliaments and public assemblies and councils of us our heirs and successors within our United Kingdom amongst other viscounts And also that he and his heirs male aforesaid successively may enjoy and use all the rights privileges pre-eminences immunities and advantages to the degree of a viscount duly and of right belonging which other viscounts of our United Kingdom have heretofore used and enjoyed I or as they do at present use and enjoy."

At the general election on Nov. 8, 1959, the respondent was elected member of Parliament for the constituency of South East Bristol and duly took his seat. On Nov. 22, 1960, by writing under his hand the respondent purported to renounce and surrender the peerage by the following "Instrument of Renunciation."

> "Whereas on the fifteenth day of February nineteen hundred and fifty five before witnesses I, Anthony Neil Wedgwood Benn, did declare my irrevocable desire to cease to be the heir male to the name, state, degree, style, dignity, title and honour of the Viscount Stansgate of Stansgate in the county of Essex; and whereas my late father, the said Viscount Stansgate of Stansgate died on the seventeenth day of November nineteen hundred and sixty; Now therefore I, Anthony Neil Wedgwood Benn, do hereby declare that by virtue of the above recited declaration and by virtue of this document I am not now, nor have ever been, nor am in any way entitled to the name, state, degree, style, dignity, title and honour of Viscount Stansgate of Stansgate in the county of Essex which I have absolutely and irrevocably renounced and surrendered. Furthermore being a member of the House of Commons at the time of the decease of my father the late Viscount Stansgate, I am not by law required to accept any place in the House of Peers by virtue of which I would be disqualified from sitting and voting as a member of the House of Commons."

On Nov. 29, 1960, the respondent petitioned the House of Commons requesting the appointment of a select committee to examine and report on his submission that he should remain a member of the House of Commons. It was ordered by the House of Commons that the petition be referred to the Committee of Privileges. On Mar. 14, 1961, the Committee of Privileges reported to the House of Commons, and it was ordered that the report be printed. On Apr. 13, 1961, the report was debated in the House of Commons and it was resolved—

"That this House takes note of the fact that Mr. Anthony Neil Wedgwood Benn on succession to the Viscounty of Stansgate on the 17th November, 1960, ceased to be a member of this House and agrees with the Committee of Privileges on their report."

On Apr. 18, 1961, the House of Commons resolved that a new writ should be issued for the election of a new member for the constituency of South East Division of Bristol. On Apr. 21, 1961, the respondent and Mr. Malcolm St. Clair (one of the petitioners to the petition before this court) were nominated for the ensuing by-election. On May 4, 1961, polling took place in the said by-election. The votes recorded in the by-election were: The respondent, 23,275 votes; Mr. St. Clair, 10,231 votes. On May 5, 1961, the returning officer returned the respondent to the Clerk of the Crown as being duly elected for the said constituency. It is, as we have said, this by-election which is the subject of this election petition before this court.

On the hearing before us the submissions advanced by the petitioners were, in outline, as follows:—(1) A peer of the United Kingdom cannot be a member of the House of Commons. The disqualification for membership of the House of Commons arises on the succession to the peerage and does not depend in any way on an issue of a writ of summons to the House of Lords in a case such as this where the succession is by descent. (2) The respondent succeeded to the peerage on the death of the first Viscount Stansgate of Stansgate on Nov. 17, 1960. (3) The respondent was disqualified for membership of the House of Commons on such succession and was accordingly disqualified from being a candidate at the election. (4) A peer can neither alienate, renounce, surrender nor extinguish his peerage by any means. (5) By reason of the circumstances of this by-election the court should declare that Mr. Malcolm St. Clair be the member for this constituency.

The submissions advanced by the respondent were, in outline, as follows: (1) The disqualification of peers for membership of the House of Commons is based on the incompatibility of parliamentary service. (2) The writ of summons to the House of Lords transforms an inherent right or privilege conferred by the letters patent on United Kingdom peers into an incompatible duty. (3) The writ of summons is the condition precedent to the disqualification of a member of Parliament on the grounds of United Kingdom peerage for until the writ of

A summons has issued no incompatibility of service arises. (4) The writ of summons is also the only way of establishing in law the fact of succession to a United Kingdom peerage for male persons of full age. (5) The writ of summons is also the indispensable legal pre-requisite to establish the right of a United Kingdom peer to sit in the House of Lords as lord of Parliament. (6) There is a well established convention of the constitution that writs of summons are not issued B to any person in such a way as to disqualify them involuntarily from the House of Commons. (7) The courts of law have no original jurisdiction in peerage matters even when incidently arising in course of litigation. (8) The respondent on May 4, 1961, was not in receipt of a writ of summons and was therefore not disqualified from standing as a candidate nor from sitting and voting as a member of Parliament. (9) This court should not declare Mr. St. Clair as C member of Parliament for this division. The submissions were amplified in the course of the hearing before us.

It will be observed that the main difference between the petitioners and the respondent as to the disqualification for membership of the House of Commons and for standing as a candidate was: Did such disqualification arise on succession to the peerage or did it arise on the granting of a writ of summons to the D House of Lords?

In the course of the hearing before us certain evidence was called by the petitioners of the circumstances relating to the conduct of the election which, they submitted, gave this court the right in law to declare that Mr. St. Clair was the member of Parliament for this constituency.

The respondent did not contend that the instrument of renunciation which E he had signed in this case amounted to a renunciation of the peerage. The respondent said:

> "It is really not for me to say whether I think a peerage can be surrendered. All that I can say is that in this case I am placing no reliance whatsoever on the instrument of renunciation which I have executed. It is not for me to say whether or not a peerage can be surrendered."

F It is nevertheless appropriate to consider whether in law a peer has the right to renounce or surrender a peerage. We have stated earlier in this judgment that the petitioners submitted that it was settled law that a peer can neither alienate, renounce, surrender, nor extinguish his peerage. The Committee for Privileges of the House of Lords considered this matter in the Norfolk (Earldom) Case (1). In this case the Committee for Privileges considered three earlier G decisions which were referred to in COLLINS ON PROCEEDINGS, PRECEDENTS, AND ARGUMENTS ON CLAIMS AND CONTROVERSIES CONCERNING BARONIES BY WRIT AND OTHER HONOURS. These were the cases of the Oxford (Earldom) Petitions (2), the Grey de Ruthyn Case (3), and Purbeck's Case (4). In Purbeck's Case (5) the EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, who gave the leading opinion, said:

H

> "Forasmuch as upon the debate of the petitioner's case, who claims the title of Viscount Purbeck, a question in law did arise, whether a fine levied to the King, by a peer of the realm of his title and honour, can bar and extinguish that title? The lords spiritual and temporal in Parliament assembled, upon very long debate, and having heard His Majesty's attorney general, are unanimously of opinion and do resolve and adjudge, that no I fine now levied, nor at any time hereafter to be levied to the King, can bar such title of honour, or the right of any person claiming, such title under him that levied, or shall levy such fine."

The Norfolk (Earldom) Case (1) is of very great importance in considering the right of a peer to renounce his peerage. The headnote to the case is:

---

(1) [1907] A.C. 10. (2) (1625), Collins's Baronies by Writ, 173.
(3) (1640), Collins's Baronies by Writ, 195.
(4) (1678), Collins's Baronies by Writ, 293.
(5) (1678), Collins's Baronies by Writ at p. 305.

"A peer cannot surrender his peerage to the Sovereign in any manner; and this law must be applied to a surrender made in 1302. In 1302 Roger Le Bygod, Earl of Norfolk, surrendered the earldom to Edward I. In 1312 Edward II granted to Thomas de Brotherton and to the heirs of his body the earldom so surrendered. Thomas de Brotherton was frequently summoned by writ to Parliament and sat there. Lord Mowbray, having proved his pedigree as senior co-heir of Thomas de Brotherton, alleged that the earldom had fallen into abeyance, and claimed that the abeyance should be determined in his favour as senior co-heir:—Held, that the surrender by Roger le Bygod was invalid; that the charter of 1312 was consequently invalid; that the sitting in Parliament under the King's writ could not create an earldom; and that Lord Mowbray had not made out his claim."

The EARL OF HALSBURY stated (6):

"My Lords, in this case the claimant seeks to establish his right to the Earldom of Norfolk, an earldom created in the person of Hugh le Bygod in 1135. It may be assumed that he has satisfactorily established his pedigree, but in the course of it he is compelled to admit that he is not heir to the earldom so created, but has to rely on a surrender of the earldom to the King in 1302 and a grant in 1312 to Thomas de Brotherton of the earldom so surrendered. Now the claimant has undoubtedly proved his descent from Thomas de Brotherton, but the fatal blot in his case is that the surrender upon which he relies is invalid in law. It is settled law 'that no peer of this realm can drown or extinguish his honour (but that it descend to his descendants) neither by surrender, grant, fine nor any other conveyance to the King.' This has been repeatedly held to be the law for some centuries, and finally in the Report on the Dignity of a Peer it is stated that such must now be held to be the law: vol. 2 of the Third Report on the Dignity of a Peer, pp. 25, 46."

LORD ASHBOURNE and LORD DAVEY delivered opinions to the like effect.

We were further referred to Viscountess Rhondda's Case (7) where VISCOUNT BIRKENHEAD, L.C., said (8):

"Of the two views, I adopt without hesitation the latter. A peerage held by a peeress in her own right is one to which in law the incident of exercising the right to receive a writ is not, and never was, attached. A right to sit and vote is personal to the holder of a peerage who possesses it. It is a right which can neither be denied nor surrendered nor exercised by deputy. The right really consists in the exercise, and a common law right to do something which the common law forbids to be done is, when so defined, a contradiction in terms."

LORD WRENBURY said (9):

"A peerage is an inalienable incorporeal hereditament created by the act of the Sovereign which, if and when he creates it, carries with it certain attributes which attach to it not by reason of any grant of those attributes by the Crown, but as essentially existing at common law by reason of the ennoblement created by the grant of the peerage."

LORD WRENBURY dissented in the decision of the court but not on this matter.

We have considered the submissions made to us on this question and we are of the view that the submissions of the petitioners are right in law.

The main question of law which this court has to determine is (subject to the procedural point taken by the respondent that no civil court (including this court) has jurisdiction to determine the fact of succession) whether the respondent, if in fact he succeeded to the Viscounty of Stansgate on the death of his

(6) [1907] A.C. at p. 11. (7) [1922] 2 A.C. 339. (8) [1922] 2 A.C. at p. 362. (9) [1922] 2 A.C. at p. 393.

A father, the first viscount, is disqualified from being a candidate at a parliamentary election or from sitting in the House of Commons notwithstanding he has not applied for or received a writ of summons to attend the House of Lords. This is a pure question of law to be determined according to the common law of Parliament, namely, that branch of the common law which relates to Parliament. The common law of Parliament is to be found in the decisions of the courts, the B opinions of writers of authority, the reports of the committees of both Houses, particular emphasis being placed on the opinions of the legal members of the House of Lords' committees when advising on matters of privilege (see per LORD BIRKENHEAD, L.C., in Viscountess Rhondda's Case (10)), and in the reports of the election committees before the appointment in 1868 (11) of the election judges. But it must be emphasised that neither the reports of committees of C the two Houses nor resolutions of either House can alter the law. To use the trenchant phrase of LORD CAMPBELL in 1858 (128 Hansard, 3rd Series, at p. 928),

> "The resolutions of the House of Lords or of the House of Commons affecting to alter the law would in Westminster Hall be regarded as so much waste paper."

D Furthermore, though the court accepts without hesitation the sincerity of the respondent's claim that as a devoted House of Commons' man he would suffer hardship in being deprived of his opportunity of rendering further service to the House of Commons and to the constituents of Bristol South East if by the fact of succession he were debarred from the House of Commons, these considerations cannot affect the duty of the court to apply the law once it has been ascertained. E It is not the function of this court to express any view at all whether or not the law should be changed.

Before considering the authorities in detail one general observation may be made. The hereditary principle is still firmly embodied in the constitution. Though by legislation starting with the Parliament Act, 1911, the powers of the House of Lords have been curtailed, it still remains the law that the composition of the House of Lords is largely based on the hereditary principle, namely, that F persons of a certain class, that is to say, persons who by creation by letters patent or by succession have become peers of the realm have the right and duty to sit in the House of Lords. A peerage (and for this purpose we confine our consideration to United Kingdom peers) constitutes a complex of rights, privileges and duties. As stated, in Viscountess Rhondda's Case (12) LORD WRENBURY used these words:

G

> "A peerage is an inalienable incorporeal hereditament created by the act of the Sovereign which, if and when he creates it, carries with it certain attributes which attach to it not by reason of any grant of those attributes by the Crown, but as essentially existing at common law by reason of the ennoblement created by the grant of the peerage."

H If then a peerage as a whole is inalienable, it would seem strange that a peer should be entitled by his own act in refusing to apply for a writ of summons to disembarrass himself from part of the attributes assigned by the common law to the incorporeal hereditament to which he has succeeded.

How then does the matter stand on authority? It is true so far as the researches of those who appeared before us go that no court has expressly decided whether I or not a person who has become a peer of the United Kingdom by succession can by refraining from applying for a writ of summons save himself from disqualification to sit in the House of Commons. Throughout the authorities there has been, at any rate until the case of Lord Wolmer (13) in 1895, the fundamental assumption that a peer will automatically apply for a writ of (10) [1922] 2 A.C. at p. 380. (11) Viz., by the Parliamentary Elections Act, 1868.

(12) [1922] 2 A.C. at p. 393.
(13) Referred to in ERSKINE MAY'S TREATISE ON THE LAW, PRIVILEGES, PROCEEDINGS AND USAGE OF PARLIAMENT (11th Edn.) at p. 194; see p. 366, letter C, post.

summons. This is in our view the true explanation of the fact that in many of the early authorities the expression "lord of parliament" is used rather than "peer of the realm"; but the expression "lord of parliament" is not used for the purpose of drawing a distinction between lords of parliament and peers of the realm. But, subject to this reservation and with this explanation, it seems to the court that the authorities, whether embodied in decisions of the courts or in the writings of authors of authority, are all one way, with one possible exception to which we shall refer later.

In COKE UPON LITTLETON, Vol. 1, p. 16b, one finds LORD COKE stating the position as follows:

> "The true division of persons is, that every man is either of nobility, that is, a lord of parliament of the upper house, or under the degree of nobility, amongst the commons, as knights, esquires, citizens and burgesses of the lower house of Parliament, commonly called the house of commons, and he that is not of the nobility is by intendment of law among the commons."

To which passage the chairman of the House of Commons of 1894 Committee on the vacating of seats, Mr. Curzon, in a memorandum handed in on July 19, 1894, added the following comment:

> "And surely the converse must necessarily be true that he who by succession becomes a peer belongs to the nobility and is by the intendment of law amongst the lords."

A further passage in COKE'S INSTITUTES (Part IV) at p. 1 (on which the respondent strongly relied) may here be quoted:

> "And the King and these three estates are the great corporation or body politik of the kingdom: and do sit in two houses, viz., the King and the lords in one house called the lords' house and the knights, citizens and burgesses in another house, called the house of commons: . . . And whosoever is not a lord of parliament and of the lords' house, is of the house of commons either in person, or by representation, partly coagmentative, and partly representative."

It is in our judgment quite plain that in these passages LORD COKE is not drawing any distinction between peers of the realm who acquire nobility by creation or succession and lords of parliament, but is indeed emphasising the fact that by acquiring nobility a person acquires a special status by virtue of his entitlement to a seat in the House of Lords, and that this status distinguishes him from that class of person who is entitled to be a member of or represented by a member of the House of Commons.

SIR JOHN SIMEON in his work on ELECTIONS (2nd Edn., 1795) (14) in dealing with disqualification from sitting in the House of Commons states as follows:

> "Another general disqualification is being bound to serve the state in another capacity incompatible with the character of representative of the people. Thus peers of Parliament who compose a distinct and separate part of the constitution were always deemed ineligible and incapable of sitting in the House of Commons."

This passage is quoted textually and adopted by MALE in his TREATISE ON THE LAW AND PRACTICE OF ELECTIONS published in 1818.

In the third report of the Lords' Committee touching the Dignity of a Peer of the Realm published on July 29, 1822, and known as the Redesdale Report, the following definition of "Peer of the Realm" is to be found:

> "The term 'peer of the realm', during a long period, and until the legislative union of the two kingdoms of England and Scotland, by which they became one kingdom, was used as the distinguishing appellation of each of (14) The passage is also in the original edition (1789), pp. 26, 27.

A the temporal lords of Parliament; forming, as for many years before that union they had formed, with the spiritual lords, a distinct House of Parliament; that house having a character, and powers, and privileges, different, in many points, from those which belong to the other house, now called 'The Commons House of Parliament'; and the temporal lords having also a character materially distinct from that of the spiritual lords; that B distinct character being peculiar to their character of 'peers of the realm'. The Union of England and Scotland first, and the Union of Great Britain and Ireland afterwards, have had the effect of creating a clear distinction between the character of peer of the realm and that of temporal lord of parliament; but a distinction previously existed, in some degree, in the cases of minors, and of women claiming to be peeresses in their own rights; and with respect C also to such persons as, being peers of the realm by right, might not have thought fit to qualify themselves to sit and vote as lords of parliament."

Subsequent passages of the same report, however, make it plain that the distinction between peers of the realm and lords of parliament which arose after the legislative union of England and Scotland by the Act of Union of 1706 into D the new realm of Great Britain and the legislative union between Ireland and the realm of Great Britain by the Union with Ireland Act, 1800, into the realm of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland arose from the fact that by the terms of these legislative unions not all peers of Scotland and Ireland respectively became entitled to sit in the House of Lords as lords of parliament. So far as peers of the realm of England were concerned no change was made except E that they became peers of the two new realms successively. With regard to the last sentence in this definition relating to "such persons as, being peers of the realm by right, might not have thought fit to qualify themselves to sit and vote as lords of parliament", there is nothing in the report which we have been able to find which elucidates the meaning of this passage, and it would in our judgment be unsafe to infer that the author of this report intended to refer to those peers F who had not applied for a writ of summons. It may equally refer only to cases in which the peer had not thought fit to attempt to establish his succession or identity or who may have been under some other disability such as alienage or bankruptcy or incapacity to take the oath imposed as a bar by 30 Car. II, stat. 2, c. 1, of which he had not thought fit to free himself.

In SIR WILLIAM ANSON'S famous work on the LAW AND CUSTOM OF THE G CONSTITUTION first published in 1886, it is stated at p. 73 (ch. V, s. I, sub-s. 4) as follows:

> "A peerage is a disqualification. An English peer may not be a member of the House of Commons, nor may a Scotch peer, even though he be not one of the representative peers of Scotland. But an Irish peer may sit for any county H or borough of Great Britain so long as he is not one of the twenty-eight representatives of the Irish Peerage in the House of Lords (39 & 40 Geo. III, c. 67, art. 4)."

The same passage occurs in the second edition published in 1892. In the third edition, published in 1897, also written by SIR WILLIAM ANSON, there is a footnote to the passage at p. 78 to the following effect:

I

> "It has been contended that a peer of the United Kingdom is not disqualified as such, and that until he has received a writ of summons as a lord of parliament he may sit in the House of Commons. In 1895 this point was raised by Lord Wolmer, member for West Edinburgh, on succeeding to the Earldom of Selborne; but the House, upon receiving a report from a select committee that Lord Wolmer had succeeded to a peerage of the United Kingdom, at once directed that a new writ should be issued. Hansard 4th Series xxxiii 1058, 1728."

But there is no suggestion that SIR WILLIAM ANSON (or any of the distinguished lawyers who have been responsible for the preparation of subsequent editions) expressed any dissent from the conclusions of the select committee of 1895. A

In ERSKINE MAY'S TREATISE ON THE LAW, PRIVILEGES, PROCEEDINGS AND USAGE OF PARLIAMENT (1st Edn. 1844) the following passage occurs:

> "An English or Scottish peerage is a disqualification but an Irish peer unless elected as one of the representative peers of Ireland may sit for any place in Great Britain. English peers are ineligible for the House of Commons as having a seat in the upper house: and Scottish peers, as being represented there by virtue of the Act of Union." B

In SIR T. LONSDALE WEBSTER'S eleventh edition (1906) the first edition published after the 1895 select committee's report, there was added at p. 194 a passage dealing with Lord Wolmer's case and the report of the 1895 committee substantially to the same effect as the note in ANSON above quoted, and again in this edition and in the current 1957 edition no suggestion is made that the 1895 decision was wrong in law. C

Finally, in all editions of HALSBURY'S LAWS OF ENGLAND dealing with the disqualification of members of the House of Commons (see 3rd Edn., Vol. 28, 337, para. 547), it is stated that: D

> "Every peer of the United Kingdom or Scotland, whether he is a lord of parliament or not, and every representative peer of Ireland is disqualified for sitting in the House of Commons."

Though this sentence is grammatically not very clear, we consider without doubt that it should be read as if the words "whether he is a lord of parliament or not" should be taken as referring to Scottish peers and intended to make the point that Scottish peers whether or not elected as representative peers are disqualified from membership of the House of Commons. E

We now turn to the one passage in the text-books which seems to us to be out of line with this current of authority. In the SIMONDS' edition of HALSBURY'S LAWS OF ENGLAND, viz., 3rd Edn., Vol. 14, 11, para. 13, the following passage occurs dealing with the closely related question of the right of peers to vote at parliamentary elections: F

> "A peer of Parliament is legally incapable of voting at a parliamentary election, even though his name may have been placed upon the register without objection. The writ of summons to the House of Lords must be issued before the disqualification attaches." G

The first sentence is to be found in the second edition, vol. 12, 176, para. 354, but not the second sentence (15). The authority for the second sentence is stated to be the Bedford (Borough) Case, Marquis of Tavistock's Case (16). (The case is also more fully reported in Perry & Knapp's Election Cases at p. 143.) The facts of this case may be shortly stated. A parliamentary election for the borough of Bedford was held on Dec. 12 and 13, 1832, and an election petition H

(15) The same view as that stated in the second sentence cited above was also taken in SCHOFIELD'S PARLIAMENTARY ELECTIONS (3rd Edn., 1959) 19, and PARKER'S ELECTION AGENT (6th Edn., 1959) 264.

(16) (1833), Cockb. & Rowe at p. 95. The reports of this case, viz., that cited in this footnote and the report in Perry & Knapp's Election Cases cited above, refer to the writ as a writ of summons, as it was indeed described in the warrant for its issue; neither report mentions that it was a writ in acceleration. The warrant directed a writ to issue summoning the Marquis of Tavistock, by the name and title of Baron Howland, to be present with the King and peers of the realm at Parliament holden at Westminster on Jan. 29, 1833, "in as ample and honourable a manner and form to all intents and purposes as any baron of this realm hath at any time heretofore been inrolled or created by writ." According to the statement of counsel supporting the validity of the vote of the Marquis of Tavistock the writ of summons was not issued until Jan. 15 or 16, 1833. As regards writs in acceleration, see 29 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 249, para. 511. I

A by the unsuccessful candidate was in due course referred to an election committee of the House of Commons. Amongst the votes challenged was the vote of the Marquis of Tavistock. On Dec. 11 the King issued to the Lord Chancellor his warrant to make out a writ of summons to Francis Russell, the eldest son of the Duke of Bedford, who had the courtesy title of the Marquis of Tavistock. Included in the dignities of the Duke of Bedford was the barony of Howland of B Streatham in the county of Surrey. The writ of summons so directed to the Marquis of Tavistock was in law a writ of acceleration, namely a writ by which the eldest son of a living peer could be called to the House of Lords in advance of his father's death by a writ in respect of an inferior dignity held by the father. In ignorance of the fact that the warrant for the issue of the writ of acceleration had been published in the London Gazette on Dec. 11, the Marquis of Tavistock C voted at the election but on his return to Woburn he became aware of the entry in the London Gazette; he applied in writing to the returning officer to have his vote struck out. The returning officer did not in fact strike out the vote; but when the election petition was heard the marquis himself intervened to have his vote struck out. Mr. Russell on behalf of the party interested in maintaining the validity of the vote argued that (17):

D

> "The Marquis was not a peer at the time he voted, for no writ had then issued. But even if it had, he could not have been considered a peer until he had taken his seat in the House of Lords."

In support of this argument he relied on Lord Abergavenny's Case (18) which was a straightforward case of barony by writ and sitting. The committee ruled (19) E that the vote was good but gave no reasons for their decision. If they decided on the ground that a person called up in the barony of his father was not ennobled until he sat on the analogy of the case of the baronies by writ of summons and sitting, their decision may or may not have been correct. But it is in our view no authority at all for the wide proposition stated in HALSBURY, or for the submission founded thereon by the respondent, that on succession to a peerage the F disqualification does not attach until the writ of summons has been issued.

We now turn to the decisions of the courts. Of these, the most important is the Earl of Beauchamp v. Madresfield (20). The actual point for decision was whether a peer who had in fact taken his seat in the House of Lords was entitled to vote at a parliamentary election. The revising barrister having decided that he was not entitled in law to have his name inserted in the register expunged it. G A Divisional Court consisting of BOVILL, C.J., KEATING, BRETT, and GROVE, JJ., upheld the decision of the revising barrister. Seeing that the Earl of Beauchamp had actually taken his seat in the House of Lords and therefore must have been in receipt of a writ of summons it clearly does not as a matter of decision cover the present case even though it is conceded, and in our judgment rightly conceded, that so far as disqualification by peerage is concerned the same principles must H govern the question of disqualification from sitting as a member of the House of (17) (1833), Cockb. & Rowe at p. 97. (18) (1610), 12 Co. Rep. 70.

---

(19) (1833), Cockb. & Rowe at p. 97; Per. & Kn. at p. 146. In so far as argument advanced in a case may be relevant to indicate what its decision rejected, when no reasons are given, it may be observed that the argument of counsel (Mr. Ryland) contending that the Marquis of Tavistock's vote was invalid included a submission as I follows:—"He was a peer at the time that he voted, and therefore his vote must be struck off the poll . . . We admit that for certain purposes he was not a peer, but can any authority be produced that he was not a peer so as to be incapacitated from voting . . . If that was the law, every eldest son of a nobleman would retain his right of voting at elections after his father's death, until he chose to take his seat in the House of Lords . . ." (Per. & Kn. at p. 146). By deciding that the vote cast was valid, and thus rejecting the submission, it may be that the committee found tenable the final proposition that was submitted by counsel as untenable. That proposition presents the legal issue in the present case. Accordingly it seems that to this extent the decision in the Bedford (Borough) Case, Marquis of Tavistock's Case is overruled by the decision in the present case. (20) (1872), L.R. 8 C.P. 245.

Commons as govern the question of disqualification from voting at a parliamentary election. But though the point in issue is not the same as in the present case, it may be found on an examination of the arguments and the judgments that the ratio decidendi of the judgment is to be found in the wider proposition that no English peer may vote at a parliamentary election. Counsel for Lord Beauchamp, having stated (21) that the question intended to be raised was whether a peer of Parliament was entitled to be placed on the register, was constrained to admit (21) that every principle of the constitution and all the authorities on the subject were opposed to such a right. He referred (22) to the resolution of the House of Commons in 1699 in the case of the Earl of Manchester that "no peer of this kingdom hath any right to give his vote at the election for any member to serve in Parliament", to the resolution of the House in 1700 that "if a peer or lord lieutenant of a county concerns himself in elections, it is an infringement of the liberties of the Commons", and (23) to two resolutions of the House of Apr. 27, 1802 (that is to say, two years after the Union with Ireland Act, 1800), to the following effect:

> "(1) that no peer of this realm, except such peer of that part of the United Kingdom called Ireland as shall for the time being be actually elected and shall not have declined to serve for any county, city or borough of Great Britain, hath any right to give his vote in the election of any member to serve in Parliament", and

> "(2) that it is a high infringement of the liberties and privileges of the Commons of the United Kingdom for any lord of parliament or other peer or prelate, not being a peer of Ireland at the time elected and not having declined to serve any county, city, or borough of Great Britain, to concern himself in the election of members to serve for the Commons in Parliament, except only any peer of Ireland at such elections in Great Britain respectively where such peer shall appear as a candidate or by himself or any other be proposed to be elected . . ."

Bovill, C.J., after setting out the effect of the resolutions of 1699 and 1700, continued as follows (24):

> "It is not now necessary to enter into the reasons for the exclusion of peers from voting at or interfering in elections for members of the other House: there were, no doubt, constitutional reasons to justify it. These resolutions were passed, not for the purpose of determining who should in future be allowed to vote, but for the purpose of declaring what was the law upon the subject. The House of Commons alone could not, without the assent of the other branch of the legislature, make a law to determine its own constitution; but it was competent to the House, sitting as a court, as it undoubtedly was, to determine as to the right of voting; and they were bound to declare the law. Acting upon these resolutions, the House of Commons and the election committees have decided in one uniform stream of authorities from that time to the present, that peers have 'no right' to vote."

Later (24) he adds:

> "Whenever a peer has voted at an election, upon a scrutiny before the House his vote has invariably been disallowed . . ."

Keating, J. (25), holding that there was abundant authority, including that of Lord Coke, to justify the resolution of 1699, continued (25):

> "above all, we find it clothed with the strongest of all authority, viz.

(21) (1872), L.R. 8 C.P. 245.
(22) (1872), L.R. 8 C.P. at p. 246.
(23) (1872), L.R. 8 C.P. at p. 247.
(24) (1872), L.R. 8 C.P. at p. 251.
(25) (1872), L.R. 8 C.P. at p. 252.

A uninterrupted usage for more than a century and a half; and no single authority of any weight is to be found the other way."

BRETT, J. (26), though reluctant to give any judgment in view of the admission by counsel, was prepared to "hold that, independently of the resolution [of 1699 of the House of Commons] we are justified by the current of decisions in holding that peers have B no right to vote. If they have no right to vote, they can have no right to be upon the register."

GROVE, J., contented himself with saying (27) that:

"The total absence of authority in favour of the claim, and the concessions made by the counsel for the appellants, abundantly justify the conclusion C at which we have arrived, quite irrespectively of the constitutional reasons which might be advanced in opposition to the claim."

We find it quite impossible to believe that judges of this eminence could per incuriam have stated that peers of the realm were disqualified when they meant only to say that peers of the realm who have sat in the House of Lords were so D disqualified. We accordingly conclude that the true ratio decidendi of this case is that no English peer may vote at a parliamentary election. Finally in Viscountess Rhondda's Case (28), a decision of the Committee for Privileges of the House of Lords, LORD BIRKENHEAD, L.C., in the leading judgment, after an exhaustive review of the precedents including the resolutions of 1699, 1700 and 1802, stated in terms (29) that:

E "These resolutions are declaratory of the common law and without any doubt they embody the law of Parliament."

This judgment was expressly concurred in by LORD BUCKMASTER, LORD SUMNER, LORD CARSON and LORD ATKINSON. Though LORD HALDANE and LORD WRENBURY dissented on the actual motion before the committee there is no suggestion in their speeches that they dissented from LORD BIRKENHEAD'S statement as F set out above.

Against this consistent stream of authority the respondent sought to show that the disability of a peer to sit in the House of Commons arose not from his status as a peer but from the incompatibility of duties imposed by the issue of a writ of summons to serve in the House of Lords. This submission involved a historical survey of the origin and function of the writ of summons. Shortly stated, this G historical survey showed that in the early days before the division between the two Houses was established the writ of summons was everything. By the writ of summons the King summoned to his council those whom he chose as best fitted by reason of their standing in the country to advise him on matters of state. The writ of summons originally conferred no status. The fact that a man was called to one council did not confer on him, still less on his descendants, a H right to be called to subsequent councils. It was only as the power of the barons increased that the position was established that the issue of a writ of summons followed by sitting in the House of Lords conferred a hereditary right for the person obeying the summons and his heirs general to sit in the House of Lords. But it is, we think, clear that with the institution of the system of creating peers of the realm by letters patent issued by the Crown (the first letters patent I being issued in 1387), it was the letters patent that conferred the right on the holders of the letters patent and on the specific class of heirs named in the patent—generally heirs male of the body.

"The letters patent require the supplement of a writ. But they give a right to demand that writ, and impose a liability to receive it and to act upon it."

---

(26) (1872), L.R. 8 C.P. at p. 253.
(27) (1872), L.R. 8 C.P. at p. 255.
(28) [1922] 2 A.C. 339.
(29) [1922] 2 A.C. at p. 368.

See per LORD BIRKENHEAD, L.C., in Viscountess Rhondda's Case (30). The writ of summons also performed the function of notifying the recipient of the place and time of his commanded attendance. A further development is to be noted. Whereas the writ of summons could originally be issued by the king to whomsoever he desired to attend, by a firmly based constitutional convention it was established that letters patent with the accompanying writ could only be issued to a consenting party. The historical origin of this convention is obscure, but it may well be that it was founded in part at least on the claim enforced by the emerging powers of the two Houses that the king should not be able at will to withdraw members from the House of Commons or to place his own men in the House of Lords. A further interesting instance of the emerging power of the House of Commons is to be found in the cases of Onslow (1562), Jeffreys (1585) and Popham (1580), cited in GEORGE PETYT'S LEX PARLIAMENTARIA (1689), at pp. 184, 185. Each of these being already elected members of the House of Commons was summoned by writ of summons to attend and advise the House of Lords. The House of Commons successfully claimed them back for service in the House of Commons.

The respondent also relied on the fact that the Long Parliament after the abolition of the House of Lords as a legislative chamber but not of the dignity of peerage admitted to the House of Commons three undoubted peers, the Earl of Pembroke, Lord Howard, and the Earl of Salisbury, after their election to the House of Commons. From this it was argued that the House of Commons could not have taken the view that the status of peerage alone disqualified from sitting in the House of Con mons. Interesting as this historical survey has been, it does not seem to the court to afford any sound basis for the contention that by the law of Parliament today it is incompatibility of service arising from obedience to the writ of summons which imposes the disqualification rather than the status of the peer. Indeed it may well be that the idea underlying the disqualification by status is that the status itself comprising as it does the right if not the duty to attend in the House of Lords gave rise to incompatibility. But we think that there was great force in the submission of counsel for the petitioners that while, no doubt, the incompatibility of service in both Houses was the original reason for the rule of common law for which he contended, namely, that status disqualifies, it is essential not to confuse the reasons for a rule coming into force with the rule itself. We refer in this connexion to a passage in the report from the Select Committee on Peerages in Abeyance, 1926, in para. 9 to the following effect:

> "Whether the conclusions of modern historical research are or are not correct we are neither concerned nor competent to decide. We have been assured and we believe it to be the case that they are now accepted by the great majority of historical scholars. The law, however, if settled, cannot be unsettled in this way."

We have referred earlier in this section of our judgment to the decline in the importance of the writ of summons. This has been a progressive movement, and without going into the detail of Speaker Onslow's opinion (31) expressed in May, 1760, to Lord Egmont, as reported by HATSELL IN HIS PRECEDENTS OF PROCEEDINGS IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, vol. 2 (4th Edn. 1818), 393, as to the practice of the House of Commons relating to the vacating of seats of peers "called to the Upper House" or to the adoption of their view by the Select Committee of the House of Commons appointed in 1894 to inquire into the law and practice of Parliament in reference to the vacating of seats in the House of Commons, it is sufficient to state that by at least the early years of

(30) [1922] 2 A.C. at p. 359.

(31) This contains at p. 394 the passage ". . . for the attendance in both Houses of Parliament is considered as a service, and the two services are incompatible with each other. But this fact [i.e., the calling up to the House of Peers] is seldom inquired into by the House . . ."

A the nineteenth century it had become part of the common law of Parliament that the writ of summons, though the best evidence of succession, had ceased to be the only method by which the disqualification by status could be established.

The respondent further sought to support his argument as to the continued validity of the writ of summons as the sole means of establishing the right to sit B in the House of Lords by reference to two statutes from which it was argued inferences to that effect could properly be drawn. The first was the Recess Elections Act, 1784, which (omitting immaterial words) provides by s. 2 that > "it may be lawful for the speaker of the House of Commons for the time being, during any recess of the said House . . . and he is hereby required C to issue his warrant to the clerk of the crown, to make out a new writ for electing a member of the House of Commons in the room of any member of the said House . . . who shall become a peer of Great Britain . . . as soon as he shall receive notice . . . that a writ of summons hath been issued under the great seal of Great Britain, to summon such peer to Parliament . . ."

D In our judgment no such inference can properly be drawn. We accept as accurate the comment made by MR. CURZON in his memorandum to the 1894 Committee already referred to above that > "the Act, in providing for the issue of writs during the recess, prescribed the same cautious procedure which the House habitually observed during sessions but it in no way dealt with or circumscribed the ancient privilege E of the House in matters of election."

Reliance was also placed on s. 134 (1) of the Representation of the People Act, 1949, which provides:

> "If before the trial of an election petition a respondent other than a returning officer . . . (b) where the petition questions a parliamentary election or return, is summoned to Parliament as a peer of Great Britain by F a writ issued under the great seal of Great Britain or the House of Commons have resolved that his seat is vacant . . ."

certain consequences shall follow. This is an obscure and ungrammatical provision, and it would in our view be unsafe to draw any inference in favour of the respondent from its terms. It may be—though we express no opinion on it —that the last few words, "or the House of Commons have resolved that his seat G is vacant", were expressly designed to cover the case where the House had so resolved as they did in Lord Wolmer's case that the seat was vacant notwithstanding that no writ of summons had been issued.

We fully appreciate the force of the respondent's argument that in order to avoid any possibility of conflict between the decision of the House of Commons H and the decision of the Crown on the advice of the lord chancellor or the Select Committee of Privileges as to the fact of succession it would be convenient to lay down as a matter of law that the issue of the writ of summons was the sole determining factor: but we are unable for the reasons stated above to hold that this is the law.

Our conclusion on this branch of the case accordingly is that, if the respondent I has in fact succeeded to the Viscounty of Stansgate, and it is open for us so to find, he became by that succession disqualified for being a candidate at the election or from sitting in the House of Commons notwithstanding that he had not applied for or received a writ of summons to attend the House of Lords.

We think it right to say that this conclusion seems to us to be in accordance with sound constitutional doctrine. So long as the hereditary principle is maintained as part of the fabric of the constitution—and we express no opinion whether it should be so maintained—it would seem to us to be wholly inconsistent with that principle that the successor to a hereditary peerage should have a free option as to which House he desires to sit in. By the fact of succession he has entered a particular class of persons on whom the duty of attending the House of Lords (unless granted leave of absence) is imposed by law and immemorial usage; and no modern constitutional convention to the contrary has in our view been established.

We now turn to the point which we reserved earlier, namely, the procedural point taken by the respondent that no civil court—including this court—has jurisdiction to determine the fact of succession. The respondent's broad submission on this point was that as the Crown is the sole fountain of honour, questions of succession can only be determined by the appropriate constitutional machinery, viz., the lord chancellor or in disputed cases a reference from the Crown to the Committee of Privileges on whose determination the writ of summons issued and that, as he had taken no steps to prove to the Crown his succession and, consequently, no writ of summons had been issued, the court had no jurisdiction to determine this fact.

It will be appreciated that, if this submission is correct, in law, it would be impossible for this court to determine the question which it is charged with the duty of determining. For this submission, however, the respondent relied on the decision of the House of Lords in Earl Cowley v. Countess Cowley (32) to which we shall now direct our attention. The headnote of this case is as follows:

> "Where the marriage of a commoner with a peer of the realm has been dissolved by decree at the instance of the wife, and she afterwards, on marrying a commoner, continues to use the title she acquired by her first marriage, she does not thereby, though having no legal right to the user, commit such a legal wrong against her former husband, or so affect his enjoyment of the incorporeal hereditament he possesses in his title, as to entitle him, in the absence of malice, to an injunction to restrain her use of the title. Only the House of Lords can try questions of right in matters of peerage or dignities connected therewith."

LORD MACNAGHTEN stated the facts of the case in these words (33):

> "And then he claims an injunction from a court of law to prevent his late wife using that designation [Countess Cowley] on the ground that it is an invasion or disturbance of the dignity which belongs to him as an incorporeal hereditament. The answer seems to be twofold. If it be a disturbance of a dignity, that is a matter not within the cognisance of a court of law. The right to a peerage can only be tried before the peers . . . There is another answer which to my mind is equally conclusive. It is that Lord Cowley has not suffered either legal wrong or damage."

LORD HALSBURY, L.C., said (34):

> "I do not know what jurisdiction the Divorce Court had in dealing with this matter at all. It seems to have been assumed that it had reference to the divorce; but Mr. Haldane has very candidly admitted that it is not a question of divorce at all, nor has the Divorce Court by any stretch of its jurisdiction any right to determine this question simply because there has been a divorce suit."

LORD HALSBURY had earlier said (34) in speaking of the right claimed by the wife, "it seems to me absolutely clear that no such suit could be entertained." LORD JAMES OF HEREFORD said (35):

> "To establish the alleged disturbance I understood Mr. Haldane to argue at the bar that the respondent by virtue of her marriage with a commoner has lost her rights to bear the title of nobility. It will be observed that this proposition in no way calls in aid the fact of a divorce having (32) [1901] A.C. 450. (33) [1901] A.C. at p. 455. (34) [1901] A.C. at p. 453. (35) [1901] A.C. at p. 457.

A been decreed. If the respondent had been a widow, the same question as that now before your Lordships would have arisen."

LORD JAMES OF HEREFORD further said (36):

"I further concur with the views which have been expressed by my noble and learned friend on the Woolsack and LORD MACNAGHTEN, that the juris-
B diction to try all questions of right connected with peerage and all dignities connected with peerage lies in this House and not in a court of law."

In reliance on this case the respondent submitted that the judgments placed an indubitable bar on this court's deciding the question of succession. In our judgment it is clear that the question at issue in the Cowley case (37) to which
C the observations on which the respondent relied were directed was the question of the disturbance of the dignity held by Earl Cowley. No such issue arises in the matter before us, and we accordingly reject the respondent's submission based on this case.

There being no bar in our way, we have reached the clear conclusion on the facts of this case and on the letters patent that the respondent did succeed to D the peerage, the Viscounty Stansgate of Stansgate, on the death of his father on Nov. 17, 1960. Accordingly, the respondent was disqualified from being a member of the House of Commons and from being a candidate at the Parliamentary election.

We therefore declare that the respondent was not duly elected or returned at the parliamentary election for the constituency of South East Bristol held on E May 4, 1961.

The next question we have to consider is whether the petitioner, Mr. St. Clair, is entitled to the seat.

It was submitted to us on his behalf that in the circumstances of this case, he, the candidate with the next highest number of votes to the respondent, and in fact the only other candidate, was in law entitled to be declared to have been
F duly elected as a member of Parliament for the constituency. The respondent, on the contrary, submitted that the circumstances of the case did not in law justify the declaration sought by the petitioners. We were referred to a number of cases on this question: R. v. Hawkins (38); R. v. Parry, R. v. Phillips (39); Gosling v. Veley (40); R. v. Tewkesbury Corpn. (41); Re Launceston Case, Drinkwater v. Deakin (42); Etherington v. Wilson (43); Cox v. Ambrose (44); Beresford-Hope v. Lady Sandhurst (45); Hobbs v. Morey (46); The Ulster By-
G Election (47); The Fermanagh and South Tyrone Election (48). We have taken all these cases into our consideration and, before considering the facts proved or admitted in the present case, we propose to consider some of these cases in a little detail.

The facts as stated in the headnote in R. v. Hawkins (38) are as follows:

H "One who has not taken the sacrament within a year, being incapable of being elected into a corporate office by stat. 13 Car. 2, c. 12, his disqualification was held not to be removed by the annual act of indemnity (47 Geo. 3, stat. 2, c. 35) . . . the fact being, that the defendant and another were candidates at the time of election, when forty electors were assembled; and after two electors had voted for each candidate, the
I candidates were asked whether they had previously taken the sacrament; to which the defendant answered in the negative, and the other candidate in the affirmative; whereupon notice of the defendant's incapacity was publicly given to the electors, and was heard by all who afterwards voted

(36) [1901] A.C. at p. 458. (37) [1901] A.C. 450. (38) (1808), 10 East, 211.
(39) (1811), 14 East, 549. (40) (1847), 7 Q.B. 406. (41) (1868), L.R. 3 Q.B. 629.
(42) (1874), L.R. 9 C.P. 626. (43) (1875), L.R. 20 Eq. 606.
(44) (1890), 60 L.J.Q.B. 114. (45) (1889), 23 Q.B.D. 79. (46) [1904] 1 K.B. 74.
(47) (1955), 105 L.Jo. 482. (48) (1955), 105 L.Jo. 594.

for the defendant, being twenty in number, except two or three; and sixteen afterwards voted for the other . . ." A

LORD ELLENBOROUGH, C.J., said (49):

"On this state of facts it is clear, that at the time of the election, namely, on Dec. 18, 1806, the defendant Hawkins was incapable of being elected into the office of alderman of the borough by the express prohibition of the stat. 13 Car. 2; it having been admitted by himself at the time, and it being now stated as a fact by the special verdict, that he had not taken the sacrament within a year next before such day of election." B

He continued (50):

"Was he, Spicer, then duly elected on Dec. 10, 1806? That question depends on the effect of the notice given to the electors of the incapacity of the other candidate, Hawkins, to be elected. There is no objection to the due holding of the assembly to elect: forty persons duly qualified to vote are stated to have been present; viz., the mayor, the justice, four aldermen, and thirty-four free burgesses: Hawkins and Spicer are proposed as candidates; and after two persons had voted for Hawkins, and two for Spicer, notice is given of the fact creating Hawkins' incapacity (which fact he at the time himself acknowledges), and that all votes given for him after that notice would be void and thrown away; and the incapacitating clause of the statute of Car. 2 is publicly read: and all this is found to have been in the presence and hearing of all who afterwards voted for Hawkins, except two or three. After this notice, twenty persons voted for Hawkins, and sixteen for Spicer; these numbers, with the two votes before given to each of the candidates, making up the full amount of forty. If the law be, that at the election of corporate officers, the votes given for an incapable candidate, after notice of such incapacity, are to be considered as thrown away, i.e., as if the voters had not given any vote at all; then this will be a good election of Spicer; unless the time when notice of his incapacity was given, namely, after two persons had given their votes for each of the candidates, can be considered as making any difference. The general proposition that votes given for a candidate, after notice of his being ineligible, are to be considered the same as if the persons had not voted at all, is supported by the cases of [R.] v. Boscawan [(1714)], Easter, 13 Anne, [R.] v. Withers [(1735)] Easter 8, G. 2, Taylor v. Bath Corpn. [(1741)] M. 15 G. 2, all which are cited in [(1777) 2] Cowper 537, in [R.] v. Munday (51)." C D E F G

It is not necessary to deal in detail with Gosling v. Veley (52) except to quote a passage from the judgment of LORD DENMAN, C.J. (53), as follows:

"Where the disqualification depends upon a fact which may be unknown to the elector, he is entitled to notice; for, without that, the inference of assent could not be fairly drawn, nor would the consequence as to the vote be just. But, if the disqualification be of a sort whereof notice is to be presumed, none need expressly be given: no one can doubt that, if an elector would nominate and vote only for a woman to fill the office of mayor or burgess in parliament, his vote would be thrown away: there the fact would be notorious; and every man would be presumed to know the law upon that fact." H I

Drinkwater v. Deakin (54) is an important case. The headnote is in terms:

"There being two candidates at a parliamentary election, one of them was guilty of a corrupt practice by giving leave, on the day of nomination,

(49) (1808), 10 East, at p. 215.
(50) (1808), 10 East, at p. 216.
(51) Named R. v. Monday in 2 Cowp. 537.
(52) (1847), 7 Q.B. 406.
(53) (1847), 7 Q.B. at p. 439.
(54) (1874), L.R. 9 C.P. 626.

A to his tenants to kill rabbits on his estate, for the purpose of influencing their votes at the election. A notice was given to the electors on the morning of the polling day, before the polling, by the agent of the other candidate, in the following terms: 'Colonel D. having, for the purpose of influencing voters at this election, given to all his tenants on the Warrington estate and voters in this borough a right to trap and shoot rabbits, has, I believe, B been guilty of a corrupt practice, and, as agent of H.C.D., Esq., a candidate at this election, I hereby give you notice that, under these circumstances, the said Colonel C. is disqualified from being a candidate, and that all votes given for him will be thrown away.' Colonel D. obtained the majority, and was declared elected, but, being petitioned against, was unseated, on the ground of the above-mentioned corrupt practice. The C petitioner claimed the seat on the ground that the votes given to the respondent being given with knowledge of his disqualification, were thrown away, and consequently the petitioner was in a majority:—Held, that bribing by a candidate at an election, though it renders his election void if he be found guilty of it on petition, does not incapacitate the candidate at that election in the sense that the votes given for him by voters with D knowledge of it will be thrown away, and that no disqualification arises in that sense of the term until after the candidate has been found guilty of bribery on petition, and consequently, that the petitioner was not entitled to the seat."

LORD COLERIDGE, C.J., said (55):

E "The real matter we have to determine is, whether the petitioner, Mr. Drinkwater, is or is not entitled to be declared elected for the borough of Launceston. Three propositions have to be made out in order to arrive at this conclusion,—1. That Colonel Deakin was at the time of the election in point of law disqualified; 2. That, notice of that fact having been conveyed to the voters in a form sufficiently definite, any vote given after such notice F was in law thrown away. The peculiar circumstances of this case made it necessary to contend farther, that,—3. The uncertainty or obscurity of the legal question on which the disqualification depends makes no difference:—Given the fact of legal disqualification, as the result of argument however elaborate and decisions however conflicting, and given the fact of notice, the voter gives his vote at his own risk and on his own responsi- G bility. The law as to the disqualification of the candidate, and the notice of such disqualification to the voter, is to be collected from the decisions of courts of law and of parliamentary election committees, which latter, if not binding upon this court, by s. 26 of 31 & 32 Vict., c. 125 are yet to be treated with respect as expositions of the law of parliament, which is part of the common law itself. And, if there be any difference discoverable in H the authorities between the rules applied to parliamentary elections and the rules applied to elections of other sorts, there seem to be reasons of good sense why a somewhat less rigid and technical rule as to the throwing away of votes should obtain in the case of parliamentary constituencies."

BRETT, J., summarises his views (56) as follows:

I "I accept that which seems to me to have been always admitted to be the law before the case of R. v. Tewkesbury Corpn. (57), viz. the proposition which I have expressed, as generally applicable to all cases where notice of the law as affecting any subject-matter is material, that is to say, where by the law, if certain facts exist incapacity exists, and where by the law, if the law were known to the elector, his vote would be thrown away if he persisted in voting for the disqualified candidate, he cannot, if the facts exist to his knowledge, or if he have notice of the facts equivalent to knowledge, which by law produce incapacity for election in the candidate, render his vote valid by asserting that he did not know that the facts by law produced such incapacity, or that his vote would be thrown away if he voted for such candidate. Applying those principles to the present notice, if it were the law that personal bribery rendered the person guilty of it incapable of being a candidate I should have thought that the notice was sufficient."

(55) (1874), L.R. 9 C.P. at p. 633. (56) (1874), L.R. 9 C.P. at p. 642.
(57) (1868), L.R. 3 Q.B. 629.

Etherington v. Wilson (58) was merely an application of these principles. Cox v. Ambrose (59) was a further case in which the principles of Drinkwater v. Deakin (60) were applied in the case of a municipal election.

We now come to the decision of the Court of Appeal in Beresford-Hope v. Lady Sandhurst (61) which dealt with the claim of a woman to be entitled to be elected to a county council. The headnote of the case is in terms:

"At an election of members of a county council under the Local Government Act, 1888, the respondent obtained a majority of votes over the petitioner and was declared to be elected. On a petition claiming the seat on the ground that the respondent, being a woman, was disqualified:—Held, that an appeal lies in such case, by special leave, from the Divisional Court to the Court of Appeal:—Held also (affirming the judgment of the Queen's Bench Division) that women are incapacitated from being elected members of a county council:—Held further, that the votes given to the respondent were thrown away and that the petitioner was duly elected."

But it is only the third finding that is relevant in the present case. The judgment of the first court, the Divisional Court, was given by STEPHEN, J., and he said (62):

"A second question in the case is whether the votes for Lady Sandhurst were thrown away, so that Mr. Beresford-Hope was duly elected, or must there be a new election? The following facts were proved to us upon this subject. In the first place it was admitted that all those who voted for Lady Sandhurst knew that she was a woman. In the second place it was shown to our satisfaction that the question whether as a woman she was incapacitated from election was a subject of common public discussion at the time and place of her election. It was not proved specifically that notice was given to the individual voters. We think, however, that it must be taken that the fact which, if we are right, constituted the disqualification was known to all, and that the voters were also aware that the legal consequence might, though they may not have been aware that it actually did, constitute disqualification. The question whether in such a case the voters voted at their peril, or whether there should be a new election, is not altogether clear. The general principle is laid down in the case of Gosling v. Veley (63) and is there stated as follows: 'Where the majority of electors vote for a disqualified person in ignorance of the fact of disqualification, the election may be void or voidable, or, in the latter case, may be capable of being made good, according to the nature of the disqualification. The objection may require ulterior proceedings to be taken before some competent tribunal, in order to be made available; or it may be such as to place the elected candidate on the same footing as if he never had existed and the votes for him were a nullity.' To this general principle the judgment proceeds to add an illustration so apposite to the present case that in quoting it we wish distinctly to state that we do not regard it as more than a singularly pointed illustration: 'But, if the disqualification be of a sort whereof notice is to be presumed, none need expressly be given: no one can doubt that, if an elector would nominate and

(58) (1875), L.R. 20 Eq. 606.
(59) (1890), 60 L.J.Q.B. 114.
(60) (1874), L.R. 9 C.P. 626.
(61) (1889), 23 Q.B.D. 79.
(62) (1889), 23 Q.B.D. at p. 84.
(63) (1847), 7 Q.B. 406.

A vote only for a woman to fill the office of mayor or burgess in Parliament, his vote would be thrown away: there the fact would be notorious, and every man would be presumed to know the law upon that fact.'

"This case has been to some extent departed from in the case of R. v. Tewkesbury Corpn. (64), decided in 1868. The effect of this case is not unfairly represented by saying that a vote is not to be taken to be thrown away B because the voter knows of a disqualifying fact, but does not know that it is by law disqualifying. This decision, however, appears to have been discredited to some extent by Drinkwater v. Deakin (65) decided in 1874, in which the present Master of the Rolls says (66): 'When the validity or invalidity of an act depends on a question of law, no one can make such act valid in law when it would otherwise be invalid by saying he did not know C the law.' DENMAN, J., agreed in this judgment, and LORD COLERIDGE said (67): 'I entirely agree . . . in the general law laid down as to the throwing away of votes in the judgment in Gosling v. Veley (68).' Etherington v. Wilson (69) is a further authority on this subject. Upon these grounds we think that the votes given for Lady Sandhurst were thrown away, and that Mr. Beresford-Hope was duly elected."

D

The decision of the Divisional Court was upheld by the Court of Appeal. In the Court of Appeal LORD COLERIDGE, C.J., said (70):

"This case comes before us upon appeal from a decision of my brothers HUDDLESTON and STEPHEN in the Court below, that, under the circumstances which I will very shortly mention, the respondent in this appeal is entitled E to the seat for the county council, in the contest for which he received a minority of votes, on the ground that the candidate who received the majority of votes was incapacitated by law from being a candidate for the office of county councillor, and that votes given for her were thrown away, and the ground upon which she was incapacitated, is, that she was a lady."

F He continued (71):

"Then comes the second question, whether the result of unseating the respondent is to seat the appellant, although he had the minority of votes against her. Now that is a matter which has been disputed upon two grounds. First of all, it has been said, that having the right to draw inferences of fact, we must draw the inference that everybody who voted for Lady G Sandhurst was aware of her incapacity, so that their votes were thrown away. I do not think it is necessary to decide that. If it were necessary, I should say that upon the whole we had the power of drawing inferences of fact, but I do not think, for the purpose of this judgment, it is necessary to decide that question, because it appears to me to be undisputed, and the facts of the case are sufficient to show, that the incapacity was an incapacity of status. H The fact from which the incapacity arose must have been known to every one who voted for Lady Sandhurst; therefore every one voted at his peril, because there existed that fact to which the law annexes the incapacity of being elected. I apprehend that both in Gosling v. Veley (68) and in Drinkwater v. Deakin (65), and in other cases it has been laid down over and over again, that if the fact exists which creates an incapacity, and it is known, I and must be known, to those persons who voted for a candidate who is so incapacitated, votes given under those circumstances are thrown away. As it is put in one of the judgments, such votes are fairly enough thrown away, because the persons would not do the only thing they ought to do to give effect to their votes, namely, to vote for a properly qualified candidate. The

(64) (1868), L.R. 3 Q.B. 629.
(65) (1874), L.R. 9 C.P. 626.
(66) (1874), L.R. 9 C.P. at p. 642.
(67) (1874), L.R. 9 C.P. at p. 641.
(68) (1847), 7 Q.B. 406.
(69) (1875), L.R. 20 Eq. 606.
(70) (1889), 23 Q.B.D. at p. 90.
(71) (1889), 23 Q.B.D. at p. 93.

distinction which is drawn in the case of Drinkwater v. Deakin (72) and in other cases is not a subtle one, it is a perfectly plain one. Where the incapacity is an incapacity of status so annexed by law to the candidate it requires no proof; the fact of its being an incapacity to which the law annexes the legal consequence is known to every person who votes, and the persons who vote and who are aware of the fact to which incapacity is attached, must in reason be held to be aware of the consequence which attaches to their voting. The case of Drinkwater v. Deakin (72) and other cases of the same kind are cases where the fact of incapacity had to be ascertained. In the case of Drinkwater v. Deakin (72) the fact of the incapacity was not, in the judgment of the court, ascertained. In that case it was held that there must be sufficient and conclusive notice given to a sufficient number of people to invalidate the election and to seat the rival candidate. On that case I decide without hesitation, that the votes given for Lady Sandhurst were thrown away. I accept to the fullest degree the conclusions of the Clitheroe Committee. I thought in the course of the argument, and think still, that the conclusions of the Clitheroe Committee are binding upon us, and as regards the statement of that conclusion, or the reasons given for it, the law has been stated by judges of great authority in almost the same language time after time. I think therefore that for these reasons, and upon those authorities which I have alluded to, the votes given for Lady Sandhurst were thrown away, and that the petitioner is entitled to the seat."

LORD ESHER, M.R., said (73):

"As to the second point, I think the case is absolutely determined by the express decision of both the judges who decided the case of Drinkwater v. Deakin (72). The words cannot be plainer as used by both, and it would be necessary to overrule that decision unless we hold that all that is necessary to be made known to the electors to determine whether their votes are thrown away or not, is to make out clearly that the facts are known to a sufficient number of them; the facts upon which the law determines that the person for whom they did in fact vote was a person incapable of being elected. I think, therefore, on both points, the decision of the Divisional Court was right, and that this appeal ought to be dismissed."

LINDLEY, L.J., said (74):

"On the second point I have nothing to add but this, that on considering the earlier cases on that point, I think they are considerably qualified by the late case of Drinkwater v. Deakin (72). The facts are told to the elector of the incapacity of being elected on the part of the respondent, I will not say told to him, but he must be taken to know them, and really does know them. The question as to whether he really knows the law on the subject or not is another thing."

LOPES, L.J., said (75):

"With regard to the second point, I think the present case is well within the decision in Drinkwater v. Deakin (72)."

At the hearing of this present petition evidence was called, which we accept, in support of the allegation made in para. 7 (i), (ii) and (iii) of the petition (76). It was further proved that the first-named petitioner issued to the press a notice in the following terms:

"The following statement was issued today by Mr. Malcolm St. Clair, prospective Conservative candidate for Bristol South East:—'I would naturally prefer to become member of Parliament for Bristol South East

(72) (1874), L.R. 9 C.P. 626.
(73) (1889), 23 Q.B.D. at p. 97.
(74) (1889), 23 Q.B.D. at p. 98.
(75) (1889), 23 Q.B.D. at p. 99.
(76) See p. 357, letter D, ante.

A by securing the largest number of votes at a properly contested election. But in view of the reported intention of the former member, now Viscount Stansgate, to offer himself for election, I feel it is my duty to make my attitude clear in the event of his nomination. I am taking steps to fight the by-election in the normal way, on the assumption that only candidates properly qualified to sit in the House of Commons will be nominated. B Should Lord Stansgate be nominated, however, I shall give formal notice to the electorate during the by-election campaign that he is a disqualified person and that any votes for him will be votes thrown away. If Lord Stansgate were nevertheless to gain the largest number of votes, and I came second, I should then present an election petition, seeking my return as the legitimate member. My reasons for this are those advanced by such C authorities as Sir Lionel Heald, Q.C., M.P., the former attorney-general. As Sir Lionel has put it: "Whatever views may be held as to the desirability of new legislation relating to the House of Lords, it is now beyond doubt that Mr. Anthony Wedgwood Benn succeeded on Nov. 17, 1960, to the Viscounty of Stansgate and is consequently disqualified from membership of the House of Commons." Whether Lord Stansgate can bring him- D self to sign the statutory form of consent of a candidate for nomination stating that to the best of his knowledge and belief he is not disqualified for membership of the House of Commons is, of course, a matter for himself.' "

With reference to the facts admitted by the respondent as to para. 8 of the petition (77), it was admitted by the petitioners that the respondent had circulated notices in the press, and in a document styled "The Bristol Cam- E paigner" in reply to the document dated Apr. 28, 1961, and referred to in para. 7 (i) of the petition.

We are satisfied on the evidence before us that it was made known to the electors of the constituency of South East Bristol before they cast their votes that the respondent, on the death of his father, on Nov. 17, 1960, was the eldest surviving son of his father, and that it was claimed by the first petitioner F that the respondent was disqualified from being a member of the House of Commons (a claim which the respondent disputed), and that the House of Commons had accepted the report of their Committee of Privileges which had so decided.

Accordingly, applying the decision of the Court of Appeal in Beresford-Hope v. Lady Sandhurst (78), by which we are bound, and having reached the decision G that the respondent was so disqualified, we have no option but to declare that the votes cast for the respondent were thrown away and that Mr. Malcolm James St. Clair was duly elected at the said election.

[On the question of costs, counsel for the petitioners referred to s. 135 of the Representation of the People Act, 1949, and asked for an order that the H respondent should pay the petitioners' costs, to be taxed. The respondent submitted that no award should be made on costs as the case was a matter of the highest constitutional importance, and raised issues broader than those affecting either the petitioner, Mr. St. Clair, or the respondent which in the interest of the community should be properly settled. The respondent further submitted that he was in duty bound to defend the petition to prove whether I in 1961 the rights of electors were to take precedence over the hereditary system or not, and that their Lordships had reached a judgment of the highest constitutional importance, that the hereditary system must take precedence over the electors of Bristol. In reply, counsel for the petitioners submitted that the case was a straight fight between two individuals, and there was no ground for departing from the normal rule that a successful plaintiff or petitioner was entitled to his costs.

---

(77) See p. 357, letter F, ante. (78) (1889), 23 Q.B.D. 79.

The COURT ruled that no reason existed to depart from the normal order that costs should follow the event and, accordingly, ordered the respondent to pay the petitioners' costs, but not the costs of the Director of Public Prosecutions (79).]

Declaration accordingly.

Solicitors: Lewis & Lewis and Gisborne & Co. (for the petitioners); Director of Public Prosecutions.

[Reported by WENDY SHOCKETT, Barrister-at-Law.]

DSANE v. HAGAN AND ANOTHER.

[CHANCERY DIVISION (Buckley, J.), July 11, 26, 1961.]

Practice—Setting aside judgment—Summary judgment—Specific performance—Purchaser's action—Appearance not entered by vendor—Judgment obtained under R.S.C., Ord. 14A*—Judgment not carried into effect—Action commenced to have judgment set aside on ground of vendor's contractual incapacity and of undue influence—Application by purchaser to have statement of claim struck out—Whether second action appropriate procedure—Whether judgment under R.S.C. Ord.* 14A was a judgment by default within R.S.C., Ord. 27, r. 15.

By an agreement in writing in September, 1957, Mrs. H. agreed to sell some freehold property to the purchasers. In January, 1958, the purchasers commenced an action against Mrs. H. for specific performance of the contract. She did not enter an appearance. On Apr. 15, 1958, the purchasers obtained judgment against her for specific performance under R.S.C., Ord. 14A.* The formal order embodying the judgment was perfected but was not carried into effect. Mrs. H. died on Oct. 23, 1959. The plaintiff, her sole executrix, commenced an action to have the judgment and the contract set aside, alleging in her statement of claim that throughout the negotiations for, and at the time of the exchange of, the contract for sale, Mrs. H., as the purchasers knew, lacked capacity to contract by reason of mental disorder and alternatively that the purchasers obtained the contract by undue influence. The purchasers sought to have the statement of claim struck out on the ground that the matters therein alleged were res judicatae and that it disclosed no reasonable cause of action. The purchasers contended that the judgment was final unless it could be set aside under R.S.C., Ord. 27, r. 15†, as a judgment by default, in which case the plaintiff should not proceed in the present action but should apply under R.S.C., Ord. 27, r. 15, in the previous action.

---

(79) The Representation of the People Act, 1949, s. 159 (2), requires the Director of Public Prosecutions to attend the trial of every election petition.

*R.S.C., Ord. 14A, r. 1 (1), provides: "In any action in the Chancery Division commenced by a writ of summons indorsed with a claim for specific performance of an agreement, whether in writing or not, for the sale or purchase of property . . . the plaintiff may (whether the defendant has appeared or not), on affidavit made by himself, or by any other person who can swear positively to the facts, verifying the cause of action and stating that in his belief there is no defence to the action, apply to the court or a judge for judgment and the court or judge may thereupon give judgment in the action unless the defendant . . . satisfies the court or judge that he has a good defence to the action on the merits, or discloses facts sufficient, in the opinion of the court or judge, to entitle him to defend."

†For R.S.C., Ord. 27, r. 15, see p. 382, letter H, post, and see the ANNUAL PRACTICE, 1961, p. 614.

A Held: the statement of claim would not be struck out because—

(i) the judgment obtained under R.S.C., Ord. 14A was not a judgment in default within R.S.C. Ord. 27, r. 15, since for the purpose of obtaining such a judgment it was irrelevant whether the defendant had or had not entered appearance and the fact that the defendant did not avail herself of any opportunity to show cause why she should be allowed to defend did not con-
B stitute "default" on her part; accordingly, if Mrs. H. had applied under R.S.C., Ord. 27, r. 15, in the specific performance action to have the judgment against her set aside the court would not have had jurisdiction to accede to the application, and it was no valid objection to the present action that her executrix, the plaintiff, had not applied under that rule instead of instituting this action.

C Spira v. Spira ([1939] 3 All E.R. 924) considered.

(ii) the issues of lack of contractual capacity and undue influence were not res judicatae, for they had not been raised in the specific performance action.

(iii) the statement of claim set up a case involving serious questions of fact and law on which there was a possibility that the plaintiff might succeed
D in obtaining relief.

[As to setting aside a judgment in default, see 22 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 788, para. 1667; and for cases on the subject, see DIGEST (Pleading) 160-161, 1423-1434.

As to setting aside consent judgments, see 22 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 792, para. 1672.]

E Cases referred to:

Ainsworth v. Wilding, [1896] 1 Ch. 673; 65 L.J.Ch. 432; 74 L.T. 193; Digest (Practice) 622, 2591.

Huddersfield Banking Co., Ltd. v. Lister (Henry) & Son, Ltd., [1895] 2 Ch. 273; 64 L.J.Ch. 523; 72 L.T. 703; Digest (Practice) 622, 2588.

F Spira v. Spira, [1939] 3 All E.R. 924; Digest Supp.

Procedure Summons.

In an action begun by writ the plaintiff, Edith Dsane, claimed as sole executrix of Edith Laura Hewson, deceased, and in her own right as being beneficially entitled to the whole estate of Edith Laura Hewson, (i) that a judgment for specific performance obtained by the defendants in the present action, Oswald
G Quarcoo Hagan and Luana Hagan, in a previous action in the Chancery Division of the High Court wherein they were plaintiffs and Edith Laura Hewson was defendant, and they, as purchasers, claimed specific performance of an alleged contract for the sale of land by her as vendor, might be set aside with all consequential orders and directions, and (ii) that the alleged contract, viz., an agreement in writing whereby Edith Laura Hewson was expressed to agree to H sell to the defendants in the present action certain freehold property, might be set aside and cancelled with all consequential orders and directions. The defendants applied under R.S.C., Ord. 25, r. 4, or alternatively under the inherent jurisdiction of the court for an order that the statement of claim in the present action be struck out, on the ground that the matters therein alleged were res judicatae and that it disclosed no reasonable cause of action, and that the
I action might be dismissed. The facts appear in the judgment.

M. Browne for the defendants, the purchasers.

J. Maurice Price for the plaintiff, the executrix of the vendor.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 26. BUCKLEY, J., read the following judgment: The defendants in this action seek to have the plaintiff's statement of claim struck out on the ground that the matters therein alleged are res judicatae and that it discloses no reasonable cause of action.

In or about September, 1957, a certain Mrs. Hewson agreed in writing to sell for £900 to the present defendants, whom I will call "the purchasers", certain freehold property at Hornsey. On Jan. 13, 1958, the purchasers commenced an action against Mrs. Hewson in the High Court for specific performance of the contract. Mrs. Hewson did not enter an appearance in that action and on Apr. 15, 1958, the purchasers obtained judgment against her for specific performance under R.S.C., Ord. 14A. The formal order embodying that judgment has been perfected, but it has not yet been carried into effect. Mrs. Hewson died on Oct. 23, 1959, and the present plaintiff, her sole executrix, has obtained a grant of probate of her will.

In her statement of claim in the present action the plaintiff alleges that throughout the negotiations for the contract for sale, and at the time of the exchange of the contract for sale Mrs. Hewson, as the purchasers knew, lacked capacity to contract by reason of mental disorder. Alternatively, she alleges that the purchasers obtained the contract by undue influence. As to the judgment in the specific performance action, the plaintiff's allegation is:

> "Mrs. Hewson did not enter an appearance in the said action and the said order was obtained in default of appearance."

There is no allegation that Mrs. Hewson's failure to enter an appearance was due to any lack of understanding or any incapacity on her part, nor is there any allegation of any irregularity in the method by which the purchasers obtained their judgment. The plaintiff does, however, claim in the present action to have the judgment set aside and to have the contract set aside.

Counsel for the purchasers says that the judgment they have obtained is final, unless it can be set aside either (a) under R.S.C., Ord. 27, r. 15 as a judgment by default, in which case he contends that the plaintiff ought not to be allowed to proceed with her present action but should apply under that rule in the specific performance action, or (b) as having been obtained by fraud, in which case he concedes that the plaintiff would have been right in raising a new action. There being no allegation in the present case, at any rate in terms, that the judgment was obtained by fraud, counsel's main contention has been that this is a case to which R.S.C., Ord. 27, r. 15, applies and that the only way open to the plaintiff of getting the judgment set aside is by means of an application under that rule, on which he suggests that his clients would be more advantageously placed than in defending this action. Were I to hold that in the present case the plaintiff cannot proceed by way of a separate action I might, I suppose, leave the fate of any application she might make in the specific performance action to be decided on such application, but as the matter has been argued before me and as I have formed a clear view on the question I think that I should say what that view is.

R.S.C., Ord. 27, r. 15, is in the following terms:

> "Any judgment by default, whether under this order or under any other of these rules, may be set aside by the court or a judge, upon such terms as to costs or otherwise as such court or judge may think fit."

Was the judgment in question here, which as I have said was obtained under R.S.C., Ord. 14A, a "judgment by default" within the meaning of that rule? In Spira v. Spira (1) a judgment obtained under R.S.C., Ord. 14 was held not to have been a "judgment by default" for the purposes of R.S.C., Ord. 27, r. 15. Counsel for the purchasers seeks to distinguish that case from this on the grounds that R.S.C. Ord. 14 is only applicable where the defendant has entered an appearance, whereas R.S.C., Ord. 14A, although in other respects very similar in its terms to R.S.C., Ord. 14, is applicable whether the defendant has or has not entered an appearance, and that Mrs. Hewson in fact had not entered an appearance. She was in this respect in default and hence, says counsel for the purchasers, the judgment is properly described as a "judgment by default". The question

(1) [1939] 3 All E.R. 924.

A for decision in Spira v. Spira (2) was a different one. In that case the defendant had entered an appearance but had filed no evidence on the summons under R.S.C., Ord. 14. The question was whether his failure to file evidence constituted a default. It was held not to have done so. The reason for the decision may, I think, be stated as being that since R.S.C., Ord. 14 merely gives a defendant an opportunity to show cause why he should be permitted to defend the action, his B failure to avail himself of the opportunity could not be aptly described as a default. A parallel position would have arisen in the present case if Mrs. Hewson had entered an appearance but had filed no evidence on the summons under R.S.C., Ord. 14A. In that state of affairs I think that Spira v. Spira (2) would be authority for the view that the judgment against her would not have been a judgment by default within the meaning of the rule. Can the fact that not only C did she file no evidence on the summons (which she could not have done without first entering an appearance), but that also she entered no appearance make the judgment "by default"? In my judgment, the words "judgment by default" in this rule indicate a judgment obtained by a plaintiff in reliance on some default on the part of the defendant in respect of something which he is directed to do by the rules. A judgment obtained in default of appearance under R.S.C., D Ord. 13 would, I think, clearly be such a judgment. To an application under R.S.C., Ord. 14A, however, it is irrelevant whether the defendant has entered an appearance or not. If the action is for the type of relief indicated in the rule and if the plaintiff swears the necessary affidavit verifying the cause of action and stating that he believes that there is no defence to the action, the court is concerned to see whether the defendant avails himself of the opportunity to show E cause why he should be permitted to defend the action. If the defendant does not do so, the court is not concerned under the rule to ascertain whether the defendant has or has not entered an appearance. If the court grants the plaintiff judgment under the rule, the plaintiff's success owes nothing to the fact, if it be the fact, that the defendant had not entered an appearance: the defendant's default in entering an appearance is not a circumstance on which the plaintiff F relies for obtaining his judgment. In my opinion, therefore, such a judgment cannot properly be described as a "judgment by default". For these reasons I am of opinion that, if the plaintiff in the present action had applied under R.S.C., Ord. 27, r. 15, in the specific performance action to have the judgment in that action set aside, the court would have had no jurisdiction to accede to the application. It has not been suggested that any other form of summary procedure G is open to the plaintiff. It follows that, unless the plaintiff can get the judgment set aside, either by way of appeal or in proceedings by writ, she cannot do so at all.

Counsel for the purchasers contends that if R.S.C., Ord. 27, r. 15, is not available to the plaintiff she cannot get the judgment set aside (a) because to attempt to do so is an attempt to canvass again a subject which has already been litigated— H in other words, because the issues involved are res judicatae—and (b) because the judgment creates an estoppel which can only be avoided on the ground of fraud. In my judgment, the issues of lack of contractual capacity and undue influence are not res judicatae. These issues, which would have been raised in the specific performance action, if at all, by Mrs. Hewson by way of confession and avoidance, were not raised or adjudicated on in that action. They may I nevertheless have become irrelevant because of the judgment if the judgment cannot be set aside.

Counsel for the plaintiff contends, and I think rightly, that fraud is not the only ground on which a judgment which is not a judgment by default can be set aside. Certainly a consent order can be set aside on any grounds which would justify setting aside the underlying agreement between the parties. As LINDLEY, L.J., said in Huddersfield Banking Co., Ltd. v. Henry Lister & Son, Ltd. (3):

(2) [1939] 3 All E.R. 924. (3) [1895] 2 Ch. at p. 280.

"A consent order, I agree, is an order; and so long as it stands it must be treated as such, and so long as it stands I think it is as good an estoppel as any other order. I have not the slightest doubt on that; nor have I the slightest doubt that a consent order can be impeached, not only on the ground of fraud, but upon any grounds which invalidate the agreement it expresses in a more formal way than usual."

Fraud is not essential in such a case: mutual mistake, for example, will suffice. A claim to have such an order set aside must be made in a fresh action (Ainsworth v. Wilding (4)).

In the present case the judgment sought to be set aside is not a consent order. It is, however, a judgment given summarily without the court having gone into the merits of the case. For aught I know, the summons under R.S.C., Ord. 14A was not served on Mrs. Hewson personally but by filing under R.S.C., Ord. 67, r. 4, and it seems probable that when she was served with the writ in the action and thereafter she was inops consilii, for it appears from certain correspondence to which I was referred that she withdrew her instructions from the solicitors who were previously advising her on Nov. 19, 1957. The specific performance action was not commenced until 1958. In circumstances such as these I think that it would be, at the least, unfortunate if the court could not, under its inherent jurisdiction, recall its own judgment and allow the merits of the case to be litigated, if the circumstances are such as to suggest that the party who has obtained that judgment ought not fairly to be allowed to enforce it. In saying this I do not disregard the salutary maxim, interest reipublicae ut sit finis litium, but the court has never, I think, allowed that maxim to prevent the court from protecting itself from being deceived (5), and it seems to me to be at least arguable that, if the contract were obtained by fraud or was to the knowledge of the purchasers unenforceable for lack of capacity on the part of Mrs. Hewson, the purchasers were guilty of deceiving the court on the hearing of the summons under R.S.C., Ord. 14A. Such an argument would, I think, be open to the plaintiff on her present statement of claim.

In these circumstances it would, in my judgment, be wrong for me to put an end to this action in limine by striking out the statement of claim, since it appears to me, without attempting to assess the plaintiff's prospect of success in the action or to pre-judge any question of fact or law which may be open to the parties at the trial, that the statement of claim sets up a case involving serious questions both of fact and law on which there is a possibility that the plaintiff may make good her right to relief. I shall accordingly dismiss the summons.

Application dismissed.

Solicitors: Sampson & Co. (for the defendants, the purchasers); D. H. P. Levy & Co. (for the plaintiff).

[Reported by JENIFER SANDELL, Barrister-at-Law.]

---

(4) [1896] 1 Ch. 673. (5) See, e.g., Meek v. Fleming, at p. 153, letter F, ante.

A

ALLEN v. ALLEN.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Evershed, M.R., Harman and Donovan, L.JJ.), July 11, 12, 1961.]

Husband and Wife—Property—Matrimonial home—Purchase by husband—Wife contributing to household expenses—Intention—Whether wife had beneficial interest in property.

B

In deciding the rights of divorced parties to a marriage to the matrimonial home, which was occupied by them during the marriage and of which the legal title was vested in the husband, there is no principle of law that if the wife has contributed over a period to living expenses so as to enable the husband to complete the acquisition of the property, then the intention that ought to be inferred is that the house was acquired as their joint property, with the consequence that the wife is beneficially interested therein; but the beneficial title to the property depends, in the absence of agreement between the parties, on the intention established by the evidence, or to be inferred from facts so established, in the particular case.

C

Cobb v. Cobb ([1955] 2 All E. R. 696) and Fribance v. Fribance ([1957] 1 All E. R. 357) considered.

D

[As to a wife's rights to the matrimonial home, see 19 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 849, para. 1388; and for cases on the subject, see 3rd DIGEST Supp.]

Cases referred to:

Cobb v. Cobb, [1955] 2 All E. R. 696; [1955] 1 W.L.R. 731; 3rd Digest Supp.

Fribance v. Fribance, [1957] 1 All E. R. 357; [1957] 1 W.L.R. 384; 3rd Digest Supp.

E

Appeal.

This was an appeal by Raymond Clifford James Allen, the plaintiff, from a judgment of His Honour JUDGE ARMSTRONG at Poole County Court given on Nov. 9, 1960, dismissing the plaintiff's claim against Nellie May Allen, the defendant, for possession of a dwelling-house, No. 138, Alder Road, Parkstone, Poole.

F

On the marriage of the husband and the wife in June, 1936, they lived in the husband's mother's house, and subsequently they continued to occupy it throughout the whole of their married life. The husband agreed at the time of the marriage to buy the house from his mother. The house was subject to a building society mortgage which he took over. The legal title to the house was vested on the purchase in the husband alone. The husband's mother left the house. The marriage was dissolved by decree nisi on the husband's petition in 1959, and the decree was made absolute in March, 1960. The husband then brought an action in the county court for possession of the house. At the hearing the husband stated in evidence that the wife never contributed to the cost of the house, that he paid all the mortgage instalments, and that his wife paid the money over but did not have to make it up out of her own resources. The wife stated in evidence that before marriage it was agreed that she should go out to work to help to pay for the house; that she had gone out to work for some years after marriage, and that she helped with all expenses, such as electricity and gas. The county court judge said that neither of the parties were witnesses on whom the court could completely rely and he concluded on the facts that his impression from the evidence was that the wife was right when she said that she went out to work because they were setting up the new home and furnishing it; that the result was that he felt bound to regard the house as a matrimonial asset to which both parties had contributed, but that it was not possible to say what the extent of their contribution was. He therefore decided that the wife had made out a case for some beneficial interest in the house as the matrimonial home and that the claim for possession must fail.

G

H

I

M. O'C. Stranders, Q.C., and C. I. Poole for the appellant husband.

C. A. Settle, Q.C., and M. R. Hoare for the respondent wife.

LORD EVERSHED, M.R., referred to the nature of the questions between the parties (viz., as to their rights in the house at Poole where they lived during the marriage), to the county court judge's view of their reliability as witnesses, and to a sentence in his judgment from which some words appeared to have been omitted and which caused uncertainty whether it was his view that both husband and wife had contributed to the purchase of the house from their own resources in some proportions. HIS LORDSHIP continued: All that I can clearly assert on these findings is: first, that the husband had acquired the house from his mother, that it was in his name solely and that he was solely responsible to the mortgagee for the payment off of the balance of the purchase price: second, that the wife did, over what exact period does not matter, earn her living and contribute certainly to living expenses and household expenses generally.

Now the citation from the judgment of DENNING, L.J. (1) read bereft of its context, might lead a reader to think that it was the view of this court, and that it was the law, that if a husband and wife were both wage earners, it prima facie followed as a matter of course and without more that any property they acquired during marriage, the house they lived in or the furniture they used, ought to be regarded as jointly acquired. I think it right to say that for myself I do not accept that view, and I do not think that it is the law; nor do I think such a wide proposition can be justified by Cobb v. Cobb (2) and the later case of Fribance v. Fribance (3). I draw attention to a passage in the judgment of MORRIS, L.J. in the latter case (4). He cited first from the judgment of ROMER, L.J., in Cobb v. Cobb (2), the citation being (5):

> "... I know of no power that the court has under s. 17 [of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882] to vary agreed or established titles to property. It has power to ascertain the respective rights of husband and wife to disputed property and frequently has to do so on very little material; ..."

Then MORRIS, L.J. said (4):

> "It seems to me, therefore, that one must approach this case by considering, on the evidence, in the first place, whether it is shown that the husband and wife were both beneficially interested in this property that the husband took."

---

(1) The citation that the learned county court judge made from the judgment of DENNING, L.J., in Cobb v. Cobb ([1955] 2 All E.R. at p. 698) was as follows: "Under s. 17 of the [Married Women's Property Act, 1882], the court can, on application, decide questions as to the title to or possession of property as between husband and wife. The first question in this case is, To whom does the house belong? The law in cases of this kind was considered by this court quite recently in Rimmer v. Rimmer ([1952] 2 All E.R. 863). I would like to repeat what I said there (ibid., at p. 868): 'In cases when it is clear that the beneficial interest in the matrimonial home or in the furniture belongs to one or other absolutely, or it is clear that they intended to hold it in definite shares, the court will give effect to their intention (see Re Rogers' Question, [1948] 1 All E. R. 328); but when it is not clear to whom the beneficial interest belongs, or in what proportions, then, in this matter, as in others, equality is equity.' I would only add that, in the case of the family assets, if I may so describe them, such as the matrimonial home and the furniture in it, when both husband and wife contribute to the cost and the property is intended to be a continuing provision for them during their joint lives, the court leans towards the view that the property belongs to them both jointly in equal shares. This is so, even though the conveyance is taken in the name of one of them only and their contributions to the cost are unequal, and all the more so when the property is taken, as here, in their joint names and was intended to be owned by them in equal shares. The legal title is in them both jointly, and the beneficial interest is in them both as equitable tenants in common in equal shares. They hold the house as trustees on the statutory trusts for sale. Until the place is sold, each of them is entitled concurrently with the other to the possession of the house and to the use and enjoyment of it in a proper manner, and neither of them is entitled to turn out the other." (2) [1955] 2 All E.R. 696. (3) [1957] 1 All E.R. 357.
(4) [1957] 1 All E.R. at p. 361. (5) [1955] 2 All E.R. at p. 700.

A He continued by observing that it was at that point, as it always will be, that the great difficulty arises, since it is plain enough that the husband and wife at the outset of their marriage are not likely to formulate in precise terms any arrangement they may have in mind or any expression of their intention. The court must do the best it can.

Counsel for the wife has said that where the court finds an agreement that B the furniture or other assets for the purpose of setting up the matrimonial home are to belong to one party or the other or both in agreed proportions, the court should give effect to that agreement. So much is not open to dispute and counsel for the wife was really repeating the language of DENNING, L.J. Counsel then said that in the absence of agreement the court must look to the intention. Again I agree. But it was the further submission of counsel that if all the court C can find is that the husband, let us say, says to his wife: "I am buying this house; it is going to be a considerable drain on my resources and I am afraid I must look to you to earn some money and help with the living expenses", then, without more, it should as a matter of law be concluded that the house was acquired jointly. With that submission I cannot agree. I hope that those statements will be of assistance to the learned judge, because I confess that D some of the later passages in his judgment have led me to think that he went overfar in his deduction from the citation from DENNING, L.J.

In that difficulty I come back to this. What did the learned judge intend to find was the true intention between husband and wife at the beginning of their marriage about this house purchase? That intention he has to deduce as best he can from the circumstances in the evidence given before him. If he intended E to find, e.g., that the two of them were putting all they earned into some joint pool, and then that out of that joint pool all the expenses, including the mortgage instalments, were met, I would say that the conclusion would rightly follow that the house was intended to be a joint venture. But did he intend to find that such was the intention or did he intend to find no more than that the husband, having to pay for the house, the wife was asked herself to earn money F towards other expenses? There broadly, I think, is the distinction, and in the hope that it may save further tribulation to these parties, it is my view that we should send this case back to the judge with the request that he should be good enough to formulate as precisely as he can what he did intend to find was the intention of these two people as regards the purchase of this house; and if he will be good enough so to inform us, the case will then come back to this court G so that we can state what we think is the correct conclusion in law.

HARMAN, L.J.: I only add this. Each of these cases depends on its own peculiar facts, and it seems to me to be dangerous to import the reasoning out of other cases. Otherwise I agree that LORD EVERSHED, M.R., has formulated the doubt which is in our minds which we find that we are unable to resolve H at the moment.

DONOVAN, L.J.: I agree with the course proposed.

Appeal adjourned and request remitted accordingly.

Solicitors: Barnes & Butler, agents for J. W. Miller & Son, Poole (for the husband); Church, Adams, Tatham & Co., agents for Dickinson, Manser & Co., Poole (for the wife).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ, Barrister-at-Law.]

A

NOTE.

FLACK AND ANOTHER v. WITHERS AND OTHERS.

[HOUSE OF LORDS (Lord Denning, Lord Goddard and Lord Guest), July 20, 1961.]

B

House of Lords—Compromise—Infant appellant—Leave to appeal to House of Lords granted by Court of Appeal—Settlement after petition lodged —Approval by House of Lords.

[As to the compromise of an action to which an infant is a party, see 21 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 326, para. 687; and for cases on the subject, see 28 DIGEST (Repl.) 698-701, 2083-2104.]

C

Joint Petition.

Joint petition by the appellants, John Wetherall Flack, an infant, and Eleanor Flack, his next friend and the administratrix of the estate of John Porter Hughes Flack, deceased, and the respondents, William George Withers and C. G. Spencer, Ltd. for an order carrying into effect agreed terms of settlement. On Jan. 16, 1959, in an action tried before JONES, J., sitting with a jury, judgment was entered for the infant appellant for £14,245 with costs as damages in respect of injuries suffered by him in a road accident. An agreed sum of £350 was also adjudged payable to the infant appellant's father, John Porter Hughes Flack, with costs. The respondents appealed, and the Court of Appeal (ORMEROD and UPJOHN, L.JJ., SELLERS, L.J., dissenting), by an order dated Mar. 21, 1960, allowed the appeal on the ground that there was no evidence to support the jury's verdict. Leave to appeal to the House of Lords was granted and a petition by the then appellants was lodged on June 21, 1960. On July 31, 1960, the then appellant John Porter Hughes Flack died, and on Nov. 3, 1960, by order of the House of Lords, there was a revivor of the action in the name of the present appellant, Eleanor Flack, who, on Nov. 23, 1960, obtained leave to proceed in forma pauperis. On Mar. 7, 1961, she became an assisted person under the Legal Aid and Advice Act, 1949.

D

E

F

R. E. Hopkins for the appellants.

W. H. Griffiths for the respondents.

G

R. E. Hopkins: This petition is one in a somewhat unusual form. The researches of the Judicial Office reveal that only twice before has it been necessary to bring such a petition to your Lordships' House, once in 1945 and the second in 1949. The short effect of the matter is that an action which, with the leave of the Court of Appeal, was made the subject of a petition to your Lordships' House has, in fact, been settled, subject to the approval of the appropriate authority for that purpose, whoever that may be. The case was settled after the petition had been lodged and it seemed that the Court of Appeal was then functus officio, as it had delivered its judgment. One of the terms of settlement being that the respondents should pay the taxed costs of the infant appellant concerned, no inferior court had any authority to order that costs be taxed in your Lordships' House.

H

Subject to the approval of your Lordships' House, a settlement has been agreed whereby £7,000 will be paid by the respondents to the infant appellant, the special damages will remain untouched and the appellants will have all their costs in this House and in the courts below as between solicitor and client up to the date when that ceased to be the proper basis and after that on a common fund basis.

I

W. H. Griffiths agreed that an order should be made in the terms set out in the petition.

A Their Lordships ordered that the order appealed from be discharged and that an order be made in the terms of the joint petition.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Hempsons (for the appellants); L. Bingham & Co. (for the first respondent); Hewitt, Woollacott & Chown (for the second respondents).

B [Reported by G. A. KIDNER, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

C

QUALTER, HALL & CO., LTD. v. BOARD OF TRADE AND ANOTHER.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Harman and Donovan, L.JJ., and Pennycuick, J.), July 14, 17, 1961.]

Company—Private company—Exempt private company—Loss of exemption—
D Body corporate holder of shares—Exception for banking or finance company providing capital—Capital reorganisation—Arrangement with finance company to purchase new issue of shares from members entitled thereto—Companies Act, 1948 (11 & 12 Geo. 6 c. 38), s. 129 (4), Sch. 7, para. 7 (1), para. 9.

Statute—Construction—Headings—Central headings—Reference to these in E construing ambiguous paragraph.

A company was an exempt private company within s. 129 of the Companies Act, 1948, that is, for present purposes, the company satisfied the basic conditions of exemption stated in Sch. 7 to the Act. On reorganisation of the capital of the company, involving a capitalisation of reserves, certain new preference and "A" ordinary shares, which were to be issued to share-
F holders as fully paid up on the capitalisation, were purchased by five banking or finance companies. By para. 1 of Sch. 7 to the Companies Act, 1948, the first basic condition for being an exempt private company is that no body corporate is the holder of any of the company's shares, but the condition is subject to exceptions, including an exception, enacted by para. 7 (1)*, where a "banking or finance company acquired the shares . . .
G or its interest therein in the ordinary course of its business as such and by arrangement with the relevant company . . ." This exception is excluded, by the proviso to para. 7 (1), if banking or finance companies have the right to exercise one-fifth or more of the total power "at any general meeting" of the company. Under new articles of association adopted by the company, preference shareholders and the "A" ordinary shareholders were entitled
H to vote at a general meeting of the company only if (a) as regards preference shareholders, the dividend on their shares was six months in arrear at the date of the notice convening the meeting, or (b) as regards both preference shareholders and the "A" ordinary shareholders, the meeting was called to consider a resolution, of a kind specified in the articles (viz., reduction of capital, winding-up, sale of the company's undertaking, variation of rights attached to shares etc.), which would affect the rights of these shareholders.
I On the question whether the company ceased to be an exempt private company,

Held: the company had ceased to be an exempt private company because—

(i) (PENNYCUICK, J., not concurring) in order to ascertain the scope of the relevant exception enacted in para. 7 (1) of Sch. 7 to the Companies Act,

---

* The relevant terms of para. 7 (1) of Sch. 7 to the Companies Act, 1948, are printed at p. 391, letter I, post.

1948, it was legitimate to consider the cross-heading to para. 7, viz., "Exception for banking or finance company providing capital" (since, per HARMAN, L.J., para. 7 (1) was not clear in its meaning); the words "providing capital" in the heading to para. 7 (1) meant providing capital for the company, and did not include the purchase of shares from shareholders and, accordingly, the exception did not apply to the present case where no new capital was provided for the company (see p. 392, letter F, p. 393, letter E, and p. 395, letter E, post).

Dicta of LORD HERSCHELL in Inglis v. Robertson & Baxter ([1898] A.C. at p. 630) and VISCOUNT SIMONDS in A.-G. v. H.R.H. Prince Ernest Augustus of Hanover ([1957] 1 All E.R. at p. 53) applied.

(ii) even if the company had been prima facie within the exception in para. 7 (1), it would have been excluded from the exception by the proviso, because the proviso applied if there could be any general meeting at which the banking and finance companies would have the specified measure of voting control and did not predicate that such companies must have that measure of control at every general meeting (see p. 394, letter A, p. 395, letter H, and p. 396, letter C, post).

Decision of CROSS, J. ([1961] 1 All E.R. 210) affirmed on (i) but reversed on (ii) above.

[As to an exempt private company, see 6 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 357, 360, paras. 701, 707.

For the Companies Act, 1948, s. 129, and Sch. 7, para. 1, para. 7 (1), para. 9, see 3 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 559, 857, 859, 860.]

Cases referred to:

A.-G. v. H.R.H. Prince Ernest Augustus of Hanover, [1957] 1 All E.R. 49; [1957] A.C. 436; [1957] 2 W.L.R. 1; 3rd Digest Supp.

Carlton, Re, [1945] 1 All E.R. 559; [1945] Ch. 280; 114 L.J.Ch. 219; 172 L.T. 376; affd. C.A. [1945] 2 All E.R. 370, n.; [1945] Ch. 372; 114 L.J.Ch. 289; 173 L.T. 186; 2 Digest (Repl.) 199, 188.

Hammersmith & City Ry. Co. v. Brand, (1869), L.R. 4 H.L. 171; 38 L.J.Q.B. 265; 21 L.T. 238; 34 J.P. 36; 11 Digest (Repl.) 106, 29.

Inglis v. Robertson & Baxter, [1898] A.C. 616; 67 L.J.P.C. 108; 79 L.T. 224; 1 Digest 334, 489.

Martins v. Fowler, [1926] A.C. 746; 95 L.J.P.C. 189; 135 L.T. 582; 42 Digest 655, 646.

Toronto Corpn. v. Toronto Ry. Co., Toronto Ry. Co. v. Toronto Corpn., [1907] A.C. 315; 76 L.J.P.C. 57; 96 L.T. 794; 42 Digest 655, 640.

Appeal.

This was an appeal by the plaintiff company from an order of CROSS, J., dated Dec. 7, 1960, and reported [1961] 1 All E.R. 210, declaring that the plaintiff company had ceased to be an exempt private company within the meaning of s. 129 (4) of the Companies Act, 1948. The defendants served a respondent's notice that the appeal ought to be dismissed on an additional ground based on the proviso to para. 7 (1) of Sch. 7 to the Act of 1948.

Sir Milner Holland, Q.C., and R. B. S. Instone for the company.

E. Blanshard Stamp for the Board of Trade and the Registrar of Companies.

HARMAN, L.J.: In this appeal the appellant company is fighting to preserve the status, which it admittedly had before its financial reorganisation in 1955, of an "exempt private company" within the meaning of the Companies Act, 1948, s. 129. The idea of limited liability in its origin, notably as embodied in early Victorian times in the Companies Act, 1862, was that the privilege of limiting its liability would be conferred on a corporate body in return for a disclosure to its customers, creditors and the public of its balance sheet and profit and loss account. "Private" limited companies only came over the horizon in

A 1907, but from that time until 1948 these bodies had the best of both worlds in that they enjoyed the privilege of limited liability without the obligation of disclosure. This anomalous privilege was largely corrected by s. 127 of the Act of 1948, but by s. 129 a privileged few were allowed to retain it, and a company which can bring itself within s. 129 and Sch. 7 to the Act is styled an "exempt private company" and retains the privilege of non-disclosure of B its affairs. This status, as I have said, was admittedly enjoyed by the appellant company until 1955 and it is not surprising that it desires to retain it, for virtually the only customer for its product, which is colliery equipment, is the National Coal Board which no doubt would prize the opportunity of looking into the prices charged.

The company is a family concern having some thirteen members and is, I C think, a director-controlled company. It had in 1955 large reserves which could be distributed by way of dividend to the members, but that would involve heavy charges to the Revenue. Moreover, like other concerns of this nature, the members were troubled by the prospect of the estate duty which would be leviable as the members died and which might make it impossible to retain the private nature of the business. Accordingly, the scheme in question was set on D foot and carried out with a view to providing the members with sums of capital cash which could be used to provide for death duties in due course while, as it was hoped, retaining the status of the company. The transaction has been fully described by the learned judge (1) and I do not think that it is necessary for me to rehearse it. In effect the scheme was to capitalise £75,000 of the reserves and to use them for paying up in full twenty-five thousand cumulative E preference shares and twenty-five thousand "A" ordinary shares and to allot these, together with twenty-five thousand already existing preference shares, to the members in proportion to their holdings of the "B" ordinary shares (which were the equity shares in the company) on the footing that the members should renounce their rights in favour of five finance companies who were willing to buy the shares at par, paying cash for them to the several members renouncing F them in their favour. The question is whether as a result of this transaction the company has, as the learned judge found, lost its status as an exempt private company.

Section 129 (1) of the Act provides that a company obtains exemption if, but only if, the conditions mentioned in s. 129 (2) are satisfied. These conditions are (a) that the conditions in Sch. 7 to the Act are satisfied, (b) that the number G of debenture-holders is not more than fifty, and (c) that no body corporate is a director of the company. Schedule 7, para. 1, provides that the basic conditions as to the shares and debentures of the company are (a) that no body corporate is the holder of any of the shares or debentures, and (b) that no person other than the holder has an interest in any of the shares or debentures. There follow six classes of exception to this rule. These are exceptions made in favour of the H company and are: (para. 2) To enable the company or its members to raise money by way of security for business loans by way of charge in favour of a banking or finance company as later defined. (para. 3) To facilitate operations under family settlements. (para. 4) To deal with cases of unsound mind. (para. 5) For trusts for employees. (para. 6) For shares held by other exempt private companies, and (para. 7), with which we are here concerned, is in the following I terms:

> "Exception for banking or finance company providing capital.
>
> "7.—(1) The first of the basic conditions shall be subject to an exception for any shares or debentures held by or by a nominee for a banking or finance company, where the banking or finance company acquired the shares or debentures or its interest therein in the ordinary course of its business as such and by arrangement with the relevant company or its promoters . . ."

(1) See [1961] 1 All E.R. at p. 213.

It is most persuasively argued for the company that the shares in question come within para. 7 (1) as having been acquired by one of the four acquiring companies (2) under the arrangement (these companies ranking admittedly as banking and finance companies within the definition of those words in para. 9 of the Schedule) in the ordinary course of its business as such. The first words to be construed are the words " as such ", and they must mean in my judgment " as a banking or finance company as defined by the Schedule ", and it would be illegitimate to inquire into the general meaning of those words. The definition reads, so far as material, as follows:

> " Meaning of ' banking or finance company '.
>
> " 9. In this Schedule the expression ' banking or finance company ' means any body corporate or partnership whose ordinary business includes the business of banking and any other body corporate whose ordinary business includes the business of lending money or of subscribing for shares or debentures . . ."

The crux of this argument is whether the words " as such " [in para. 7 (1)] are limited to the business of lending money or subscribing for shares or debentures, or whether, having regard to the use of the word " includes " [in para. 9], the reference may be extended to the general powers of such a company which may be assumed to extend to the acquisition of, as opposed to subscription for, shares. The company argues that the relevant word in para. 7 (1) is not " subscribed ", but is " acquired ", which is a wider word and is limited only on the face of it by the provision that the acquisition must be, as here it was, by arrangement with the company. The Board of Trade support a more limited meaning and rely first on the heading to the section which reads: " Exception for banking or finance company providing capital ". It is the Board of Trade's argument that this shows the limits of the exception, which is intended to allow such a company to raise money by issuing shares or debentures for cash to a finance company. In my judgment the words " provide capital " mean providing capital for the company, and indicate that the cash is to be paid into the company's coffers. The company argues that this is to cut down the plain meaning of para. 7 (1) by virtue of the heading and that this is an illegitimate method of construction. I would agree that if there were no doubt at all about the meaning of the paragraph, which is the particularity of the legislation, it would not be right to overrule it by the heading, which is its generality, but to my mind there is here at least a doubt as to the meaning of the words " as such " previously discussed, and the correct way of construing the paragraph is to read it in conjunction with the heading and make the two consistent if possible.

Headings of this kind are the equivalent of preambles to older statutes—see the judgment of the Privy Council in Martins v. Fowler (3). This matter was also discussed before COHEN, J., in Re Carlton (4) where he cited LORD HERSCHELL's opinion in Inglis v. Robertson & Baxter (5) to this effect:

> " These headings are not, in my opinion, mere marginal notes, but the sections in the group to which they belong must be read in connexion with them and interpreted by the light of them."

COHEN, J. (4) further cited LORD COLLINS in Toronto Corpn. v. Toronto Ry. Co. (6) citing Hammersmith & City Ry. Co. v. Brand (7):

> " . . . such a heading is to be regarded as giving the key to the interpretation of the clauses ranged under it, unless the wording is inconsistent with such interpretation."

---

(2) There were five companies who acquired shares, but two-thirds were placed with four companies other than Estate Duties Investment Trust, Ltd.; see [1961] 1 All E.R. at p. 213, letters H, I. The vesting of the shares being issued seems in all five cases to have been effected by allotment pursuant to request (ibid., p. 214).

(3) [1926] A.C. at p. 750. (4) [1945] 1 All E.R. at p. 562; [1945] Ch. at p. 284.

(5) [1898] A.C. at p. 630. (6) [1907] A.C. at p. 324. (7) (1869), L.R. 4 H.L. 171.

A In the recent case of A.-G. v. H.R.H. Prince Ernest Augustus of Hanover (8) this subject was much discussed and VISCOUNT SIMONDS said (9):

> "My Lords, the contention of the Attorney-General was, in the first place, met by the bald general proposition that, where the enacting part of a statute is clear and unambiguous, it cannot be cut down by the preamble, and a large part of the time which the hearing of this case occupied was spent in discussing authorities which were said to support that proposition. I wish, at the outset, to express my dissent from it, if it means that I cannot obtain assistance from the preamble in ascertaining the meaning of the relevant enacting part. For words, and particularly general words, cannot be read in isolation; their colour and content are derived from their context. So it is that I conceive it to be my right and duty to examine every word of a statute in its context, and I use context in its widest sense which I have already indicated as including not only other enacting provisions of the same statute, but its preamble, the existing state of the law, other statutes in pari materia, and the mischief which I can, by those and other legitimate means, discern that the statute was intended to remedy."

B

C

D It is, however, difficult to see why, if the legislature intended to confine the paragraph to cases of subscription for shares, it did not use the word "subscribed", the same verb as that used in para. 9, to describe that activity. It is furthermore not easy to find a reason for the final words "by arrangement with the . . . company" because a subscription must of necessity be by arrangement and the words on this interpretation seem to add nothing to what has gone before them.

E On the whole, though with much hesitation, I agree with the learned judge on this point. Looking at s. 129 and Sch. 7 as a whole, I cannot bring myself to think that the legislature intended so to widen the area of an exempt private company's activities as to cover the present transaction which in my view provided no capital for the company. It is true that £75,000 of the company's reserves was capitalised, but this the company could have done without any intervention by the finance companies. No new money flowed into its coffers. The only provision of capital was in favour of the shareholders. Furthermore I incline to think that the words "as such" tend to confine the meaning, for they are superfluous otherwise and add nothing to the words "in the ordinary course of its business".

F

G The Board of Trade argued both below and here a further and independent point depending on the proviso to para. 7, which, so far as relevant, is in these terms:

> "Provided that this exception shall not apply if the banking or finance company has the right . . . to exercise or control the exercise of one-fifth or more of the total voting power at any general meeting of the relevant company."

H

The question here was merely the meaning of the words "any general meeting". As a result of the arrangement made, the finance companies held shares which in certain events gave them the control of one-fifth or more of the total voting power. Article 72 of the articles of association adopted by the company as part of the scheme gives every member one vote for every share, but by a proviso confines the voting powers of preference shareholders and "A" ordinary shareholders (these being the classes held by the finance companies) as regards preference shares to occasions when dividends are six months in arrear and as regards both classes to meetings proposing reduction of capital or winding-up or a sale of the company's undertaking or the variation or abrogation of the rights attached to the shares and kindred matters. The question is whether

I

(8) [1957] 1 All E.R. 49; [1957] A.C. 436.
(9) [1957] 1 All E.R. at p. 53; [1957] A.C. at p. 460.

"any general meeting" means every general meeting or whether it includes those meetings only at which these classes of shareholders are entitled to vote. The learned judge favoured the former meaning, partly because the proviso was an exception to a privilege granted by the paragraph, and partly because in his opinion directors of the finance companies, if asked whether they were entitled to vote at any general meeting, would reply: "No, as things now are". This is a matter of first impression and for myself I prefer the second interpretation. I feel that the words must be taken to mean what they say, namely, "is there any general meeting at which the finance companies have the right to vote?" In my judgment if the other meaning were intended, the words would be "at general meetings". One of the basic conditions laid down is that no corporation is to be a member of an exempt private company. By this exception corporations are allowed to become members and it seems to me natural to confine that privilege to cases where the corporate bodies can in no circumstances obtain such a voting interest as might enable them to control the company. I, therefore, would dismiss the appeal.

DONOVAN, L.J.: The argument for the company is, on the face of things, without flaw. Estate Duty Investment Trust, Ltd. and the other bodies corporate who acquired shares in the appellant company are "finance companies" within the statutory definition contained in para. 9 of Sch. 7 to the Companies Act, 1948. They acquired these shares in the ordinary course of their business as such: and did so by arrangement with the company. The tests prescribed by para. 7 (1) of the Schedule are thus all satisfied. Nevertheless the fact remains that the company, Qualter, Hall & Co., received not a penny of fresh capital, and that it was the shareholders who received for themselves the money from Estate Duty Investment Trust, Ltd. and its associates. In these circumstances the argument is bound to be a little suspect.

It begins by ignoring the cross-heading: "Exception for banking or finance company providing capital". The justification for this is said to be that the sole function of the cross-heading is to resolve any ambiguities in the text, and here there are none. But the cross-heading is in the nature of a preamble and ought to be looked at in order to ascertain the true meaning of what follows it (see hereon Martins v. Fowler (10) and A.-G. v. H.R.H. Prince Ernest Augustus of Hanover (11)). If one begins with the cross-heading it cannot be seriously doubted that it refers to provision of capital for the company though the words "for the company" are not used. But in the context they must be implied. On that basis the enacting words which follow cannot have been intended to deal with the provision of capital for individual shareholders and to confer an exception in such a case.

But it is said the language of para. 7 (1) is such that, despite any conclusion to be drawn from the cross-heading, such a case is within the paragraph, provided that all the prescribed conditions are fulfilled. This argument is rested principally on the word "acquired" in the expression

> "where the banking or finance company acquired the shares or debentures . . . in the ordinary course of its business as such and by arrangement with the relevant company . . ."

It is contended that if the legislature intended to limit the exception to cases where a banking or finance company subscribed for new capital, it would have been simple to say so. The use of the word "acquired" shows that purchases of shares or debentures were to be covered as well. I think that too much can be, and is being, made of this point. Take, for example, the case where one large banking or finance company agreed to subscribe for all the shares or debentures, but tells the relevant company that it will hire off part of them to other banking or finance companies. With such a possibility in mind the draftsman may well

(10) [1926] A.C. at p. 750. (11) [1957] 1 All E.R. at p. 53; [1957] A.C. at p. 460.

A have thought that the word " acquired " was suitable to cover both the original subscription and the subsequent taking of part of the shares or debentures by the other companies. Moreover, as will be seen in a moment, this paragraph is not, with all due respect to the draftsman, a model of precision; and it may therefore be that the word " acquired " was used without any intention of widening the field covered by the word " subscribe ". In any event I should B hesitate to conclude that by the use of this one word the legislature had included within the scope of this exception a transaction which is, when the cross-heading is taken into account, plainly outside it. The Board of Trade contended that the word " acquired " was necessary in order to cover the case of debentures as well as shares; but I do not find the contention convincing, for the word " subscribe " is apt to apply to both. The Board of Trade further resisted the company's C case on the ground that the transactions which took place were not transactions by a finance company in the ordinary course of its business as such, meaning thereby its business of lending money or subscribing for shares or debentures. The company counters this by referring to the definition of " banking or finance company " in para. 9 of the Schedule which HARMAN, L.J., has already read. It is said that once a company is within this definition (as the appellant company D is) it matters not that capital it provided for the relevant company in the course of some quite different part of the finance company's business. This would be an odd result if true. For why should the legislature stipulate for a particular qualification to be possessed by a finance company if it is to come within the paragraph at all, and then make that qualification wholly irrelevant when it came to the actual provision of capital? I fully appreciate the force of the argument E based on the literal words of the definition, but where the argument leads to an irrational result, the question arises whether an interpretation which avoids it is reasonably open. If the words " as such " in their context can be properly interpreted as referring to that part of a finance company's business, which alone entitled it to be considered for the purpose of para. 7, the difficulty goes, and for myself I think that this is the right construction. In any event the point does F nothing conclusive for the company even if they were right about it. The argument does, however, show, as I have already suggested, that the paragraph is not a model of precise drafting.

I begin with the premise that taking the cross-heading into account the paragraph deals, and deals only, with the provision of capital for the relevant company; and limits to such cases the particular exceptions from the basic rules which the G paragraph goes on to provide. I do not find that the language by which these exceptions are conferred is such as to compel the conclusion that cases such as the present are included where no capital is provided for the relevant company. I reject the contention that a capitalisation by the company of its own undistributed profits is within the contemplation of the paragraph.

With regard to the alternative argument advanced by the Board of Trade H based on the proviso to para. 7 (1) and the words " any general meeting ", I agree with the conclusion reached by HARMAN, L.J., and have only this to add. Junior counsel for the company argued that the proviso applied only where a body corporate had a right to a constant proportion of the total voting power, and that this was not such a case. But the language of the proviso is not, in my judgment, directed to such a case alone, though prima facie it would cover it. I I think it contemplates also the case where, looking at numbers of votes alone, the banking or finance company can exercise or control the exercise of more than one-fifth of them. I agree that the appeal should be dismissed.

PENNYCUICK, J.: I agree that this appeal should be dismissed. The scope of para. 7 in Sch. 7 to the Companies Act, 1948, is marked out in the heading " Exception for banking or finance company providing capital " and the words " providing capital " naturally indicate in this context provision of capital to the company itself. This restricted scope is emphasised by the words " as such " in sub-para. (1), read in conjunction with the definition in para. 9. On the other hand, the words " acquired " and " by arrangement with the relevant company or its promoters " seem to me to give rise to great difficulty. These words are on the face of them appropriate to cover the purchase of shares or debentures from an existing holder with the concurrence of the company. Indeed, I should have thought that the taking over of debentures from an existing holder who has called in his debt might be within the policy of the Schedule, notwithstanding that it does not involve provision of capital to the company. If the paragraph is treated as confined to the subscription for new shares or debentures, the word " acquired " is inappropriate and the words " by arrangement with the relevant company or its promoters " appear to have no significant meaning. I hesitate to put on the paragraph a construction which has this result. It is unnecessary for the decision of the appeal that I should express a concluded view on this point, and perhaps I may properly abstain from doing so.

On the construction of the proviso to para. 7 (1), I am in complete agreement with the judgments which have been delivered.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors: Biddle, Thorne, Welsford & Barnes, agents for Wake, Smith & Co., Sheffield (for the company); Solicitor, Board of Trade.

[Reported by F. Guttman, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.]

SHAWINIGAN, LTD. v. VOKINS & CO., LTD.

[Queen's Bench Division (Megaw, J.), June 26, 27, 28, 29, 1961.]

Shipping—Lighterage—Exceptions—London Lighterage Clause—Unseaworthiness—Exemption from liability if loss or damage occasioned by unseaworthiness of craft—Whether unseaworthiness to be construed as at commencement of service or after—Exemption excluded if unseaworthy barge supplied recklessly—Meaning of " recklessly ".

The defendants carried on the business of supplying barges and lighters for the carriage of goods on the river Thames. Shortly before Nov. 23, 1957, the plaintiffs made an oral contract with the defendants, whereby the defendants agreed for reward to carry a quantity of resin, the property of the plaintiffs. The contract was subject to the terms of the London Lighterage Clause which excluded the defendants from liability for loss or damage, including damage caused by unseaworthiness of craft, except damage caused by unseaworthiness where the defendants " knowingly or recklessly supplied an unseaworthy barge for the service at the time of the commencement of the voyage to the ship, wharf or quay to load." In pursuance of the contract the defendants hired a barge from another company, who were of good repute and with whom the defendants had dealt for many years without cause for complaint. This hiring was by a contract which excluded the liability of the letting company for the consequences of any defect in their barges existing at the time of hiring or subsequently appearing. The defendants did not inspect the barge, save that their lighterman made an " in and out inspection " primarily for the purpose of ensuring that the defendants were not subject to claims for pre-existing defects. This inspection was not such as would reveal defective bottom plates. The resin was loaded on the barge on Nov. 25, 1957, when the resin was in good order and condition. On Nov. 27, 1957, the barge was found to have taken in a considerable quantity of water and as a result the resin was damaged. The barge was examined and found to have been unseaworthy at the time of loading owing to a defective bottom plate. In an action by the plaintiffs to recover the

A amount of the damage the defendants relied on the London Lighterage Clause.

Held: "recklessly" meant with gross carelessness, and involved an objective, not a subjective test (see p. 403, letters E and H, post), and the defendants' conduct did not amount to reckless conduct nor were they vicariously responsible for the conduct of the company that let the barge to B them even if that company's conduct had been reckless, which in fact it was not (see p. 405, letter D, post); accordingly the defendants were within the protection of the London Lighterage Clause, which applied whether unseaworthiness existed at or arose after the beginning of the barge's contractual service (see p. 401, letter E, post), and the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover damages.

C Albert E. Reed & Co., Ltd. v. London & Rochester Trading Co., Ltd. ([1954] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 463) considered.

[As to the position of a lighterman as a common carrier and his liability for loss in the absence of express stipulation, see 35 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 287, 288, text and notes (p) (q); as to the construction of exceptions and stipulations in charterparties, see ibid., p. 255, and, more generally regarding exceptions, 2 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 115, para. 225, text and notes (r)-(t).] D

Cases referred to:

Andrews v. Director of Public Prosecutions, [1937] 2 All E.R. 552; [1937] A.C. 576; 106 L.J.K.B. 370; 101 J.P. 386; 26 Cr. App. Rep. 34; sub nom. R. v. Andrews, 156 L.T. 464; Digest Supp.

E Christel Vinnen, The, [1924] All E.R. Rep. 197; [1924] P. 208; 93 L.J.P. 138; 132 L.T. 337; 16 Asp. M.L.C. 413; 41 Digest 423, 2654.

Janice, The, [1957] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 48.

Laertes, The, (Cargo Ex), (1887), 12 P.D. 187; 56 L.J.P. 108; 57 L.T. 502; 6 Asp. M.L.C. 174; 41 Digest 424, 2656.

Minister of Materials v. Wold Steamship Co., Ltd., [1952] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 485.

F Reed (Albert E.) & Co., Ltd. v. London & Rochester Trading Co., Ltd., [1954] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 463.

Waikato (Cargo Owners) v. New Zealand Shipping Co., [1899] 1 Q.B. 56; 68 L.J.Q.B. 1; 79 L.T. 326; 8 Asp. M.L.C. 442; 41 Digest 424, 2658.

Action.

In this action the plaintiffs, Shawinigan, Ltd., by writ issued on Oct. 10, 1958, G claimed damages against the defendants, Vokins & Co., Ltd. for breach of contract and (or alternatively) breach of duty in or about the carriage of the plaintiffs' goods in the barge Otter in November, 1957. The defendants carried on the business of supplying barges and lighters for the carriage of goods on the River Thames. They owned 190 barges, and they also hired barges on either a daily or period basis when requisite to enable them to carry out current operations. H Shortly before Nov. 23, 1957, the plaintiffs by their agents, the West Ferry Wharfage Co., Ltd., made an oral contract with the defendants whereby the defendants agreed for reward to carry a quantity of bagged synthetic resin, the property of the plaintiffs, by lighter from the motor vessel Rutenfjel in the London dock to Timothy's Wharf, Millwall. It was not disputed that the contract was subject to the terms and conditions of the London Lighterage Clause I which reads as follows:

"The rates charged by us are for conveyance only, and are exclusive of dock dues, demurrage, disbursements, or other charges. They are quoted upon the express condition that the person with whom any contract is made is either the owner or authorised agent of the owner of the goods intended to be carried, and accepts both for himself and for all other parties interested in such goods the terms and conditions herein contained. The goods are carried only at owners' and/or customers' risk, excepting loss arising from pilferage and theft of goods on board the barge whilst in course of transit, liability for such loss or damage being limited at our option to £20 per package or unit or to £50 per ton. Save as aforesaid we will not be liable for any loss of or damage to goods entrusted to us for lighterage or for any loss, damage or expense occasioned to the owners of the goods or to the customers, howsoever, whensoever or wheresoever such loss, damage or expense be occasioned, and whether or not such loss, damage or expense be occasioned by unseaworthiness of craft or by any negligence, wrongful act, or default of our servants or agents, or other persons for whose acts we might otherwise be liable, or be occasioned by any delay or failure in collecting, carrying or delivering the goods and although the barge for any reason may have deviated or departed from the intended transit with the goods and although the goods may have been loaded in the barge with other goods;

"Provided always that the foregoing exemption excluding us from any liability arising from unseaworthiness of craft shall not apply unless we are able to establish that we have not knowingly or recklessly supplied an unseaworthy barge for the service at the time of the commencement of the voyage to the ship, wharf, or quay to load. We will not be able to contribute in general average. We will not be responsible for any consequences arising from strikes, lock-outs, or other labour difficulties. We are to be at liberty to employ any lighter, tug or vessel belonging to other owners or to sub-let the whole or any portion of the contract and in either event the above terms and conditions shall apply to such employment or sub-letting and shall be deemed to have been agreed between the goods' owners or customer and such other owners or sub-contractors."

For the purpose of carrying out the contract with the plaintiffs, the defendants hired a barge called the Otter from Charles Hay & Sons, Ltd. (hereinafter referred to as "Hay's"), a company of long standing and good reputation. Hay's had let barges in this way to the defendants for many years and on no previous occasion had there been any complaint of unseaworthiness. In accordance with their usual practice Hay's incorporated a clause in their contract of hire to the defendants in the following terms:

"The letters, Charles Hay & Son, Ltd., hereby give notice that they will not be liable for the consequences of any defect, whether patent or latent, in their barges or the gear belonging thereto existing at the time of hiring or subsequently appearing therein. Hirers must, therefore, satisfy themselves by examination upon taking possession that the barge and gear are fit and safe for the purpose for which they desire to use them. By hiring the barge the hirers agree to accept and to indemnify and hold harmless the owners against all liability in respect of claims for general average contribution, losses, damages, accidents, towage, salvage, dock dues, and other liabilities of whatsoever nature or kind, which may happen to be or be chargeable against or caused by the barge or to or by the persons concerned and/or employed in connexion therewith during the period of hire (except damage to the barge by fire or salvage services arising therefrom) and also against liability for legal or other costs incurred or paid and arising out of any of the matters aforesaid as well as for breach of any existing statutory provisions and/or bye-laws made in connexion with the user of the craft so hired, but the letters are to be responsible for the consequences of any omission with respect to the registration of the barge."

The Otter was at least thirty-nine years old and during the previous ten to twelve years had undergone various repairs. In early November, 1957, the Otter had had a general overhaul at Hay's yards at a cost of over £1,000. At this overhaul the fact that a plate in the bottom of the barge was badly corroded had escaped notice. The plate was defective, being dangerously thin. Accordingly the barge Otter came away from the overhaul in an unseaworthy condition. There was A failure to exercise due care on the overhaul. The defendants' lighterman, prior to loading the cargo of resin, inspected the Otter in accordance with the normal practice of inspection but found nothing to indicate the vessel was unseaworthy. This inspection was merely an " in and out " inspection primarily for the purpose of protecting the defendants against claims for pre-existing defects; the inspection was not such as would reveal this defect. There was no carelessness, so the B court found, in the practice with regard to such inspections or in this particular inspection. The resin was loaded on Nov. 25, 1957, when it was in good order and condition. The Otter was brought back to dock where the barge lay with the cargo from Nov. 25, 1957 to Nov. 27, 1957, when the lighterman found a considerable quantity of water had been taken in and that the cargo of resin was damaged. The cargo was delivered on that date in its damaged condition and on C Dec. 13, 1957, the Otter was surveyed. There was a hole in the bottom plating measuring $\frac{7}{8}$ in. $\times \frac{1}{2}$ in. situated $12\frac{3}{8}$ in. forward of No. 6 floor frame and $7\frac{3}{8}$ in. aft No. 7 floor frame and the plate at the edge of the hole was very thin.

By their statement of claim the plaintiffs alleged that by the contract the defendants impliedly undertook and warranted (a) that the goods carried would be delivered in the like good order and condition as when received and (b) that D the craft provided or used by them would be seaworthy and in every respect fitted for the service. The plaintiffs claimed damages for breach of contract or duty. The defendants pleaded that impliedly the contract of carriage was subject to the terms and conditions of the London Lighterage Clause. The defendants further pleaded that, if the Otter was unseaworthy, they did not knowingly or recklessly supply an unseaworthy barge, and were exempted from liability E by the clause, relying in particular on the following alleged facts—(i) the barge was hired from Hay's; (ii) Hay's were barge-owners of good reputation in the trade for providing barges in good condition; (iii) the defendants had hired barges from Hay's for about twenty years before the contract and on no occasion had a barge so hired been found to be defective; and (iv) the defendants' policy of inspection of hired barges by their lighterman, and that there had been such F inspection of the Otter. The defendants further pleaded that, if the state of mind of Hay's affected the defendants (as they, however, denied), they would rely on Hay's practice of overhaul and the fact that the Otter was overhauled in November, 1957.

J. F. Donaldson, Q.C., and M. J. Mustill for the plaintiffs.
H. V. Brandon, Q.C., and J. Willmer for the defendants.

G

MEGAW, J., referred to admissions made by the parties, reviewed the facts, which were largely undisputed, stated the nature of the claim and that the plaintiffs would be entitled to recover damages unless the defendants could establish exemption under the London Lighterage Clause, and continued: The questions which I have to decide are: first, whether the London Lighterage H Clause is relevant at all having regard to the facts as proved or admitted; and secondly, if it is otherwise relevant, whether the defendants have discharged the onus which, under the clause, plainly rests on them, of establishing that—I quote from the proviso—they " have not knowingly or recklessly supplied an unseaworthy barge for the service at the time of the commencement of the voyage to the ship, wharf or quay to load."

I The first question is, I suspect, a brainchild of the ingenuity of counsel for the plaintiffs, though it is none the worse for that. If it is his brainchild, the midwife is the Court of Appeal decision in The Christel Vinnen (1). Counsel for the plaintiffs contended that the reference in the first paragraph of the London Lighterage Clause to " occasioned by unseaworthiness of craft " should be construed as referring to, and referring only to, unseaworthiness of a barge after she had started on her contractual service as provided by the contract between the defendants and the plaintiffs. If that construction were right, the clause would provide no defence to the defendants, however fully they might disprove knowledge or recklessness, because there is no evidence that the unseaworthiness developed subsequently to the vessel starting on her service. Indeed, I hold that she was unseaworthy when she started on her contractual service.

(1) [1924] All E.R. Rep. 197; [1924] P. 208; 16 Asp. M.L.C. 413.

In the headnote to the report on The Christel Vinnen (2) there is no reflection of the first point, which perhaps is the point of most general importance decided by the Court of Appeal in that case. There, the shipowner relied on a clause protecting him from liability in respect of damage occasioned by a latent defect in the hull, even when occasioned by the negligence of the servants of the shipowner. The relevant part of the decision of the Court of Appeal, in a judgment of the court consisting of BANKES, SCRUTTON and ATKIN, L.JJ., the judgment being delivered by SCRUTTON L.J., is as follows (3):

> "It is clear law that exceptions do not apply to protect the shipowner who furnishes an unseaworthy ship, where the unseaworthiness causes damage, unless the exceptions are so worded as clearly to exclude or vary the implied warranty of seaworthiness. Waikato (Cargo Owners) v. New Zealand Shipping Co. (4) is an instance of ambiguity defeating the shipowner's probable intention: see the judgment of COLLINS, L.J. In Cargo ex The Laeries (5) the words which protected the shipowners were 'latent defects in machinery even existing at the time of shipment'. Such words are absent in the present case and latent defects may come into existence during the voyage. In our view, the shipowner here had not clearly excluded or modified the implied warranty of seaworthiness, and, consequently, the exception does not apply to protect him when water entering through unseaworthiness causes the damage, as is undoubtedly the case as to half the damage here."

Counsel for the plaintiffs says that equally in this case the exception relating to unseaworthiness does not say that it relates to or includes unseaworthiness existing at the time of the commencement of the barge's contractual service; it ought therefore to be read as relating only to unseaworthiness coming into existence after the contractual service began, after the barge commenced her voyage, if a voyage was involved to the Rutenfjel to receive the cargo from that vessel.

No case could be found on the relevant facts in which there had been an exception referring to unseaworthiness simpliciter from which guidance might be obtained. In the great majority of cases where express exceptions relating to unseaworthiness have been relied on by shipowners, the relevant clause has been phrased to refer to "at or before the commencement of a voyage", or some similar words.

Counsel for the defendants referred to two authorities. He pointed out that in Albert E. Reed & Co., Ltd. v. London & Rochester Trading Co., Ltd. (6), the point would have been relevant and conclusive if the argument of counsel for the plaintiffs were right. The point was not raised, nor was the possibility of such a point referred to by DEVLIN, J., in delivering his judgment. In Minister of Materials v. Wold Steamship Co., Ltd. (7), SELLERS, J., discussed The Christel Vinnen (8). Counsel for the defendants submitted therefore, though the point was not directly in issue, that the approach of the learned judge in that case would make minute the inference that a different conclusion would have been reached in The Christel Vinnen (8) if the exceptions clause had included a reference to unseaworthiness simpliciter.

(2) [1924] P. 208; [1924] All E.R. Rep. 197; 16 Asp. M.L.C. 413.
(3) [1924] All E.R. Rep. at p. 199; [1924] P. at p. 212; 16 Asp. M.L.C. at p. 414.
(4) [1899] 1 Q.B. 56; 8 Asp. M.L.C. 442.
(5) (1887), 12 P.D. 187; 6 Asp. M.L.C. 174.
(6) [1954] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 463. (7) [1952] 1 Lloyd's Rep. 485, see at p. 497.
(8) [1924] All E.R. Rep. 197; [1924] P. 208; 16 Asp. M.L.C. 413.

A I do not find much help in either of these authorities on this point. I have, however, come to the conclusion that counsel for the defendants is right, primarily because of the wording of the proviso in the London Lighterage Clause. Bearing in mind that a clause such as this must be construed strictly against the party relying on the exception, I nevertheless am of opinion that it would not be right to hold that the unseaworthiness for which exemption is given in the B first paragraph to the clause is something different from the unseaworthiness which is referred to in the proviso by the words

> "unless we are able to establish that we have not knowingly or recklessly supplied an unseaworthy barge for the service at the time of the commencement of the voyage to the ship, wharf or quay to load."

C It would, in my view, be unreasonable to hold that the effect of the clause is that the defendants are still liable for unseaworthiness which existed at the time of the commencement of the voyage, and that by proving the very fact of "not [having] knowingly or recklessly supplied" a barge which is unseaworthy "at the time of the commencement of the voyage" they achieve exemption only from unseaworthiness which develops thereafter. Moreover, the exemption in D the first paragraph is defined in the first few words of the proviso, as being "exemption excluding us from any liability arising from unseaworthiness of craft."

Counsel for the defendants also contends—though I do not myself attach much weight to this argument—that prima facie the meaning of "unseaworthiness" is unseaworthiness at the commencement of the voyage, whereas with E regard to the clause in The Christel Vinnen (9) there is no such prima facie meaning in relation to the words "latent defect".

I therefore hold that this first point raised on behalf of the plaintiffs fails and that the clause exempts the defendants from liability for unseaworthiness which existed at the commencement of the barge's voyage to the Rutenfjel, provided that the defendants can establish that they "have not knowingly or recklessly F supplied" a barge which was unseaworthy "for the service at the time of the commencement of the voyage".

The main question in this case has been as to the meaning of the word "recklessly" in the proviso in the London Lighterage Clause, and its applicability on the facts of this case. There was, as I understand it, no question of "knowingly" in this case. It was not suggested that the defendants, through anyone G whose knowledge might be treated as their knowledge, knew that the Otter was unseaworthy at the relevant time. In Albert E. Reed & Co., Ltd. v. London & Rochester Trading Co., Ltd. (10) to which I have already referred, a suggestion was put forward that some form of constructive knowledge might be relevant in considering "knowingly" in this clause. That suggestion was rejected by DEVLIN, J. (11). I need say no more about "knowingly".

H I come then to the word "recklessly". I think that it is desirable, in view of the arguments which have been submitted to me, first to consider the meaning of that word in the context of this clause, and then to review the applicability of that meaning to the facts of this case.

Counsel for the defendants has argued forcefully that "recklessly" is an adverb which connotes a state of mind; that it involves the elements of wilfulness, I deliberateness, wantonness. He says that recklessness in respect of an act is always and necessarily subjective. In order that an act can properly be described as "reckless" there must be a conscious realisation on the part of the doer of the act that he is doing something which involves a risk and a conscious decision to take that risk. Counsel for the defendants does not suggest that such realisation and such decision always involves recklessness. There must, as I understand his argument, also be a conscious realisation that he ought not to take the risk, that it is an unjustified risk, whatever may be meant by the words "ought" or "unjustified" in that context. In support of this submission counsel for the defendants has relied on a passage in the speech of LORD ATKIN in Andrews v. Director of Public Prosecutions (12), and counsel deduces from that passage that LORD ATKIN is to be regarded as having thought and said that "reckless" involved indifference to risk. I do not myself think that LORD ATKIN in that passage dealing with criminal liability, had in mind a precise definition or explanation of "recklessness" which was intended to be of universal application.

(9) [1924] All E.R. Rep. 197; [1924] P. 208; 16 Asp. M.L.C. 413.
(10) [1954] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 463. (11) [1954] 2 Lloyd's Rep. at p. 475.

Counsel for the defendants also relies on the fact that, as he contends, DEVLIN, J., in Albert E. Reed & Co., Ltd. v. London & Rochester Trading Co., Ltd. (13) regarded a conscious state of mind as an essential of recklessness. In that case DEVLIN, J., had to consider this same London Lighterage Clause in relation to a barge, the Niagara, which developed a hole in the bottom and let in water, damaging the cargo. He held that the defendants, the owners of the barge, had failed to disprove that they recklessly supplied an unseaworthy barge. The principal ground for reaching that conclusion was, briefly, that Mr. Chapman, the shipwright foreman of the defendants, had failed to take action to renew or repair the plates in the bottom of the barge which he knew to have become worn or corroded to a thickness of one-sixteenth of an inch, which everyone else in that case agreed to be below the minimum safe thickness. The natural inference, said DEVLIN, J., was that he (i.e., Mr. Chapman) was running an unjustifiable risk, and plainly from his own evidence he was doing it deliberately. In those circumstances, the right inference to draw was that Mr. Chapman's mind in relation to this matter was a reckless one. The learned judge then went on to say (14):

> "I do not think it is necessary to draw a distinction whether he knew that the vessel was unseaworthy or not. I do not think he knew that the vessel was unseaworthy in the sense that he knew that when the barge went out on any particular occasion it was highly likely that she would make water through a hole which would arise; but I am satisfied that he did know that she might do so, and that he did not care whether she did so or not, not perhaps believing that to be blameworthy, but he did not care whether she did so or not, because he thought that nothing could be done about it until it had in fact occurred."

Earlier, DEVLIN, J., had said this (15):

> "The term 'recklessly', I think, does not really give rise to much difficulty. It means something more than mere negligence or inadvertence. I think it means deliberately running an unjustifiable risk. There is not anything necessarily criminal, or even morally culpable, about running an unjustifiable risk; it depends in relation to what risk is run; it may be a big matter or it may be a small matter."

With the very greatest respect, I do not get much help from this definition. What is meant by "deliberately running a risk"? In one sense every action in life involves a risk. If the defendants here had supplied one of their own barges which had not been examined on the blocks for a week or a month, they would, in one sense, have been running a risk, and running it deliberately. Yet it could scarcely be said, if there was nothing more, that they were acting recklessly in so doing.

The essence of the matter, therefore, as I see it, in the definition of DEVLIN, J., must be in the word "unjustifiable"—"deliberately running an unjustifiable risk". What is meant by "deliberately running an unjustifiable risk"? Is "unjustifiable" to be regarded subjectively or objectively? Counsel for the defendants says that it must be viewed subjectively. The test must be

(12) [1937] 2 All E.R. at p. 556; [1937] A.C. at p. 583.
(13) [1954] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 463. (14) [1954] 2 Lloyd's Rep. at p. 478.
(15) [1954] 2 Lloyd's Rep. at p. 475.

A whether the doer of the act himself realised when he did the act, not only that he was taking a risk, but that that risk was unjustifiable. That would mean that if a man drove a car exceptionally fast along a private highway he could not properly be said to be driving recklessly if he himself was so confident of his own skill, or so obtuse or so selfish that he regarded the risk as justifiable. That is a proposition which I cannot accept. If, however, the question whether B the risk is justifiable is to be viewed objectively by the standard of the reasonable man possessed of the knowledge and the circumstances which the doer of the act has or ought to have had, then I do not see that the deliberateness of the taking of the risk is an essential element. In my view, one who does something which he himself honestly, but foolishly, regards as involving no risk, may be reckless.

C The plaintiffs say that this question of recklessness must be viewed against a fourfold background: first, the contract to be performed by the barge was one between the goods owner, that is the plaintiffs, and the carrier, the defendants; the defendants were concerned with the interests of the plaintiffs, whose goods they were going to carry for reward in a barge. Second, the clause here is an exception to the absolute obligation to provide a seaworthy craft. Third, the D goods owner cannot know, and is not concerned with the question, whether the carrier is by nature optimistic or pessimistic about his barges; and, fourth, the goods owner cannot know, and is not concerned with the question, whether the barge belongs to the carrier or is hired by him, and, if hired, whether hired by the day or for a longer period; he cannot know whether in fact the carrier has seen fit to inspect the hired barge fully, including the bottom, when he takes E it on hire. The plaintiffs then submit that "reckless" means devoid of caution, regardless of consequences, rash or heedless. They submit that negligence of a high degree would amount to recklessness, though they concede that mere negligence does not amount to recklessness.

In my view, "recklessly" means grossly careless. Recklessness is gross carelessness—the doing of something which in fact involves a risk, whether the F doer realises it or not; and the risk being such having regard to all the circumstances, that the taking of that risk would be described as "reckless". The likelihood or otherwise that damage will follow is one element to be considered, not whether the doer of the act actually realised the likelihood. The extent of the damage which is likely to follow is another element, not the extent which the doer of the act, in his wisdom or folly, happens to foresee. If the risk is slight G and the damage which will follow if things go wrong is small, it may not be reckless, however unjustified the doing of the act may be. If the risk is great, and the probable damage great, recklessness may readily be a fair description, however much the doer may regard the action as justified and reasonable. Each case has to be viewed on its own particular facts and not by reference to any formula. The only test, in my view, is an objective one. Would a reason- H able man, knowing all the facts and circumstances which the doer of the act knew or ought to have known, describe the act as "reckless" in the ordinary meaning of that word in ordinary speech? As I have said, my understanding of the ordinary meaning of that word is a high degree of carelessness. I do not say "negligence", because "negligence" connotes a legal duty.

Here the particular question is whether there was or was not a legal duty. I If the defendants did not act recklessly they were under no legal duty to supply a barge which was seaworthy. Nevertheless, their conduct in supplying a barge which was unseaworthy might be careless; or it might be so careless, so much in disregard of possible damage as a consequence, as to qualify for the description "reckless".

I must now look at the grounds on which the plaintiffs assert that the defendants recklessly supplied an unseaworthy barge. That they did supply an unseaworthy barge is admitted. The plaintiffs submit that the defendants acted recklessly in that the only precaution which they took as regards the barge

Otter was to require their lighterman to inspect it when he took it over at Hay's Roads. That inspection was admittedly primarily for the purpose of ensuring that the defendants were not subject to claims for any pre-existing defect when they were taking the barge back at the end of the hire. It is what is known as an "in and out inspection". Such an inspection could not show whether there were such defects as loose rivets or cracks unless these were below the waterline in the barge when let. Therefore, this inspection provided no real protection against the possibility of unseaworthiness which would damage the plaintiffs' goods when the barge was laden. The hiring was subject to a clause —the letters' clause (16)—by which the defendants, as they were well aware, were clearly warned by Hay's that Hay's took no responsibility for the seaworthiness of the barge, and advised the defendants to inspect it carefully themselves for this purpose. The defendants knew nothing of the past history of the barge—her age, her past record of troubles or repairs; whether or not she had been recently overhauled, or whether, indeed, she was kept regularly and properly maintained. They did not ask for nor did they receive any particulars as to these matters. They really, so the plaintiffs submitted, relied only on the general reputation of Hay's, and from the defendants' own past dealings with Hay's, as the result of which they regarded Hay's as good and careful people. True, the records disclosed in the action showed no previous trouble with Hay's barges hired by the defendants. These records were shown to be, in at least one instance, incomplete as regards damage to cargo in barges hired by the defendants.

I leave out of account for the moment the conduct of Hay's. The defendants' answer to the plaintiffs' submissions, as I have summarised them, is shortly this. It would have been quite impracticable for the defendants to take each barge on daily hire out of the water for full examination at the commencement of its hire. It has never been done by any of the defendants' rivals in practice, or by anyone in the Port of London; there simply would not be the facilities to do it, nor the supply of barges at busy times in view of the delay involved. The defendants do not do it with their own barges. They were fully entitled to rely on the unchallenged good reputation of Hay's and on their own past experience. They were entitled to assume that Hay's maintained their barges properly and overhauled them completely as required, just as the defendants themselves did. True, they had not made inquiries as to the past history of the Otter or when she had been last put on blocks for full inspection. There was no obligation on them to do so, and they certainly were not reckless in not doing so. Moreover, if they had done so, they would have found that the Otter had very recently completed a full inspection and full overhaul costing over £1,000. Therefore, even if there was something wrong in their failure to make inquiries, that failure in no way contributed to the plaintiffs' loss, because they would have been satisfied by the truthful answer to their inquiries. This system of dealing with hired barges was, so say the defendants, unexceptional, and no suggestion has been put to the defendants' witnesses how, as a practical matter, it could be improved. The plaintiffs could not legitimately complain of the fact that a hired barge was supplied to carry their goods, since the London Lighterage Clause gave the defendants liberty so to do.

If the submission of counsel for the defendants as to the meaning of "recklessly" were right, there would plainly be no case of recklessness. The defendants did not deliberately take a risk which they, or anyone who could be regarded as their servant, regarded as in any way unjustified. I have rejected that submission, but, on the view which I take of the meaning of recklessness—which I do not think differs materially from the submission of the plaintiffs—I reach the same result as if I had accepted the submission of counsel for the defendants. I see no proper ground for holding that the defendants acted recklessly in supplying this barge, unseaworthy though she was. In my judgment, the (16) See p. 398, letter F, ante.

A defendants have discharged the onus on them of disproving anything which could properly be called recklessness within my understanding of the meaning of that word. Indeed, I find it difficult to see how there was anything which could properly be called carelessness in their conduct. Their lighterman was free from any blame in not discovering the defect earlier. I see nothing of which complaint can legitimately be made in either the fact that the defendants hired B this barge from Hay's, or in their system, having regard to the general good reputation of Hay's and the defendants' own past experience of them. If they had had reason, from past experience or otherwise, to doubt the standard of Hay's barges, the position might have been very different.

There was a further facet of this case with which I need not deal at length. It was submitted on behalf of the plaintiffs—though I think it is fair to say that C it was not strongly pressed—that the defendants should be held to be vicariously reckless if Hay's were reckless, and that the onus was on the defendants to show that Hay's had not been reckless in supplying the Otter in her unseaworthy condition. There was a good deal of evidence, including expert evidence, as to the unseaworthiness of the Otter, and how and why it came about that she was in such a condition after a full overhaul on the blocks. I do not propose to D go into this matter at length because in my judgment even if it were to be shown, or not disproved, that there was something which could be called recklessness on the part of Hay's in their maintenance and supplying of this barge, it would not affect the defendants' defence under the London Lighterage Clause on the facts of this case. However, it is right that I should say that, in my view, the conduct of Hay's could not properly be called reckless. The defect in the E barge cannot, I think, be attributed to mere bad luck, as one of the witnesses for Hay's was disposed to think. [HIS LORDSHIP went on to say that there was a failure by Hay's to exercise due care, but this fell short of recklessness.]

I note that in The Janice (17), in the Mayor's and City of London Court, JUDGE BLOCK held that a hirer of barges, such as the defendants, could not be held to have acted recklessly vis-à-vis the owners of the goods carried in the F hired barge merely because the barge that is hired had plates which were so thin that the barge was unseaworthy. I agree with that view.

[HIS LORDSHIP made some observations on the use made of the London Lighterage Clause by the majority of barge-owners in the port of London, comparing the situation with that which led to the international agreement of the Hague Rules preventing the use of clauses limiting liability for unseaworthi- G ness except in cases where due diligence had been exercised to make the vessel seaworthy. HIS LORDSHIP concluded:] For the reasons which I have given, the defendants succeed in establishing their exemption from liability under the London Lighterage Clause, which is a term of this contract, and therefore the plaintiffs' claim fails.

Judgment for the defendants.

Solicitors: Ince & Co. (for the plaintiffs); Clyde & Co. (for the defendants).

[Reported by KATHLEEN J. H. O'BRIEN, Barrister-at-Law.]

---

(17) [1957] 2 Lloyd's Rep. 48.

R. v. TILLEY. R. v. TILLEY.

[COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL (Ashworth, Salmon and Winn, JJ.), July 27, 1961.]

Criminal Law—Evidence—Handwriting—Necessity for expert evidence to assist jury—Criminal Procedure Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 18), s. 8.

The appellants were charged with the larceny of a motor car. They produced a receipt (exhibit 1), purporting to be that of the sale of the car to them for £4, signed by a Mr. Warren who, they said, had sold it to them. This receipt was produced at their trial and both appellants were asked to write on a piece of paper the self-same words as appeared on the receipt (exhibits 4 and 5). It was the prosecution's case that the appellants had armed themselves with the receipt before stealing the car, though the receipt might have been written by someone other than either of the appellants. No handwriting expert was called to compare exhibits 4 and 5 with exhibit 1 and the matter was not pursued by the prosecution. Apparently, however, arrangements were made to have exhibits 4 and 5 photographed during the adjournment after closing speeches, and for magnifying glasses to be made available for the jury when the case was summed up on the next day. In the summing-up considerable comment was made on exhibits 4 and 5 and the jury were invited to consider the exhibits with care so as to make up their minds whether exhibit 1 was a document fabricated by one of the appellants. On appeal against conviction,

Held: to leave a question of handwriting to be decided by a jury unassisted by expert evidence was a dangerous course that should not be followed; in the circumstances of the present case the comments may have weighed heavily with the jury and the convictions would be quashed.

Observations of SALTER, J., in R. v. Rickard ((1918), 13 Cr. App. Rep. at p. 143) applied; ruling of CROOM-JOHNSON, J., in R. v. Day ([1940] 1 All E.R. at p. 403) approved.

Appeals allowed.

[As to evidence of handwriting, see 10 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 872, para. 1691, note (p) and Supplement; and 15 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 324, para. 591; and for cases on the subject, see 14 DIGEST (Repl.) 298, 2782; 22 DIGEST (Repl.) 194, 1811, 195, 1825, 196, 1831, 1832.

For the Criminal Procedure Act, 1865, s. 8, see 9 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 589.]

Cases referred to:

R. v. Crouch, (1850), 4 Cox, C.C. 163; 22 Digest (Repl.) 188, 1724.

R. v. Day, [1940] 1 All E.R. 402; 162 L.T. 407; 104 J.P. 181; 27 Cr. App. Rep. 168; 14 Digest (Repl.) 298, 2782.

R. v. Harvey, (1869), 11 Cox, C.C. 546; 22 Digest (Repl.) 195, 1829.

R. v. Rickard, (1918), 88 L.J.K.B. 720; 119 L.T. 192; 82 J.P. 256; 13 Cr. App. Rep. 140; 22 Digest (Repl.) 196, 1831.

Appeals.

The appellants, George Richard Tilley and Leonard Thomas Tilley, were convicted on Jan. 20, 1961, at West Kent Quarter Sessions before the deputy chairman and a jury of the larceny of a motor car at some date unknown between Sept. 27, 1960, and Sept. 30, 1960, contrary to s. 2 of the Larceny Act, 1916. The deputy chairman had withdrawn from the jury an alternative count against both appellants of receiving the motor car knowing it to have been stolen contrary to s. 33 (1) of the Larceny Act, 1916. George Tilley was sentenced to three years' corrective training and Leonard Tilley to eighteen months' imprisonment. They both applied for leave to appeal against their convictions, and on June 30, 1961, the court (ASHWORTH, PAULL and ELWES, JJ.), gave leave to appeal generally. During the hearing of the appeal Mr. Gurrin, a handwriting expert,

A gave evidence on the documents concerned with leave of the court. The facts appear in the judgment of the court.

R. M. G. Simpson for the appellants.
G. H. Rooke for the Crown.

ASHWORTH, J., delivered the following judgment of the court: The B charge arose out of an incident which occurred late in September, 1960. It seems that an American serving officer or man left a Morris car by the side of the road. Not long afterwards, according to these two appellants, they were in that part of the world, and they came on a man named Warren who was standing by the car, and he sold it to them for £4, the value according to the owner being £7. These two men, according to them, took the precaution of obtaining from C Warren a receipt, and that receipt is exhibit 1. On Sept. 29, 1960, the day after the date which the receipt bears, these two men were found in broad daylight in the morning about two miles away from the main road up a lane engaged in breaking up this motor car with oxy-acetylene apparatus. They were asked what they were doing by two police officers, and they said that the car was in fact their property and they had bought it that morning for £4, and they produced D the receipt to corroborate their statements. The police officers did not observe that the date on the receipt did not tally with the statement that the car had been bought that morning and handed the receipt back to the men. They were in due course charged with larceny and stood their trial.

The trial seems to have proceeded with commendable speed, and in the course of the afternoon both the appellants were giving evidence, and in the course of E cross-examination each of them was asked to write out on a fresh piece of paper the self-same wording as appears on exhibit 1, and so there came into existence exhibits 4 and 5 signed by Leonard and George respectively. Nothing turns on exhibit 5, which was plainly written in a different hand from that which wrote exhibit 1, but it was thought by some that exhibits 1 and 4 showed signs of similarity. Counsel for the Crown perfectly properly did not pursue the matter, F having obtained exhibit 4 from Leonard. He took a look at it and there did not appear to him, as he has informed us, to be any striking similarities, and so he left it. In passing, it may be said that the Crown case was that while exhibit 1 might have been written by someone other than the accused, it was a document with which they had armed themselves prior to the theft of the car so that they could afford at once an explanation of their possession of it.

G At the conclusion of the evidence for the defence, speeches were made, and then the court adjourned, and it is a fair inference that at the adjournment arrangements were made to have the two new exhibits photographed and magnifying glasses made available for the jury, and the deputy chairman summed up the following day. In the course of his summing-up, the matter not having been mentioned again after the production of exhibits 4 and 5, he invited the jury to H consider these exhibits in relation to exhibit 1, the document produced to the police, and in a number of pages of the transcript there appear comments made by the deputy chairman as to the similarities of various letters appearing in each document, and there is no doubt that he did invite the jury—leaving it entirely to them to reach any decision which they thought right—to consider with care these documents so that they might make up their minds whether I exhibit 1 was a genuine receipt received from the vendor of the car, Warren, or was a fabricated document which Leonard Tilley brought into existence, forearming himself before inquiry. This was the first time this matter had really been canvassed, and criticism is now made by counsel on behalf of the two appellants that it was not right or fair that the defence should suddenly be met with this kind of address to the jury on a topic which had never been ventilated throughout the trial. Moreover, it was said that the topic was one on which the Crown had not relied and in regard to it if the defendants had had an opportunity they might have been in a position to call expert evidence. Those criticisms were, we think, of considerable force. But the matter goes even further. The question arises whether in any case it was proper for the learned deputy chairman to indulge in comments himself about these documents and then hand them to the jury for their consideration and decision without any evidence having been called to assist them on that issue.

The matter has come before the court in more than one previous case. One to which our attention was called was R. v. Harvey (1). The matter was also raised, in R. v. Rickard (2). In that case SALTER, J., giving the judgment of this court said this (3), after referring to s. 8 of Lord Denman's Act (4):

> "That case [i.e., R. v. Crouch (5)] does not decide what degree of preparation is necessary to constitute an expert, but it does decide that a person is not entitled to give such evidence if his only knowledge on the subject is that acquired in the course of the case. That was the position of the police officer, and the position of Busby is less satisfactory. Therefore no expert evidence at all was given in the case. This court does not decide that expert evidence in such cases is necessary, and the observations of BLACKBURN, J., in R. v. Harvey (1) do not so decide, but it is clear from the nature of things that to leave a question of handwriting to a jury without assistance is a somewhat dangerous course."

In the present case there was no evidence, not even questions directed to alleged similarities, and the matter only arose in the course of the summing-up. This court indorses and re-affirms the statement of principle to be found in the judgment of SALTER, J., on behalf of this court in R. v. Rickard (6). A jury should not be left unassisted to decide questions of disputed handwriting on their own.

It is also to be noted that although R. v. Day (7) raised in the main an utterly different issue, the question of handwriting did occur, and the learned judge, CROOM-JOHNSON, J., ruled that "the jury could not be asked to [compare handwriting] without some assistance by way of expert evidence", and that ruling was once again in conformity with the decision in R. v. Rickard (2).

In the view of this court it is right to say that the course pursued by the learned deputy chairman was not in accordance with the principles previously laid down, and should not be followed in any other case. On the other hand, this court has had to consider with some care whether the effect of what was done was so serious as to render it incumbent on this court to allow the appeal and release these two appellants. The reason why that matter has caused some misgiving is that undoubtedly there was some strong evidence against these two men, and the jury did not believe them but, having regard to the importance which the learned deputy chairman evidently attached to the question of handwriting and the possibility that the receipt, exhibit 1, was fabricated, this court feels that his comments may have weighed heavily with the jury and, in the circumstances, it would not be right to apply the proviso to s. 4 (1) of the Criminal Appeal Act, 1907. Accordingly, these two appeals must be allowed and the convictions quashed.

Appeals allowed. Convictions quashed.

Solicitors: Linsley-Thomas & Co. (for the appellants); N. K. Cooper, Maidstone (for the Crown).

[Reported by N. P. METCALFE, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

---

(1) (1869), 11 Cox, C.C. 546. (2) (1918), 13 Cr. App. Rep. 140.
(3) (1918), 13 Cr. App. Rep. at p. 143.
(4) I.e., the Criminal Procedure Act, 1865, s. 8 of which reads: "Comparison of a disputed writing with any writing proved to the satisfaction of the judge to be genuine shall be permitted to be made by witnesses; and such writings, and the evidence of witnesses respecting the same, may be submitted to the court and jury as evidence of the genuineness or otherwise of the writing in dispute".
(5) (1850), 4 Cox, C.C. 163. (6) (1918), 13 Cr. App. Rep. at pp. 142, 143.
(7) [1940] 1 All E.R. 402 at p. 403; 27 Cr. App. Rep. 168 at p. 170.

A

FINKLE v. STRZELCZYK AND OTHERS.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Evershed, M.R., Harman and Donovan, L.JJ.), July 21, 24, 1961.]

Rent Restriction—Possession—Sub-letting of whole of premises without consent of landlord—No evidence of there being such sub-letting at commencement of proceedings—Jurisdiction to make order for possession—Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5 c. 32), Sch. 1, para. (d).

B

The defendant was the statutory tenant of premises consisting of four rooms. Each room was equipped as a flatlet with a cooker and, on the evidence, it was clear that the defendant carried on the business of letting the rooms as separate dwellings as and when he could. The evidence did not establish, however, occupation of the whole of the premises by sub-tenants at one time for more than a period between some date in August, 1960, and Sept. 3, 1960. On appeal from an order for possession made at the instance of the landlord,

C

D

Held: (i) the court had power to give judgment for recovery of possession of premises within the Rent Restrictions Acts, on the ground of the sub-letting without consent of the whole premises (viz., under para. (d) of Sch. 1 to the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933), although the whole of the premises were not proved to have been sub-let when the action was begun and although the period when, on the evidence, it was established that the whole of the premises were sub-let was only of limited duration.

E

(ii) in the circumstances it was reasonable to make an order for possession in the present case.

Oak Property Co., Ltd. v. Chapman ([1947] 2 All E.R. 1) considered and dictum of SIR RAYMOND EVERSHED, M.R., in Hyde v. Pimley ([1952] 2 All E.R. at p. 104) explained.

F

Appeal dismissed.

[As to the recovery of possession for sub-letting without consent, see 23 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 821, para. 1601; and for cases on the subject, see 31 DIGEST (Repl.) 702, 7916-7919 and 3rd DIGEST Supp.

For the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, Sch. 1, para. (d), see 13 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 1060.]

G

Cases referred to:

Hyde v. Pimley, [1952] 2 All E.R. 102; [1952] 2 Q.B. 506; 3rd Digest Supp.

Oak Property Co., Ltd. v. Chapman, [1947] 2 All E.R. 1; [1947] K.B. 886; [1947] L.J.R. 1327; 177 L.T. 364; 31 Digest (Repl.) 711, 7979.

H

Appeal.

This was an appeal by Josef Strzelczyk, the first defendant, against an order made by His Honour JUDGE MAIS in Marylebone County Court and given on Feb. 6, 1961, adjudging that the plaintiff, Alexander Finkle, recover against the defendants possession of three rooms on the second floor and one room of the third floor of 92, West End Lane, London, N.W.6. The premises had been let to the first defendant and on the determination of the contractual tenancy by notice to quit in 1954 he had remained in possession as a statutory tenant. The defendant used the premises to carry on the business of letting rooms equipped as separate dwellings, each room being equipped as a flatlet with a cooker. The plaintiff had apparently not objected to the sub-letting of some of the rooms, but had not consented to the sub-letting of all of them. It was averred by the plaintiff in his statement of claim that in 1956 an order for possession of the premises had been made (its operation being conditionally suspended) on the ground of nuisance by the first defendant. The plaintiff alleged that the first defendant had left the premises and no longer resided there and that he had sub-let the whole of the premises, by sub-letting one of the four rooms to a Miss Turkisch (the second defendant) another to Mr. Kutubu (the third defendant), another to Mr. Kanick-Martins (the fourth defendant) and the other to Mr. Ojosipe (the fifth defendant), as furnished sub-tenancies. By his defence the first defendant denied that he had sub-let the whole of the premises, although from time to time he lawfully sub-let some rooms furnished, and alleged that the second defendant was his sub-tenant until 1956 when she left and that she returned in 1959 since when she had resided on the premises as a licensee of the first defendant and had paid no rent. The second defendant was the first defendant's mistress, and he slept with her from time to time on the premises. The county court judge held on the facts that the second defendant was a sub-tenant of the first defendant and that the whole of the premises was sub-let without the consent of the plaintiff for a period in 1960, from August to October, and, considering it reasonable so to do, he made an order for possession under the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, Sch. 1, para. (d) (1). The first defendant appealed, inter alia, on the ground that the judge misdirected himself as to the meaning and effect of para. (d) and in particular as to the words " without the consent of the landlord ". The other defendants did not appeal.

I

L. A. Blundell, Q.C., and G. Dobry for the appellant, the first defendant.
Aron Owen for the respondent, the plaintiff.

LORD EVERSHED, M.R., having described the decision of the county court judge as just and the points raised by the first defendant as technical, held that the judge was entitled to find that the relationship between the first and second defendants was that of tenant and sub-tenant and that, though the period during which all the rooms were occupied by sub-tenants at one time was not, as the judge had found, from August to October, 1960, but only from some date in August to Sept. 3, yet, in the circumstances of the case, it was reasonable to make an order for possession of the premises, continued: There remains, however, a last point. It was said by counsel for the first defendant that, although the language (1) of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, Sch. 1, para. (d) seems, on the face of it, clear enough, none the less in order that the court can eject a statutory tenant, it must be shown that the sub-letting envisaged in the paragraph continues at the date when the proceedings commence. I read again the paragraph as far as relevant, because it quite obviously says no such thing:

> " If . . . (d) the tenant without the consent of the landlord has at any time after [a date in 1923] sub-let . . . the whole of the dwelling-house or sub-let part of the dwelling-house, the remainder being already sub-let . . . "

It is plain that the language used means that, if the tenant has done that thing at any time after the date specified, then, assuming reasonableness, the court is empowered to make an order; but it is said that decisions of this court, binding on us, compel a different conclusion. We were first referred to Hyde v. Pimley (2). In that case the dispute was determined by the circumstance that the landlord had indubitably assented to a sub-letting which might otherwise have been objectionable or made the basis of a proceeding under para. (d),

(1) The relevant terms of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions (Amendment) Act, 1933, Sch. 1, para. (d) are: " A court shall . . . have power to make or give an order or judgment for the recovery of possession of any dwelling-house to which the principal Acts apply or for the ejectment of a tenant therefrom without proof of suitable alternative accommodation (where the court considers it reasonable so to do) if— . . . (d) the tenant without the consent of the landlord has at any time after July 31, 1923, assigned or sub-let the whole of the dwelling-house or sub-let part of the dwelling-house, the remainder being already sub-let; . . ."

(2) [1952] 2 All E.R. 102; [1952] 2 Q.B. 506.

A and on that ground was disentitled to claim possession. The relevant passage in the headnote is (3):

> "Accordingly where a tenant sub-let the whole of a dwelling-house in breach of his tenancy agreement not to sub-let without the consent of the landlord, but the landlord continued to receive rent from the tenant after becoming aware of the sub-letting and subsequently terminated the tenancy B by notice to quit:—Held, that the landlord's conduct amounted to a consent to the sub-letting, that para. (d) was accordingly excluded . . ."

In other words, it was said that he could not rely on the fact that there had been a sub-letting at one period without consent, when it was clearly proved that he had later consented to the sub-letting, had accepted the tenant as a C statutory tenant notwithstanding, and had, over an appreciable time, taken rent from him. It seems to me that that conclusion, if I may say so, is obviously sensible as well as just; and in my judgment (4) I referred to certain language of LORD NORMAND (Lord President) in an earlier case (5), namely:

> "I am clear that the words 'without the consent of the landlord' in para. (d) of Sch. 1 to the Act of 1933 mean without actual consent given D by the landlord either expressly or by implication . . ."

Shortly before that reference, I am recorded, in reading the judgment of the court, as saying this (4):

> ". . . this court held in Oak Property Co., Ltd. v. Chapman (6) that, although before the issue of the proceedings there had been a sub-letting within the E strict language of para. (d), the landlord could not invoke the paragraph if at the date of the summons the tenant had, in fact, regained possession of part of the premises—a conclusion which seems to indicate that the paragraph is not to be interpreted by a strict adherence to the tenses and times referred to."

In the Oak Property case (6), the point was quite a different one. Put very F briefly, the matter stood thus. The tenant had sub-let part of the premises to a Mrs. Jacobson as a furnished letting, though in circumstances, be it noted, which made it quite clear that the tenant was not intending by any means to abandon the right to return thereto. Then, during Mrs. Jacobson's occupation, the tenant sub-let the remaining room to the second defendant in the action as an unfurnished letting. Again it may be pointed out that it was a temporary matter, G for the convenience of the second defendant, pending her then intended marriage. When the letting to Mrs. Jacobson, the first sub-letting, took place, it was done without the consent of the landlord, but at a later stage, consent was given to that sub-letting, and also to the sub-letting to the second defendant, for the landlord had, with full knowledge of the sub-letting, accepted rent from the tenant, the first defendant. Moreover, not long afterwards Mrs. Jacobson had H departed and the tenant had himself resumed actual occupation of that part of the premises which had been sub-let to her. Nevertheless, the sub-letting to the second defendant started, albeit weekly only, before the consent to Mrs. Jacobson's sub-letting had been given and before the tenant's resumption of personal possession. The landlord brought proceedings for possession against both the statutory tenant and the second defendant, and the question was I whether the second defendant could rely on s. 15 (3) of the Increase of Rent and Mortgage Interest (Restrictions) Act, 1920, and could say that she was a person to whom there had been a lawful sub-letting.

The question was then put in this form. Since, when the sub-letting to the second defendant took place, Mrs. Jacobson was still there, no right could be

---

(3) [1952] 2 Q.B. 506. (4) [1952] 2 All E.R. at p. 104; [1952] 2 Q.B. at p. 511.
(5) Dalrymple's Trustees v. Brown, 1945 S.C. at p. 193.
(6) [1947] 2 All E.R. 1; [1947] K.B. 886.

conferred on the second defendant which would bring her within s. 15 (3), for that which had been done, namely, the grant of the sub-tenancy to her, had amounted at the time when it first took place to a sub-letting of part, the whole of the rest being already sub-let. That argument was rejected, and the court came to the conclusion that, since Mrs. Jacobson had gone and the tenant had resumed possession of the premises, then the tenancy to the second defendant could be looked at afresh as from that date. It would seem to me, therefore, that the problem with which we are now concerned did not arise at all. The statutory tenant, the first defendant in the action, somewhat surprisingly consented to judgment, and never contested the right of the landlord to possession, which, if counsel for the first defendant's argument is right, I gather that the statutory tenant clearly could have done. In those circumstances, the argument must have been of this nature: that a sub-tenant, who otherwise might be within s. 15 of the Act of 1920 and entitled to invoke its protection, is prevented from doing so, if the sub-letting is "unlawful" in the sense that, when it first began, the circumstances were such that the landlord could have invoked para. (d) of Sch. 1 to the Act of 1933 (whether or not he would have got an order is another matter); and in those circumstances the sub-tenant could not be said to have any such interest in the dwelling-house which would support an invocation of s. 15 of the Act of 1920. That argument was rejected. The rejection of the argument does not imply, and nothing in SOMERVELL, L.J.'s judgment supports the view, as far as I can see, that this para. (d) of Sch. 1 to the Act of 1933 can be invoked only if the circumstances mentioned in it exist at the date when the proceedings for possession are initiated. It is important to bear in mind that what para. (d) does is simply to say that the court, if the events therein mentioned happen, is given jurisdiction which it may exercise if it thinks, in other respects, that it is reasonable so to do. The doing of that which para. (d) defines is not itself an illegality. It does not automatically put an end to any right of the statutory tenant. Therefore, as I think, Oak Property Co., Ltd. v. Chapman (7) is no authority for the present proposition when regard is had to the facts. My trouble has been what the citation of the case in the passage which I have read seems to state. I think that what is there referred to is the fact that the paragraph could not be relied on as a bar to a claim for protection by a sub-tenant in the circumstances there stated; but I do not think that the statement ought to be treated as having been intended to go further.

In those circumstances I am unable to accept the view that we should construe para. (d) contrary to what I conceive to be its plain language. At best, these statements are dicta, and I therefore reject this ground of counsel for the first defendant's argument. In the circumstances, the judge was amply justified in the conclusion which he reached, and I would dismiss the appeal.

HARMAN, L.J.: I agree. The first defendant is a man who for years past has succeeded in wresting the provisions of the Rent and Mortgage Interest Restrictions Acts to his own advantage. He has in fact carried on, in the rooms of which he is a protected tenant, a highly profitable business of a boarding-house, and has defied his landlord to eject him. In my judgment, there was plenty of evidence that this was a regular course of business, and the course of the business was to let all the rooms whenever they could be let. Where there is evidence of a general course of sub-letting, it does not seem to me to matter that every room is not proved to be let on every day. Even if at the date of the plaint no rooms were sub-let, an order might still be made in circumstances such as those proved here.

In my judgment, nothing in Oak Property Co., Ltd. v. Chapman (7) involved construing para. (d) of Sch. 1 to the Act of 1933 so as to allow it to operate only if the circumstances exist at the time when the plaint is issued. So to

(7) [1947] 2 All E.R. 1; [1947] K.B. 886.

A construe it would fly in the face of the language used; and the observation in Hyde v. Pimley (8), to which my Lord has referred, does not constrain us to do anything of the sort. [HIS LORDSHIP then considered the evidence as to the relationship between the first and second defendants and stated that there was ample evidence to support the finding that their relationship was that of tenant and sub-tenant, and concluded:] I would dismiss the appeal.

B

DONOVAN, L.J.: I agree and have nothing to add.

Appeal dismissed. Leave to appeal to the House of Lords refused.

Solicitors: S. L. Karpinski (for the first defendant); Israel, Joslin & Co. (for the plaintiff).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

C

PERFORMANCE CARS, LTD. v. ABRAHAM.

D [COURT OF APPEAL (Lord Evershed, M.R., Harman and Donovan, L.JJ.), July 26, 27, 28, 1961.]

Damages—Measure of damages—Separate tortfeasors—Successive torts—Each tort, if occurring alone, would render necessary the same work of repair—Judgment for damages, including cost of repair, recorded against first tortfeasor but unsatisfied—Whether second tortfeasor's liability in damages included the cost of that work.

E

The plaintiffs were the owners of a motor car which was damaged by a collision with a motor car driven by the defendant, who admitted liability. The damage to the plaintiffs' car was such as would necessitate respraying the whole of the lower part of the body of such a car. About two weeks earlier the plaintiffs' car had been involved in another collision which had also made respraying of the lower part of the car body necessary. The plaintiffs obtained judgment in default against the driver responsible for the first collision but that judgment was not satisfied, and at the date of the second collision the car had not been resprayed. The question for the court was whether the plaintiffs were entitled to recover as damages from the defendant the cost of respraying the lower part of their car.

F

G Held: the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover the cost of respraying from the defendant, because that damage did not flow from his wrongful act.

Appeal allowed.

[Editorial Note. The decision in the present case where the two independent acts of negligence were separated by a substantial period of time and may be said, perhaps, not to have caused the same damage, may be compared with the dicta of MORRIS, L.J., in Drinkwater v. Kimber ([1952] 1 All E.R. at p. 705, letter G, and p. 706, letter C), which show that where the defendant's negligence and the plaintiff's negligence concurrently cause damage to a third person the whole of that damage can be regarded as flowing from the defendant's negligence; in that case, however, the plaintiff was not liable in tort to the third person since he was her husband. Compare also the illustration of separate wrongful successive acts causing injury put by DEVLIN, L.J., in Dingle v. Associated Newspapers, Ltd. ([1961] 1 All E.R. at p. 916, letter C).

H

I

As to the measure of damages in tort, see 11 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 251, 252, para. 423; and for cases on the subject, see 17 DIGEST (Repl.) 101, 102, 155-173.

As to the exclusion of collateral matters in mitigation of damages, see 11 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 293, para. 481.

---

(8) [1952] 2 All E.R. at p. 104; [1952] 2 Q.B. at p. 511.

As to a second action for damages lying on a separate cause of action although the facts giving rise to the causes of action are similar, see 11 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 228, para. 395.] A

Cases referred to:

Carslogie, The, Carslogie Steamship Co., Ltd. v. Royal Norwegian Government (Represented by the Norwegian Shipping & Trade Mission), [1952] 1 All E.R. 20; [1952] A.C. 292; 3rd Digest Supp. B

Haversham Grange, The, [1905] P. 307; 74 L.J.P. 115; 93 L.T. 733; 10 Asp. M.L.C. 156; 29 Digest 246, 1982.

Marine Insurance Co. v. China Transpacific S.S. Co. (The Vancouver), (1886), 11 App. Cas. 573; 56 L.J.Q.B. 100; 55 L.T. 491; 6 Asp. M.L.C. 68; 29 Digest 245, 1980.

Shearman v. Folland, [1950] 1 All E.R. 976; [1950] 2 K.B. 43; 36 Digest (Repl.) 205, 1072. C

Appeal.

This was an appeal from the judgment of His Honour JUDGE SIR SHIRLEY WORTHINGTON-EVANS, at Brentford County Court on Feb. 16, 1961, giving judgment for the plaintiffs for £110 15s. and costs. That sum included £75, being the cost of respraying the lower part of the plaintiffs' motor car which had been damaged in a collision with the defendant's car. The defendant appealed only as to the award of that sum on the ground that respraying had been rendered necessary by a previous collision. D

J. D. W. Hayman for the appellant, the defendant.

D. P. F. Wheatley for the respondents, the plaintiffs. E

Cur. adv. vult.

July 28. The following judgments were delivered.

LORD EVERSHED, M.R.: This appeal has raised an interesting and novel point. On Feb. 25, 1960, the defendant when driving his own motor car collided with the Rolls-Royce motor car of the plaintiffs' being driven by one of the plaintiffs' directors. The collision was not serious and the defendant, the appellant in this court, has accepted full responsibility for the accident. The defendant's car struck the offside front wing and the bumper of the plaintiffs' Rolls-Royce and there is no dispute as to the damage strictly attributable to this injury in so far as it required that the dent in the wing should be hammered out and the bumper straightened and re-chromed. The plaintiffs' Rolls-Royce is of a kind known as " Silver Cloud ". The top of the motor car and the bonnet is painted black, but the lower part of the motor car, including the wings, were of a pale colour appropriate, I assume, to the description " Silver Cloud ". It has been conceded by the defendant that where damage is done, say to the wing, of a kind which occurred in the present case, it is necessary to respray the whole of the lower part of the body, since if only the damaged wing were resprayed the colour would be in obvious contrast to that of the rest of the lower part of the motor car. The claim for this item amounts to £75. F G H

Now it so happened that a fortnight earlier the plaintiffs' same motor car had been struck by another motor vehicle, the fault again being solely that of the other vehicle. This accident was also slight, but on this occasion the damage consisted of a bump in the back of the lower part of the Rolls-Royce motor car. The plaintiffs sued the owner of this other vehicle and recovered judgment by default for a sum of damages slightly larger than the claim against the present defendant, but the sum so recovered included the same amount of £75 in respect of respraying the whole of the lower part of the car, and again it is not in doubt, and for the same reason which has already been stated, that such a claim was properly made as part of the damage caused by this first collision. Unfortunately the plaintiffs have recovered nothing under their first judgment and it appears from what we have been told that it is extremely unlikely that they will do so. I

A The vital fact is that when the defendant hit the plaintiffs' motor car the work of restoration to the latter as the result of the first accident had not yet been done. In these circumstances it has been said by the defendant that he is not liable for the £75 claimed against him, being the cost of respraying the whole of the lower part of the body of the Rolls-Royce.

What is said may be quite simply thus expressed. At the date of the defen-
B dant's collision the Rolls-Royce's condition was such that it had then in any case to be resprayed so that the need for so doing did not arise from the defendant's wrongful act. On the other side it is said that here you have two separate tortfeasors and each must be liable for the consequences of his tortious act naturally and properly flowing from the respective wrongs. It is conceded by the plaintiffs that they could not recover the cost of respraying from both
C wrongdoers, the earlier motorist and the defendant, and they offer accordingly to assign to the defendant the benefit of the earlier judgment, at least so far as it relates to this part of the claim.

The point appears, as I have said, novel and interesting but, with all respect to the county court judge, I have come to the conclusion that the defendant's view is right and that he is entitled to succeed. In Shearman v. Folland (1)
D it was pointed out by ASQUITH, L.J. (2), delivering the judgment of the court, quoting from MAYNE ON DAMAGES (11th Edn.), p. 151, that "matter completely collateral, and merely res inter alios acta, cannot be used in mitigation of damages". So in that case it was held that the defendant could not deduct from the nursing home expenses incurred by the plaintiff the cost which the plaintiff might otherwise have expended in hotel bills, though I note that the E defendant was entitled to make a deduction representing a sum per week for food. Were it otherwise, as ASQUITH, L.J., observed, a defendant might be allowed to say that his wrong had in fact conferred a financial benefit on a person of extravagant tastes who by his sojourn in a nursing home had saved himself what he might otherwise have paid at a palatial hotel. On similar grounds it is clear that a wrongdoer such as the defendant cannot make a
F deduction because the plaintiffs may happen to be covered by a policy of insurance against financial loss which they may in fact suffer. So it was said by counsel for the plaintiffs that their rights against the earlier car owner are something completely collateral. As ASQUITH, L.J., pointed out in the case cited, the maxim which he quoted is easier to formulate than to apply. What, for the purposes of cases such as the present, ought to be regarded as "matter
G completely collateral, and merely res inter alios acta"? It will be observed that I have, in making my reference, emphasised the two adverbs. The fact in the present case is that the defendant struck a motor car already damaged, the damage including the necessity in any case of respraying the whole of the lower part of the body. The case is to my mind rendered less easy because the respraying is something special to the character of this particular and rather
H luxurious motor car. The principle, as it seems to me, is the same as that applicable to the example stated by DONOVAN, L.J., in the course of the argument. Suppose a man wrongfully damages my motor car by splintering part of the windscreen so that, as the inevitable result, I must have a new windscreen, the cost of which is damage properly flowing from the wrongful act which I have suffered. Then, suppose before my windscreen has in fact been replaced,
I if you will, while I am driving my motor car to the place where the new windscreen is to be fitted, another wrongdoer strikes my car and splinters another part of my windscreen. If the plaintiffs are right, it must follow that I can claim, if I have not already actually recovered from the first wrongdoer, the cost of replacing the windscreen from the second. The same result would follow, as it seems to me, if the first damage to my windscreen had been my own fault or

(1) [1950] 1 All E.R. 976; [1950] 2 K.B. 43.
(2) [1950] 1 All E.R. at p. 978; [1950] 2 K.B. at p. 45.

if, in the present case, the plaintiffs had by their own fault damaged the back of their Rolls-Royce motor car. A

I do not multiply examples but I have in the end felt compelled to the conclusion that the necessity for respraying was not the result of the defendant's wrongdoing because that necessity already existed. The Rolls-Royce, when the defendant struck it, was in a condition which already required that it should be resprayed in any event. In my judgment counsel for the defendant was B able to derive some assistance from the two cases which he cited, namely, The Haversham Grange (3) in this court and The Carslogie, Carslogie Steamship Co., Ltd. v. Royal Norwegian Government (4) in the House of Lords. Both cases were concerned with damage suffered by ships. In the first case the second wrongdoing vessel objected to paying the dry dock charges incurred by the owners of the injured vessel on the ground that that vessel was already damaged C and dry dock charges at least as great as those with which the second wrongdoing vessel was being charged already had to be incurred by reason of the collision with the first vessel. This court, however, rejected that argument (which had found favour with SIR GORELL BARNES, P.) and held, following Marine Insurance Co. v. China Transpacific S.S. Co. (The Vancouver) (5), that such charges ought to be apportioned, though they did absolve the second D wrongdoing vessel from any claim for demurrage since the vessel would in any event have been out of commission for the period in respect of which the claim was made as the result of the first collision. In the second case the House of Lords considered The Haversham Grange (3) and certainly both VISCOUNT JOWITT and LORD NORMAND held that no valid distinction could be drawn between the demurrage and the dock dues claimed and that the Court of Appeal's E decision with regard to the latter could not be supported. Thus in The Carslogie (6) VISCOUNT JOWITT is reported to have said:

> "My Lords, I think that there can be no logical distinction between the claim for damages for delay and for dock dues, and, believing as I do that the decision as to damages for delay was correct, it follows, in my view, that the latter decision in respect of dock dues cannot be supported." F

It is true that both these cases were Admiralty cases but it does not seem to me that any difference of principle can arise as a consequence of that.

In my judgment in the present case the defendant should be taken to have injured a motor car that was already injured in certain respects, that is, in respect of the need for respraying; and the result is that to the extent of that need or G injury the damage claimed did not flow from the defendant's wrongdoing. It may no doubt be unfortunate for the plaintiffs that the collisions took place in the order in which they did. Had the first collision been that brought about by the defendant and had they recovered the £75 now in question from him, they could not clearly have recovered the same sum again from the other wrongdoer. It is, however, in my view irrelevant (if unfortunate for the plaintiffs) H that the judgment obtained against the other wrongdoer has turned out to be worthless. For the reasons which I have stated I would allow the appeal.

HARMAN, L.J.: The only issue before us in the present case was the quantum of damage arising from the collision between the defendant's Triumph motor car and the plaintiff's Rolls-Royce, negligence on the part of the defendant being admitted in this court. The particulars of damage are stated in the I particulars of claim and the only one relevant here is: "Cost of repainting lower part of Rolls-Royce, £75". It was admitted that taken by itself this would have been a proper charge because, owing to the nature of the paint used, merely to spray the damaged portion of the wing would not have produced

(3) [1905] P. 307; 10 Asp. M.L.C. 156.
(4) [1952] 1 All E.R. 20; [1952] A.C. 292.
(5) (1886), 11 App. Cas. 573; 6 Asp. M.L.C. 68.
(6) [1952] 1 All E.R. at p. 25; [1952] A.C. at p. 303.

A the uniform colour of the lower portion of the body which characterised the Rolls-Royce car. More plebeian owners do not share this privilege and must be content with a mere "bodge". But it transpired in the course of the hearing that a few days previously the Rolls-Royce car had suffered damage to the rear part of the paint that would have necessitated a similar operation. The plaintiffs had in fact a judgment against the other vehicle owner for that B sum which was unsatisfied. The defendant contended that he was not bound to submit to judgment for that sum over again. This argument did not rest on the unsatisfied judgment, but on the fact that the car with which the defendant collided was in a damaged condition and that the expense of respraying would have been necessary in any case. This is a curious point, but in my opinion it succeeds. It was argued for the plaintiffs that the already existing damage C was a "collateral" matter and ought not to be taken into account. Counsel relied on the decision of Shearman v. Folland (7) where it was held that in assessing damages for injuries to the plaintiff caused by the defendant's motor car, the defendant could not deduct hotel charges which the plaintiff would probably have incurred during the time when she was in a nursing home if the accident had not happened, hotel charges and nursing home fees not being in pari materia D and a collateral matter. ASQUITH, L.J. (8), reading the judgment of the Court of Appeal, cited MAYNE ON DAMAGES (11th Edn.), p. 151: "Matter completely collateral, and merely res inter alios acta, cannot be used in mitigation of damages". The way in which the plaintiff lived was for her to choose and the defendant could not take advantage of the fact that she was in the habit of living in an expensive hotel. The court did, however, allow a modest sum, E namely, the cost of the food which she was bound to have eaten. In the instant case the circumstances are quite different. The damage to the plaintiffs' car had actually happened and what the defendant collided with was a car already damaged and reduced in value to that extent. Counsel for the plaintiffs admitted that his argument would have been the same if his client had, on leaving his garage that morning, damaged his car himself by running it into a wall. F This seems to me to show the fallacy of the argument. I would allow the appeal.

DONOVAN, L.J.: I am of the same opinion. The question, as I see it, is this: What extra burden in the matter of respraying was put on the plaintiff company by the second collision? To my mind the answer must be: None, for the earlier collision had already imposed the burden of respraying on them. I agree, therefore, that the appeal should be allowed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors: Barlow, Lyde & Gilbert (for the appellant, the defendant); P. H. Berry & Co., Brentford (for the respondents, the plaintiffs).

[Reported by F. GUTTMAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

---

(7) [1950] 1 All E.R. 976; [1950] 2 K.B. 43.
(8) [1950] 1 All E.R. at p. 978; [1950] 2 K.B. at p. 45.

WIGLEY v. BRITISH VINEGARS, LTD.

A

[COURT OF APPEAL (Ormerod, Upjohn and Davies, L.JJ.), June 20, 21, 22, 23, July 28, 1961.]

Factory—Safe place of employment—Secure foot-hold—Secure "hand-hold"—Window cleaner on ladder needing to use both hands at once to hold and clean window—Factories Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6 c. 67), s. 26 (2).

B

Statutory Duty—Breach—Causation—Breach of duty not contributing to injury—Plaintiff failing to show that safety apparatus, if provided, would have been used.

The occupiers of a factory employed an independent contractor to clean the factory windows, and provided him with a good and solid ladder to enable him to do so. In cleaning a window in a position from which he was liable to fall more than ten feet, the contractor, while standing on the ladder, which was properly positioned as regards its angle, had to use one hand to hold the upper part of the window shut and at the same time to use the other hand to clean the lower part of the window. While cleaning this window he fell and was killed. His widow brought an action for damages alleging breach of the occupiers' statutory duty, under the Factories Act, 1937, s. 26 (2), to provide at the place where the contractor was working "unless the place . . . affords secure foot-hold and, where necessary, secure hand-hold, means . . . so far as is reasonably practicable, by fencing or otherwise for ensuring his safety". The deceased had had a safety belt, but the bars or hooks to which to attach it were not provided at this window On the evidence, however, the Court of Appeal found that in all probability the deceased would not have used the safety belt if hooks or bars had been provided.

C

D

E

Held: the occupiers were not in breach of statutory duty under s. 26 (2) of the Factories Act, 1937, and the ladder afforded a secure foot-hold and hand-hold within that enactment because—

(i) the deceased's place of work was the ladder and the foot-hold that it provided, it being a good and solid ladder properly positioned, was not rendered an insecure foot-hold by the circumstance that he needed to use both hands on the window; the ladder satisfied the true test under s. 26 (2) in that it afforded a secure foot-hold to an experienced window cleaner acting in a way that such a man might reasonably be expected to act in circumstances that might reasonably be expected to occur (see p. 423, letters E to H, post).

F

G

Test formulated by DU PARCQ, J., in Walker v. Bletchley Flettons, Ltd. ([1937] 1 All E.R. at p. 175) applied.

(ii) "hand-hold" in s. 26 (2) meant something which a man could hold or grab from time to time as and when he wished to do so, and the upright of the ladder had provided a secure hand-hold (see p. 424, letter C, post).

H

Per CURIAM: even if there had been a breach of statutory duty under s. 26 (2), the plaintiff would not be entitled to recover damages, because she had failed to prove that the breach caused or materially contributed to the deceased's injury as, on the evidence, if the defendants had provided at the windows hooks or bars to which the deceased could have attached his safety belt, the deceased would not have used them (see p. 427, letter F, post).

I

Bonnington Castings, Ltd. v. Wardlaw ([1956] 1 All E.R. 615) applied.

Dictum of LORD GODDARD, C.J., in Roberts v. Dorman Long & Co., Ltd. ([1953] 2 All E.R. at p. 432), stated to have been overruled; McWilliams v. Sir William Arrol & Co., Ltd. ([1961] S.L.T. 265) followed.

Appeal allowed.

[As to a factory occupier's duty to any person liable to fall from his place of work, see 17 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 87, para. 143, text and note (f).

A For the Factories Act, 1937, s. 26 (2), see 9 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 1018.]

Cases referred to:

Bates v. Parker, [1953] 1 All E.R. 768; [1953] 2 Q.B. 231; [1953] 2 W.L.R. 642; 3rd Digest Supp.

Bonnington Castings, Ltd. v. Wardlaw, [1956] 1 All E.R. 615; [1956] A.C. 613; B [1956] 2 W.L.R. 707; 3rd Digest Supp.

Drummond v. British Building Cleaners, Ltd., [1954] 3 All E.R. 507; [1954] 1 W.L.R. 1434; 3rd Digest Supp.

Lavender v. Diamints, Ltd., [1949] 1 All E.R. 532; [1949] 1 K.B. 585; [1949] L.J.R. 970; 24 Digest (Repl.) 1041, 140.

McWilliams v. Sir William Arrol & Co., Ltd., [1961] S.L.T. 265.

C Manwaring v. Billington, [1952] 2 All E.R. 747; 24 Digest (Repl.) 1077, 335.

Nolan v. Dental Mfg. Co., Ltd., [1958] 2 All E.R. 449; [1958] 1 W.L.R. 936; 3rd Digest Supp.

Qualcast (Wolverhampton), Ltd. v. Haynes, [1959] 2 All E.R. 38; [1959] A.C. 743; [1959] 2 W.L.R. 510; revsg. C.A., sub nom. Haynes v. Qualcast (Wolverhampton), Ltd., [1958] 1 All E.R. 441; [1958] 1 W.L.R. 225; D 3rd Digest Supp.

Roberts v. Dorman Long & Co., Ltd., [1953] 2 All E.R. 428; [1953] 1 W.L.R. 942; 24 Digest (Repl.) 1077, 338.

Trott v. W. E. Smith, [1957] 3 All E.R. 500; [1957] 1 W.L.R. 1154; 3rd Digest Supp.

Vyner v. Waldenberg Bros., Ltd., [1945] 2 All E.R. 547; [1946] K.B. 50; 115 E L.J.K.B. 119; 173 L.T. 330; 110 J.P. 76; 24 Digest (Repl.) 1093, 428.

Walker v. Bletchley Flettons, Ltd., [1937] 1 All E.R. 170; 24 Digest (Repl.) 1054, 212.

Appeal.

The defendants, the occupiers of a factory, appealed from the judgment of F ATKINSON, J., dated Oct. 26, 1960, awarding the plaintiff, the widow and executrix of a window cleaner who fell to his death while cleaning, as an independent contractor, one of the factory windows, £4,794 4s. 6d. damages for breach of their duty to the deceased under the Factories Act, 1937, s. 26 (2). The facts are stated in the judgment.

P. M. O'Connor, Q.C., and J. F. A. Archer for the defendants.

G G. R. Swanwick, Q.C., and W. W. Stabb for the plaintiff.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 28. DAVIES, L.J., read the judgment of the court at the request of ORMEROD, L.J.: This is an appeal by the defendants from a judgment of ATKINSON, J., dated Oct. 26, 1960. The learned judge awarded to the plaintiff a total sum of £4,794 4s. 6d. damages under the Fatal Accidents Acts, 1846 to 1908, H and the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act, 1934, in respect of the death of her husband, which occurred when he was working as a window cleaner at the defendants' premises at Tower Bridge Road, London, on Apr. 29, 1958. No question arises in this appeal as to the amount of damages. Moreover, the plaintiff's claim at common law was withdrawn at the trial for reasons which we shall state hereafter. The sole question for us is whether the learned judge was right I in deciding, as he did, that the plaintiff had established that the defendants had been guilty of a breach of their duty under s. 26 (2) of the Factories Act, 1937, and that her husband's death was a result of such breach.

The deceased man was in business on his own account as a window cleaner, under the style of the Ever Ready Window Cleaning Services. He was forty-one years of age and an experienced window cleaner. For some twelve months prior to his fatal accident he had had a contract with the defendants to clean once a month the windows of their premises. These premises were admittedly a factory within the meaning of the Factories Act, 1937. From October, 1957, the deceased had been assisted in his business by his son, who at that date was sixteen years old. The part of the defendants' factory in which the deceased was working was called the fermentation house. Its relevant features are to be seen in the photographs and plan which are in evidence. It was a room which contained a large vat. To accommodate this, the original first and second floors of the building had been entirely removed. The site of the window at which the deceased was working, cleaning it from inside, can be seen at the top of photographs 1 to 3; a closer view is to be had in photograph 4. It was about thirty feet from the ground. But there was an important difference between the state of affairs as shown in the photographs and that which existed at the time of the accident. In the photographs it will be seen that the upper halves of the two top windows are now occupied by louvres. At the date of the accident they were glazed, each with six-pane windows similar to the other windows seen in the photographs. The left-hand one of those two windows was fixed and immovable. But the right-hand one pivoted on lugs, the top portion swinging inwards and the bottom portion outwards. The window was three feet six inches high and three feet wide. The lugs on which it rested were one foot six inches from the top. The bottom portion was, therefore, heavier than the top portion, so that the window, left to itself, would close by its own weight.

The special peculiarity of this window was that it was not fitted with any sort of catch or fastener by which it could be fixed in the closed position. It necessarily followed that, while to clean the top portion from the inside would present no particular difficulty since the pressure on the glass would keep it shut, in order to clean the bottom portion it would be necessary for the man in some way to press or hold the top portion in order to prevent the bottom portion from swinging under pressure. If the window was opened beyond the horizontal position, it would or could come away entirely from the lugs on which it swung. This window had, according to the evidence, been cleaned by the deceased or by his son some twelve or thirteen times, inside and outside, before the day of the accident. He was, therefore, well aware of its peculiarities. The outside was cleaned from the outside of the premises; and this case is not concerned with that operation. The ladder on which he was working was, as it happened, supplied by the defendants, but no sort of complaint is made as to the condition of the ladder. It was admittedly a good and sound ladder a triple extension one—in every respect. In the accident it did not tip or fall in any way. Precisely how the deceased came to fall is a matter of inference or even conjecture. No one saw the accident. Shortly after 4 p.m. the deceased was found lying on the ground a little to the left of the foot of the ladder. The window had come out and was lying, broken, a little to the right of the ladder. The deceased's wash-leather was found draped over the top rung of the ladder. His scrim or polishing cloth was not found. It would appear from the evidence that the top of the ladder was substantially in the same position as that shown in photograph No. 4.

The finding of the learned judge as to how the accident happened is as follows:

> "Thus, the evidence here is that a man who, on the evidence, was a fit and healthy man, not subject to attacks of giddiness, a man who it was not, and really could not be, suggested was suffering at the time from any self-created incapacity such as too much to drink, and a man as to whom it cannot really be suggested, and is not suggested, was playing the fool or doing anything stupid, has simply fallen. The inference that I draw—and, I think, that I am bound to draw—is that on this occasion this experienced and competent man, doing his job in the normal way, somehow slipped or lost his balance; and the reasonable inference is that that happened at the moment when the risk would be greatest—that is to say when, with both hands occupied, the left hand to hold the upper part of the window in A position and the right hand to do the cleaning, and when still in that position, with no hand-hold at all, he fell, or lost his balance and fell."

That inference of fact was not challenged in this court on behalf of the appellant, though it is fair to point out that the judge's finding as to the use of the right hand and left hand respectively was a matter of speculation rather than of B evidence. It was strenuously contended, however, by counsel on behalf of the defendants that the deceased, in order to fall at all, must have been leaning well over the side of the ladder. It is to be observed, however, that there is no allegation to that effect in the particulars of negligence contained in the defence. What is there pleaded is that "he failed to maintain his balance and so carried out his work that he fell". But in his judgment the learned judge C clearly placed considerable weight on an answer given in cross-examination by Mr. Harrington, the expert witness called by the defendants, to the effect that if the deceased was leaning well over to his right and using both hands he was not in a secure position. Indeed, it is very difficult to see how the deceased came to fall at all unless he was leaning beyond what, during the argument, was called "the area of safety".

D On this finding the judge held that the defendants were in breach of their duty under s. 26 (2) of the Factories Act, 1937, and that that breach was the cause of the deceased man's death.

As we have said, the claim at common law was withdrawn at the trial. This withdrawal was based on the well known principle illustrated by such cases as Bates v. Parker (1), that where a householder employs an independent contractor E to do the work, be it of cleaning or repairing, on his premises, the contractor must satisfy himself as to the safety or condition of that part of the premises on which he has to work. He is left to himself to decide how and in what manner he will perform his task.

It was necessary, therefore, for the plaintiff in order to succeed to have recourse to the Factories Act, 1937, s. 26 (2). That subsection provides as F follows:

> "Where any person is to work at a place from which he will be liable to fall a distance more than ten feet, then, unless the place is one which affords secure foot-hold and, where necessary, secure hand-hold, means shall be provided, so far as is reasonably practicable, by fencing or otherwise for ensuring his safety."

G The reference to ten feet has been altered since the date of the accident to six feet six inches (Factories Act, 1959, s. 5).

It was decided in Lavender v. Diamints, Ltd. (2), a case under s. 26 (1) of the Factories Act, 1937, that "any person" in s. 26 includes an independent contractor and that consequently the duty owed under the section by the occupier of a factory is owed no less to an independent contractor than to his H own employees. Counsel for the defendants has conceded throughout in this case that that authority is as binding as to s. 26 (2) as to s. 26 (1), and that therefore, as the law stands, the defendants in this case owed to the deceased the duty laid down by s. 26 (2); but he indicated that, if necessary, he would argue in the House of Lords that Lavender v. Diamints, Ltd. (2) was wrongly decided.

I These problems, therefore, confronted the learned judge and have confronted us. First, it being conceded that the deceased was to work at a place from which he was liable to fall a distance more than ten feet and that the defendants provided no means (other than the ladder) for ensuring his safety, were they excused from their obligations to provide such means by the fact that the place was one which afforded secure foot-hold and if necessary secure hand-hold?

(1) [1953] 1 All E.R. 768; [1953] 2 Q.B. 231.
(2) [1949] 1 All E.R. 532; [1949] 1 K.B. 585.

Second, was it reasonably practicable to provide such means? Third, if the answer to the first question is "No" and the answer to the second "Yes", so that the defendants were in breach, did such breach cause the death of the deceased?

The first question is a difficult one and we confess that our views on it have fluctuated considerably during the argument. The learned judge approached it in this way. After quoting a passage from the judgment of JENKINS, L.J., in Trott v. W. E. Smith (3), he said this:

> "Seeking to apply that to this case, it seems to me that a foot-hold is not secure if there is a possibility of a man falling from it while 'acting in a way a human being may be reasonably expected to act, in circumstances which may reasonably be expected to occur.' I think it is quite plain on the authorities that a 'secure foot-hold' in this sort of context cannot mean 'absolutely safe', but means something more than reasonably secure. In my judgment, one has to bear in mind first of all the sort of man who is going to work in that particular place. Obviously, something may be safe for a steel erector or an experienced window cleaner that would not be safe for somebody whose work ordinarily lay at ground level. But then, one must also consider the work that has in fact to be done from that particular place and what sort of movement or action will be required of the man when he is in that place to do the work that he has to do; and, thirdly, one must take into account that, however experienced a man is, however careful he may be, human beings are people who are liable to a slip or loss of balance or even to some momentary lack of attention in regard to their own safety.
>
> "Trying to approach the matter in that way, looking at photograph No. 1 and trying to form a picture in my mind of a man working four or five rungs down a ladder, with his left hand stretched across his body to hold the upper part of this movable window and cleaning the bottom of that window with his right hand, in that sort of picture, and bearing in mind that the position did not in fact prove to be secure for this competent and experienced man, and bearing in mind the evidence of Mr. Harrington, the expert witness called by the defendants, who, having expressed the view that this deceased did have a secure foot-hold, conceded in cross-examination by counsel for the plaintiff, that that depended on the attitude in which the man was working, and that if he was using both hands and leaning over to the right he was not, in his judgment, in a secure position, I have come to the conclusion that in this case—on the particular facts of this particular case—the deceased man did not have a secure foot-hold.
>
> "That really makes it unnecessary to consider hand-hold, because foot-hold and hand-hold are not alternatives in this section. The requirement is for secure foot-hold, and, where necessary, secure hand-hold. I do not really have to consider whether a secure hand-hold was necessary because there was a hand-hold available, I suppose, in the upper part of the left-hand upright of the ladder, at any rate for his left hand. Of course, while doing the work, as I have already said, both his hands would be occupied."

The argument in this court in support of the judge's finding was not, as we understood it, that in no circumstances could this ladder, even at thirty feet up, afford a secure foot-hold and secure hand-hold. On the contrary, it was, we think, conceded by counsel for the plaintiff that in many places it would be perfectly satisfactory, for example, at the left-hand window of the two at which the deceased was working. What was said was that it was the conjunction of the ladder with this particular window, which had the peculiarities which

(3) [1957] 3 All E.R. at pp. 504, 505.

A have been described, that converted that which might otherwise—at any rate for an experienced window cleaner—have afforded a secure foot-hold and a secure hand-hold into something that did not, owing to the contortion, if that be not too strong a word, which the judge found it was necessary for the deceased to adopt at this place. This contention would obviously have one odd result, namely, that the ladder when positioned in one or indeed in many places might B fully comply with the requirement of s. 26 (2), but when placed elsewhere by the independent contractor using it might cease so to do. It is to be observed that there were other windows of this type on the defendants' premises and that the plaintiff's son, who had himself cleaned this window on occasions, while describing the procedure necessary for cleaning it, did not, as we understand his evidence, suggest that the task was a particularly difficult or dangerous C one.

The plaintiff's expert witness, Mr. Cox, an architect, went up this ladder to make measurements at this window and for that purpose used both hands on his measuring rod without any difficulty at all. So did Mr. Harrington, also an architect, the defendants' expert witness. His views as to the security afforded by this ladder are to be found in the evidence:

D

> "Q.—Do you subscribe to the view that a person standing on the rung of a ladder is in a position where it can be said that he has a secure foot-hold? A.—Yes. Q.—Do you? A.—Yes. Q.—That with that alone, with his hands occupied in doing the work of cleaning the window, you would regard the rung of the ladder alone as providing a secure foot-hold? A.—Oh yes; it is a secure foot-hold. Q.—And would you regard it as being desirable that there should be a hand-hold in addition? A.—The hand-hold provided, of course, is the stile of the ladder itself."

E

We have come to the conclusion that the proper approach to this problem is to say that the deceased's place of work was the ladder and that it is wrong to say that a good and solid ladder, properly positioned so far as concerns its F angle, does not afford a secure foot-hold even when the nature of the particular window requires the window cleaner to clean with one hand and support the window with the other. Obviously an experienced window cleaner working on such a ladder would be able to rest his weight against it with his knees or perhaps even his thighs. The situation might have been entirely different, of course, if the ladder had been insecurely placed. But here it was not.

G It is, in our judgment, right in this case to adopt with a slight amendment the criterion of security which was adopted by the judge, based on the well-known passage from the judgment of DU PARCQ, J., in Walker v. Bletchley Flettons, Ltd. (4). We should for ourselves, in applying that passage, frame the test in this way: "Did this ladder afford secure foot-hold to an experienced window cleaner acting in a way that such a man might reasonably be expected H to act in circumstances which might reasonably be expected to occur?" And in our judgment the answer to that question is that it did.

We are not impressed by the argument that the very fact that the deceased fell indicates that his foot-hold was not secure. Anyone can, and no doubt many people do, fall from or at a place as to which no one would suggest that it did not afford a secure foot-hold. The fact of the fall is equally consistent— I particularly when no one really knows precisely how he came to fall—with his having abandoned the security afforded by the ladder.

It must be made plain that we are not here dealing with any question of contributory negligence. We have already stated what the allegation in the defence is in that respect, namely, that "he failed to maintain his balance and so carried out his work that he fell". There is no allegation that the deceased was negligent in placing the ladder where he did place it. The view at which we have eventually arrived is, as we have said, that the ladder did afford a secure foot-hold and that if any insecurity occurred in the event, and we are not sure that it did, this was due to the fact that the deceased, either in the way that he placed the ladder or in the way that he used it, abandoned the security that it afforded. A

(4) [1937] 1 All E.R. at p. 175.

So far as concerns secure hand-hold, we are also of the opinion—as was the learned judge—that the ladder afforded a secure hand-hold, namely, the upright of the ladder. It is true that if the deceased was working with both hands he would have no hand free with which to hold the side of the ladder, but we cannot think that the section enjoins that at every work place within its ambit there shall be available something which a man can hold throughout the whole of the time when he is working. It is to be supposed that in a great many, if not in the majority, of cases men work with both hands simultaneously; and we agree with counsel for the defendants' submission that "hand-hold" in the subsection means something which the man can hold on to or grab from time to time as and when he wishes so to do. In the result, therefore, we have come to the conclusion that the ladder did in all the circumstances afford a secure foot-hold and a secure hand-hold and that, therefore, the defendants were under no obligation to provide other means for ensuring the safety of the deceased. B C D

Strictly, this conclusion makes it unnecessary to consider the other points that were argued before us. But as they were fully argued and as it is possible that this case may go further, it is, we think, right that they should be dealt with.

The first point we can dispose of shortly. It was argued for the defendants that, even if a breach of s. 26 (2) had been made out, the sole cause of that breach was the act of the deceased himself in placing the ladder in an unsafe and unsatisfactory position, and that, therefore, by analogy with such cases as Manwaring v. Billington (5), the plaintiff was not entitled to succeed. This point is not really open to them on the pleadings; but in any event the argument, in our judgment, involves a slight confusion of thought. The breach of duty was not the failure properly to position the ladder. The breach alleged was the failure by the defendants to provide other means to ensure safety. With that obligation the deceased was in no way concerned. We can see no resemblance between this case and cases where a man deliberately and in breach of instructions neglects to use safety means which are provided or removes guards installed for his protection. E F G

The next point is more important. It was divided into two by counsel for the defendants, but really it merely involves a consideration from two different aspects of the same set of facts. It arises in this way. If the ladder or the deceased's place of work did not afford secure foot-hold and hand-hold, then the defendants were under a duty to provide means as far as was reasonably practicable, by fencing or otherwise, to ensure his safety. They provided none. The only suggestion that was made on behalf of the plaintiff was that the defendants could and should have provided hooks or bars at the window, to which the deceased could have attached a safety belt, and in that event his safety would have been ensured. It would obviously have been perfectly possible and practicable for the defendants to have fixed such hooks or bars; but the contention of the defendants is that on the evidence it is clear that no window cleaner working on a ladder would ever wear a safety belt or attach it to a hook or bar. So, it is argued: (i) since means of ensuring the window cleaner's safety would necessitate not merely the provision of hooks or bars but also the wearing and attachment thereto by the window cleaner of a safety belt, it was not reasonably practicable to provide such means; and (ii) that if there was a breach of duty by the defendants in failing to provide hooks or bars, as H I

(5) [1952] 2 All E.R. 747.

A the deceased would not have used them even if they had been provided, the plaintiff has failed to show that the defendants' breach of duty was a cause of the accident. It was pointed out on behalf of the respondent plaintiff and conceded by the appellant defendants that neither of these points found any place in the notice of appeal; but in view of the fact that the causation point was undoubtedly argued in the court below and decided by the judge, this B court thought it right to give leave to the appellants to raise it here.

The finding of the learned judge about this is as follows:

> "The particular means which counsel for the plaintiff contends should have been provided in this case is some form of hook or staple or other means for attaching a safety belt to. Even if that was necessary, that would not get the plaintiff home here, having regard to the decision in Bonnington C Castings, Ltd. v. Wardlaw (6), unless I was satisfied on the balance of probability that if such a hook had been provided the deceased man would have used it. To clear that matter out of the way at once, I accept the evidence given by the son, that he and his father had such safety belts, that they used to take them around with them in their work, that they had such safety belts with them on this occasion, and that from time to time the D father did in fact use such belts. The son fairly gave evidence, without objection, that his father had advised him to use such belts whenever there was anything to hook them on to. I suppose that really what the deceased father had said to the son would not be evidence, and I pay no attention to that particular item of evidence; but I believe that this man did have a belt available and that he was in the habit of using it when he thought it E was necessary, when—and it would perhaps be only very seldom in present conditions—there was anything to which the belt could be attached. So, my finding is that, if there had been such a hook provided here, the probability is that the deceased man would have taken a safety belt up with him, would have used that hook and would have been saved from the fall which caused his death."

F There is no doubt that there was evidence (that of the deceased's son) that the deceased had a safety belt, that he was accustomed to take it around with him in his van, that he had such a belt with him on the day of his accident and that he did from time to time wear it. But it was strenuously argued by the defendants, first, that on the evidence there was grave doubt whether the deceased G when at work ever attached his belt to anything which would serve as a firm anchorage, and, second, that on the whole of the evidence, including that of the son, it was clear that the deceased never did wear and never would have worn a belt when working on a ladder, and that, therefore, the judge's finding that if a hook had been provided the deceased would probably have worn his belt and attached it to the hook was not justified.

H On this point, therefore, it is necessary to summarise the evidence. [HIS LORDSHIP did so, and concluded thereon:] On the whole of the evidence on this part of the case, we have come to the conclusion that the learned judge's finding was wrong. We are satisfied that, in all probability, even if hooks or bars had been provided, the deceased would not have made use of them, that is to say, he would not have worn his belt or attached it to any such hook or bar.

I It was argued on behalf of the plaintiff that it ought not to lie in the mouth of the defendants to say: "Let it be admitted that we failed in our duty to provide means of safety; nevertheless the deceased would never have used them even if we had provided them". This argument was based on the decision of this court in Roberts v. Dorman Long & Co., Ltd. (7). In that case LORD GODDARD, C.J., said (8):

(6) [1956] 1 All E.R. 615; [1956] A.C. 613. (7) [1953] 2 All E.R. 428.
(8) [1953] 2 All E.R. at p. 432.

"... if a person is under a duty to provide safety belts or other appliances and fails to do so, he cannot be heard to say: 'Well, if I had done so, they would not have been worn'." A

HODSON, L.J., expressed a similar view (9). The defendants pointed out that that case concerned reg. 97 of the Building (Safety, Health and Welfare) Regulations, 1948 (S.I. 1948 No. 1145), under which in appropriate circumstances persons employed are to be provided with certain safety measures which they may elect to use; but we cannot think that that is really a point of distinction from the present case. B

A much more formidable argument, to our way of thinking, was based on the decision of the House of Lords in Bonnington Castings, Ltd. v. Wardlaw (10). It will be recalled that that case overruled the decision of this court in Vyner v. Waldenberg Bros., Ltd. (11). In the course of his speech, LORD REID said (12): C

"It would seem obvious in principle that a pursuer or plaintiff must prove not only negligence or breach of duty but also that such fault caused, or materially contributed to, his injury, and there is ample authority for that proposition both in Scotland and in England. I can find neither reason nor authority for the rule being different where there is breach of a statutory duty. The fact that Parliament imposes a duty for the protection of employees has been held to entitle an employee to sue if he is injured as a result of a breach of that duty, but it would be going a great deal further to hold that it can be inferred from the enactment of a duty that Parliament intended that any employee suffering injury can sue his employer merely because there was a breach of duty and it is shown to be possible that his injury may have been caused by it. In my judgment, the employee must, in all cases, prove his case by the ordinary standard of proof in civil actions; he must make it appear at least that, on a balance of probabilities, the breach of duty caused, or materially contributed to, his injury." D E

LORD TUCKER said (13):

"No distinction can be drawn between actions for common law negligence and actions for breach of statutory duty in this respect. In both, the plaintiff or pursuer must prove (a) breach of duty and (b) that such breach caused the injury complained of." F

It was argued that Bonnington Castings, Ltd. v. Wardlaw (10) must be taken to have overruled or at any rate qualified Roberts v. Dorman Long & Co., Ltd. (14). The question was discussed but not decided in this court in Haynes v. Qualcast (Wolverhampton), Ltd. (15) (see per LORD EVERSHED, M.R., and per PARKER, L.J. (16)). G

In Haynes' case in the House of Lords, LORD DENNING said (17), with reference to the view expressed by this court in Roberts v. Dorman Long & Co., Ltd. (18):

"... this is an over-statement. The judge may infer the omission to be a cause, but he is not bound to do so. If, at the end of the day, he thinks that, whether the duty was omitted or fulfilled, the result would have been the same, he is at liberty to say so." H

The question was fully discussed by the Inner House of the Court of Session in the recent case of McWilliams v. Sir William Arrol & Co., Ltd. (19). That case, though it concerned not a window cleaner but a steel erector, was brought under s. 26 (2) of the Factories Act, 1937, with which we are here concerned. I

(9) [1953] 2 All E.R. at p. 437. (10) [1956] 1 All E.R. 615; [1956] A.C. 613.
(11) [1945] 2 All E.R. 547; [1946] K.B. 50.
(12) [1956] 1 All E.R. at p. 618; [1956] A.C. at p. 620.
(13) [1956] 1 All E.R. at p. 621; [1956] A.C. at p. 624.
(14) [1953] 2 All E.R. 428. (15) [1958] 1 All E.R. 441.
(16) [1958] 1 All E.R. at pp. 445, 446, 447.
(17) [1959] 2 All E.R. at p. 46; [1959] A.C. at p. 762.
(18) [1953] 2 All E.R. at p. 432. (19) [1961] S.L.T. 265.

A The court there unanimously affirmed a decision of LORD GUEST to the effect that even though it had been established that by failing to supply safety belts the employers had committed a breach of their duty under the subsection, nevertheless, since it had been proved that the men would never in practice wear them, the plaintiff (the widow of the deceased workman) was not entitled to succeed. The authorities were fully considered including Drummond v. B British Building Cleaners, Ltd. (20), and Nolan v. Dental Mfg. Co., Ltd. (21), as well as those mentioned above. And although the judges were careful to point out that they were dealing with the law of Scotland and not that of England, it is plain that they considered that the view expressed by this court in Roberts v. Dorman Long & Co., Ltd. (22) is no longer law. Indeed, the Lord President expressly said so (23). He said:

C "The dictum [that is say in Roberts' case (22)] cannot in my view be reconciled with the decision of the House of Lords in Bonnington Castings, Ltd. v. Wardlaw (24)."

And LORD GUTHRIE said (25):

"Since the liability of the defenders in damages to the pursuer depends D on whether or not the injury complained of was caused by their failure in duty, it must be a defence to an action of reparation that the accident would have taken place even if the duty had been fulfilled, since that destroys the necessary link between the damnum and the negligence on which liability depends."

In our view, there is no difference between Scots and English law on this matter. E The proper test to apply is that stated in the speeches of LORD REID and LORD TUCKER, set out above in Bonnington Castings, Ltd. v. Wardlaw (26) and, in effect, re-emphasised by LORD EVERSHED, M.R., in Haynes v. Qualcast (Wolverhampton), Ltd. (27), where he said:

". . . it seems to me undoubtedly still law that the question of causation F is one of fact, to be considered in the light of all the circumstances and the probabilities."

Applying that test, we are of the opinion that the plaintiff has failed to prove that if the defendants had provided hooks or bars to which a safety belt could have been attached the deceased would have made use of it or them. It follows, therefore, that on this point also the defendants would have been, in our judg- G ment, entitled to succeed.

It is not, in our view, necessary to express any opinion on the question whether in the circumstances it could be said that it was not reasonably practicable to provide means for ensuring the safety of the deceased. We doubt whether on the notice of appeal this point was really open to the appellants, and, in any event, it is not effectively different from the causation point.

H This appeal must be allowed and there must be judgment for the defendants.

Appeal allowed. Judgment for the defendants. Leave to appeal to the House of Lords granted.

Solicitors: Hewitt, Woollacott & Chown (for the defendants); Stephenson, Harwood & Tatham (for the plaintiff).

I [Reported by HENRY SUMMERFIELD, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

---

(20) [1954] 3 All E.R. 507.
(21) [1958] 2 All E.R. 449.
(22) [1953] 2 All E.R. at p. 432.
(23) [1961] S.L.T. at p. 270.
(24) [1956] 1 All E.R. 615; [1956] A.C. 613.
(25) [1961] S.L.T. at p. 272.
(26) [1956] 1 All E.R. at pp. 618, 621; [1956] A.C. at pp. 620, 624.
(27) [1958] 1 All E.R. at p. 446.

Re THE AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE NEWSPAPER PROPRIETORS' ASSOCIATION, LTD. AND THE NATIONAL FEDERATION OF RETAIL NEWSAGENTS, BOOKSELLERS AND STATIONERS.

A

[RESTRICTIVE PRACTICES COURT (Diplock, J., Sir Stanford Cooper, Mr. W. L. Heywood and Mr. W. G. Campbell), June 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 26, 27, 28, July 27, 1961.]

B

Restrictive Trade Practices—Reference—Newspaper supplies—London daily newspapers—Newsagents' permits—Agreement not to supply newspapers to wholesale newsagents except on terms that newspapers supplied only to retail newsagents holding permits—Permits issued by association of newspaper proprietors—Whether removal of restriction would deny public substantial benefit—Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956 (4 & 5 Eliz. 2 c. 68), s. 21 (1) (b).

C

The proprietors of national daily newspapers, whose principal publishing offices were in London (hereinafter called "the London daily newspapers"), were members of the Newspaper Proprietors' Association, Ltd. (hereinafter called "the Association"), and some thirty thousand newsagents were members of the National Federation of Retail Newsagents, Booksellers and Stationers (a registered trade union, hereinafter called "the Federation"). The policy of the Federation since its formation in 1919 had been to limit entry into the retail newsagency trade, and in June, 1944, an arrangement (known as the "Re-entrants and New Applications" Agreement, or "RENA") was reached which represented a compromise in a conflict between the organised interests of the three parties concerned in the distribution of London daily newspapers, namely, the newspaper proprietors, and wholesalers and the retailers. In substance, the members of the Association agreed not to supply any of the London daily newspapers to wholesale newsagents in England or Wales except on terms that the newspapers should (a) not be supplied to persons desirous of starting retail newsagencies at any shop, stand or other place at which newspapers were not sold in June, 1944, unless such persons held permits issued by the Association, and (b) should be supplied to persons holding such permits. Thus the Association was enabled to control, at their sole discretion, entry into the retail newsagency trade and the new points at which papers could be sold so far as London daily newspapers were concerned. The distribution system for London daily newspapers, most of which were also printed simultaneously in Manchester, was largely dictated by the conflicting requirements (i) that the newspaper must go to press as late as possible so as to be up to date in its news, and (ii) that it must be in the hands of the reader before working hours began the following morning. About seventy per cent. of the total supply of morning newspapers were delivered to the readers' residences, this delivery traditionally and most economically being carried out by schoolchildren whose hours of work in general were restricted by local bye-laws to the period from 7.0 a.m. or 7.15 a.m. to 8 a.m. This meant that the retail newsagent must have completed his sorting of newspapers for delivery by 7.0 a.m. and that the wholesaler must complete his delivery to the retail newsagent in time for the latter to have finished his sorting by 7.0 a.m. The court found that the typical retail newsagent's business was a small business of which the sale of London daily newspapers did not, so far as turnover was concerned, constitute a predominant part; almost invariably it was combined with the sales of periodicals and local newspapers, and generally with that of Sunday newspapers and evening newspapers; nearly always it was also combined with some other business such as the sale of tobacco, confectionery, stationery or fancy goods, or some

D E F G H I

A combination of these trades. The court found that the broad picture which emerged from the evidence was that the general run of retail newsagents were small traders, earning a modest livelihood often with the assistance of their wives, employing little full-time labour and working long and, in particular, early hours; the work called for no special skill and the newspapers and periodicals side of it required no substantial capital expenditure. Due to the B RENA agreement, the general pattern today of distribution of retail newsagencies was that they were more numerous in proportion to the total population in the older urban areas where the population might be falling than they were in the areas in which housing or re-development had taken place since the war. The turnover and income of newsagents in the older districts were, on the average, probably lower than those in the more recently C developed areas. Permits for the establishment of new selling points were issued on the recommendation either of the London New Applications Committee (consisting of the deputy circulation managers of each of the London daily newspapers) for proposed selling points south of the Trent, or of the Manchester New Applications Committee (consisting of the northern circulation managers of those newspapers together with a co-opted D representative of "The Guardian") for proposed selling points north of the Trent. Each applicant was required to give an undertaking that he would, inter alia, provide an efficient delivery service and an adequate display of newspaper posters, and that he would not transfer his supplies to any other selling point. The court found that, if all the applications made in each year were granted, the number of new entries into the retail newsagency trade E might be greater than it at present was by something of the order of one per cent. of the existing number of retail newsagents. The court further found that, in general, the public needs in the distribution of London daily newspapers had been reasonably well satisfied, irrespective of whether the RENA scheme, or its predecessors, had operated to restrict the number of selling outlets or not. On a reference of the RENA agreement to the F Restrictive Practices Court by the Registrar of Restrictive Trading Agreements under s. 20 (1) and s. 20 (2) (a) of the Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956*, the Association and the Federation sought to support the agreement under s. 21 (1) (b) of that Act†, contending that, if the agreement was abolished, it would be followed either (i) by unrestricted entry into the retail newsagency trade of anyone desirous of selling London daily news- G papers and by free competition between retail newsagents, or (ii) by restrictions on entry into the retail newsagency trade more stringent and less advantageous to the public as purchasers of London daily newspapers

---

* Section 20, so far as relevant, provides: "(1) The court shall have jurisdiction, on application made in accordance with this section in respect of any agreement of which particulars are for the time being registered under this Part of this Act, to declare H whether or not any restrictions by virtue of which this Part of this Act applies to the agreement (other than restrictions in respect of matters described in paras. (b) to (d) of s. 8 (8) of this Act) are contrary to the public interest.

"(2) An application to the court under the foregoing subsection may be made—(a) in any case, by the registrar; . . .

"(3) Where any such restrictions are found by the court to be contrary to the public interest, the agreement shall be void in respect of those restrictions; and . . . the court I may . . . make such order as appears to the court to be proper for restraining all or any of the persons party to the agreement . . . (a) from giving effect to . . . the agreement in respect of those restrictions; . . ."

† Section 21 (1), so far as relevant, provides: "For the purposes of any proceedings before the court under the last foregoing section, a restriction accepted in pursuance of any agreement shall be deemed to be contrary to the public interest unless the court is satisfied of any one or more of the following circumstances, that is to say— . . . (b) that the removal of the restriction would deny to the public as purchasers, consumers or users of any goods other specific and substantial benefits or advantages enjoyed or likely to be enjoyed by them as such, whether by virtue of the restriction itself or of any arrangements or operations resulting therefrom; . . ."

than those currently imposed under the RENA agreement. In either case, so the respondents contended, the public as purchasers would be deprived of advantages that they now enjoyed. The first contention involved the following assumptions: (a) that the total volume of sales of newspapers and periodicals throughout the country would remain constant, notwithstanding any increase in selling points; (b) that the total number of retail newsagents would increase by 33⅓ per cent.; (c) that the sales of newspapers and periodicals by each existing newsagent would be reduced to the same ratio of his former sales as the total number of existing newsagents bore to the final number of new and existing newsagents, that is seventy-five per cent.; and (d) that all sales of other goods effected before 8.30 a.m. would be reduced in the like ratio since they were made to customers who would not be attracted to the newsagent's shop if he did not sell newspapers and periodicals.

Held: the restrictions were deemed by s. 21 (1) of the Act of 1956 to be, and were declared to be, contrary to the public interest, the Association and the Federation having failed to satisfy the court of the circumstances stated in s. 21 (1) (b) for the following reasons—

(i) as regards contention (i), viz., assuming that no restrictions other than those due to ordinary economic forces operated after the RENA agreement were abolished—

(a) there were no grounds for supposing that an increase in selling points would not lead to some increase in casual sales.

(b) on the evidence, there was no foundation for the assumption that the total number of newsagents would increase by 33⅓ per cent., and factors which would operate under free competition would militate against the creation of new selling points except in areas where there was a shortage of existing newsagents or where their inefficiency or inconvenient location indicated a substantial public demand for London daily newspapers for the newcomer to satisfy.

(c) if new entrants succeeded in taking away a proportion of their competitors' trade, that would be because they provided a more efficient service and, while sale of tobacco and other goods were no doubt assisted by being combined with the sale of London daily newspapers, the assumption that it rose and fell in direct proportion to the sale of newspapers was unsupported by evidence (see, for the conclusion reached, p. 441, letter F, post).

(ii) as regards contention (ii), the court was not satisfied that there was any real likelihood that, if the RENA restrictions were removed, they would be replaced by other more stringent restrictions on entry into the retail newsagency trade in respect of London daily newspapers, for it was obvious that, if the RENA agreement was not such as to satisfy the test of s. 21 (1) (b) of the Act of 1956, neither would any other scheme controlling entry into the retail newsagency trade satisfy that test, whether the scheme were conducted by the Federation or by any other combination of existing members of the trade, unless there had been a relevant change of circumstances (see, for the conclusion reached, p. 443, letter D, post).

Restrictive Trade Practices—Injunction—Restrictions declared contrary to public interest—Party enjoined—Whether trade federation should be included in order restraining the enforcing of the restrictions or making new agreement with like restrictions—Whether Federation, a registered trade union whose members were retail newsagents, was "carrying on business"—Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956 (4 & 5 Eliz. 2 c. 68), s. 20 (3).

After the hearing of the case, summarised in the foregoing headnote, but before judgment was delivered, the Federation notified the Registrar of its intention to set up a "Scheme for the establishment of a list of selling points of the national daily newspapers recognised by the Federation". That

A scheme involved setting up a procedure for recognised points of sale similar to that set up under the RENA agreement but, in a covering letter sent by the Federation to district secretaries inviting them to compile the list, it was expressly stated that the letter was not to be taken as containing any recommendation, express or implied, as to any action to be taken or not taken by any member, except as might be necessary in the preparation of B the list. The Federation did not offer any undertaking but contended that an injunction could not be granted against it as it did not carry on business.

Held: the preparation of the list of selling points by the Federation was intended to be a preparatory step to seeking to enforce restrictions on the entry of persons into the retail newsagency trade, and the Federation, as well as its members, would be enjoined against, among other acts, making C any other agreement to which Part 1 of the Act of 1956 applied to the like effect as the RENA agreement (see p. 445, letter E, post).

Per CURIAM: the words "who carry on business in the United Kingdom" in s. 20 (3) of the Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956, should not be restricted to persons who carry on business within the United Kingdom in the production or supply of goods or in the application to goods of any D process of manufacture (see p. 444, letter E, post).

Dictum of the court in Re Wholesale Confectioners' Alliance of Great Britain and Northern Ireland's Agreement (No. 2) ([1961] 2 All E.R. at p. 9) not followed.

[For the Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956, s. 20 and s. 21, see 36 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 952, 954.]

E

Cases referred to:

Black Bolt and Nut Assocn. of Great Britain's Agreement (No. 2), Re, ante, p. 316; [1961] 1 W.L.R. 1139.

Sorrell v. Smith, [1923] 2 Ch. 32; 129 L.T. 349; revsd. C.A., [1924] 1 Ch. 506; 93 L.J.Ch. 241; 131 L.T. 195; affd. H.L., [1925] All E.R. Rep. 1; [1925] A.C. 700; 94 L.J.Ch. 347; 133 L.T. 370; 43 Digest 113, 1183.

F Wholesale Confectioners' Alliance of Great Britain and Northern Ireland's Agreement (No. 2), Re, [1961] 2 All E.R. 8; L.R. 2 R.P. 231; [1961] 1 W.L.R. 613.

Reference.

Pursuant to the Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956, s. 20 (2) (a), the Registrar G of Restrictive Trading Agreements referred to the Restrictive Practices Court an agreement between the Newspaper Proprietors' Association, Ltd. and the National Federation of Retail Newsagents, Booksellers and Stationers contained in a memorandum of agreement dated Aug. 9, 1957, as varied. The facts and restrictions are set out in the judgment of the court.

Arthur Bagnall, Q.C., and E. W. Griffith for the Newspaper Proprietors' Associ- H ation, Ltd.

G. T. Aldous, Q.C., D. W. Falconer and W. Aldous for the National Federation of Retail Newsagents, Booksellers and Stationers.

B. J. M. MacKenna, Q.C., J. F. Donaldson, Q.C., and C. S. Staughton for the Registrar.

Cur. adv. vult.

I

July 27. DIPLOCK, J., read the following judgment of the court: The respondents to this reference are the proprietors of national daily newspapers (namely, "The Times", the "Daily Telegraph", the "Daily Express", the "Daily Herald", the "Daily Mail", the "Daily Mirror", the "Daily Sketch", the "Morning Advertiser", the "Financial Times", the "Greyhound Express and Coursing News", and the "Sporting Life"), who are members of, and represented by, the Newspaper Proprietors' Association, Ltd. (hereinafter called "the Association"), and some thirty thousand newsagents who are members of the National Federation of Retail Newsagents, Booksellers and Stationers, a registered trade union (hereinafter called "the Federation"), who are represented by the Federation. The newspapers in question have a nation-wide circulation. The principal publishing office of each is in London, and we shall, for convenience, refer to them collectively as "the London daily newspapers".

The restrictions with which this reference is concerned are those comprised in an arrangement between the Association and the Federation, which had been in operation since June, 1944, and was reduced into writing for the purpose of registration under the Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956. In substance, it is an agreement under which the members of the Association agree not to supply any of the London daily newspapers to wholesale newsagents in England or Wales except on the terms that the newspapers shall (a) not be supplied to persons desirous of starting retail newsagencies at any shop, stand or other place at which newspapers were not sold in June, 1944, unless such persons hold permits issued by the Association, and (b) shall be supplied to persons holding such permits. The restrictions thus enable the Association to control, at their sole discretion, entry into the retail newsagency trade and the new points at which papers can be sold so far as London daily newspapers are concerned.

This arrangement represents the current compromise in a conflict between the organised interests of the three parties concerned in the distribution of London daily newspapers, namely, the newspaper proprietors, and wholesalers and the retailers. The policy of the Federation, ever since its formation in 1919, has been to limit entry into the retail newsagency trade. At the outset, it adopted a policy, known as the "Distance Limit Policy", of endeavouring to prevent the setting up of new sales outlets for newspapers within a fixed distance from an existing outlet operated by a member of the Federation. The principal method adopted for enforcing this policy was to organise a boycott by its members of any wholesaler who sought to supply newspapers to new entrants to the newsagents' trade whose proposed place of sale would conflict with the Federation's "Distance Limit Policy". The method of applying such a boycott is described in the judgment of RUSSELL, J., in Sorrell v. Smith (1). The newspaper proprietors, in order to combat the distance limit policy, which they considered restricted sales of their newspapers, in turn combined to threaten to withdraw supplies from any wholesaler who supplied newspapers to the retail newsagent who had threatened to withdraw his custom from another wholesaler subject to the boycott. The judgment of the House of Lords in Sorrell v. Smith (2) in 1925 established the legality of this counter-move on the part of the newspaper proprietors. As a result, the practice grew up of dealing with applications to wholesalers for supplies of newspapers to persons desirous of entering the retail newsagency trade, by joint consultation at a local level between representatives of the Federation and of the wholesalers' organisation affected, that is, either the London or the Provincial Wholesale Newspaper Distributors' Association. The Newspaper Proprietors' Association was not a party to these arrangements between the wholesalers' organisations and the retailers' Federation, but from time to time when, in individual cases, differences arose between wholesalers and retailers whether or not newspapers should be supplied to any persons desirous of entering the trade, the matter was referred to the Association for decision.

Between 1939 and 1944, owing to wartime conditions, these arrangements lapsed. Many newsagents joined the forces or engaged in other national work, many newsagents' premises were destroyed by bombing. As the war drew to an end, the problem of re-entry into the trade of newsagents who had been affected in one or other of these ways was very properly a matter of concern to all branches of the newspaper distribution industry, and the arrangements which are the

(1) [1923] 2 Ch. 32. (2) [1925] All E.R. Rep. 1; [1925] A.C. 700.

A subject of the present reference, known as the "Re-entrants and New Applications" agreement, or "RENA" for short, were instituted. In the years immediately after the war, applications for permits were to a large extent concerned with re-entry into the industry of newsagents displaced by the war, but, as time went on, these applications diminished, and today and for several years past, applications have been almost exclusively from persons wishing to B enter the trade for the first time, or from newsagents already in the trade, who wish to open new shops or stands at other points of sale.

The distribution system for London daily newspapers, most of which are also printed simultaneously in Manchester, is largely dictated by the conflicting requirements (i) that the newspaper must go to press as late as possible so as to be up to date in its news, and (ii) that it must be in the hands of the reader before C working hours begin the following morning. Newspapers start to come off the press shortly after 10 p.m. Supplies for the provinces are despatched by train from London or Manchester to destinations throughout the country. On several of these trains, employees of the provincial wholesalers start the work of sorting into bundles for their retail newsagent customers. Supplies for the Greater London area are collected by the London wholesalers in their own vans. Sorting D into bundles for the retail newsagent customers through the country is completed at the wholesalers' premises, and distribution by the wholesalers to retail newsagents then starts. About seventy per cent. of the total supply of morning newspapers are delivered to the readers' residences. This delivery is traditionally and most economically carried out by schoolchildren whose hours of work are controlled by local bye-laws. In general these are restricted to the period from E 7.0 or 7.15 a.m. to 8.0 a.m., which means that the retail newsagent must have completed his own sorting of newspapers for delivery to his customers by 7.0 a.m. The wholesaler, of whom there are two thousand in England and Wales, must, accordingly, complete his delivery to his retail newsagent customers in time for the latter to have finished their own individual sorting by 7.0 a.m. The wholesaler, with a large number of retail newsagents to supply often over a wide F area, has, therefore, to work to a very tight time schedule. He is remunerated by a discount (generally 10½ per cent. in the case of provincial and 14¼ per cent. in the case of London wholesalers) on the wholesale price (4s. 8d. per quire for 3d. papers) of the newspapers he purchases, and his current costs of distribution are those of collecting the newspapers, in London and Manchester from the newspaper offices and elsewhere in the provinces from the railway station, of G sorting them into bundles for his retail newsagent customers and of distributing the bundles to the individual newsagents by van, a task which must be accomplished within the very tight time schedule referred to above. This means that there is a limit to the number of dropping points, that is, premises or stands of retail newsagents which can be served by one van; the nearer the dropping points are to one another, the larger the number that can be served by one van. Other H things being equal, it would pay the wholesaler best to sell the largest number of newspapers to the smallest number of newsagents in the most compact geographical area nearest to his own premises. To take on a new customer does not necessarily increase his profits, particularly if the new customer's order is small and the dropping point distant from any of his existing dropping points.

Newspapers are sold wholesale by the quire of twenty-six copies. The price I to the retail newsagent of a quire of twenty-six threepenny newspapers is 4s. 8d., the price at which he sells them 6s. 6d. and his gross profit 1s. 10d. per quire. For broken quantities less than one quire he pays a slightly higher rate. He sells them either over the counter (counter sales) or delivered to his customers at their residence (delivery sales). These two types of sales, and the great majority of newsagents undertake both, require separate consideration.

Probably the great bulk of counter sales are to customers who leave their homes for work before the morning newspaper can be delivered to their homes. Most are made before 8.0 a.m.; practically none after 9.30 a.m. A newsagent who wishes to obtain this trade must open his shop or stand between 6.0 a.m. and 7.0 a.m. Success in this type of trade, which is commonest in working-class and industrial districts, is greatly influenced by the site of the shop. It is probably true that persons hurrying to work prefer to go the shortest distance out of their way to buy a newspaper. Counter sales involve the newsagent in the minimum trouble and expense and, since most newsagents sell other goods such as periodicals, confectionery, stationery and tobacco, they have the added attraction that, by bringing customers into the shop, they increase the newagent's sale of his other wares. As, however, London daily newspapers are not supplied by the newspaper proprietors on sale or return, the newsagent runs the risk of being left with unsold copies—which, after about 9.30 a.m., are valueless.

Delivery sales have in general to be effected between the hours of 7.0 a.m. and 8 a.m., because of local bye-laws relating to hours of work of schoolchildren. It is only in exceptional cases, such as rural areas, that adult labour is employed. This restricts the number of residences which can be served by one delivery boy and, for practical purposes, imposes a limit on the distance from the newsagent's premises from which he can undertake deliveries, although this can be extended if the newsagent uses his van to carry newspapers to a number of different starting points for his delivery boys' rounds. The number of residences which can be served by one boy or girl varies with the character of the neighbourhood. The evidence suggests that, in urban areas, the figure ranges from thirty to as much as eighty, with an average probably in the neighbourhood of fifty where the local bye-laws permit of a full hour's work. Nearly all newsagents make a weekly delivery charge ranging from as little as 1d. to as much as 6d. per week, but usually 2d. or 3d. This charge, however, includes delivery of periodicals and sometimes of Sunday newspapers or evening newspapers or both. The weekly wage to the delivery boy varies widely and appears generally to be in the range of 10s. to 15s. per week. To this must be added the cost of provision of newspaper bags and, generally, bicycles and waterproof clothing. Circumstances differ so widely that it is impossible on the evidence to reach any more definite conclusion than that, in the majority of cases, the actual cost of employing and equipping deliverers is somewhat more than the actual delivery charge, although there are cases where it is somewhat less and others where the newsagent breaks even. The work involved in sorting newspapers for delivery rounds is considerably greater than in sorting for counter sales and, if looked at in isolation, delivery sales of London daily newspapers are less profitable to retail newsagents than counter sales, but the trade is certain and steady and brings with it the regular sale of periodicals and other newspapers which are delivered on the same rounds. The proportion of delivery sales of London daily newspapers to counter sales varies greatly with the character of the district in which the newsagent's premises are situate. Exceptionally, a newsagent makes no deliveries at all, and, in the cases of which evidence has been given in this reference, the proportion of delivery sales to total sales has ranged between thirty per cent. and ninety per cent., the higher percentage being found in middle-class residential districts. The best estimate that we can make on the evidence before us is that, over the country as a whole, something of the order of seventy per cent. of the total circulation of London daily newspapers are delivered to the residences of the readers.

With some forty thousand retail newsagents in the United Kingdom (of whom a quarter are not members of the Federation), it is not possible to do more than form a very broad picture of the economic situation of the typical retail newsagent. At the one extreme are the large chains of retail shops of such well-known concerns as W. H. Smith and Wymans, which are also wholesalers on a very large scale; at the other is the tiny one-man shop in a side-street in a poor area. But it can be said with some confidence that the typical newsagent's business is a small business of which the sale of London daily newspapers does not, so far as turnover is concerned, constitute a predominant part. It is combined almost invariably with the sales of periodicals and local newspapers, and generally with A that of Sunday newspapers and evening newspapers. Nearly always it is also combined with some other business such as the sale of tobacco, confectionery, stationery or fancy goods, or some combination of these trades.

The evidence before us would suggest as a very broad generalisation that a typical retail newsagent's purchases of newspapers and periodicals combined would amount to some thirty-four per cent. of his total turnover. The rate of B gross profit on newspapers and periodicals is, however, larger than the rate of gross profit earned by sales of other goods such as tobacco, confectionery and stationery, so that the proportion of the total gross profit earned by the business which is attributable to sales of newspapers and periodicals is considerably in excess of thirty-four per cent., and was estimated as probably something in the region of fifty-one per cent. The proportion of the total combined purchases of C newspapers and periodicals which is attributable to London daily newspapers was estimated at about sixty per cent. Even allowing for costs of delivery less delivery charges, the percentage of net profit on sales of newspapers and periodicals is considerably greater than on other goods, but long and early hours of work and some overhead expenses are needed for this part of a newsagent's trade. His total weekly sales of all goods would be of the order of £250. The picture that D emerges, and it cannot be more than a very broad picture of a trade in which there are forty thousand members, is that the general run of retail newsagents are small traders, earning a modest livelihood often with the assistance of their wives, employing little full-time labour and working long (seventy to eighty hours per week) and, in particular, early hours. The work calls for no special skill, and the newspaper and periodical side of it requires no substantial capital E expenditure. Like all small shopkeeping businesses, it attracts the man who "wants to be his own boss", and the economic reward is not its sole, and may well not be its primary, attraction. It is, moreover, probably true that the majority of those who want to enter the retail newsagency trade, except in newly developing areas, are already engaged in the retail trade and selling goods like tobacco or confectionery or fancy goods which are traditionally combined with F that of retail newsagencies. To such persons it is an added attraction that the counter sale of newspapers and periodicals brings customers into the shop and thus increases sales of other goods. On the other hand, it has to be appreciated that the peak time for counter sales of London daily newspapers is from 6.30 to 8.30 a.m., and that to achieve a worth-while turnover from customers for these it is necessary to open the shop not later than 7 a.m.

G But whatever be the attractions or hardships of a retail newsagent's life there has been, during the currency of the RENA agreement, a steady flow of applicants for permits to establish new selling points. It is to be borne in mind that no permit is required for selling points which already existed in June, 1944. Permits appear to have been granted at an average rate of six hundred per annum in recent years, so that probably seventy-five per cent. to eighty per cent. of the H selling points in being today have never been the subject of consideration by the Association under the RENA agreement. In the period during which the RENA restrictions on new entries have been operating, there have been very great movements of population, chiefly away from the centre of towns and the old overcrowded working-class districts; but the newsagencies in those districts have not all moved out with the residents they formerly served; they are restricted in I doing so, even if they wish, by the RENA agreement. Consequently, the general pattern of distribution of retail newsagencies is that they are more numerous in proportion to the total population in the older urban areas where the population may be falling than they are in the areas in which housing or re-development has taken place since the war and in which the establishment of new newsagencies has been subject to the control of RENA and, in addition, to that of housing authorities, as landlords of shops on municipal estates, and of planning authorities. The turnovers and incomes of newsagents in the older districts are, on the average, probably lower than those in the more recently developed areas.

Permits for new entries, that is for the establishment of new selling points, are issued on the recommendation either of the London New Applications Committee (N.A.C.) for proposed selling-points south of the Trent, or the Manchester N.A.C. for proposed selling points north of the Trent. The London N.A.C. consists of the deputy circulation managers of each of the London daily newspapers; the Manchester N.A.C. consists of the northern circulation managers of those newspapers, together with a co-opted representative of "The Guardian" whose proprietor is not a member of the Association. Each of these committees meets once a fortnight. Every applicant for a permit is required to fill in a form, containing particulars of the proposed selling point, including its distance from the nearest existing selling points and the name of the wholesaler from whom he proposes to obtain supplies. It also contains undertakings that he will, inter alia, provide an efficient delivery service and an adequate display of newspaper posters, and that he will not transfer his supplies to any other selling point. Notice of each application is given to the Federation for their comments, and the application is referred for investigation by the local representatives of three of the London daily newspapers acting on a rota system. Each of the three representatives on the rota to which the application is assigned sends in a written report on a standard form, which includes his recommendation whether the permit should be granted or not. Their current instructions are to bear in mind in arriving at their recommendations, firstly, would the proposed new selling point improve the service to the public? Secondly, would it cause more newspapers in total to be sold? Thirdly, if granted, would it be unreasonably hard on the other interested parties? The reports of the local representatives, together with the comments of the Federation, are considered at the meeting of the N.A.C. concerned. We were told that the N.A.C. pays little attention to the comments of the Federation, and the evidence was that sixty per cent. of all applications and forty per cent. of the applications granted are opposed by the Federation. It does not follow, however, that the views of the existing newsagents in the area to which the application relates are without influence. We are left with the strong impression that, in the majority of cases, the committee's decision follows automatically the recommendations of the local representatives reporting on the application. If two recommend that the permit be granted, it is granted; if two recommend that it be refused, it is refused. No local representative of any newspaper has given evidence, and we are left to guess at how they in fact pursue their investigations. The conflict of fact between some of the reports on the same application suggests that there are occasions when the investigation is somewhat casual. In nearly all cases, the only persons reported as having been interviewed are the applicant himself and the nearest established newsagents who will be the applicant's competitors if the application is granted and who are presumably known to and may be on friendly terms with the local representative. Human nature, encouraged by the "Thirdly" of the local representative's instructions, would incline him to have some bias in favour of the existing newsagents whose trade would be affected by the opening of a new selling point in their area.

With applications coming in at the rate of 1,200 a year, it is inherent in any control of this kind that decisions will be somewhat slap-dash, and that injustices to individuals in the particular application of the general criteria will occur. If the necessity for control be once granted—and that is the question that we have to decide—it would not be right to suggest that the evidence leads us to any conclusion other than that the Association have attempted with much expenditure of time to apply the control with an even hand, although tempered at times in the past by prejudice against co-operative societies briskly fanned by the Federation which the Association have sought, without complete success, to overcome. Frequently an application is refused as premature on the grounds that the district to which it relates, although developing, has not developed sufficiently to justify granting a permit for an additional selling point. In such a case, the letter

A intimating the refusal of the permit suggests that the applicant should apply again in six months' time. When this is not done, and many rejected applications are from applicants in non-developing areas, the letter simply says that the application is refused and contains no suggestion that there is any right of appeal. But, if the applicant does in fact send in a reasoned protest at the refusal, this is in practice treated as an appeal, and the application is considered again by B the N.A.C. These practices make it difficult to extract from the figures which the Association have furnished of numbers of applications and refusals any very accurate picture of the extent to which the RENA agreement has in fact restricted new entries into the retail newsagency trade. The only figures supplied relate to the last five years and to the London N.A.C. alone, which apparently deals with about five-sixths of the total applications. For the London committee during the C last five years, the annual number of applications has averaged about one thousand, but these include an indeterminate number of re-applications, probably of the order of 150 a year. New applications would appear to run at an average rate of about 850 a year, of which about five hundred a year are granted and the remainder refused. If all were granted, the number of new entries into the retail newsagency trade might be greater than it is at present by something of the order D of between 350 and 450 a year, including those dealt with by the Manchester committee, or of the order of one per cent. of the existing number of retail newsagents. We mention these figures because what seemed to us to be exaggerated fears were expressed and no doubt genuinely held by some witnesses in the retail newsagency trade as to the extent to which competition would increase if the RENA restrictions were abolished.

E Although there are a number of respects in which the method of administration of the RENA scheme creates a sense of injustice, not always without reason, in the minds of unsuccessful applicants for permits, the evidence does not lead us to the conclusion that the public as a whole are not reasonably well served by the present methods of distribution of London daily newspapers. There appears to be throughout the country a reasonably efficient domiciliary delivery service at F what is in most cases a modest delivery charge, which enables most regular newspaper readers who so desire to receive their London daily newspapers delivered at their residences between 7.0 and 8.0 o'clock on each weekday morning, except in the remoter rural areas. So far as selling points for counter sales are concerned, there is no evidence which would justify a finding that any substantial number of those members of the public who wish to purchase their London daily newspapers G over the counter, either because of the early hour at which they start work or for other reasons, have been prevented from doing so by a shortage of selling points, although inevitably there are cases where the selling points might be more conveniently situated for individual members of this class of purchasers. But, so far as the public is concerned, this situation has existed for the last fifty years. There is no evidence that the delivery service was any worse before the Federation H was founded, or that today any better service is provided to the public in the areas which have been developing since 1944 in which the RENA scheme has effectively restricted the number of newsagents than in those older areas in which the population is constant or falling which were already thickly supplied with retail newsagencies in 1944, and in which the RENA scheme has probably had little effect on their numbers. In general, it would seem that the public needs I in the distribution of London daily newspapers have been reasonably well satisfied, irrespective of whether the RENA scheme, or its predecessors, has operated to restrict the number of selling outlets or not.

As has so frequently been stated in judgments of this court, the test which we have to apply in determining whether or not particular restrictions are contrary to the public interest is not whether the public has been reasonably well served under—or in spite of—the restrictions. Parliament has declared by s. 21 of the Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956, that all restrictions of the categories into which the RENA restrictions admittedly fall are to be deemed to be contrary to the public interest unless the court is satisfied of one of the circumstances specified in para. (a) to para. (g) of sub-s. (1) of s. 21. The respondents in this case rely, and rely only, on circumstances which they contend bring the restrictions within para. (b)—namely:—that the removal of the restrictions would deny to the public as purchasers of London daily newspapers specific and substantial benefits or advantages enjoyed or likely to be enjoyed by them as such, whether by virtue of the restrictions themselves or of any arrangements or operations resulting therefrom. The test which we have to apply in the first instance is, therefore, whether the respondents have satisfied us that, if the RENA restrictions were abolished, the public, as purchasers of London daily newspapers, would be denied some specific and substantial benefits or advantages. Unless we are so satisfied, the question of balancing such benefits or advantages against any detriments either to the public or to would-be entrants into the retail newsagency trade (under the latter part of s. 21 (1)) does not arise. Our attention must, therefore, in the first instance be focussed on the public as purchasers of London daily newspapers; and, in determining whether the RENA restrictions can pass the test, we have to form a view as to what is likely to happen in the future (a) if the RENA restrictions continue in operation, and (b) if the RENA restrictions are removed.

If the RENA restrictions continue in operation, the distribution of London daily newspapers is, we think, likely to go on in much the same way as it has done since 1944. If the RENA restrictions are removed, the respondents' forecast of what would then happen is based on two alternative, and at first sight contradictory, hypotheses. The first is that the abolition of the RENA scheme would be followed by unrestricted entry into the retail newsagency trade of anyone desirous of selling London daily newspapers and free competition between retail newsagents; the second is that, somehow or other, the RENA scheme would be replaced by restrictions on entry into the retail newsagency trade more stringent and less advantageous to the public as purchasers of London daily newspapers than those currently imposed under the RENA scheme. This apparent contradiction, although it has inevitably presented forensic difficulties to the respondents in the presentation of their case, is by no means fatal to their contentions. It is not illogical to argue, as they do, that one or other of two things must happen and that, if either of them does happen, the public, as purchasers of London daily newspapers, will be deprived of advantages which they now enjoy and would have continued to enjoy if the RENA scheme were not abolished. Indeed, the two hypotheses are not unconnected, for the Federation's argument is that the result of unrestricted entry into the retail newsagency trade would so seriously imperil the livelihood of its members at present engaged in the trade that they would be compelled themselves, either alone or in conjunction with the wholesalers' organisations, to initiate some other scheme for restricting new entrants, and the Association's argument is that, in such an event, the new scheme would be more restrictive and less advantageous to the public than the RENA scheme operated by the Association themselves.

We will, accordingly, consider first what the effect would be on the public as purchasers of London daily newspapers if, on the abolition of the RENA scheme, no restrictions, other than those due to ordinary economic forces operating under a competitive system, were imposed on entry into the retail newsagency trade. The Federation's contention is that, under such conditions, the business of the individual retail newsagent would, in general, become so unprofitable that he would be unable or unwilling because of the inadequacy of the reward to continue delivery services to the extent that he now undertakes them, and that large numbers of the public would be deprived of the advantage of having their London daily newspapers delivered timeously at their residences; and that the retail newsagent, being unable to afford the risk of unsold copies, would fail to keep an adequate stock of newspapers and, in particular, of the less popular " quality " newspapers for casual sales over the counter. We are quite unable to accept this

A gloomy prophecy as to the results of exposing the retail newsagency trade to competitive conditions comparable to those which subsist without either disaster to the public or to the traders themselves in other branches of the retail trade.

The prophecy was based on some calculations of the ultimate effect on the annual net profits of six actual cases of retail newsagents of a decrease of twenty-five per cent. in sales of all types of newspapers and periodicals and of all sales B of other goods effected before 8.30 a.m. These calculations involve the assumptions:—(i) that the total volume of sales of newspapers and periodicals throughout the country would remain constant, notwithstanding any increase in selling points; (ii) that the total number of retail newsagents would increase by 33⅓ per cent.; (iii) that the sales of newspapers and periodicals by each existing newsagent would be reduced to the same ratio of his former sales as the total number C of existing newsagents bore to the final number of new and existing newsagents, that is seventy-five per cent.; and (iv) that all sales of other goods effected before 8.30 a.m. would be reduced in like ratio since they were made to customers who would not be attracted to the newsagent's shop if he did not sell newspapers and periodicals.

Each of these assumptions is, in our view, fallacious. No doubt sales of news- D papers and periodicals go together, and it is reasonable to suppose that a person entering the retail newsagency trade in respect of London daily newspapers will desire to include among his wares other kinds of newspapers and periodicals; but we see no grounds for supposing that an increase in selling points would not lead to some increase in casual sales, although it may well be that, in the case of London daily newspapers of which about seventy per cent. or more are now E delivered to readers' residences, the increase would be small.

The assumption that the total number of retail newsagents would increase by 33⅓ per cent. has no foundation in the evidence before us. Its origin appears to have been an observation in a report by Mr. Scrivens, an accountant called by the Federation who is also a newsagent, that, if there were no economic factors operating under free competition to deter would-be entrants from embarking F on the retail newsagency trade, their numbers might increase by one-third or more. He drew attention, however, in his very helpful report, to various economic factors which would act as a deterrent to new entrants, and expressed his own view, both in his report and in his oral evidence, that the increase in numbers of newsagents would be likely to be substantially less than 33⅓ per cent. With this we agree. Any increase of the order of 33⅓ per cent. in the number of retail G newsagents under conditions of unrestricted competition seems to us to be quite outside the realms of probability. We have already pointed out that, if all the rejected applicants under the RENA scheme came into the trade, the annual rate of entry into the trade would be greater than at present by a number representing something of the order of one per cent. of the total number of existing retail newsagents. It may be that, under the present system, some would-be H applicants are deterred from applying by the very existence of the permit scheme or by the requirement of the Association that applicants must undertake to operate a delivery service, since the main attraction to certain classes of applicants is counter sales which they think will bring customers into their shops and so increase their sales of other goods. On the other hand, the existence of the RENA restrictions gives to the successful applicant in developing districts a I business with a monopoly value sufficiently attractive to enable landlords to obtain an enhanced rent for a shop to be let to a retail newsagent, and the disappearance of this monopoly value would reduce the attractiveness of the trade to new entrants.

No doubt there are many small shopkeepers selling confectionery, tobacco or fancy goods who think that they could enhance their income by adding newspapers and periodicals to the goods which they stock; but, to effect any worthwhile volume of counter sales of London daily newspapers, it would be necessary to open the shop not later than 7.0 o'clock in the morning, and probably earlier.

Furthermore, unlike pre-war days, London daily newspapers are not available to retail newsagents on sale or return, and the risk of unsold copies is a relevant factor. Two unsold copies out of seven turn a gross profit into a gross loss. Very few newsagents indeed do not operate a delivery service to supplement their counter sales, although newsagents whose selling points were established before the RENA scheme was inaugurated and who constitute probably seventy-five to eighty per cent. of the total number of points in existence today are under no compulsion to do so. As the delivery boy also delivers periodicals and local papers at the same time as the London daily newspapers, such a service increases the newsagent's sales of periodicals as well and, since deliveries are in response to firm orders, a delivery service ensures to the newsagent a steady trade free from the risk of loss on unsold copies. It would seem, indeed, that, except in the case of selling points in busy shopping centres, the provision of a delivery service by a retailer of London daily newspapers is necessary to make the newsagency pay. In a district which is already well served by newsagents' delivery services, it is a slow and difficult task to attract satisfied customers away from their existing retailer, and a would-be entrant to the trade in such a district would not be able to look forward to any rapid growth in this branch of his trade.

But, even if a would-be entrant were undeterred by these considerations, he would have to find a wholesaler willing to supply him. We have already drawn attention to the rigid time schedule to which the wholesaler has to work, and to the added expense in which he is involved if he increases the number of dropping points, particularly if these are at any distance from existing dropping points. Furthermore, as the total circulation of London daily newspapers increases slowly, a wholesaler would have to consider whether the expansion of dropping points is likely to add to, or merely to diversify, his total business. Operating on a gross profit margin of $10\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. in the provinces and $14\frac{1}{4}$ per cent. in London on the price of newspapers to retailers, that is about 6d. per quire of twenty-six copies in the provinces and about 8d. per quire in the London area, it would not pay a wholesaler to increase his turnover by additional deliveries of small quantities of London daily newspapers at scattered delivery points, save at an additional delivery charge which would have to be met out of the gross profit margin of the retailer. An additional and potent factor is the necessity for the wholesaler to retain the goodwill of his existing customers. A wholesaler is unlikely to offend and risk losing the custom of an established retailer unless he sees the prospect of larger sales to the newcomer, and this in itself will tend to deter wholesalers from being eager to supply new selling points in close proximity to existing customers. Where, as in most parts of the country, there are competing wholesalers, the wholesaler who had no existing customers near the newcomer's premises would not be influenced by the same deterrent, but he is more affected by the additional expense of adding to his round a more distant dropping point. All these factors, which would operate under free competition, militate against the creation of new selling points except in areas where there is a shortage of existing newsagents, or where their inefficiency or inconvenient location indicates a substantial public demand for London daily newspapers for the newcomer to satisfy.

Turning now to the third assumption, it should be hardly necessary to point out that a new competitor in a retail trade does not either immediately or eventually take away the same proportion of the trade of each of his competitors. If the new entrant succeeds at all, and he may not, he does so because he provides a more efficient service to his customers if that expression be taken to include, as it should in the retail trade, geographical convenience of the selling point. If, by providing a more efficient service, he attracts customers from his competitors, that is merely the normal process whereby under competitive conditions less efficient tradesmen are eventually driven out of the trade and replaced by the more efficient to the advantage of the public as purchasers. Finally, while no doubt sales of other goods, such as tobacco in particular, in the early morning is

A assisted by being combined with the sale of London daily newspapers, the assumption that up to as late as 8.30 a.m. it rises and falls in direct proportion to the sale of newspapers is a mere assumption unsupported by evidence.

We should not have thought it necessary to mention such elementary considerations, which are applicable in a greater or less degree to competition in all forms of retail trade, were it not for the fact that many of the retail newsagents B called as witnesses for the Federation genuinely feared that the abolition of the RENA scheme would be followed by a great influx of new entrants into the trade. Time and again reference was made to conditions thirty or forty years ago when, it was said, there was intensive competition from street newsvendors who bought and sold a few dozen newspapers to make " beer money ". The great social and economic changes which have occurred since the 1920s make this C comparison inapplicable. The abolition of the system of supplying newspapers on sale or return has in itself wholly changed the economics of the small casual trade, but even more important is the emergence of full employment and rising economic standards which have eliminated the attractions of this kind of casual trade. No doubt, if the RENA scheme were abolished and entry into the retail newsagency trade were limited only by the operation of the inevitable economic D forces of free competition, there would be some increase in the number of newsagents in some parts of the country, particularly in developing districts, and some existing newsagents would be subjected to the spur of greater competition than that which they now face, but we are quite unconvinced that, if the retail trade in London daily newspapers were left exposed to the ordinary economic forces of free competition, the delivery service which the public now enjoys would be in E any way jeopardised, nor does it seem to us that the availability of newspapers, whether popular or " quality ", for casual sales would be reduced. Neither of these things happened before the RENA restrictions or their predecessors were imposed; neither of these things has happened in the older districts where there is a falling population where the RENA restrictions have had little impact, where there are many newsagents with selling points close to one another estab- F lished before 1944 and where, as many witnesses have deposed, two or three different newsagents are delivering newspapers to houses in the same road.

We are not, therefore, satisfied that, if the RENA restrictions were removed and entry into the trade in respect of London daily newspapers were left to the operation of the economic forces of free competition, the public, as purchasers G of such newspapers, would be deprived of any specific or substantial benefit or advantage.

While the Federation's main concern is with the well-being and prosperity of its members as vendors of newspapers, the Association's primary concern is with maintaining or expanding the circulation of their newspapers. It is to the Association's interest that there should be an efficient, low-cost distribution sys- H tem providing a nation-wide delivery service and adequate selling points for counter sales. So far as distribution of their products is concerned, their interest is the same as that of the public as purchasers. Their support of the RENA restrictions is not really based on the contention that, if entry into the retail trade in London daily newspapers were left to the ordinary economic forces of free competition, circulation figures would be reduced, or that the distribution I system as respects either delivery services or counter sales would be any less efficient or that the public, as purchasers of newspapers, would be deprived of any benefits or advantages. Their fear is that, if the RENA restrictions were abolished, the Federation or its members, perhaps in association with wholesalers, would in some way or other impose their own restrictions on entry into the retail newsagents' trade, that such restrictions would be more rigorous than those at present imposed under the RENA scheme and that, with stricter limitation on the number of newsagents, delivery services would tend to become local monopolies, more costly and less efficient, and the number of selling points would tend to become inadequate for the public needs, with a consequent fall in the circulations of their newspapers. A

The Federation witnesses, while expressing their conviction that members would take such action as was permissible under the law to preserve their livelihoods, were noticeably reticent as to what steps they contemplated taking to prevent persons desirous of entering the trade from doing so if the RENA restrictions were abolished. The value of their evidence as to their probable reactions was, however, largely vitiated by the unrealistic assumptions as to future conditions under free competition on which, no doubt for forensic purposes, the questions put to them were based. If you ask any tradesman if he would view with equanimity a reduction of his trade by twenty-five per cent., you are unlikely to receive the answer " Yes ". It is understandable that members of any trade association concerned in the manufacture or distribution of goods should regard it as being in their own interest to exclude potential competitors from coming into the trade; and it would be natural that, if the Federation were in a position to control entry into the retail newsagency trade, they would tend to allow fewer entrants than are at present allowed by the Association under the RENA scheme. The Federation's policy, initiated in an economic climate very different from that of today, has historically been based on limitation of entry; and forty per cent. of the permits currently granted under the RENA restrictions are unsuccessfully opposed by the Federation. Although this is not necessarily indicative of the extent to which entry would be limited under a system of control under which the Federation had some responsibility greater than a mere right to make representations, we accept that, if the Federation were today free to impose its own policy, that policy would be more restrictive than that applied by the Association under the RENA scheme. B C D E

But the Federation is a responsible body; its members are responsible and law-abiding citizens and the law, by which we do not doubt they will continue to abide, today includes the Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956. It is necessary, therefore, in considering the Association's way of presenting its case in favour of the existing restrictions, to consider the impact of the Act on the sort of control of entry into the retail newsagency trade which the members of the Association fear. Counsel for the Association has suggested that it might be possible for the Federation to devise restrictions which would fall outside the scope of Part 1 of the Act, citing as an example an agreement which, while ostensibly dealing with the hours of work of workmen and so falling within the exclusion provided in s. 7 (4) of the Act, would effectively prevent their employment in the distribution of London daily newspapers to traders who did not hold such permits or fulfil such other conditions as were specified in the agreement. Since this was only a hypothetical agreement, we are not called on to express any concluded opinion on it; it is sufficient to say that the likelihood of any such agreement's falling outside the scope of Part 1 of the Act seems to us so remote that we do not think that any practical importance should be attached to it. Furthermore, if an agreement in such a form were excluded from the provisions of Part 1 of the Act, it could be used to exclude from the provisions of the Act almost any restriction of any of the kinds specified in s. 6. Even if we thought it probable—which we do not—that the Act, on its true construction, does enable persons to evade its provisions in the way in which counsel has suggested, we should still have to look at the realities of the situation, and in such an event it is a not unreasonable assumption that Parliament would make the appropriate amendments to stop the gap so opened. We can, therefore, limit our consideration to agreements containing restrictions in substitution for the RENA restrictions to which Part 1 of the Restrictive Trade Practices Act, 1956, applies. F G H I

From what has been said earlier in this judgment, it must be obvious that, if the RENA restrictions themselves do not satisfy the requirements of s. 21 (1) of the Act so as to justify a declaration that they are not contrary to the public interest, any other scheme under which entry into the retail newsagency trade

A in respect of London daily newspapers or the supply of such newspapers to persons desirous of entering the trade was controlled by the Federation or any combination of existing members of the trade, whether acting alone or in conjunction with other persons engaged in the production or distribution of such newspapers, would also fail to satisfy the requirements of s. 21 (1), and would be contrary to the public interest, unless there had been a material change in B the relevant circumstances. We do not contemplate that either the Federation or any of its responsible members would desire to act in a manner which, under the provisions of the Act, had been declared to be contrary to the public interest. In these circumstances, no useful purpose would be served by considering hypothetical agreements, registrable under the Act, under which restrictions on entry into the retail newsagency trade in respect of London daily newspapers might C be imposed. We do, however, draw particular attention to the judgment which has just been delivered in Re Black Bolt and Nut Assocn. of Great Britain's Agreement (No. 2) (3) as to the scope of injunctions granted under s. 20 (3) of the Act.

We are, accordingly, not satisfied that there is any real likelihood that, if the RENA restrictions were removed, they would be replaced by other more stringent D restrictions on entry into the retail newsagency trade in respect of London daily newspapers. The alternative way of presenting the case contended for by the Association accordingly also fails.

As the respondents have failed to satisfy us of any of the circumstances specified in para. (a) to para. (g) of s. 21 (1) of the Act, it is unnecessary for us to consider under the balancing clause the detriments resulting from the operation of E the RENA scheme either to the public or to unsuccessful applicants for permits thereunder. There must be a declaration that all the restrictions which are the subject of this reference are contrary to the public interest and, accordingly, void.

[Counsel for the Registrar placed before the court a letter to the Registrar from the Federation dated July 13, 1961, notifying him of their intention to set up a scheme entitled "Scheme for the establishment of a list of selling points F of the national daily newspapers recognised by the Federation", the minutes of a meeting of the national executive of the Federation held on July 5, 1961, resolving that the list should be compiled in accordance with the scheme, a copy of the proposed scheme (4), and a letter from the general secretary of the Federation to all district secretaries, dated July 13, 1961, (4). Counsel for the Federation said that the documents were not registrable under the Act of 1956 and, G therefore, did not come within the jurisdiction of the court at that time. He further said that the Federation was not in a position to give undertakings on behalf of its members and contended that no injunction could be made against the Federation itself under s. 20 (3) of the Act, because it did not carry on business within s. 6 (1) of the Act; the agreement being between the members of the Federation, he agreed that an injunction could be made against them H under s. 20 (3).]

DIPLOCK, J.: So far as the individual members of the Federation are concerned, there will be an injunction in the usual form; that is to say, restraining the represented parties and each of them, members of the Federation,

I "from doing any of the following acts whether by themselves or their respective servants or agents, that is to say (a) giving effect to or enforcing or purporting to enforce the said agreement in respect of any of the said restrictions, (b) making any other agreement to which Part 1 of the said Act applies to the like effect as the said agreement in respect of the said restrictions or any of them."

---

(3) Ante, p. 316.

(4) The relevant portions of these documents are set out at p. 444, letter G, to p. 445, letter D, post.

With regard to the Federation itself, we have considered the argument addressed to us on the question whether the court has jurisdiction to make an injunction against the Federation under sub-s. (3) of s. 20 of the Act. The basis of that argument is that there is no power to grant such an injunction because the Federation are not persons party to the agreement who carry on business in the United Kingdom. Our attention has been drawn to passages in the judgment in Re Wholesale Confectioners' Alliance of Great Britain and Northern Ireland's Agreement (No. 2) (5). That was a case in which the restrictions were restrictions which arose under sub-s. (7) of s. 6 of the Act, and the Association was not itself a party to the agreement. In the present case, the Federation is itself a party to the agreement, and the question which arises is whether it is a person party to the agreement who carries on business in the United Kingdom within the meaning of sub-s. (3) of s. 20. In the Confectioners' case (6), the point which was being argued in relation to s. 21 (1) (b) and the desirability of restraining the Federation from making any other agreement to the like effect did not arise, and the opinion expressed by the court (7) was in somewhat tentative form. Having heard argument on the matter, we have come to the conclusion that the Federation is a party to the agreement who carries on business in the United Kingdom within the meaning of sub-s. (3) of s. 20. It is to be observed that the agreements referred to in s. 6 (1) are agreements

> "between two or more persons carrying on business within the United Kingdom in the production or supply of goods, or in the application to goods of any process of manufacture, whether with or without other parties . . ."

The section, therefore, contemplates agreements, such as this is, in which the parties may include not only parties who carry on businesses of the kind specifically described in s. 6 (1) but also other parties who carry on business of a different kind. It does not seem to us, therefore, on further reflection, that the words "who carry on business in the United Kingdom" in s. 20 (3) should be restricted to persons who carry on business within the United Kingdom in the production or supply of goods or in the application to goods of any process of manufacture; and, in our view, we have jurisdiction to make an order restraining the Federation itself, which is a registered trade union, in the terms of sub-s. (3) (a) and sub-s. (3) (b). This seems to us to be a case where it is desirable that such an injunction should be granted, and we propose to grant an injunction against the Federation in that form. We appreciate that this is expressing a view as to the construction of the Act which differs from the tentative view expressed by the court in the Wholesale Confectioners' Alliance Agreement (7). Whether the tentative view then expressed or the final view now expressed is right is a matter of law which can, if necessary, go to the Court of Appeal for decision.

There is one other matter which it is desirable to mention. On July 13, 1961, the Federation notified the Registrar of their intention to set up a "Scheme for the establishment of a list of selling points of the national daily newspapers recognised by the Federation". That scheme involves setting up a procedure for recognised points of sale similar to that which was set up under the RENA agreement, but, in the covering letter sent out to district secretaries inviting them to compile the list, it was expressly stated:

> "To avoid any possible misapprehension please note that this letter must NOT be taken as containing any recommendation, express or implied, as to any action to be taken or not taken by any member, except as may be necessary in the preparation of this list."

A copy of the scheme was sent to the Association and to two wholesalers' organisations, and it is, perhaps, desirable that I should read some of the paragraphs in that letter. The first one is:

(5) [1961] 2 All E.R. at p. 9; L.R. 2 R.P. at pp. 238, 239.
(6) [1961] 2 All E.R. 8; L.R. 2 R.P. 231.
(7) [1961] 2 All E.R. at p. 9; L.R. 2 R.P. at p. 239.

A "The Federation's list will be available to any person interested . . . May I assume that you will inform your own members of the contents of this letter."

Then the last three paragraphs I should read:

"We should perhaps add, although we are aware that this point is well appreciated, that when one is seeking to evolve a scheme to replace an B agreement which (we are assuming) will be declared void by the Restrictive Trade Practices Court, there must be a certain amount of risk that in one way or another someone may think of a way of attacking the validity of the new scheme which has not occurred to one. Further, if the RENA agreement is declared void, the Federation will be subjected to an injunction, but in our C opinion the form of injunction which it would be proper for the court to make would not affect the scheme we propose. In the circumstances, therefore, bearing in mind that it is vital to the Federation that the livelihood of its members should be safeguarded, we are of the opinion that it would be reasonable for the Federation to adopt the scheme we propose, provided, of course, that they decide that such would be advantageous to them"

D the scheme being described as one "to replace an agreement which (we are assuming) will be declared void by the Restrictive Trade Practices Court". It is obvious that the purpose of the list is not to frame it and hang it up in the offices of the Federation, and that this is intended to be a preparatory step to seeking to enforce restrictions on the entry of persons into the retail newsagency trade—a preliminary step. We desire to say this: The Federation and each of the E members of the Federation will be subject to an injunction by this court restraining them, among other things, from making any other agreement to which Part 1 of the Act applies to the like effect as the RENA agreement, and any breach of such an injunction is subject to severe penalties, including imprisonment, if the court takes the view that there is a deliberate attempt to flout the orders of the court. It is plain that this list, if it is to serve any purpose at all, is designed to F form part of a scheme for carrying on a course of conduct which this court has declared to be contrary to the public interest. If, in the course of carrying out further steps in the scheme, any person breaks the injunction which the court has granted, I desire to make it crystal clear that the court will take a very serious view of that conduct; and I also desire to make it crystal clear, since the object is plain, that the court will not regard as a mitigating circumstance the fact G that any such person has acted on the advice of lawyers, solicitors or counsel, and that, if the advice which they have received is wrong and they are in fact in breach of the injunction, the fact that they were wrongly advised that their attempt to evade the provisions of the Act was lawful will not be regarded as a mitigating circumstance or any reason for not applying the full penalties of the law on persons who commit contempt of court.

Orders accordingly.

Solicitors: Lewis & Lewis and Gisborne & Co. (for the Newspaper Proprietors' Association, Ltd.); Shaen, Roscoe & Co. (for the National Federation of Retail Newsagents, Booksellers and Stationers); Treasury Solicitor (for the Registrar).

[Reported by G. A. KIDNER, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

Re WOLVERHAMPTON BOROUGH COUNCIL'S ALDERMANIC ELECTION.

A

[QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION (Glyn-Jones and Thesiger, JJ.), July 27, 28, 1961.]

Elections—Local government—Aldermen—Mayor also candidate for election as alderman—Vacation of mayoral chair by mayor and an alderman chosen to preside—Vote made by mayor—Mayor's vote counted, making equality of votes each for seven candidates including himself—Presiding alderman gave casting vote for candidates for whom mayor had voted and declared them duly elected—Whether mayor was entitled to be present and vote at meeting of council over which he did not preside—Whether the seven aldermen duly elected—Local Government Act, 1933 (23 & 24 Geo. 5 c. 51), Sch. 3, Part 2, para. 3.

B

C

A council of a borough consisted of a mayor, fifteen aldermen and forty-five elected councillors. An annual meeting of the council was held for the purposes, inter alia, of electing a mayor and seven aldermen. An outgoing alderman was elected to be mayor and he immediately submitted a declaration of acceptance of office and took the chair and presided over the meeting. The next item on the agenda was the election of seven aldermen and the mayor announced that being a candidate for election as alderman he was precluded from presiding, whereupon Alderman M. was elected to preside and the mayor took a seat beside the other aldermen. The council then proceeded to elect seven aldermen from fourteen candidates divided into two sets of seven. Voting papers were signed by the forty-five councillors and the mayor and delivered to Alderman M. who ascertained and stated that twenty-three votes had been given to each of the fourteen candidates. The mayor signed and delivered a voting paper for the candidates (who included himself and six others) who, apart from the mayor's vote, had only twenty-two votes. On the footing that there was an equality of votes Alderman M. gave a casting vote (under s. 22 (5) of the Local Government Act, 1933) in favour of the candidates for whom the mayor had voted and declared them to be duly elected. If the mayor had not voted, the other set of seven candidates would have had a majority of votes.

D

E

F

Held: if a mayor were present at a meeting of a borough council, he must preside, for para. 3 (1)* of Sch. 3 to the Local Government Act, 1933, which so provided, was mandatory (see p. 449, letter G, post), and, moreover, the statutory casting vote of the person presiding at the meeting only arose on the assumption that the mayor was not present at the meeting (see p. 451, letter F, post); therefore, the seven aldermen declared elected had not been duly elected and the other seven candidates should have been declared to have been elected.

G

Per GLYN-JONES, J.: a mayor's office is one and indivisible; at a meeting of councillors the mayor, seated in the mayoral chair, can exercise all his one and indivisible functions, but, if not in the mayoral chair, and thus not performing his function as mayor of presiding at the meeting, he has lost the right to exercise any other of his functions, so far as taking part at that meeting is concerned (see p. 449, letter I, to p. 450, letter A, post).

H

[As to the conduct of business at borough council meetings, see 24 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 462, para. 860; and for cases on the subject, see 33 DIGEST 60, 61, 358-372.

I

For the Local Government Act, 1933, s. 22, s. 75, Sch. 3, Parts 2, 3 and 5, see 14 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 371, 395, 520, 521, 523.]

Special Case.

This was a Special Case stated to be heard before the High Court pursuant

* For the Local Government Act, 1933, Sch. 3, Part 2, para. 3, see p. 448, letter F, post.

A to the order of GORMAN, J., and MCNAIR, J., dated June 30, 1961, made under s. 126 (1)* of the Representation of the People Act, 1949, in an election petition presented by the petitioners, Louis Reginald Guy and Anacletus Byrne-Quinn, and dated June 13, 1961, in relation to an election of aldermen for the county borough council of Wolverhampton held on May 29, 1961. The council consisted of the mayor, fifteen aldermen and forty-five elected councillors. B On May 29, 1961, an annual meeting of the council was held for the purposes, inter alia, of electing a mayor and seven aldermen. The first business was the election of a mayor. The respondent Charles Herbert Davies, an outgoing alderman, was elected to be mayor and he immediately made and submitted a declaration of acceptance of office and thereupon became mayor of the council. The next item on the agenda was the election of seven aldermen and the mayor C announced that being a candidate for election as one of the aldermen he was precluded from presiding, whereupon Alderman Frank Mansell was elected to preside, and presided for the purpose of the election and the mayor sat alongside the other aldermen. The council then proceeded to elect seven aldermen. Voting papers were signed and delivered to Alderman Frank Mansell. The persons who made and signed the voting papers were the forty-five elected councillors D of the borough and the mayor. Alderman Frank Mansell then ascertained the result of the voting and stated the number of votes given to each person, the number being twenty-three to each of the fourteen candidates. Paragraph 7 of the Special Case stated that the voting paper signed and delivered by the mayor contained votes in favour of these candidates (who were the respondents to the petition): Norman Frank Bagley, Charles Herbert Davies, Harry Bagley, Frank E Clapham, Mabel Dale, Herbert Preece, Sidney Richard Swain. Apart from the mayor's vote there were only twenty-two votes for these candidates. On the footing that there was an equality of valid votes for all the candidates, Alderman Frank Mansell gave a casting vote for the candidates who were the respondents and declared them duly elected. If the mayor had not voted or if his vote had not been seen or counted the under-mentioned candidates would have had the F majority of votes. Paragraph 9 of the Special Case stated that these candidates were Anacletus Byrne-Quinn, James Cahill, Louis Reginald Guy, William John Rawlins, Malcolm Pascall Birch, Harold Thomas Fullwood, John Clement Homer. On the completion of the election of aldermen the mayor resumed the chair and presided for the rest of the meeting.

It was contended by the petitioners that by virtue of his being a candidate G for election as alderman, Charles Herbert Davies was precluded from presiding at the election of aldermen. They contended that if the mayor could not and did not preside at a meeting he was not in law present and could not validly vote, and they relied on the Local Government Act, 1933, Sch. 3, Part 2, para. 3. The purported vote of the mayor in the first instance was therefore invalid and should not have been seen or counted. In the premises only twenty-two H votes were given in the first instance for each of the persons declared to be elected as against twenty-three votes given for each of the persons not declared to be elected. There was consequently a majority of valid votes given for candidates not declared to have been elected and they should have been declared duly elected. No case arose for the exercise of a casting vote by the person presiding at the meeting.

I It was contended by the respondents that the mayor was entitled to be present at the election and to vote, notwithstanding that he did not preside by reason of his being a candidate. They contended that the vote of the mayor in the first instance was valid and that there was consequently an equality of

* Section 126 (1) of the Representation of the People Act, 1949, provides: "If, on the application of any party to a petition made in the prescribed manner to the High Court, it appears to the High Court that the case raised by the petition can be conveniently stated as a special case, the High Court may direct it to be stated accordingly and the special case shall be heard before the High Court . . ."

valid votes in the first instance for each of the fourteen candidates and Alderman Frank Mansell, as the person presiding, was entitled to give a casting vote. The persons declared elected were duly elected. A

The questions for the opinion of the court were on the above statement of facts, (i) whether the persons, named in para. 7 were duly declared to be elected as aldermen or (ii) whether the persons named in para. 9 were the persons who had the greatest number of votes at the election and should have been declared by Alderman Frank Mansell to be elected aldermen. B

C. E. Scholefield, Q.C., and D. G. H. Frank for the petitioners.
R. I. Threlfall for the respondent Alderman Frank Mansell.
D. G. Widdicombe for the respondents N. F. Bagley and others.

GLYN-JONES, J., after referring to the nature of the proceedings and reviewing the facts appearing from the special case, continued: The petitioners contend that the mayor, by virtue of his being a candidate for election as alderman, was precluded from presiding at the election of aldermen of the borough. That contention is not challenged by the respondents, and I will say no more about it. Secondly, they contend that if the mayor cannot and does not preside at a meeting, he is not in law present thereat and cannot validly vote, and in support of that contention the petitioners referred to para. 3 of Part 2 of Sch. 3 to the Local Government Act, 1933. C D

By s. 75 of the Local Government Act, 1933, it is enacted that:

> "The provisions of Parts 1 to 5 of Sch. 3 to this Act shall have effect as respects the meetings and proceedings of local authorities and of committees thereof . . ." E

Schedule 3, Part 2, para. 3, which is the part relating to proceedings of borough councils, reads as follows:

> "(1) At a meeting of the council of a borough the mayor, if present, shall preside. (2) If the mayor is absent from a meeting of the council, the deputy mayor, if chosen for that purpose by the members of the council then present, shall preside. (3) If both the mayor and the deputy mayor are absent from a meeting of the council, or the deputy mayor being present is not chosen, such alderman, or in the absence of all the aldermen, such councillor, as the members of the council present shall choose, shall preside." F

At an election for aldermen the electors are the councillors and the mayor. Aldermen as such are not permitted to vote, but the fact that the mayor happens to be an alderman does not deprive him of his right to vote as mayor. As mayor he may cast a vote which as alderman he could not cast. Counsel for the petitioners having referred us most carefully to all the sections of the statute which have any bearing on this case, and having also cited one or two cases which I do not think that I need cite again for the purpose of my judgment based his submission on this point: that the mayor could only vote in the exercise of his mayoral office. If he was present at the meeting in his capacity as mayor he should have presided; if he could not preside there was no other capacity in which he was capable of being present at the meeting. Hence, when the mayor cast his vote it was the vote of a person who could not in law be present at or form part of the meeting. It was therefore an invalid vote and should have been rejected. G H I

Counsel who appears for Alderman Frank Mansell who presided, said that it was the duty of the court to protect the vote which Parliament had conferred on the mayor; that if Parliament had intended to disfranchise him if he himself happened to be a candidate for election to the office of alderman, Parliament would have done so in express language in s. 22 of the Local Government Act, 1933, the section which deals with the election of aldermen, and in sub-s. (2) contains the provision that aldermen shall not as such, vote at the election of aldermen, the words "as such" indicating that an alderman may have a right

A to vote in some capacity, and that he might have such right in his capacity as mayor if in addition to being an alderman he happens to be mayor. Of course that is quite right, there is nothing in s. 22 which says expressly that if a mayor is candidate for the office of alderman he shall not vote.

Then counsel for Alderman Frank Mansell said that it was a well-recognised rule of the common law that a man might not be judge in his own cause, and B therefore that the mayor was disqualified from presiding at the election. He said that Parliament must be taken to have known of that, therefore the provision that "the mayor, if present, shall preside" should be read as if the words were "subject to any common law rule which disqualifies the mayor from presiding, the mayor, if present, shall preside". Secondly he argued that the rules laid down by para. 3 of Part 2 of Sch. 3 were not mandatory, but were C merely directory, and that a failure to comply with them did not invalidate the proceedings at the meeting at which the breach took place. In support of that proposition he cited passages from MAXWELL ON INTERPRETATION OF STATUTES (9th Edn.) at p. 372, p. 373 and p. 379, and I mention now that counsel for the seven successful candidates also cited a passage on p. 379 and p. 380. Counsel for Alderman Frank Mansell submitted that there were only two possible results D in this case: first, the fact that the mayor was a candidate did not take away his vote, and if his vote was valid, the result of the election stands. Secondly, he said that if that were wrong, and if it were true that a mandatory provision had been disregarded and that the mayor was present at the meeting, some other person having been elected to preside, then it followed that the council was improperly constituted, that the person elected to the chair had no right to be there E and a fortiori had no right to give a casting vote, and that the result would be that the election was void, and there would have to be another election.

Counsel for the respondents, the seven successful candidates, submitted to us that the mayor's office was one whole and indivisible office with all the incidents which belonged to the mayor whether he was in the chair or out of it. He said that the effect of the argument of counsel for the petitioners was to F treat sub-para. (1) of para. 3 of Part 2 of Sch. 3 as if it formed part of the definition of the mayor. Counsel for the respondents said the word "present" meant not only physically present but also legally capable of acting. The mayor might be physically present but legally incapable of performing some only of his functions, in which event his right to perform his remaining functions was unimpaired. His submission was that if the mayor was present in the room, G it could not be said that he was not present at the meeting.

I think that this provision in para. 3 of Part 2 of Sch. 3 is mandatory, and that, if the mayor is present at the meeting, he must preside. I am not sure, however, that it is necessary to hold that that provision is mandatory, and I am inclined to think one reaches the same result whether the provision is mandatory or directory. The office of mayor has its own peculiar characteristics. The H mayor is elected to be the first citizen of the borough, and as first citizen of the borough he has certain mayoral functions to perform. I accept, and I agree with the proposition of counsel for the respondents that the mayor's office is one which is whole and indivisible, all the incidents of which belong to the mayor. I cannot accept his concluding words: "whether he is in or out of the chair". In my opinion it was Parliament's intention that at a meeting I of the council the mayor's place, and his only place, should be in the chair. Seated in the mayoral chair he can exercise all his one and indivisible functions. In my opinion it was the intention of Parliament, evidenced in the provisions laid down in this enactment, that there should be, as it were, no place in the council where the mayor can sit except the mayoral chair. When he is in the mayoral chair presiding at the meeting he is performing his functions as the mayor, and he has the mayor's right to vote. When he is not in the mayoral chair and thus cannot exercise his mayoral function of presiding over the meeting as the statute intends that he should, then since his functions are one and indivisible he has lost his right to exercise any of them so far as taking part in this meeting is concerned. A

It seems to me to be quite clear that Parliament intended that one of those functions which make up the "one and indivisible office" should be the right and duty to preside at council meetings and it seems to me that at a meeting of the council the mayor forms part of the council and is entitled to be regarded as present and a member of the council only when he is sitting in the mayoral chair. B I express no opinion, I do not think it necessary, whether, if for some reason he is disqualified from exercising the mayoral functions, he does or does not retain a right in his capacity as alderman to take part in the proceedings of the council. That does not arise in this case, because an alderman has no power to vote and it would not matter whether or not the mayor had a right to take his seat as alderman and take part in the proceedings of the council as an alderman. C That would not have helped him in this case because as an alderman he would have had no vote.

In my view, then, the mayor, unless presiding, is not present at the meeting in his mayoral capacity and could not therefore vote as mayor. I have come to the conclusion that the vote which he cast was not a valid vote and should not have been accepted by the presiding alderman, and that being so, the D answers that I give to the first two questions propounded in the Case Stated are: to question (i) no; to question (ii) yes.

THESIGER, J.: I agree. It is provided by s. 22 (1) of the Local Government Act, 1933, that:

> "The ordinary election of aldermen shall be held in every third year at the annual meeting of the council, and shall take place immediately after the election of the mayor . . ." E

By s. 22 (2) it is provided: "An alderman shall not, as such, vote at the election of an alderman of the borough". By s. 22 (5) it is provided:

> "In the case of an equality of votes the person presiding at the meeting, whether or not entitled to vote in the first instance, shall have a casting vote." F

It is conceded that a candidate for an aldermanic vacancy is precluded from presiding at the meeting even in his capacity as mayor.

One of the respondents, Mr. Davies, who was an outgoing alderman and a candidate for re-election, could not therefore preside even though he had just been elected mayor. It appears that he therefore took a seat somewhere next to the other aldermen. G I pause to point out that the presence of a distinguished overseas judge on the bench would not mean that he was present as a member of the court, nor if a visiting mayor was present at a meeting of a county borough council would he be present as a member of the council. The respondent, Alderman Mansell, then took the chair. A little later Alderman Mansell counted the vote of Mr. Davies as if Mr. Davies, an outgoing alderman, was present and voting for his own re-election and for the election of six other candidates. H By so doing, Alderman Mansell arrived at an equality in the votes. Having, as he thought, arrived at that result, Alderman Mansell then cast a vote himself, which must have been on the grounds that he was presiding at the meeting, and that up to that point there was an equality in the voting. Alderman Mansell having done that, declared that Mr. Davies and the other candidates for whom Mr. Davies and he had voted had been elected; I in other words they were elected by counting the vote of Mr. Davies not as an outgoing alderman but as mayor, and by also counting a vote given by Alderman Mansell not as alderman but as presiding at the meeting.

The Local Government Act, 1933, Sch. 3, provides in Part 2, para. 1 (1):

> "The council of a borough shall [that word is to be noted] in every year hold an annual meeting and at least three other meetings, which shall be as near as may be at regular intervals, for the transaction of general business."

A By para. 3 it is provided that:

> "(1) At a meeting of the council of a borough the mayor, if present, shall preside. (2) If the mayor is absent from a meeting of the council, the deputy mayor, if chosen for that purpose by the members of the council then present, shall preside. (3) If both the mayor and the deputy mayor are absent from a meeting of the council, or the deputy mayor being present is not B chosen, such alderman, or in the absence of all the aldermen, such councillor, as the members of the council present shall choose, shall preside."

Alderman Mansell was therefore presiding because the mayor had arranged not to be present at the meeting of the council within the meaning of para. 3 (1), and had arranged to be absent from the meeting of the council within the meaning C of sub-para. (3). In those circumstances it seems to me clear that the only interpretation of the movement of Mr. Davies, the mayor, out of the chair to another place, and the movement of Alderman Mansell into the chair to preside, is that Mr. Davies had absented himself from the meeting of the council within the meaning of the Act, so that the mayor as such was not present. He was not, for example, present within the meaning of Sch. 3, Part 5, para. 1 (1), which D provides:

> "Subject to the provisions of any enactment (including any enactment in this Act) all acts of a local authority and all questions coming or arising before a local authority shall be done and decided by a majority of the members of the local authority present and voting thereon at a meeting of the local authority."

E Incidentally, para. 1 (2) provides once again as in s. 22 (5): "In the case of an equality of votes the person presiding at the meeting shall have a second or casting vote". I think that in those circumstances Alderman Mansell was wrong in regarding the mayor as present within the meaning of the Act and voting as mayor at a meeting of the council. Alderman Mansell's position and his opportunity if it was necessary to give a casting vote in an aldermanic election, al- F though he was an alderman himself, only arose on the assumption that the mayor as such had absented himself from the meeting of the council.

In my view, and I entirely agree with GLYN-JONES, J., Alderman Mansell could not turn round, as it were, and regard the mayor as such as present and voting at that meeting at that point. Consequently there was no necessity, and indeed no right, for Alderman Mansell to exercise the casting vote which his G position as the person presiding might have given, a position which he owed entirely to the notional absence of the mayor. There was a majority of those present and qualified to vote for the other set of candidates whom he erroneously declared to be not elected because he, I think wrongly, counted the vote of the mayor as such, and then added his vote, although he was an alderman, on the ground that he was presiding in the absence of the mayor.

H It is never very useful to use metaphors, but the matter perhaps can be understood if one bears in mind such proverbial metaphors as: "You cannot have your cake and eat it", "You cannot blow hot and cold", and even perhaps one may sometimes be "Hoist with one's own petard". I think that it is quite clear that the answer to question (i) must be as my Lord said, and so must the answer to question (ii).

I

GLYN-JONES, J.: I would like to add one word to my own judgment. There was a suggestion, I think, by one or other of the learned counsel for the respondents that in some way it would be a grievance, or the mayor would have a legitimate grievance if he was disfranchised, as it was said. I think it is right to point out that this difficulty has arisen because the mayor allowed his name to go forward as a candidate for both offices. He was not bound to do so; he could have chosen between the two and said that he would rather be mayor than alderman, or that he would rather be alderman than mayor. It was known no doubt before ever the election of mayor took place what the voting was likely to be, and I think that the mayor had his opportunity to make his own choice which office he would hold. I do not think that he is entitled in those circumstances to say that he labours under any grievance if he is told by the court that the method which was adopted to secure his retention of both offices is one which the court cannot support.

Declaration accordingly.

Solicitors: Alfred Bright & Sons, agents for Dunham, Brindley & Linn, Wolverhampton (for the petitioners); Sharpe, Pritchard & Co., agents for Town clerk, Wolverhampton (for the respondent Alderman Frank Mansell); Lees & Co., agents for Manby & Steward, Wolverhampton (for the respondents N. F. Bagley and others).

[Reported by JENIFER SANDELL, Barrister-at-Law.]

SPARROW v. FAIREY AVIATION CO., LTD.

[COURT OF APPEAL (Sellers, Devlin and Danckwerts, L.JJ.), July 13, 14, 27, 1961.]

Factory—Dangerous machinery—Duty to fence—Component on machine forming a fence preventing operator's body touching machinery—Hand tool coming into contact with machinery—Whether breach of duty to fence in that fencing not secure against hand tool—Factories Act, 1937 (1 Edw. 8 & 1 Geo. 6 c. 67), s. 14 (1).

The plaintiff, an experienced lathe operator employed by the defendants, was machining metal discs of some four inches diameter to form sealings for petrol filler caps. The jaws of a chuck were within the boss of a disc, viz., a hole that the plaintiff had bored in a disc, and were holding the disc rotating in the lathe while he finished the disc by removing burring with a hand tool. There was only one-sixteenth inch clearance between the front of the jaws and the disc from which he was removing the burring. The tool caught against the jaws and the plaintiff's hand was thrown against the machinery or the disc (but did not come into contact with the jaws) and was injured. In an action for damages for breach of statutory duty under s. 14 (1) of the Factories Act, 1937,

Held (SELLERS, L.J., dissenting): under s. 14 (1) the duty that was owed to an employee was not unlimited but extended only to protecting him from injury caused by or through contact between him and the machine (see p. 458, letter H, and p. 459, letter G, post); accordingly the defendants owed no statutory duty to the plaintiff to prevent the tool that he was holding coming into contact with the jaws of the chuck (see p. 459, letter B, post), and the action failed.

Johnson v. J. Stone & Co. (Charlton), Ltd. ([1961] 1 All E.R. 869) and Moran v. Tweedales & Smalley, Ltd. (Dec. 1, 1960, unreported) overruled.

Nicholls v. Austin (Leyton), Ltd. ([1946] 2 All E.R. 92) and Close v. Steel Co. of Wales, Ltd. ([1961] 2 All E.R. 953) applied.

Decision of STREATFEILD, J. ([1961] 1 All E.R. 216) affirmed.

QUAERE: whether s. 14 (1) imposes a duty to fence dangerous machinery against contact with the employee's clothes (see p. 458, letter D, and cf. p. 456, letter G, post).

[As to the statutory duty to fence machinery securely, see 17 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 70-72, paras. 122, 123.

For the Factories Act, 1937, s. 14 (1), see 9 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 1009.]

Cases referred to:

Benn v. Kamm & Co., Ltd., [1952] 1 All E.R. 833; [1952] 2 Q.B. 127; 24 Digest (Repl.) 1075, 324.

A Close v. Steel Co. of Wales, Ltd., [1961] 2 All E.R. 953; [1961] 3 W.L.R. 319.
Eaves v. Morris Motors, Ltd., ante, p. 233.
Gorris v. Scott, (1874), L.R. 9 Exch. 125; 43 L.J.Ex. 92; 30 L.T. 431; 2 Asp. M.L.C. 282; 2 Digest (Repl.) 365, 459.
Johnson v. Stone (J.) & Co. (Charlton), Ltd., [1961] 1 All E.R. 869; [1961] 1 W.L.R. 849.
B Miller v. Boothman (William) & Sons, Ltd., [1944] 1 All E.R. 333; [1944] K.B. 337; 113 L.J.K.B. 206; 170 L.T. 187; 24 Digest (Repl.) 1091, 418.
Moran v. Tweedales & Smalley, Ltd., (Manchester Assizes, Dec. 1, 1960), unreported.
Nicholls v. Austin (Leyton), Ltd., [1946] 2 All E.R. 92; [1946] A.C. 493; 115 L.J.K.B. 329; 175 L.T. 5; 24 Digest (Repl.) 1091, 419.
C Quinn v. Horsfall & Bickham, Ltd., [1956] 2 All E.R. 467; [1956] 1 W.L.R. 264, 652; 3rd Digest Supp.
Summers (John) & Sons, Ltd. v. Frost, [1955] 1 All E.R. 870; [1955] A.C. 740; [1955] 2 W.L.R. 825; 24 Digest (Repl.) 1055, 217.
Walker v. Bletchley Flettons, Ltd., [1937] 1 All E.R. 170; 24 Digest (Repl.) 1054, 212.

D

Appeal.

The plaintiff workman appealed against the decision of STREATFEILD, J., on Nov. 11, 1960, reported [1961] 1 All E.R. 216, dismissing his action against the defendants, his employers, for damages for breach of their statutory duty under s. 14 (1) of the Factories Act, 1937. The facts are stated in the judgment of SELLERS, L.J.

E

P. R. Pain for the plaintiff.
Desmond Ackner, Q.C., for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 27. The following judgments were read.

F SELLERS, L.J.: The appellant plaintiff worked for the defendants on a turret lathe and in course of his work on Sept. 27, 1956, he met with an accident in circumstances and with a result which he could only vaguely describe. At the time a metal disc $4\frac{3}{4}$ inches in diameter, with a central hole $2\frac{1}{2}$ inches in diameter, was being made into a petrol filler cap and was attached in the chuck of the lathe by three jaws gripping the inside of the hole and with their ends lying one-sixteenth inch from the outer surface of the component. Whilst the chuck, with the component part so held, was revolving at five hundred revolutions per minute, the plaintiff used a scraper against the front edge of the hole in order to remove a slight projection and smooth it out.

G

I quote from the judgment findings which we have not been asked to review:

H "The plaintiff himself does not know how the accident happened, but what he told me was that somehow the tool seemed to get caught. He thought it had caught against one of the jaws and before he knew where he was his left hand had been flung against something. He does not know what it was, whether it was flung against the component gripped in the jaws or whether it was flung against the face of the chuck. I think, and I am satisfied, that the probability of the accident is that it did occur because the point of the tool, as he was holding it, caught against the jaw inside the hole of the component and that, of course, threw the tool out of control, and it may well have been that the hand hit the component or the face of the chuck. The hand did not come into contact with the jaws themselves inside the hole, but I think the point of the tool did, and it was in that way that this accident happened."

I

The learned judge found that the jaws were a dangerous part of machinery when revolving at speed and his finding was accepted and unchallenged before this court. He also found that the jaws (the dangerous part of the machinery) were fenced by the component part which the jaws were holding in position. A

The learned judge asked (1):

> ". . . if this was a dangerous part, was it so fenced as to prevent the body of the operator coming into contact with it?"

He answered the question in this way (1): B

> "In a sense, it was fenced by the component itself, that being the fence which in fact did prevent the body of the operator coming into contact with the dangerous part. The fence would appear to have fulfilled s. 14 of the Factories Act, 1937. What happened here may be a very fine distinction, but here a part, which was a dangerous part and which was fenced in such a way as to prevent the body of the operator or some part of his body coming into contact with it, in fact was not so fenced as to prevent a tool coming into contact with it. I am afraid that, with some reluctance, I must give effect to the submission of counsel for the defendants that that is the answer to it on the facts. If the injury was caused by the tool rather than some part of the plaintiff's body coming into contact with the dangerous part that is not enough. In those circumstances, as I have said with some reluctance, I feel bound to hold that the dangerous part was fenced sufficiently within the meaning of s. 14 of the Factories Act, 1937." C D

The question on appeal is, therefore, whether or not, on the facts found, the plaintiff proved a breach of s. 14 of the Factories Act, 1937, and injury to himself resulting therefrom.

It is not a case where part of the machinery itself flew out or broke and came away and injured him or where the material or component part which was being worked at the time caused the accident. The plaintiff was injured when he was doing his work at the machine in the manner in which he was required and expected to do it and, as the judge has found, without any negligence on his part. The learned judge has held that there was a dangerous part of the machinery which required fencing and which was securely fenced by the component part itself to prevent the plaintiff's fingers or hands or other parts of his body from coming into contact with the jaws but which was not securely fenced for the operation which the plaintiff was properly performing with a small tool or scraper. Workmen are often, I imagine, required to use tools of some kind, or perhaps to use an oil can, with moving machinery and it would be strange if the secure fencing which the section requires were not to be adequate to protect them in the task that they were normally called on to perform and having regard to the manner in which it was to be done. E F G

This is not, I think, a case where it could be said that the risk of such an accident was not reasonably foreseeable, applying the principles of Walker v. Bletchley Flettons, Ltd. (2) and John Summers & Sons, Ltd. v. Frost (3). Clearly the learned judge did not think so, for he thought that there might have been liability at common law if such a claim had been pursued. The revolving jaws were only one-sixteenth inch from the place where the tool had to be applied and it might well have been foreseen that the scraper might be struck, although apparently there was no history of such an accident. The probable consequences of it being struck are not so easy to envisage but that damage of some kind might result would seem likely. H I

The recent case in the House of Lords, Close v. Steel Co. of Wales, Ltd. (4) relied on by the defendants, does not seem to me to be against the plaintiff's contentions. There, part of the drill shattered and flew outwards from the machine. In Nicholls v. Austin (Leyton), Ltd. (5), which was fully considered

(1) [1961] 1 All E.R. at p. 219.
(2) [1937] 1 All E.R. 170.
(3) [1955] 1 All E.R. 870; [1955] A.C. 740.
(4) [1961] 2 All E.R. 953.
(5) [1946] 2 All E.R. 92; [1946] A.C. 493.

A by the House in Close's case (6) along with intervening decisions of this court, the workman had been injured by a piece of wood which was being processed and was ejected from a circular saw; that also, therefore, is a different case.

We were referred in argument to the words used by the noble Lords in Nicholls' case (7) and cited in Close's case (6) by LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON (8) as follows:

B "LORD MACMILLAN said (9): 'The obligation under s. 14 to fence the dangerous part of a machine, as I read it, is an obligation so to screen or shield the dangerous part as to prevent the body of the operator from coming into contact with it, and this obligation was in the present instance amply fulfilled.'

C "LORD SIMONDS said (10): 'I find nothing in this language to suggest that the section aims at protecting the worker from any indirect danger arising out of the functional operation of the machine. If there was any ambiguity, it would be set at rest by the proviso, which provides that: ". . . in so far as the safety of a dangerous part . . . cannot by reason of the nature of the operation be secured by means of a fixed guard, the requirements of this subsection shall be deemed to have been complied with if a device is provided

D which automatically prevents the operator from coming into contact with that part." These last six words make it clear that the security at which the substantive part of the subsection aims is security from unintentional, or, I suppose, even intentional, contact with a dangerous part. The fence is intended to keep the worker out, not to keep the machine or its product in.'

E "LORD UTHWATT said (11): 'Section 14 (1) applies to "every dangerous part of any machinery other than prime movers and transmission machinery." That dangerous part is to be securely fenced unless it—i.e., the dangerous part—is in such a position or of such construction as to be safe. The proviso to the subsection is of assistance. Where a fixed guard is not practicable as respects a dangerous part, the provision of a device which prevents contact between the operator and that part is to satisfy the F obligation contained in the leading provision of the subsection. The prevention of contact between the worker and the dangerous part is to be sufficient '."

I do not think that the noble Lords in their reasoning in Nicholls' case (7) had in mind the circumstances which exist here or were intending to express

G an opinion which would affect them. "The worker", as LORD UTHWATT uses the word, would have included, I should have thought, the worker doing his work in the manner in which he was equipped for doing it, including his clothing, whether special equipment or not, and any tool or material the process necessitated.

Eaves v. Morris Motors, Ltd. (12) also differs from the present case. There

H the thing which caused the accident was material being processed, namely a bolt or bolts secured in the machinery, which for the reasons given did not call for protection under s. 14. Here the dangerous parts, the jaws, did on the judge's finding require fencing under s. 14 but that which was found to be effective fencing against direct contact with parts of the body did not protect the workman from danger having regard to the manner in which he was required

I to work, namely, with a tool.

For the plaintiff it was urged that the finding that the component part provided an efficient fence to the extent that the judge held was erroneous and unjustified, but I do not think that the judge's finding in that respect should be disturbed.

---

(6) [1961] 2 All E.R. 953. (7) [1946] 2 All E.R. 92; [1946] A.C. 493.
(8) [1961] 2 All E.R. at p. 963.
(9) [1946] 2 All E.R. at p. 96; [1946] A.C. at p. 501.
(10) [1946] 2 All E.R. at p. 98; [1946] A.C. at p. 504.
(11) [1946] 2 All E.R. at p. 99; [1946] A.C. at p. 506. (12) Ante, p. 233.

The first sentence of s. 14 (1) is clearly wide enough to include a workman working with a tool for it contemplates security to "every person employed or working on the premises" and it seems to envisage a person at work, which itself involves consideration of a method or manner of working. The proviso requires a device "which automatically prevents the operator from coming into contact with" a dangerous part. Again, I would say, the operator as he operates, including method and manner of working. There is nothing in the section read as a whole which would exclude protection for an operator plus the tool with which he was working, whereas the section read as a whole, as the cases have decided, does not require protection, except as expressly specified under s. 14 (3), from the material being processed in a machine.

Section 15 of the Factories Act, 1937, contemplates that a workman may in the course of his work lubricate or adjust a machine, both of which functions might and probably would require use of an oil can or a tool, and exemption from the obligations under s. 14 only arises if the requirements of s. 15 are fulfilled.

It might be argued that the woodworking regulations—and, I think, other regulations—require the use of a tool and therefore it would be inconsistent to construe s. 14 (1) so as to require a secure fence against the use of a tool. The Woodworking Machinery Regulations, 1922 (S.R. & O. 1922 No. 1196), made "for the use of woodworking machinery", provide (reg. 11) that > "A suitable push-stick shall be kept available for use at the bench of every circular saw which is fed by hand, to enable the work to be carried on without unnecessary risk."

Clearly there would be no obligation under the statute to have a secure fence against a push-stick so used. It should, however, always be borne in mind that circumstances may create a common law obligation. But the argument, I think, goes when it is recognised that a regulation such as reg. 11 only supplants the obligation under s. 14 to the extent which the regulation defines: Miller v. William Boothman & Sons, Ltd. (13), Benn v. Kamm & Co., Ltd. (14), and Quinn v. Horsfall & Bickham, Ltd. (15).

I regard the issue as a difficult one, more particularly having regard to the limitations which have been put on the section. The restrictions have been, if I may so put it, on the machine side of the statutory fence. This event all arises on the workman's side and in the result I can see no reason for restricting the requirement of s. 14 to protecting the workman as a man and for not applying protection to him as a workman complete with the equipment for his task. If an unfenced dangerous part of revolving machinery—which ought to have been fenced—caught a workman engaged on it by his trousers only and threw him clear of the machinery so that he fell violently on the ground away from the machinery and received injury there would in my view be liability under s. 14 (1). It is well known that clothing catching in machinery is one of the commonest forms of accident and damages have frequently been awarded for the consequences of such an accident without, I feel sure, inquiry into whether the injuries which arose were occasioned by the dangerous part itself which trapped the clothing or by a blow on the floor or on some other part of the machine or adjacent structure. I do not see that this case is in principle any different.

In Johnson v. J. Stone & Co. (Charlton), Ltd. (16) HINCHCLIFFE, J., found for the plaintiff, who was injured when a casting which he was manoeuvring into position struck a fast-moving pulley which was inadequately fenced, fracturing the pulley's bearing and causing it to drop from its anchorage so that it struck the plaintiff's hand in its fall. I need not here review the decision of HINCHCLIFFE, J. It may be that the facts created liability at common law

(13) [1944] 1 All E.R. 333; [1944] K.B. 337.
(14) [1952] 1 All E.R. 833; [1952] 2 Q.B. 127.
(15) [1956] 2 All E.R. 467.
(16) [1961] 1 All E.R. 869.

A without invoking s. 14, but the learned judge expressed disapproval of what STREATFEILD, J., has held in the present case. This view of PAULL, J. (17), is cited (18):

> " 'Argument was placed before me that there is no liability under [s. 14 of the Factories Act, 1937] because it was not the plaintiff's hand which came against the machine, but the metal which he had to hold that did so. I am not very impressed with that argument. Once you have a dangerous machine and the man is compelled to put a piece of metal against it, I should have thought that the machine, under the Act, ought to have been protected against accidents due to the metal being forced against the hand. Be that as it may, there is, I think, negligence '."

B

C That is not quite the same as the present case and may permit of argument, as the metal which did the injury was the material being processed, but it would seem that both these learned judges would have approved the present appellant's claim.

The conclusion to which I have come was not pressed by learned counsel for the plaintiff and I do not find this a wholly satisfactory case on which to form the conclusion or to apply it, but, having regard to the way the case and the D appeal have been conducted, I do not think that the point can escape decision; it is of general importance in applying s. 14 of the Act.

With every respect to the learned judge, and to my brethren, who think otherwise, I would hold that on the findings made a breach of s. 14 (1) was established and that thereby the plaintiff met his injuries and that the appeal should succeed.

E

DEVLIN, L.J.: The plaintiff in this case was injured because of an accident with a turret lathe. There are three places in or in connexion with the lathe that have to be identified and considered. There is the component which was being processed in the lathe, the jaws which were holding it in the chuck and the face of the chuck. All these were at the time of the accident revolving F at five hundred revolutions a minute. The tool with which the plaintiff was working, a scraper, came into contact with the jaws and caused his hand to be flung against either the component or the face of the chuck and his hand was injured. The plaintiff contended that the jaws were a dangerous part of the machine which ought to have been fenced or guarded. His hand, however, did not come into contact with them but with either the face of the chuck or the com- G ponent. If the jaws were dangerous, it was because they were in rapid motion; since the component and the face of the chuck were in the same rapid motion and since they were capable of causing injury, as in fact they did, it is difficult to see why, if the jaws were dangerous, the face of the chuck and the component were not dangerous also. If it had been contended and proved that not merely the jaws but also the face of the chuck ought to have been fenced or guarded, the nice point which we have to consider in this case might not have arisen. H However, we must deal with the matter on the evidence before us and on the findings which the judge below was invited to make. We must disregard the fact that the face of the chuck may have been as dangerous as the jaws. We must treat the case as if the jerk which the plaintiff sustained had caused him to injure his hand on some object which had nothing to do with the machine and which I there was no obligation to guard, such as a sharp surface nearby.

On this footing, the case for the plaintiff is, first, that the jaws were a dangerous part of the machine (as the judge has in fact found); secondly, that under s. 14 (1) of the Factories Act, 1937, the jaws, as a dangerous part of the machine, should have been securely fenced; and, thirdly, that if they had been so fenced the scraper would not have come in contact with the jaws and so the injury to him would not have happened.

---

(17) In Moran v. Tweedales & Smalley, Ltd., (Manchester Assizes, Dec. 1, 1960), unreported.

(18) [1961] 1 All E.R. at p. 874.

Counsel's main argument for the defendants accepts the fact that the jaws were dangerous and admits that they were not, as they should have been, securely fenced; for this purpose he does not rely on the finding of the judge that the component itself constituted a fence or guard. On this argument he admits the breach of the section but disputes that the defendants are in breach of duty towards the plaintiff and submits that, if they are, the damage is too remote.

He bases his argument on a reading of the section that he claims has now been settled by the House of Lords as authoritative. I do not enter into the question whether the speeches of their Lordships on this point constitute binding or persuasive authority; if persuasive only, I am persuaded. On this reading the object of the section (following the words of the proviso) is limited to preventing " the operator " from coming into contact with the dangerous part of the machine. Does that extend to preventing a tool which the operator is holding from coming into contact with the dangerous part? In my judgment it does not. Some of their Lordships have described the obligation as being to prevent the body of the operator from coming into contact with the machine: see LORD MACMILLAN in Nicholls v. Austin (Leyton), Ltd. (19) and LORD MORRIS OF BORTH-Y-GEST in Close v. Steel Co. of Wales, Ltd. (20). I need not consider whether that means that it is only if the flesh of the operator is brought into contact with the machine that there is a breach of duty. We have heard argument about whether an operator's clothes may be said to be so much a part of him as to come within the purview of the section; that will have to be decided when it arises: but I am clear that a tool that he is holding is not a part of him. Nor is it reasonable to suppose that the Act of 1937 was intended to prevent contact between moving machinery, which when in movement is dangerous, and a tool. Contact between a body and moving machinery will in all probability always result in serious injury. Contact between a tool and such machinery is unlikely to result in serious injury provided the body is properly guarded; and it would be a strong thing without clear words to construe the statute as completely prohibiting all such contact. The section is to be read in the light of the common law principle that in any particular case in which the employer ought to anticipate danger, he will be liable unless he guards against it. I cannot hold that the word " operator " by itself clearly includes the tools the man is working with; and I am not therefore willing to conclude that in guarding against this sort of contact the statute goes further than the common law.

This conclusion leads, I think, inevitably to the further conclusion that the defendants are not liable. Their defence may perhaps be put on the ground that, since they could have complied with their obligation by erecting a guard of a sort which would have prevented the plaintiff from himself coming into contact with the jaws while permitting a tool he was using to be brought into contact with them, their omission to guard was not the cause of the injury which the plaintiff in fact sustained. But I prefer to put it on the ground that under the section the employer does not owe an unlimited duty to the employee to protect him from all injury caused by the working of the machine but only from injury caused by or through contact between him and the machine. The leading case in this branch of the law is Gorris v. Scott (21). It is conveniently summarised in SALMOND ON TORTS (12th Edn.), p. 471, in the chapter which deals with the breach of statutory duties. It is there stated:

> " An action for damages will not lie at the suit of an injured person . . . if the damage suffered by him is not of the kind intended to be guarded against. In Gorris v. Scott (21) the plaintiff sued the defendant, a ship-owner, for the loss of sheep which had been swept overboard in consequence

(19) [1946] 2 All E.R. at p. 96; [1946] A.C. at p. 501.
(20) [1961] 2 All E.R. at p. 966.
(21) (1874), L.R. 9 Exch. 125; 2 Asp. M.L.C. 282.

A of the failure of the defendant to supply certain pens and other structures on the deck of his ship for the accommodation of sheep, as required by Act of Parliament. It was held, however, that the defendant was not liable, because the purpose of the statute in question was to make provision against the spread of contagious disease among animals, and not to prevent such accidents as the plaintiff complained of."

B On the ground, therefore, that the defendants owe no duty under s. 14 (1) to the plaintiff to prevent the tool which he is holding from coming into contact with the machine, I hold that the action fails and that the appeal should be dismissed. I appreciate that it is a doubtful point and that I am differing not only from SELLERS, L.J., but also from the reasoning of HINCHCLIFFE, J., in Johnson v. J. Stone & Co. (Charlton), Ltd. (22), and that of PAULL, J., in C Moran v. Tweedales & Smalley, Ltd. (23), which HINCHCLIFFE, J., quotes (24). Nevertheless, I prefer the conclusion of STREATFEILD, J., in this case and would dismiss this appeal accordingly.

DANCKWERTS, L.J., summarised the facts and continued: It was contended on behalf of the plaintiff that there was a breach by the defendants of D s. 14 (1) of the Factories Act, 1937, which requires " every dangerous part of any machinery " to be securely fenced,

> " unless it is in such a position or of such construction as to be as safe to every person employed or working on the premises as it would be if securely fenced."

E The learned judge held that the jaws of the chuck were a dangerous part of the machine but he thought that the component operated as a fence in respect of the jaws of the chuck so that the terms of the section were satisfied. I agree with his conclusion, though I would express the position a little differently. The terms of the section plainly indicate that the circumstances in which the part is being used are to be taken into consideration in applying the terms of the F section. The circumstances were that the position of the component prevented the jaws of the chuck from being dangerous to the person working on that part. If that is a correct conclusion of fact, then I think that in the circumstances the jaws of the chuck were not a dangerous part of any machinery, or alternatively, were in such a position as to be as safe to any person employed or working on the premises as they would be if securely fenced.

G The accident is assumed to have occurred through not any part of the workman, but a scraper tool used by him, coming into contact with the jaws of the chuck. If the jaws of the chuck, in the position in which they were, were incapable of being brought into contact with any part of the body of the workman, does the intervention of some tool cause a breach of the section to be committed? In my opinion, it does not. It seems to me that this conclusion is supported by the authorities to which DEVLIN, L.J., has referred, and I agree with his H conclusion.

In my view the learned judge reached the correct result, and the appeal should be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed. Leave to appeal to the House of Lords granted.

Solicitors: W. H. Thompson (for the plaintiff); Hextall, Erskine & Co. (for the defendants).

[Reported by HENRY SUMMERFIELD, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

---

(22) [1961] 1 All E.R. 869. (23) Manchester Assizes, Dec. 1, 1960, unreported.
(24) [1961] 1 All E.R. at p. 874. This reasoning is also printed ante p. 457, letter A in the judgment of SELLERS, L.J.

A

NOTE.

R. v. DIXON.

[GLAMORGANSHIRE ASSIZES (Jones, J., and a jury), December 5, 1960.]

Criminal Law—Insanity—Evidence of insanity tendered by prosecution—No defence of diminished responsibility—Defence should be raised by accused and witnesses called on his behalf. B

[As to the defence of insanity, see 10 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 287, 288, paras. 530, 531, and p. 437, para. 810.]

Case referred to:

R. v. Bastian, [1958] 1 All E.R. 568; 42 Cr. App. Rep. 75; [1958] 1 W.L.R. 413; 3rd Digest Supp. C

Trial on indictment.

The accused was charged with the murder of his wife; he pleaded not guilty. In the course of his opening speech, counsel for the prosecution stated that he proposed to call evidence of the accused's insanity.

JONES, J., intimated that he would not allow that in the first instance, and the matter was argued at the conclusion of counsel's opening speech and in the absence of the jury. D

H. E. Hooson, Q.C., and I. Davies for the Crown.

Elwyn Jones, Q.C., and W. T. Williams for the accused.

H. E. Hooson, Q.C.: It was proposed to call before the jury at the conclusion of the prosecution's evidence the evidence of three doctors, namely, two prison doctors and a psychiatrist because, in counsel's submission, the prosecution were entitled to submit that the accused was suffering from such a disease of the mind as to amount to insanity; see R. v. Bastian (1). E

JONES, J.: There have been some special cases in which it has been done, but this is not a special case. This is a perfectly ordinary case. I do not see why the ordinary course should not be followed, that is to say that the defence should raise this point and call evidence. Over and over again it has happened that persons who might be said to be witnesses for the Crown are called for the defence. This has been the practice for many years and apart from a suggestion in one particular case I do not think that anything has arisen to suggest that the practice should be departed from. F G

Elwyn Jones, Q.C.: The doctors consulted on behalf of the accused were not the equal of the Crown medical witnesses and their evidence, initially, was not in full accord with the Crown evidence. Those instructing him and he himself had come to the conclusion that it would be in the best interests of the accused for the position which would be propounded by the Crown's medical witness to be accepted. The defence of diminished responsibility was not put forward. H

JONES, J.: If the accused sets up a defence it is for him to call evidence in support of it. I shall not put the defence of insanity to the jury unless it is raised by the defence and evidence is called to support it.

Solicitors: Director of Public Prosecutions (for the Crown); Leo Abse & Cohen, Cardiff (for the accused). I

[Reported by D. M. HUGHES, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

---

(1) [1958] 1 All E.R. 568; 42 Cr. App. Rep. 75.

A

R. v. R. and I.

[PROBATE, DIVORCE AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION (Scarman, J.), July 11, 1961.]

Injunction—Divorce—Divorced wife—Child of the dissolved marriage—Child at school in Scotland—Injunction restraining divorced wife from allowing letter sent to child's school to be handed to him—Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925 (15 & 16 Geo. 5 c. 49), s. 45 (1).

B

In 1948 the husband was granted a decree absolute of divorce on the ground of the wife's adultery, and was granted the custody of the son, R. R. was now at school in Scotland. In 1961 the wife filed notice of application for access to R. but withdrew her application. At the same time she wrote a letter to R. explaining her reasons for withdrawing her application. She sent that letter, with a covering letter, to R.'s headmaster in Scotland asking him to pass the letter on; and the wife's solicitors informed the husband's solicitors of her action and enclosed a copy of the letter. The husband on ex parte application was granted an interim injunction, whereupon the wife requested the headmaster to hold her letter to R. The court found that the letter went beyond anything which could reasonably be written to R. at this stage.

C

D

Held: the court had jurisdiction to grant an injunction enjoining the wife not to allow the letter to be handed to R., since the application concerned custody of and access to the child R., and in the circumstances of the present case, including the fact that the headmaster of R.'s school in Scotland would observe the wife's instructions concerning the letter, the court would grant the injunction.

E

[As to injunctions for the protection of children involved in divorce proceedings, see 12 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 477, para. 1067, note (h), and 21 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 402, para. 841; and for cases on the subject, see 27 DIGEST (Repl.) 503, 4454 and 28 DIGEST (Repl.) 866, 948, 949.

F

For the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925, s. 45 (1), see 18 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 482.]

Summons for injunction for hearing in open court.

In this case the husband sought an injunction to restrain the wife from allowing a letter written by her and dated July 4, 1961, to be handed to R., their son.

G

The parties were married in 1944 and in 1948 the husband obtained a decree absolute of divorce on the ground of the wife's adultery. The husband was granted the custody of the child, R., who was then about three years of age. R. was brought up by the husband and his second wife and at the time of the present proceedings was at school in Scotland. On Sept. 15, 1960, the wife filed notice of application for custody of R. On Oct. 7, 1960, no order was made on the wife's application save that she should have reasonable access. On June 30, 1961, the wife gave notice of application for access for a specific period in August, 1961, and generally thereafter. The wife then decided to withdraw this application and she wrote a letter dated July 4, 1961, to R., explaining why she was withdrawing her application. She sent that letter sealed with a covering letter to the headmaster of R.'s school in Scotland, asking the headmaster to pass the letter on to R. The wife's solicitors informed the husband's solicitors of the course which the wife was taking and provided them with a copy of the letter addressed to R. The husband thereupon applied ex parte for an injunction and on July 7, 1961, COLLINGWOOD, J., granted an interim injunction. The wife then requested the headmaster to hold the letter. The matter now came before SCARMAN, J.

H

I

S. Seuffert for the husband.

W. R. K. Merrylees for the wife.

SCARMAN, J., stated the facts and continued: I have now to decide whether in all the circumstances this is a case in which the letter dated July 4, 1961, should be prevented from getting into the hands of the boy. A

The court's jurisdiction to grant an injunction originates from s. 45 (1) of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Consolidation) Act, 1925. That subsection reads as follows:

> "The High Court may grant . . . an injunction . . . in all cases in which it appears to the court to be just or convenient so to do." B

As counsel for the wife rightly conceded, that jurisdiction is in terms a very wide one. It is, however, relevant to bear in mind that the subsection is dealing with the machinery at the disposal of the court and the court must have grounds on which to interfere, grounds recognised by the law of the land, before it can invoke that machinery. The only difficulty on the law is whether in the circumstances there are grounds entitling the court to invoke its process of injunction to prevent this letter being delivered to the boy. I should add that since the ex parte proceedings the wife has requested the headmaster to hold the letter. So far as I know, the letter has been held and has not been handed or otherwise communicated to the boy. C

In my judgment, the court has jurisdiction to intervene for the simple reason that this application arises out of the matters of custody of and access to this child of the family. It cannot be doubted that, should the court think fit, it can deny a parent access to its child, and it cannot be doubted in my judgment that in a suitable case, and in support of that denial of access, it can enjoin a parent from writing to her child. Here there is no difficulty in enforcing the court's order because of the steps very properly taken by the wife's solicitors; and, in my judgment, there is no difficulty in the matter of jurisdiction because the court is being asked to act in a matter which arises out of the problems of custody of, and access to, a child over whom the court has jurisdiction. D E

I take the view, therefore, that the court has jurisdiction to interfere if it thinks it just or convenient so to do. There is no difficulty about convenience through the action taken by the parties themselves. If the court does decide to interfere, the indications are that its interference will be effective even though, be it noted, the school is in Scotland and so is the headmaster. As to the justice of the matter, I have read the letter and I think it a most disturbing and unhappy letter to send to a boy of his age and antecedents. I have every sympathy with the wife in desiring to put her point of view forcefully to the boy and it is plain that the boy is probably already of an age, or certainly will soon be of an age, at which he can receive the strong meat of a parent's forcefully put point of view. This letter, however, goes beyond anything which could reasonably in the circumstances be addressed to this boy by his mother at this juncture. F G

I, therefore, think that this is a case in which the order of the court should go addressed to the mother and in the terms in which it is sought—namely, enjoining her from allowing her letter of July 4 to be handed to the boy. As I say, the boy and the headmaster are in Scotland but it is clear that the headmaster will do what he is told to do by the wife. The injunction therefore fastens on the conscience of the wife in England. H

Order accordingly.

Solicitors: Walter, Burgis & Co. (for the husband); J. D. Langton & Passmore (for the wife).

[Reported by A. T. HOOLAHAN, ESQ., Barrister-at-Law.]

A

R. v. PORRITT.

[COURT OF CRIMINAL APPEAL (Ashworth, Salmon and Winn, JJ.), July 25, 26, 1961.]

Criminal Law—Murder—Provocation—Summing-up—Issue to be left to jury although defence of provocation not raised and although accused did not testify that he was provoked—Homicide as culmination of evening of gang warfare—Homicide Act, 1957 (5 & 6 Eliz. 2 c. 11), s. 3.

B

The appellant was indicted for capital murder contrary to s. 5 (1) (b) of the Homicide Act, 1957.* He undoubtedly had shot the deceased. On the evening of the crime the appellant was engaged in gang warfare between his family and another family. At the culmination of this stormy evening the appellant, according to his own evidence, saw his stepfather astride a window sill in a room in his home being held by two men, members of the rival gang, one of whom held a knife close to his stepfather's throat. The appellant said that he pulled a gun out of his pocket and endeavoured to shoot his stepfather's assailant, but the shot killed his stepfather instead. The appellant's defence was that the shooting was done in defence of a near relative then in imminent danger of being killed, and also that he fired in defence of his own home which was being attacked by armed raiders. At no time during the trial was any suggestion made by the defence or by the trial judge that a verdict of manslaughter could be returned on the evidence. The appellant did not say in evidence that he was provoked or had lost his self-control when he fired the shot. In summing-up the judge did not refer to manslaughter. On appeal against conviction the appellant contended that the jury should have been directed that it was open to them to find a verdict of manslaughter on the ground of provocation, under s. 3 of the Homicide Act, 1957.†

C

D

E

Held: (i) notwithstanding that a verdict of manslaughter was not sought by the defence at the trial, it was incumbent on the judge to leave to the jury the issue of provocation and loss of self-control, for in the circumstances of this case the jury might have thought that the appellant shot on provocation, being no longer master of his mind when he saw his stepfather in imminent peril, and, if that view were not displaced, the proper verdict would be manslaughter (see p. 469, letter F, post).

F

R. v. Hopper ([1915] 2 K.B. 431) followed.

Bullard v. R. ([1957] A.C. 635) considered‡.

G

(ii) in the circumstances a verdict of manslaughter would be substituted for the conviction of capital murder.

Appeal allowed in part.

[Editorial Note. This is the first reported case on s. 3 of the Homicide Act, 1957, and the test to be applied, apparently, is whether the provocation is sufficient to deprive a reasonable man of his self-control (see p. 469, letter C, post). R. v. Cunningham ([1958] 3 All E.R. 711), applying the observations of VISCOUNT SIMON in Holmes v. Director of Public Prosecutions ([1946] 2 All E.R. at pp. 127, 128) shows that the defence of provocation is only available on a charge of murder to reduce the crime to manslaughter.

H

As to the defence of provocation on a murder charge, see 10 HALSBURY'S LAWS (3rd Edn.) 710-713, paras. 1362 (especially notes (e) and (f)), 1363 and SUPPLEMENT; and for cases on the subject, see 15 DIGEST (Repl.) 938, 8980-8993, 940, 941, 9011, 9019, 9021, 9022 and 3rd DIGEST Supp.

I

For the Homicide Act, 1957, s. 3, s. 5 (1) (b), see 37 HALSBURY'S STATUTES (2nd Edn.) 175, 177.]

---

* Section 5 (1), so far as material, reads " Subject to sub-s. (2) of this section, the following murders shall be capital murders, that is to say . . . (b) any murder by shooting . . ."

† Section 3 is set out at p. 468, letter G, post.

‡ The relevant passages from the judgment in this case are printed at p. 470, post.

Cases referred to: A

Bullard v. R., p. 470, post; [1957] A.C. 635; 121 J.P. 576; 42 Cr. App. Rep. 1; [1957] 3 W.L.R. 656; 3rd Digest Supp.

R. v. Golder, R. v. Jones, R. v. Porritt, [1960] 3 All E.R. 457; 124 J.P. 505; 45 Cr. App. Rep. 5; [1960] 1 W.L.R. 1169; 3rd Digest Supp.

R. v. Hopper, [1915] 2 K.B. 431; 84 L.J.K.B. 1371; 113 L.T. 381; 79 J.P. 335; 11 Cr. App. Rep. 136; 15 Digest (Repl.) 941, 9019. B

R. v. Prater, [1960] 1 All E.R. 298; [1960] 2 Q.B. 464; 124 J.P. 176; 44 Cr. App. Rep. 83; [1960] 2 W.L.R. 343; 3rd Digest Supp.

Appeal.

This was an appeal by George Anthony Porritt against his conviction on July 4, 1961, at the Central Criminal Court before GLYN-JONES, J., and a jury of the capital murder by shooting, contrary to s. 5 (1) (b) of the Homicide Act, 1957, of his stepfather, Albert Leonard Porritt. He was sentenced to death. The facts are set out in the judgment of the court. The cases enumerated below were cited in argument in addition to those in the judgment.* C

Victor Durand, Q.C., and R. D. L. Du Cann for the appellant.

J. M. G. Griffith-Jones and S. A. Morton for the Crown. D

ASHWORTH, J., delivered the following judgment of the court: This appellant, George Anthony Porritt, was convicted on July 4 this year at the Central Criminal Court of capital murder, the victim whom he undoubtedly shot was Albert Leonard Porritt, his stepfather, and the appellant was sentenced to death.

The evening in question had begun with trouble between two families, the Copley's on the one side and their friends, and the present appellant and his wife, who had met at a club some fifteen or twenty miles out of London. The women fell out and fought each other, and on the way home there was something which no one suggests was an accident, but somehow or other two cars came into collision, and that provoked further trouble. According to the evidence, the appellant went home and went round to the Copley house where further trouble ensued as a result of which the windscreen of the appellant's car was smashed. He was persuaded or otherwise induced to go back to the Copley's to look for the other car which had been left immobile below Swanley, and so the appellant went back, having, according to him, first picked up his father who chose for the occasion to take with him a revolver and something like twenty rounds of ammunition. E F G

